There is disagreement about what this means. It is said that it refers to those who turn back from wrong action and shirk and those who purify themselves with water from janābah and minor impurities. ‘Aṭā’ and others said that. Mujāhid said that it is turning back from wrong actions and also from anal intercourse with women. Ibn ‘Aṭīyyah said, ‘It appears to be a reference to the words about the people of Lūṭ in 7:82.’ It is said that those purify themselves are those who have not committed wrong actions. Someone who repents is someone who does not despair of gaining Allah’s mercy and is not arrogant as we see in another āyah: ‘But some of them wrong themselves; some are ambivalent; and some outdo each other in good.’ (35:32)

223 Your women are fertile fields for you, so come to your fertile fields however you like. Send good ahead for yourselves and be fearful of Allah. Know that you are going to meet Him. And give good news to the believers.

Your women are fertile fields for you,

It is related in Muslim from Jābir ibn ‘Abdullāh: ‘The Jews used to say, “If a man has intercourse with a woman from the rear, the child will be squint-eyed.”’ Then this āyah was revealed. The transmission from az-Zuhrī adds, ‘If he wishes, when she is lying on her front, and if he wishes, when she is not lying on her front, as long as it is only the one opening.’ At-Tirmidhī mentioned it.

Al-Bukhārī related that Nāfi‘ said, ‘When Ibn ‘Umar recited the Qur’an, he would not speak until he finished it. I came to him one day and he recited Sūrat al-Baqarah until he reached a place whereupon he asked, “Do you know about what this was revealed?” “No,” I answered. He said, “It was revealed about such-and-such.” Then he continued. It is related by ‘Abd aṣ-Ṣamad from his father from Ayyūb from Nāfi‘ that Ibn ‘Umar said that this āyah means ‘however you like’. Al-Ḥumaydī says that the word refers to the vagina. Abū Dāwud related that Ibn ‘Abbās said, ‘Ibn ‘Umar (may Allah forgive him!) misunderstood something. There was this tribe of the Anṣār, who had been idolaters, and the tribe of the Jews, who were People of the Book, and they [the Anṣār] used to think that the Jews were superior to them in knowledge. Therefore they used to imitate much of what they did. They had commanded the People of the Book not to have intercourse with women except on one side [i.e. lying on their backs] as that was more concealing for the woman. This tribe of the Anṣār adopted this from them. The tribe of Quraysh used to uncover women completely and enjoy them coming to them from in front and behind and lying on their backs. When the Muhājirūn came to Madīnah and a man married a woman of the Anṣār, he would act with her in that way and she disliked it and told him, “We are approached on one side! Do that or keep away from me!” This business spread and it reached the Prophet ﷺ. Then Allah Almighty revealed: “Come to your fertile fields however you like,” meaning from in front and behind and lying on the back, referring to the place where the child is born [i.e. the vagina].’

At-Tirmidhī related that Ibn ‘Abbās said, “Umar went to the Messenger of Allah ﷺ and said, “Messenger of Allah, I am destroyed!” “What has destroyed you?” he asked. He said, “Last night I changed my direction.” The Messenger of Allah ﷺ did not say anything. Then Allah revealed this āyah to the Messenger of Allah ﷻ: “Your women are fertile fields for you, so come to your fertile fields however you like.” [He said,] “Approach from the front or the back, but avoid the anus and menstruation.” He said that this is a sound ḥasan ḥadīth.

An-Nasā'ī related that Abu-n-Naḍr said that he said to Nāfi', the freedman of Ibn 'Umar, 'It is often said that you say that Ibn 'Umar gave a fatwā that one can have anal intercourse with women.' Nāfi' exclaimed, 'They have lied about me! I will tell you how the business is. Ibn 'Umar read the Qur'an to me one day while I was with him until we reached: “Your women are fertile fields for you.” Do you know what this āyah commands? We, the Quraysh, used to have women lie on their backs. When we arrived in Madīnah and married the women of the Anṣār, we wanted from them what men want from their wives and they disliked that and thought it terrible. The women of the Anṣār used to have sex on their sides. Then Allah revealed: “Your women are fertile fields for you, so come to your fertile fields however you like.”

These ḥadīths provide a text about the permission for all forms when it is vaginal intercourse, i.e. whatever position you wish, front or back, reclining or lying on the back. As for sex in that part which is not permitted, it is not permitted! The āyah uses the word “ḥarṭh” (fields) and so this must apply to the vagina, because that entails fertility. Metaphorically, a woman is like the earth, the sperm is like the seed and the child is like the plants

So come to your fertile fields however you like.

The majority of the Companions, the Tābi'ūn and the imams qualified to give fatwā say that it means whatever position, front or back. The word for 'however' (annā) has various meanings in Arabic: however, whenever, and wherever. 'However' refers to the manner of joining. One group who say it means 'wherever' say that it is permitted to penetrate the anus. Among those to whom this view is ascribed are Sa'īd ibn al-Musayyab, Nāfi', Ibn 'Umar, Muḥammad ibn Ka‘b al-Quraḏī and ‘Abd al-Malik ibn al-Mājiḥūn. It is also related from Mālik in a book called Kitāb as-Sirr. However, the astute Mālikīs and their shaykhs reject that book. Mālik is too esteemed to have a ‘Kitāb as-Sirr’. This view is found in al-‘Uṭbiyyah. Ibn al-‘Arabī mentioned that Ibn Sha‘bān ascribes this view to a large group of the Companions and Ṭābi‘ūn. There are many transmissions ascribed to Mālik in Kitāb Jimā‘ an-Niswān wa-l-Aḥkām al-Qur‘ān. Aṭ-Ṭabarī said, ‘It is related that Muḥammad ibn Ka‘b al-Quraḏī saw nothing wrong with that. In that he interpreted the following words of Allah: “Of all beings, do you lie with males, leaving the wives your Lord has created for you?” (26:165) He said that it implies: “You leave the like of that with your wives and if the like of that had not been permitted with wives, that would not be sound.” It is not the site which is permitted so that you say, “You do that and leave its like which is permitted.”’ Aṭ-Ṭabarī said, ‘This is debatable since it means: “You leave what your Lord created for you of your wives in which you still your appetite and the pleasure of intercourse is obtained by the two of them together.” According to this, the rebuke is permitted. His words: “Once they have purified themselves, then go to them in the way that Allah has enjoined on you” and “Come to your fertile fields” indicate that it is one site in particular, and it is confined to the site of childbirth.’

This is what is true regarding this matter. Abū ‘Umar ibn ‘Abd al-Barr mentioned that scholars do not disagree that a woman whose vagina is closed so that there is no way to have sexual intercourse with her has a defect for which she can be rejected, with the exception of something that has come from ‘Umar ibn ‘Abd al-‘Azīz by a path that is not sound that there can be no rejection on account of a closed vagina or anything else. All the fuqahā’ take a different view because touching is what is desired in marriage. Their consensus about this is evidence that an old woman who cannot bear children is not rejected. What is sound in respect of this matter is what we explained.

What is ascribed to Mālik and his people regarding this is false and they are innocent of that because the permission is particularly connected to the place of the field because of His words and because the wisdom in creating couples is the bringing about of progeny. The power of marriage is only obtained by the site of procreation. This is the truth. Ibn al-‘Arabī said, ‘Shaykh Fakhru ‘d-dīn Abū Bakr Muḥammad ibn Aḥmad ibn al-Ḥusayn, the faqīh and imam of his time, said, “The vagina is the thing most like thirty-five things,” and he made a fist with his hand then said, “The urinary passage has thirty. The passage of the penis and vagina contain five. Allah has made the vagina unlawful during menstruation because of the impurity arriving. So it even more proper for the anus to be unlawful because of the inevitable impurity.”’ Mālik said to Ibn Wahb and ‘Alī ibn Ziyad when they informed him that some people in Egypt claimed that he allowed anal intercourse, that he objected to that and rebuked the one who told him: ‘They have lied about me! They have lied about me! They have lied about me!’ Then he asked, ‘Are they not an Arab people? Did not Allah say: “Come to your fertile fields”? Is a fertile field other than a place capable of growth?’

What opponents cite about the phrase ‘...however you like’ including all passages, because it is undefined, is not a true argument since it is specific to what we mentioned. There are also numerous ḥadīths which are excellent, sound and well-known, related from twelve Companions with different texts, all of which forbid anal intercourse with women. Aḥmad ibn Ḥanbal mentioned them in his Musnad as did Abū Dāwud, an-Nasā’ī, at-Tirmidhī and others. Abu-l-Faraj ibn al-Jawzī compiled them, along with their paths of transmission, in a section entitled: ‘Prohibition of the disliked place’. Our Shaykh, Abu-l-‘Abbās has a section entitled ‘Exposition on turning away from those who allow anal intercourse.’

This is the truth which is followed and what is sound regarding this matter. Someone who believes in Allah and the Last Day must not be turned, in this calamity, to a scholastic error after having it rectified. We should be cautious about scholastic errors. Something different is related from Ibn ‘Umar in which he said that someone who does it is an unbeliever. That is what he held to. May Allah be pleased with him. Similarly Nāfi‘ said that the one who reported the previous transmission from him was lying, as an-Nasā’ī mentioned. Mālik denied it and thought it terrible and said that those who ascribed it to him were lying. Abū Muḥammad ad-Dārimī related in his Musnad from Abu-l-Ḥubāb that Sa‘īd ibn Yasār said, ‘I asked Ibn ‘Umar, “What do you say about slavegirls when one ‘pastures’ with them?” He asked, “What is ‘pasturing?’” I mentioned to him that it was anal intercourse. He exclaimed, “Do any of the Muslims do that!”’ It is transmitted that Khuzaymah ibn Thābit said, ‘I heard the Messenger of Allah ﷺ say, “People! Allah is not shy of the truth. Do not go women from their rear.”’ Something similar is reported from ‘Alī ibn Ṭalq. Abū Hurayrah reported that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘If someone has anal sex with a woman, Allah will not look at him on the Day of Rising.’ Abū Dāwud aṭ-Ṭayālīsī related in his Musnad from Qatādah from ‘Amr ibn Shu‘ayb from his father from ‘Abdullāh ibn ‘Amr that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘That is the lesser sodomy.’ It is related that Ṭāwūs said. ‘The actions of the people of Lūṭ started with committing sodomy with women.’ Ibn al-Mundhir said, ‘The fact that something is confirmed from the Prophet ﷺ dispenses with the need for any further evidence.’

Send good ahead for yourselves and be fearful of Allah

Do what will be of benefit to you on the Last Day. Allah says elsewhere: “Any good you send ahead for yourselves you will find with Allah.” (2:110) So it means obedience and righteous actions. It is also said that it means seeking children and progeny since a child is good for you in this world and the Next. He may be an intercessor and protection for you. It is said it means marriage with a chaste woman so that the ensuing child will be pure and righteous. It is said that it is excess as the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘Anyone who has three of his children die before reaching the age of [accountable] sin will not be touched by the Fire except that which will fulfill an oath.’ This will be dealt with in Maryam, Allah willing. Ibn ‘Abbās and ‘Aṭā’ said that it means to mention Allah before sexual intercourse as the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘If, when he goes to his wife, one of you were to say, “In the Name of Allah. O Allah, keep Shayṭān away from us and keep Shayṭān away from what You provide us with” and a child is decreed for them, Shayṭān will never harm him.’ Muslim transmitted it.

Know that you are going to meet Him.

This is a far-reaching threat, because Allah will repay people both for their piety and for any wrong actions they commit. Ibn ‘Uyaynah related that ‘Amr ibn Dīnār heard Sa‘īd ibn Jubayr say that Ibn ‘Abbās said, ‘I heard the Messenger of Allah ﷺ say while he was giving an address, “You will meet Allah barefooted, naked, on foot and uncircumcised.” Then the Messenger of Allah ﷺ recited: “Have taqwā of Allah and know that you are going to meet Him.”” Muslim transmitted it.

‘Give good news to the believers’ is to make it easy to do good actions and seek the paths of guidance.

النَّاسِ وَاللَّهُ سَمِيعٌ عَلِيمٌ ﴿٢٠٤﴾

224 Do not, by your oaths, make Allah a pretext to avoid good action and being fearful of Him and putting things right between people. Allah is All-Hearing, All-Knowing.

Do not, by your oaths, make Allah a pretext

Scholars say that Allah commands people to spend on, and behave well towards, orphans and women and, as a corollary, He is saying, ‘Do not reject anything of noble character, using as an excuse, “I took an oath that I would not do such-and-such a thing.”’ That is what Ibn ‘Abbās, an-Nakha‘ī, Mujāhid ar-Rabī‘ and others said that the āyah means. Sa‘īd ibn Jubayr said, ‘It is about a man refusing to be pious, or to maintain contact with his kin, or to put things right between people, all of which constitute goodness, saying that he took an oath not to.’ Some commentators say that it means ‘Do not swear falsely by Allah if you truly desire good and that things be put right.’ It is said that it simply means to make an excessive number of oaths by Allah because such oaths are more likely to move people. That is why Allah says, ‘Keep your oaths.’ (5:89) He censured making an excessive number of oaths: ‘Do not obey any vile swearer of oaths.’ (68:10) The Arabs praise making a small number of oaths as one says:

Having few oaths, he keeps his oaths.

If he makes an oath, he fulfils it.

This means that making few oaths comes from piety and taqwā. If someone makes many oaths, then he also breaks them and rarely guards the right of Allah Almighty. This is a good interpretation. Mālik ibn Anas said, ‘I have heard that people swear by Allah to everything.’ It is said that it means: ‘Do not make oaths commonplace in respect of everything, both true and false.’ Az-Zajjāj and others said that the āyah means that when a person is asked to do a good action, he uses Allah as an excuse and says, ‘I have sworn an oath’ which he has not, in fact, sworn. Al-Qutabī said that it means: ‘When you swear not to maintain ties with your kin, not to give ṣadaqah and not to put things right and similar good deeds, then you should expiate your oath.’ This is an excellent position, and it is also what is indicated by the reason for the revelation as we will make clear.

It is said that it was revealed about the time when Abū Bakr made an oath not to give any more money to his poor kinsman Miṣṭaḥ, when he gossiped about ‘Ā’ishah, as we shall read in the story of the Lie which will be discussed in Sūrat an-Nūr (24). It is also said that it was revealed because of Abū Bakr aṣ-Ṣiddīq when he swore that he would not eat with his guests. It is also said that it was revealed about ‘Abdullāh ibn Rawāḥah when he swore not to speak to Bashīr ibn an-Nu‘mān who was his son-in-law. Allah knows best.

The word “urdah” (pretext) means a target, intention, obstacle, or something which strengthens and supports something, in this case, the oath. The term is used of a woman being a ‘target’ for marriage since it is good for her and strengthens her. It is also used for strength to travel and fight. It means: ‘Do not use your oaths to make Allah reinforce yourselves and as a means to refuse to do good.’

To avoid good action and being fearful of Him

It is more appropriate to do good, like ‘More fitting for them would be obedience and honourable words.’ (47:21) Az-Zajjāj and an-Naḥḥās said that.

بِمَا كَسَبَتْ قُلُوبُكُمْ وَاللَّهُ عَفُورٌ حَلِيمٌ ﴿٢١﴾

225 Allah will not take you to task for careless statements in your oaths, but He will take you to task for the intention your hearts have made. Allah is Ever-Forgiving, All-Forbearing.

Allah will not take you to task for careless statements in your oaths,

The expression ‘laghw’ (careless statements) is a verbal noun that means making use of unnecessary words or things which are not good but which do not actually involve wrongdoing. It is used in a ḥadīth to describe someone else speaking while the imam is speaking on the minbar.

Scholars disagree about exactly what is meant by a careless or ineffective oath. Ibn ‘Abbās said that it refers to those oaths that people make while speaking or arguing when they say, ‘No, by Allah’ and ‘Yes, by Allah’ without really intending to make an actual oath. Al-Marwazī says, ‘The ineffective oath, about which scholars agree, are the careless words of a man, “No, by Allah” and “Yes, by Allah”, when an actual oath is not intended.’ Ibn Wahb related from Yūnus from Ibn Shihāb from ‘Urwah that ‘Ā’ishah said, ‘A careless oath is one made when arguing or joking and words which the heart does not intend.’ We find in al-Bukhārī that ‘Ā’ishah said, ‘The words of Allah, “Allah will not take you to task for careless statements in your oaths” was revealed about when a man says, “No, by Allah” and “Yes, by Allah.”’

It is said that a careless oath is one which is based on speculation and so the truth may turn out to be different. Mālik said that and Ibn al-Qāsim related it from him. A group of the Salaf also said that. Abū Hurayrah said, ‘When a man swears to something, thinking that it is true, and then it turns out that it is not true, that is a careless oath and there is no expiation owed for it.’ Something similar is related from Ibn ‘Abbās. It is related that some people exchanged words in the presence of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ while they were shooting. One of them swore, “I hit it and you missed!” It turned out that the business was different and the man said, “He broke his oath, Messenger of Allah!” The Prophet ﷺ said, “The oaths of archers are ineffective oaths. There is no breaking them and no expiation owed for them.” Mālik stated in the Muwattā’, “The best of what I have heard on the matter is that carelessness in oaths is when a man makes an oath about something which he feels certain is like he said, only to find that it is other than what he said. There is no kaffārah owed for it.’

If someone swears to something while knowing that he is lying and sinning, in order to please someone or to make an excuse to someone or to get some wealth, this is worse than an oath for which kaffārah is due. Kaffārah is due from someone who swears that he will not do something that it is permitted to do and then does it, or he that he will do something and then does not do it, as happens when he swears that he will not sell a garment for ten dirhams and then sells it for that amount, or he swears that he will beat his boy and then does not beat him.

If it is a sound transmission, Ibn ‘Abbās said, ‘A careless oath is what you swear when you are angry.’ Ṭāwūs said that. Ibn ‘Abbās related that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘There is no oath while someone is angry.’ Muslim transmitted it. Sa‘īd ibn Jubayr said that it is making what is lawful unlawful, as when someone says, ‘My property is unlawful to me if I do such-and-such,’ or ‘the unlawful is lawful to me.’ Makhḥūl ad-Dimishqī said that. Mālik said that this excludes oaths about his wife where the prohibition is binding unless he excludes her in his heart.

It is said that it is an oath to do something in which one disobeys Allah, as was stated by Sa‘īd ibn al-Musayyab, Abū Bakr ibn ‘Abd ar-Raḥmān, and ‘Urwah and ‘Abdullāh, the sons of az-Zubayr. That is like when someone swears to drink wine or sever ties with his kin. His keeping of his oath in that instance is to abandon that action, and he owes no kaffārah. Their argument is found in the ḥadīth of ‘Amr ibn Shu‘ayb from his father from his grandfather that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘If someone swears an oath and sees something else better than it, he should abandon it. His abandoning it is its kaffārah.’ Ibn Mājah transmitted it in the Sunan. It will be discussed in al-Mā‘idah.

Zayd ibn Aslam said, ‘A careless oath is when someone invokes Allah against himself like, “May Allah blind me,” “May Allah remove my wealth,” “I am a Jew” or “I am an idolater.” This is a careless oath if he says that.’ Mujāhid said, ‘It is like when there are two men involved in a sale and one of them says, “By Allah, I will not sell it to you for that,” and the other says, “By Allah, I will not buy it for this.”’ An-Nakha‘ī said that it is a man swearing that he will not do something and then he forgets about having said that and does it. Ibn ‘Abbās and aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk said that an ineffective oath is one that is expiated, i.e. when the oath is expiated, it is cancelled and becomes of no note and Allah does not take him to task for its expiation and returning to what is better.

Ibn ‘Abd al-Barr related a position that ineffective oaths are those which are forced. Ibn al-‘Arabī said, ‘As for an oath which is forgotten, there is no doubt that it is ineffective because it is different to his intention and so it is absolutely of no note. The oath of someone forced is of this sort, and the ruling of someone who is forced will be dealt with in an-Nahl, Allah willing.

Ibn al-‘Arabī said, ‘As for those who say that an ineffective oath is an oath entailing disobedience to Allah, that is false because someone who swears to abandon an act entailing disobedience makes his oath an act of worship, and someone who swears to commit disobedience makes his oath disobedience and is told, “Do not do it. Expiate it.” If he does the action, he sins in advancing to do it to fulfil his oath.’ As for someone who says that it entails a man invoking against himself that something will happen to him if he does not do a certain thing, it is careless words in the path of kaffārah, but it is binding when it is intentional, but disliked. He may be punished for it because the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘None of you should invoke against himself. It is possible that it will coincide with a moment in which Allah grants anything that He is asked.’ As for someone who says that it is an oath in anger, he is refuted by the oath of the Prophet ﷺ in anger that he would not give camels to ride to the Ash‘arīs and then he did so and expiated his oath as will be explained in at-Tawbah.

Ibn al-‘Arabī said, ‘As for those who say that it is an expiated oath, it is not pertinent to what is related.’ Ibn ‘Aṭīyyah also says that it is weak. He said, ‘Generally speaking, Allah removed any calling to task for a careless oath. The reality is that it is not a sin and there is no expiation required for it. Taking to task for oaths is punishment in the Next World for a deliberately false oath and for those whose kaffārah has not been done when it is something for which there should be kaffārah, and taking to task in this world is by making kaffārah necessary. Therefore the statement that it is an expiated oath is weak because there is censure for it and censure is for its being in the Next World.’

‘Aymān’ (oaths) is the plural of ‘yamīn’ which literally means ‘right hand,’ and the basis for that is that among the Arabs, when they made a contract or alliance, they would shake each other’s right hands and so an oath became termed yamīn. It is said that it is because it contains blessing (yumn). Allah called it that because it preserves rights.

but He will take you to task for the intention your hearts have made.

This is an adjunct to Allah’s words: ‘Allah does not take you to task for your inadvertent oaths.’ (5:89) Zayd ibn Aslam said that His words are about someone who says, ‘He is an idolater if he does it.’ This is careless unless he believes in shirk in his heart and acquires it. ‘Ever-Forgiving, All-Forbearing’ are two attributes appropriate to what was mentioned about not taking to task since they are aspects of compassion and leniency.

عَفْوٌ رَحِيمٌ ﴿٢٢٦﴾ وَإِنْ عَزَمُوا الطَّلَاقَ فَإِنَّ اللَّهَ سَمِيعٌ عَلِيمٌ ﴿٢٢٧﴾

226 Those who swear to abstain from sexual relations with their wives can wait for a period of up to four months. If they then retract their oath, Allah is Ever-Forgiving, Most Merciful. 227 If they are determined to divorce, Allah is All-Hearing, All-Knowing.

Those who swear to abstain from sexual relations with their wives

This kind of oath is called īlā’ in Arabic. There are other forms of the verbal noun from the verb: aliyyah, alwah and ilwah. ‘Abdullāh ibn ‘Abbās said that the īlā’ in the days of Jāhiliyyah could be for one, two or even more years. Men intended by that to harm their wives and so a maximum time of four months was set for it. If someone vows less than that it is not considered an ilā'. According to Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim, it is said that the Prophet ﷺ pronounced an ilā' because his wives asked him for maintenance which he did not have. It is said that it is because Zaynab returned his gift to him and he became angry with his wives. This is what we find in Ibn Mājah.

Ilā' has the same legal conditions as a pronouncement of divorce and a free person, slave or drunk person can invoke it, as can a simpleton and one under a guardian, provided that he is adult and not insane. The same is true of a hermaphrodite if he is not mad and an elderly man as long as he is still alive and active. The position of ash-Shāfi'ī varies regarding an ilā' by a eunuch. One view says that he cannot make an ilā' and another says that it is sound. The first is more correct and closer to the Book and the Sunnah. Sexual intercourse is what cancels the oath and a verbal statement about it does not cancel it. As long as the oath remains unbroken the ruling of ilā' remains.

Scholars disagree about the kind of oath by which ilā' occurs. Some say it only occurs with an oath by Allah alone since the Prophet ﷺ said, 'Whoever swears should swear by Allah or be silent.' Ash-Shāfi'ī said that in his new school. Ibn 'Abbās says that any oath that prevents sexual intercourse is sufficient for it. That is what is said by ash-Sha'bī, an-Nakha'ī, Mālik, the people of Hijaz, Sufyān ath-Thawrī and the people of Iraq, ash-Shāfi'ī in his first view, Abū Thawr, Abū 'Ubayd, Ibn al-Mundhir and Qāḍī Abū Bakr ibn al-'Arabī. Ibn 'Abd al-Barr said that it applies to every oath because of which a man cannot have intercourse with his wife. Unless he breaks it, he is carrying out an ilā' when the oath goes more than four months. So it is all a person can swear by: by Allah, by one of His attributes, by saying, 'I swear by Allah' or 'I bear witness by Allah', or 'I have a promise or pact or pledge with Allah'. In all these cases it is an ilā'. If, however, a man says, 'I swear' and does not mention Allah, it is said that it is not an ilā' unless he means ‘by Allah’ and intends that. This will be further explained in al-Mā’idah. If he swears that he will fast if he has sexual intercourse with his wife and says, ‘If I have sex with my wife, I will fast for a month or a year,’ that is an ilā’. That same is true if it involves divorce, emancipation, prayer or ṣadaqah. The basis for this is the generality of Allah’s words: ‘Those who swear to abstain.’ He made no distinction about what makes it obligatory.

If a man makes an oath not to have intercourse and says ‘inshā’llāh’, it can still be an ilā’, but if, in that instance, he has intercourse with his wife, he owes no kaffārah in the transmission of Ibn al-Qāsim from Mālik. Ibn al-Mājishūn said in al-Mabsūt that in that case it is not an ilā’ and that is sounder because of the “inshā’llāh” which undoes the oath. That is the position of the people of all regions because he makes it clear by saying ‘inshā’llāh’ that he is not resolved on the action. The reason for what Ibn al-Qāsim related is based on the fact that ‘inshā’llāh’ does not undo the oath, but has an effect on cancelling kaffārah as will be explained in al-Mā’idah. When the oath remains, then the ruling of ilā’ is obliged for him, even if kaffārah is not obliged.

If a man swears by the Prophet, the angels, or the Ka‘bah not to have intercourse or says that he is a Jew or a Christian or fornicator if he does, this is not an ilā’. Mālik and others said that. Al-Bājī said, ‘I believe that it means it is not a form of the oath unless he meant by what he said for it to be an ilā’.’ According to al-Mabsūt: ‘Ibn al-Qāsim was asked about whether a man who tells his wife, “You are not welcome,” means an ilā’ by that. He said that Mālik said, “All words by which divorce are intended are divorce. This is divorce in any case.”’

Scholars disagree about the ilā’ mentioned in the Qur’an. Ibn ‘Abbās said that it is not an ilā’ unless he swears that he will never touch her. One group said that if he swears that he will not go near his wife for a day, or more or less than that, and then does not have sex with her for four months, she is free from him by ilā'. This is related from Ibn Mas'ūd, an-Nakha'ī, Ibn Abī Laylā, al-Ḥakam, Ḥammād ibn Abī Sulaymān and Qatādah, and Ishāq said that. Ibn al-Mundhir said that many of the people of knowledge deny this view. Most say that an ilā' is that a man swears not to have sex with his wife for more than four months. If he swears that for four months or less, it is not an ilā'. They consider it to be a simple oath. If he has sex with her in this period he owes nothing as is the case with other oaths. This is the view of Mālik, ash-Shāfi'ī, Aḥmad and Abū Thawr. Ath-Thawrī and the Kufans said that an ilā' is that a man swears to four months or more. That is the view of 'Aṭā'.

The Kufans said that Allah made the waiting period in the ilā' four months as He made the 'iddah of a widow four months and ten days. There are three menstrual cycles in the 'iddah and there is no waiting after it. They said that it is mandatory that the ilā' is cancelled after that period, and it is only cancelled by intercourse within the period. There is a divorce after four months. Mālik and ash-Shāfi'ī argued that Allah assigned four months for the ilā' and so he can have it in full without any protest from his wife in it, just as happens in the case of a deferred debt where the one owed it cannot demand it until the end of the stipulated period. The approach of Ishāq about a short period in which a person is doing ilā' when he does not have sex is based on someone making an oath to do more than four months: he is doing an ilā' because he intended harm by the oath. This idea exists in a short period.

They disagree about someone who swears not to have sex with his wife for more than four months and then the four months comes to an end without his wife requesting it or presenting the case to the ruler to enforce a stop. According to Mālik and most of the people of Madīnah nothing is obliged for him. Some of our scholars say that after the end of four months a revocable divorce has taken place. Some of them and others said that he has a final divorce at the end of four months. The sound position is that of Mālik and his people: a divorce is not obliged for the person with the īlā' until the ruler asks him to stop at the request of his wife to have sex. Then he can take his wife back through sexual intercourse and expiate his oath or divorce her. He must either have intercourse or divorce her. Sulaymān ibn Yasār said, 'Nine of the Companions of the Prophet ﷺ detained people on account of an īlā'.' Mālik said, 'That is what is done with us.' Al-Layth, ash-Shāfi'ī, Aḥmad, Ishāq and Abū Thawr said that. Ibn al-Mundhir preferred it.

The term of the īlā' starts from the day of the oath, not from the day the woman argues with him and presents the case to the judge. If she argues with him and is not content with his refusal of sex, the ruler sets for him a term of four months from the day he swore the oath. If he has sex with her, he has fulfilled the wife's right and then he expiates his oath. If he does not have sex, then a revocable divorce is carried out. Mālik said, 'If he takes her back, it is not validated until he has had sex with her during the 'iddah.' Al-Abhurī said, 'That is because divorce occurs to avert harm. When he does not have sex with her, the harm continues. There is no sense in taking her back without that unless he has a reason that prevents sexual intercourse. If there is, then his taking her back is validated because the harm has disappeared since his refusal to have sex is not about causing harm, but comes from a valid excuse.'

Scholars disagree about an īlā' when one is not angry. Ibn 'Abbās said that an īlā' is only possible in anger. That is related from 'Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib in the well-known position reported from him. Al-Layth, ash-Sha'bī, al-Ḥasan and 'Aṭā' all said that the īlā' is only made in a state of anger, harshness and desire to cause trouble. It is the same whether that upholds the best interests of a child or not. If it does not come from anger, it is not īlā'. Ibn Sīrīn said, 'It is the same whether the oath is done in anger or not: it is still īlā'.' Ibn Mas'ūd, ath-Thawrī, Mālik, the people of Iraq, ash-Shāfi'ī and his people and Aḥmad said that. Mālik, however, said, ‘as long as the best interests of a child is not intended by it.’ Ibn al-Mundhir said, ‘This is sounder because they agree that zihār, divorce and other oaths are the same in both anger and pleasure. So the ilā’ is like that.’ This is indicated by the general nature of the Qur’an. Making it is specific to anger would require a proof. Allah knows best.

Our scholars have said that if a man refuses to have intercourse with his wife without making an oath in order to harm her, he is ordered to have intercourse with her. If he refuses to do so, then they are divorced without a term being set. It is also said that the term of the ilā’ is set. It is said that it is not ilā’ when a man shuns his wife, even if that lasts for years and he does not have sex with her. However, he is admonished and commanded to have taqwā of Allah by not causing her harm.

They disagree about someone who swears not to have sex with his wife until he weans her child so that the child does not become squint-eyed, without intending harm to her, until the end of the period of suckling. During that period the wife cannot make a demand of the husband according to Mālik because he is intending the best interests of the child. Mālik said, ‘I heard that ‘Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib was asked about that and did not consider it to be ilā’’. Ash-Shāfi‘ī said that in one of his views. The other view is that it is ilā’. He does not take the suckling of the child into account. Abū Ḥanīfah said that.

Mālik, ash-Shāfi‘ī, Abū Ḥanīfah and his people, al-Awzā‘ī and Aḥmad ibn Ḥanbal believed that he is not making an ilā’ when he swears not to have sex with his wife in this house or this land because he has a way to have sex with her elsewhere. Ibn Abī Laylā and Ishāq said that if he leaves her for four months, she is clear of him by ilā’. Do you not see that he is detained for four months? If he swears not to have sex with her in his city or land, according to Mālik, it is considered to be an ilā’. This is when a journey would entail hardship rather than in a garden or cultivated land nearby.

The words ‘their wives’ include free women, dhimmī women and slavegirls when they are married. An ilā’ made by a slave is binding. Ash-Shāfi‘ī, Aḥmad and Abū Thawr said that his ilā’ is the same as that of a free man. Their argument is the literal text of the Qur’an in this āyah which is general to all. Ibn al-Mundhir said, ‘That is what I say.’ Mālik, az-Zuhrī, ‘Aṭā’ ibn Abī Rabāḥ and Ishāq said that the length of a slave’s ilā’ is two months. Al-Ḥasan and an-Nakha‘ī said that an ilā’ with a slavegirl is two months and that with a free woman is four months. Abū Ḥanīfah said that. Ash-Sha‘bī said that the ilā’ of a slavegirl is half that of a free woman.

Mālik and his people, Abū Ḥanīfah and his people, al-Awzā‘ī, an-Nakha‘ī and others said that the binding nature of an ilā’ is the same in a consummated and unconsummated marriage. Az-Zuhrī, ‘Aṭā’ and ath-Thawrī said that there can only be an ilā’ after consummation. Mālik said that there can be no ilā’ with a girl who has not yet reached puberty. If the husband pronounces the ilā’ and then the girl reaches puberty, the ilā’ becomes binding from the day she reaches puberty.

An ilā’ made by a dhimmī man is not valid. The same is true of his zihār and divorce. That is because we do not consider the marriages of the people of shirk to be valid. They do have a quasi-authority. Since dhimmīs are not bound by the Sharī‘ah, they owe no kaffārah. If they were to present themselves to us in a case of ilā’, it is not proper for our judges to render judgment. They should be sent to their own judges. If that occurs in the form of mutual injustice towards each other, then the ruling is that of Islam, as when a Muslim refuses to have sex with his wife in order to harm her, but without an oath.

The word tarabbuṣ means being patient and waiting. The reason for this period of time. according to Ibn ‘Abbās, has already been mentioned in what he said about the people of the Jāhiliyyah. Allah forbade that and allowed a husband four months in which to discipline his wife by shunning her since Allah says: ‘...refuse to sleep with them’ (4:34) The Prophet ﷺ parted from his wives in this manner for a month to rectify their behaviour. It is said that this is the maximum which a woman can endure. It is related that ‘Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb used to go around Madīnah at night and heard a woman saying:

‘This night is long and dark and it pains me that I have no beloved with whom to play.
By Allah – were it not for Allah, there would be nothing but Him – the sides of this bed would shake!
Fear of Allah and modesty restrain me as well as the honour of my husband from doing it!’

In the morning ‘Umar sent for that woman and asked her, ‘Where is your husband?’ She replied, ‘You sent him to Iraq!’ Then he summoned the women and asked them about the length of time a wife could endure being without her husband. ‘Two months,’ they answered. ‘Her patience becomes stretched after three months, and disappears after four.’ Therefore ‘Umar made four months the maximum length of time for a man to be absent on a military expedition. Then they would be replaced by others. Allah knows best, but this makes it clearer why four months is singled out here.

If they then retract their oath,

This means retract it or go back on it. We see its usage in 49:9. The word ‘fay’ is also used for the shadow after midday because it returns from the west to the east. Ibn al-Mundhir said that all scholars, who are recorded, agree that retraction consists in having sexual intercourse unless someone has a valid excuse. If he has an excuse in the form of illness or imprisonment or the like, his simple statement of retraction is valid and she remains his wife. If the excuse ends, as when he returns from a journey, recovers from illness or is released from prison, and he still refuses to have sexual intercourse, the couple are separated if the end of the time has been reached. Mālik stated that in the Mudawwanah and the Mabsūt. ‘Abd al-Malik said, ‘She is parted from him the day that the period ends. If he has a valid excuse for retraction which is possible, his truthfulness is judged retrospectively. If what he claims about retraction being impossible when, in fact, he was able to do so, then he is taken to be lying about it and stubborn. Rulings are carried out according to what is in force at the time.’

One group said that when there is proof of retraction at a time when an excuse exists, then it is allowed. Al-Ḥasan, ‘Ikrimah and an-Nakha‘ī said that. Al-Awzā‘ī said that. An-Nakhā‘ī said, ‘Retraction is only validated by a statement and witnesses. The ruling of ṭlā’ is cancelled. So what do you think if he does not rise to intercourse?’ Ibn ‘Aṭīyyah said, ‘If he does not have sex, then this statement amounts to causing harm.’ Aḥmad ibn Ḥanbal said, ‘If he has an excuse, he retracts in his heart.’ Abū Qilābah said that. Abū Ḥanīfah said, ‘If he is unable to have sex, he says, “I have taken her back.”’ Aṭ-Ṭabarī said, ‘Abū Ḥanīfah says that if someone pronounces an ṭlā’ while he is ill and a period of four months passes when the wife has a blockage that prevents intercourse or is too young, and he retracts that verbally when the period has passed and the excuse remains, that is a sound retraction. Ash-Shāfi‘ī opposes him in one of his positions. One group said that retraction only takes place by sexual intercourse, whether it is at a time of valid excuse or not. That is what Sa‘īd ibn Jubayr said and he said that it is the case when he is on a journey or in prison.

Mālik, ash-Shāfi‘ī, Abū Ḥanīfah and his people, and most scholars say that a man must do kaffārah if he retracts his oath. Al-Ḥasan said that there is no kaffārah. An-Nakha‘ī said that, stating: ‘They used to say that when he retracts it, he owes no kaffārah.’ Ishāq said, ‘Some commentators say that “If they then retract” means “if they then break the oath.” That is the position about oaths, in the view of some of the Tābiʿūn, about someone who swears an oath to do good, have taqwā or some area of good if he does not do it. If he does it, then he owes no kaffārah. Their argument is found in Allah’s words: ‘If they then retract their oath, Allah is Ever-Forgiving, All-Forbearing.’ There is no mention of expiation here. This is also based on the ineffectiveness of an oath sworn to disobey Allah. Abandoning sex with one’s wife is an act of disobedience. There is evidence for this position in the Sunnah in the ḥadīth that ‘Amr ibn Shu‘ayb reported from his father from his grandfather that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘If someone swears an oath and then sees something better than it, he should abandon it. His abandoning it is its expiation.’ Ibn Mājah transmitted it in the Sunan. This is further explained in the āyah on oaths. The argument of the majority is in accordance with the words of the Prophet ﷺ: ‘If someone swears an oath and then sees something better than it, he should do what is better and expiate his oath.’

When he expiates his oath, the ilā’ is cancelled. Our scholars said that. That contains evidence for putting kaffārah ahead of breaking the oath in the School. That is the consensus about the ilā’. The evidence is against Abū Ḥanīfah in the question of oaths since he does not think it is permissible to do kaffārah ahead of breaking the oath. Ibn al-‘Arabī said that. Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥasan used this āyah as evidence that it is not permitted to do kaffārah ahead of breaking the oath. He said, ‘Then Allah judged that the person doing an ilā’ is subject to one of two rulings, retraction or resolving on divorce, because if he breaks the oath, nothing is incumbent on him for breaking it. When the one who breaks the oath is not obliged to do anything, he is not in an ilā’. The permission to do kaffārah first cancels the ruling of ilā’ in a way other than how Allah mentions. That is contrary to the Book.’

If they are determined to divorce,

Determination (‘azīma) means to conclude a contract on something.

It comes from the verb ‘azama. It is also to adjure someone to do something. Shamr said, ‘Azīmah and ‘azm is resolving to do something. Ṭalāq is divorce. A divorced women is both ṭāliq and ṭāliqah. Ṭalāq is to undo the marriage contract. The root meaning is to release and let go. Divorced women are let go and divorce is letting go. A released camel is called ‘ṭāliq, meaning that it is left to graze without a lead or herdsman. The plural is atṭāq. A woman who is divorced is free to go her own way. It is also said that it is derived from the running free (talaq) of a horse.

The āyah is evidence that the wife is not divorced simply by the conclusion of the period of four months. As Mālik says, ‘The divorce does not occur automatically after the time is up.’

Allah is All-Hearing, All-Knowing.

Allah is referred to as ‘All-Hearing’ meaning that the pronouncement is heard after the time. Abū Ḥanīfah said that He hears the īlā’ and ‘knows’ the resolve. Suhayl ibn Abī Ṣāliḥ relates that his father said, ‘I asked twelve of the Companions of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ about a man who does an īlā’ from his wife. All of them said that nothing is obliged for him until the end of four months. Then he is detained. If he does not retract, he is divorced.’ Qāḍī Ibn al-‘Arabī said, ‘The truth of the matter is that we think that the āyah means that the retraction is at the end. The divorce is by failing to retract it at the end of the period of waiting. This is an equal possibility.’

If the two possibilities are equal, then the position of the Kufans is stronger in analogy based on a woman in ‘iddah counting months and menstrual cycles since Allah has established that term. At the end of it, the bond is severed completely without dispute. Then her husband has no way to return to her without her permission. That is how it is with the īlā’. So if he forgets to retract it and the term ends, the divorce occurs. Allah knows best.

‘If they are determined on divorce’ is evidence that there is no īlā’ with a slave-girl with whom he has relations based on ownership since there is divorce. Allah knows best.

وَالْمُطَلَّقَاتُ يَتَرَبَّصْنَ بِأَنْفُسِهِنَّ ثَلَاثَةَ قُرُوءٍ وَلَا يَحِلُّ لَهُنَّ أَنْ يَكْتُمْنَ

228 Divorced women should wait by themselves for three menstrual cycles; and it is not lawful for them to conceal what Allah has created in their wombs if they believe in Allah and the Last Day. Their husbands have the right to take them back within that time, if they desire to be reconciled. Women possess rights similar to those held over them to be honoured with fairness; but men have a degree above them. Allah is Almighty, All-Wise.

Divorced women should wait by themselves for three menstrual cycles;

Allah follows the mention of ālā' by talking about women who have been divorced and clarifies the rulings applying to women after divorce has taken place. We find in Abū Dāwud and an-Nasā'ī from Ibn 'Abbās about Allah's words: 'Divorced women should wait by themselves for three menstrual cycles;' 'That is because when a man divorces a woman, he is still entitled to her, but if he divorces her three times, that is superseded when He says: 'Divorce is twice...' 'Divorced women' is general but what is meant here specifically are those in a consummated marriage. This excludes those divorced before consummation which is dealt with in the āyah in al-Aḥzāb: '... there is no 'iddah for you to calculate for them.' (33:49) The same is true of pregnant women, about whom Allah says: 'The time for women who are pregnant is when they give birth.' (65:4) The purpose of the menstrual cycles is to ascertain whether or not the woman is pregnant, whereas the waiting period at the time of bereavement is for worship. If the woman does not menstruate due to youth or age, then the time is counted in months rather than menstrual cycles. Some people say that the generality of the term ‘divorced women’ first included all of these and was then abrogated. That is weak. The āyah is about menstruating women in particular. It is the most common state of women.

‘Tarabbuṣ’ means waiting as we already stated. Although it is phrased as a report, the waiting referred to here is in fact a command. This is the undoubted position of linguists according to what Ibn ash-Shajarī. Ibn al-‘Arabī said that this is false and that it is simply a report about a ruling of the Sharī‘ah. That must be a report from Allah Almighty. It is said that there is an implied ‘li’ omitted at the beginning of ‘tarrabus’.

Most people recite ‘menstrual cycles’ as qurū’ with a hamzah while Nāfi‘ has quruw. It is the plural of aqru’ and aqra’ which is, in turn, the plural of qur’. Al-Aṣma‘ī said that. Abū Zayd said that it is qar’. The word also can mean the end of menstruation. Some of them say that it is the time between two menstrual periods. Abū ‘Amr ibn al-‘Alā’ said, ‘Some Arabs call menstruation qur’ and some use that term for purity and some use it for both.’ An-Naḥḥās mentioned that.

Scholars disagree about which of them is meant here. The people of Kufa say that it is the time of menstruation which is meant, based on what ‘Umar, ‘Alī, Ibn Mas‘ūd, Abū Mūsā, Mujāhid, Qatādah, aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk, ‘Ikrimah and as-Suddī said, while the people of the Hijaz say that it is the period of purity which is meant, which is the position of ‘Ā’ishah, Ibn ‘Umar, Zayd ibn Thābit, az-Zuhrī, Abān ibn ‘Uthmān, and ash-Shāfi‘ī. Those who consider it to be menstruation do so because the blood collects (qara’a) in the womb and those who consider it to be purity do so because the blood collects in the body. That which is precise about the matter is that the term is about time as one says, ‘The wind blew in its time (li- qur'ihā)." It is said that menstruation has a time and purity has a time since they both refer to a known time.

Some people say that the word is derived from the settling (qur') of water in a basin where it collects. The Qur'an takes its name from the fact that it collects meanings or is collection of letters. The womb collects blood at the time of menstruation and the body collects it in the period of purity. Abū 'Umar ibn 'Abd al-Barr said, 'The view of those who say that qur' is derived from the word for water collecting in a basin amounts to nothing because qur' has a hamzah and that word does not.' This is sound as it is transmitted by linguists like al-Jawharī and others: the noun for water settling is qirā and qur' is moving from purity to menstruation or menstruation to purity. That is what ash-Shāfi'ī said: it is moving from purity to menstruation. He did not think that it is moving from menstruation to purity. This demands that it is qur', based on derivation, and the āyah means three cycles or three movements.

A divorced woman is described by both states – sometimes she is moving from purity to menstruation and sometimes from menstruation to purity – and so the meaning of the words is in order. It directs to the movement of menstruation and purity and so it is a shared word. It is said that if it is confirmed that qur' is movement, then her moving from purity to menstruation is not meant at all by the āyah. That is by the sunnah commanding that divorce does not take place during menstruation. That is a divorce with an 'iddah. If it is a divorce with an 'iddah, then it is done in a state of purity. That indicates that qur' is derived from the movement.

Since divorce in a state of purity is sunnah, the words imply that their 'iddah is three changes. The first is from the purity in which the divorce occurred and which the change from menstruation to purity does not make a qur' because the language indicates that. However, we recognise another proof. Allah did not mean the change from menstruation to purity. When one of them is removed, then what is meant is the other, which is the change from purity to menstruation. On this basis, there are three changes, the first of which is purity. According to this, it is possible to fulfil three full cycles when divorce is done in a state of purity. It is not used metaphorically in any way. Aṭ-Ṭabarī said, ‘This is a fine inspection at the end of the direction taken by ash-Shāfi‘ī. It is possible that in that we mention a secret that it is not hard to understand in the fine points of the Sharī‘ah. It is that the change from purity to menstruation is a qur’ since it indicates that the womb is clear. Normally, a pregnant woman does not menstruate and so menstruation indicates that the womb is empty.’

The change from menstruation to purity is different to this. A menstruating woman can become pregnant at the end of her menstrual period. When pregnancy continues and the child is strong, then the bleeding stops. That is why Arab women become pregnant while pure.

This is how scholars and linguists interpret qur’. They use the verb for a woman when she menstruates, when she is pure and when she becomes pregnant and agree qur’ refers to a time. If you were to say, ‘Divorced women should wait by themselves for three times,’ the āyah would explain the probable number in what is counted and so clarification must be sought elsewhere. Our evidence is found in Allah’s words: ‘...divorce them during their period of purity (‘iddah)’ (65:1), There is no disagreement about the fact that one is commanded to divorce during purity and it is necessary that it is what is considered in the ‘iddah. When He says: ‘...divorce them,’ He means in a time in which she can do ‘iddah. Then He says: ‘calculate their ‘iddah,’ meaning what the divorced woman observes which is the state of purity in which she is divorced. The Prophet ﷺ said to ‘Umar, ‘Order him to take her back and then keep her until she is pure and then to wait until she menstruates and then becomes pure again. That is the ‘iddah which Allah has commanded for divorced women.’

Muslim and others transmitted it. It is a text about the time of purity being called ‘iddah which is the time in which women are divorced.

There is no disagreement that a woman who is divorced while menstruating does not count that menstruation, but when she is divorced while pure, that period of purity is counted in the ‘iddah by the majority. That is more appropriate. Abū Bakr ibn ‘Abd ar-Raḥmān said, ‘We did not meet any of our fuqahā’ who did not take the position of ‘Ā’ishah about ‘aqrā’ being periods of purity. When a man divorces a woman in a period of purity, during which he did not have sex with her, she observes ‘iddah for the rest of it, whether it is only an hour or an instant. Then she starts another period of purity after her menstruation and then a third after the second menstruation. When she sees the blood of the third menstruation, she is lawful to marry and leaves her ‘iddah. If someone divorces a woman during a period of purity, during which he has had sex with her, the divorce is binding, but he has behaved badly and she observes ‘iddah for the rest of that period of purity. Az-Zuhrī said that when a woman is divorced in a state of purity, her ‘iddah is three periods of purity other than the rest of that period. Abū ‘Umar said, ‘I do not know of anyone who says that ‘aqrā’ are periods of purity and then takes this view other than Ibn Shihāb az-Zuhrī. He said that the period of purity in which she is divorced does not count. Then she must observe three periods of purity because of Allah’s words in the āyah.’

According to this view, a divorced woman is not lawful until after the fourth menstrual period. The position of Ibn al-Qāsim, Mālik and most of his people, ash-Shāfi‘ī and the scholars of Madīnah is that when a divorced women sees the first drop of the third period, she is free of the bond. That is the school of Zayd ibn Thābit, ‘Ā’ishah and Ibn ‘Umar. Aḥmad ibn Ḥanbal also said that and it is what Dāwud ibn ‘Alī and his people said. The argument against az-Zuhrī is that the Prophet ﷺ gave permission to divorce a woman in a state of purity without intercourse and did not stipulate the beginning or end of the period. Ashhab said, ‘The bond and inheritance are not severed until it is certain that it is menstrual blood to ensure that it is not a single gush which is not menstrual blood. The Kufans argue by what the Prophet ﷺ said to Fāṭimah bint Abi Ḥubaysh when she complained of bleeding to him, ‘That is a vein. Wait and when you see your menstrual period, do not pray. When the period passes, then purify yourself and then pray from one period to another.’

The Almighty says: ‘In the case of those of your wives who are past the age of menstruation, if you have any doubt, their ‘iddah should be three months.’ (65:4) This indicates that, in the case of the ‘iddah of a woman beyond the age of menstruation, the time is counted in months. ‘Umar said in the presence of the Companions, ‘A slavegirl’s ‘iddah is two months, half that of a free woman. If you are able to make it one and a half months, do so.’ No one objected to that. That indicates that it is their consensus. It is also the view of the Companions, including the first four caliphs. What they have said is enough for you! Allah’s words: ‘Divorced women should wait by themselves for three menstrual cycles,’ indicate that because it means to wait for three full cycles. This is only possible based on saying that they are menstrual cycles because if someone says that they are periods of purity, then it is possible to do an ‘iddah of two periods of purity and part of another because when she is divorced in a period of purity, she counts the rest of that period as a cycle. We believe that she starts from the beginning of menstruation so that the name holds true. When a man divorces her in a period of purity without having had sex during that time, she turns to a menstrual period, then another and then another. When she has a ghusl after the third period, she leaves the ‘iddah.

This is refuted by the words of the Almighty: ‘Allah subjected them to it for seven whole nights and eight whole days’ (69:6). ‘Eight’ is feminine because ‘yawm (day)’ is masculine. The same is true of qur’. This indicates that it is meant. Abū Ḥanīfah agreed with us that when a woman is divorced while menstruating, she does not count the menstrual period in which she is divorced nor the purity after it; she starts the ‘iddah with the menstruation after purity. We count by periods of purity as we already made clear. Linguists permit designating a part of something by the noun for the whole of it.

Some of those who say that it is menstruation say that when she is pure after the third menstrual period, the ‘iddah ends after ghusl and there is no right then for the husband to take her back. Sa‘īd ibn Jubayr, Ṭāwūs, Ibn Shurbrumah and al-Awzā‘ī said that. Sharīk said, ‘When a woman delays the ghusl for twenty years, her husband can still take her back as long as she has not had a ghusl.’ It is related that Ishāq ibn Rāhawayh said, ‘When a woman starts her third menstrual period, she is clear of the husband and he no longer has a right to take her back although it is not lawful for her to marry another until she has had a ghusl after menstruation.’ Something similar is related from Ibn ‘Abbās, but it is a weak position because of the evidence in the words of the Almighty: ‘When their ‘iddah comes to an end, you are not to blame for anything they do with themselves.’ (2:234) As for what ash-Shāfi‘ī mentioned about the change from purity to menstruation being called qur’, the point of it is to shorten the ‘iddah for the woman. So when a woman is divorced in the last hour of purity and then starts to menstruate, she counts it as a cycle and at the change from the third period of purity, the bond is severed and she is lawful. Allah knows best.

Most scholars say that the ‘iddah of a slavegirl who menstruates is two menstrual cycles after her husband divorces her. It is related that Ibn Sīrīn said, ‘I only think that the ‘iddah of a slavegirl is the same as that of a free woman although there is a past sunnah on that. It is more appropriate to follow the Sunnah.’ ‘Abd ar-Raḥmān ibn Kaysān al-Aṣamm, Dāwud ibn ‘Alī and a group of the Zāhirīs said that the āyahs about the ‘iddah for divorce and widowhood in months and cycles are general to slavegirls and free women. So the ‘iddāh of a free woman and slavegirl is the same. The majority argue by the words of the Prophet ﷺ: ‘Divorce of a slavegirl is two times and her ‘iddah is two menstrual cycles.’ Ibn Jurayj related that from ‘Aṭā’ from Muḏāhir ibn Aslam from his father from al-Qāsim ibn Muḏammad that ‘Ā’ishah said that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘Divorce of a slavegirl is twice and her cycles are two menstrual cycles.’ Both divorce and ‘iddah are ascribed to her. However, only Muḏāhir ibn Aslam has this ḥadīth, and he is weak.

and it is not lawful for them to conceal what Allah has created in their wombs

‘Ikrimah, az-Zuhri, and an-Nakha‘ī said that this refers to the concealment of menstruation. ‘Umar and Ibn ‘Abbās said that it is pregnancy. Mujāhid said that it is menstruation and pregnancy. This is on the basis that a pregnant woman can menstruate. The idea that is meant in the āyah is that the length of the waiting period (‘iddah) depends on the statement of the women concerned and their word is accepted about whether the ‘iddah has ended or not. They are entrusted with that and it is what is meant by this āyah. Sulaymān ibn Yasār said, ‘We were not commanded to investigate women and examine their private parts. That is up to them since they are entrusted with it.’

The reason for prohibiting concealment is to prevent harm to the husband and taking away his right. If a woman says, ‘I have menstruated’ when she has not, then she takes away his right to take her back. When she says, ‘I have not menstruated’ when she has, he is obliged to pay maintenance to which she is not entitled and she thereby harms him. Or she may intend by her lie in denying menstruation that he may not take her back until the ‘iddah is over and so cuts off his right. The same is true of a pregnant woman who conceals her pregnancy to cut off his right to take her back. Qatādah also mentions that it was the custom in the time of Jāhiliyyah for women to conceal their pregnancy so that the child could be ascribed to a new husband and that is the reason that the āyah was revealed. It is related that a man of the tribe of Ashja‘ went to the Messenger of Allah ﷺ and said, ‘Messenger of Allah, I divorced my wife while she was pregnant. I do not feel safe that she will not marry again and my child will be attributed to another.’ Then this āyah was revealed and his wife was returned to him.

Ibn al-Mundhir said, ‘All that I remember from scholars is that when a woman says after ten days, “I have had three periods and my waiting period is over,” her words are not believed or accepted unless she says that she had a miscarriage and that is clear.’ They disagree about the time when the woman’s statement is accepted. Mālik says that what she says is accepted if the period of time is reasonable for someone like her. There are two views when what she says is something that rarely occurs. We find in the Mudawannah: ‘If she says she has had three periods in a single month and other women confirm it, she is believed.’ That is what Shurayḥ said. ‘Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib said to him, ‘You are right and have done well!’ He said in the book of Muḥammad, ‘She is only believed after a month and a half has passed.’ Abū Thawr said something similar. He said, ‘The minimum for that is forty-seven days. That is the minimum fifteen days of purity and the single day for the minimum of menstruation.’ An-Nu‘mān said, ‘She is not believed about less than sixty days.’ Ash-Shāfi‘ī said that.

if they believe in Allah and the Last Day.

This is a strong threat to emphasise the prohibition against concealment and to encourage women to fulfil the trust placed in them by telling the truth about what is in their wombs. It makes concealment tantamount to not believing in Allah. This is not the action of someone who believes.

Their husbands have the right to take them back within that time, if they desire to be reconciled.

The word used for ‘husbands’ here is the plural of the word baʿl. This word is used because of a husband’s position in respect of his wife. We find in 37:125: ‘Do you call on Baal?’ Baal means a lord or someone in a high position. Biʿāl means sexual intercourse and this is found in the words of the Prophet ﷺ about the days of Tashrīq: ‘They are the days of eating, drinking and sexual intercourse.’ The word baʿl can in fact be used for husband or wife.

The ‘right to take them back’ can be exercised in two ways: one is during the waiting period, according to the ḥadīth of Ibn ‘Umar, and the other is after the waiting period has come to an end, according to the ḥadīth of Ma‘qil. If that is the case, then the āyah is evidence that the generality regarding those named has become specific. ‘Divorced women should wait by themselves for three menstrual cycles’ is general in respect of women divorced three times and those divorced less times than that without disagreement. Then Allah says: ‘Their husbands have the right to take them back.’ That is a specific ruling about someone whose divorce is less than three times.

Scholars agree that when a free man divorces his free wife, whose marriage has been consummated once or twice, he is entitled to take her back as long as her ‘iddah is not over, even if she dislikes him doing that. If the man does not take her back until the ‘iddah is over, then she is more entitled to herself and is not related to him. She is only lawful to him by a proposal of a new marriage with a walī and witnesses. This is not part of the sunnah of taking back a wife. This is the consensus of the scholars.

Al-Muhallab said, ‘If the man takes his wife back during the ‘iddah, none of the rulings of marriage are necessary for him except for witnessing to the taking back. This is the consensus of scholars because Allah says: ‘Then when they have reached the end of their ‘iddah, either retain them with correctness and courtesy or part from them with correctness and courtesy. Call two upright men from among yourselves as witnesses.’ (65:2)

He mentions witnesses in taking back but not in marriage or divorce. Ibn al-Mundhir said, 'What we mentioned from the Book of Allah and the consensus of scholars is enough in this area. Allah knows best.'

They disagree about what constitutes a man taking back his wife during the 'iddah. Mālik said, 'When he has sex with her during the 'iddah, intending to take her back, while being ignorant of having to declare that he has done that, that is taking her back. If the man has not made his intention clear, the woman should refuse intercourse until he declares that he has taken her back. Iṣḥāq said that. It is because the Prophet ﷺ said, 'Actions are by intentions, and a man has what he intends.' If he has sex with her during the 'iddah without having intended to take her back, Mālik says, 'He takes her back in the 'iddah and does not have sex with her until she is free of his false sperm.' Ibn al-Qāsim added, 'Even if her 'iddah ends and neither he nor anyone else has had sex with her in the rest of the period of istibrā'. If he does that, his marriage is void but the prohibition between them is not perpetual because it was his sperm.' One group said that if he has sex with her, that constitutes taking her back. That is what Sa'īd ibn Jubayr, al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī, Ibn Sīrīn, az-Zuhrī, 'Aṭā', Ṭāwūs and ath-Thawrī said. It is said that he should make a declaration. That is what is stated by the People of Opinion, al-Awzā'ī and Ibn Abī Laylā. Ibn al-Mundhir related it. Abū 'Umar said, 'It is said that his having sex with her is taking her back in any case, whether he intended it or not.' That is related from a group of the people of Mālik and al-Layth believed that. They do not disagree about someone who sells a slavegirl with an option of return that he can have sex with her during the period of the option. He takes back her ownership by that and chooses to break the sale by doing that.

If someone kisses or touches his wife with the intention of taking her back by that, it is a retraction. If he did not intend retraction by that, he sins and does not take her back. The Sunnah is that he should testify before having sex and before kissing or touching. Abū Ḥanīfah and his people said that if he has sex with her or touches her with lust, that constitutes a retraction. That is the view of ath-Thawrī. He should testify. In the view of Mālik, ash-Shāfi‘ī, Ishāq, Abū ‘Ubayd and Abū Thawr, it is not a retraction. Ibn al-Mundhir said that. He said in al-Muntaqā: ‘There is no disagreement about the validity of verbal retraction. As for action, like sexual intercourse and a kiss, Qāḍī Abū Muḥammad said that it is valid by this and any sort of pleasurable enjoyment.’ Ibn al-Mawwāz said, ‘It is like a touch for pleasure, or looking at her private parts or similar beauties when he intends retraction by that. This differs from the position of ash-Shāfi‘ī that retraction can only be done verbally. Ibn al-Mundhir related it from Abū Thawr, Jābir ibn Zayd and Abū Qilābah.

Ash-Shāfi‘ī said, ‘If he has sex with her, whether or not he intends retraction, it is not a retraction and she receives an appropriate dower. Mālik said that she has nothing because if he takes her back, he does not owe any dower. There is no sex without retraction and no dower for retraction. Abū ‘Umar said, ‘I do not know of anyone who obliges him to pay an appropriate dower other than ash-Shāfi‘ī. His position is not strong because she falls under the ruling of a wife and they inherit from each other. So how can a suitable dower be obliged for having sex with a woman when most of her rulings are those of a wife.’ However, the judicial error in the view of ash-Shāfi‘ī is strong because she is unlawful to him unless he takes her back. They agree that when someone has sex with a woman based on a judicial error, she is obliged a dower. That is enough!

They disagree about travelling with her before taking her back. Mālik and ash-Shāfi‘ī said that he should not travel with her until he has taken her back. That is also the position of Abū Ḥanīfah and his people except for Zufar. Al-Ḥasan ibn Ziyād related from him that he can travel with her before taking her back. ‘Amr ibn Khālid related from him that he should not travel with her until he has taken her back.

They disagree about when he visits her without seeing any of her beauties and whether she can adorn herself for him. Mālik said that he should not be alone with her and only visit her with permission. He should not look at her unless she is fully dressed. He should not look at her hair. There is nothing wrong with him eating with her when there is someone else with them. He should not spend the night with her. Ibn al-Qāsim said, ‘Mālik retracted that and said that he should not visit her or look at her hair. Abū Ḥanīfah and his people did not disagree that she can adorn herself, perfume herself, and wear jewellery. Sa‘īd ibn al-Musayyab said, ‘When a man divorces his wife once, he must ask permission to visit her and she can wear whatever clothes and jewellery he likes. If they only have one room, they put a curtain between them and give the greeting when they enter. Something similar is related from Qatādah. When he enters, he makes her aware by clearing his throat. Ash-Shāfi‘ī said, ‘A divorced woman who can be taken back is unlawful to her husband until he takes her back and that can only be by declaration.’

Scholars agree that when the man says after the ‘iddah is over, ‘I took you back inside the ‘iddah’ and she denies it, one takes her statement with her oath and he has no way to her. However, an-Nu‘mān did not think that there was any question of an oath in marriage or retraction. His two companions disagreed with him and took a similar view to that of most scholars. The same is true when the wife is a slavegirl and the master and slavegirl disagree and the husband claims that he took her back in the ‘iddah after the end of the ‘iddah and she denies it. One takes the statement of the wife, even if the master says that she is lying. This is the view of ash-Shāfi‘ī, Abū Thawr and an-Nu‘mān. Ya‘qāub and Muḥammad said that the statement of the master is taken and he is more entitled to her.

Rejection demands the removal of the bond although scholars say that a revocable divorce makes intercourse forbidden and the rejection refers to being lawful. Al-Layth ibn Sa‘d and Abū Ḥanīfah and those who take their position that the retraction makes intercourse lawful: the point of the divorce decreases the number he has. The rulings of being married remain and none of them are dissolved. They said that even if the rulings of being a wife remain, as long as she is in her ‘iddah the woman is on course for their removal when the ‘iddah ends. Retraction turns away from this path that the woman is travelling. This is a metaphorical rejection and the rejection by which we judge is real. There is an achieved removal, which is the prohibition of sex and the rejection of it is real. Allah knows best.

The word ‘right’ is used in the comparative form here, ‘aḥaqq’ (literally ‘more right’) because there are two rights in any conflict and one has to be preferred. So the husband has the right during the waiting period to take his wife back, which is not the case when the waiting period has ended. This is similar to the words of the Prophet ﷺ: ‘A widow is more entitled to herself than her guardian (walī).’ A husband is recommended to take his wife back, but that is provided that he puts things right between himself and her and removes the alienation between them. If he just desires to harm her more and to prolong her waiting period and to prevent her being free from the marriage, it is forbidden and the man concerned does wrong. Allah says: ‘Do not retain them by force, thus overstepping the bounds.’ (2:231) If someone does do that, the retraction is nevertheless valid even though he does something forbidden and wrongs himself.

Women possess rights similar to those held over them

Women have rights over men just as men have rights over women. This is why Ibn ‘Abbās said, ‘I adorn myself for my wife as she adorns herself for me. I do not want to take from her all the rights she owes me for then I would be obliged to give her all the rights I owe her because the Almighty says: “Women possess rights similar to those held over them to be honoured with fairness,” in other words for their husbands to make themselves attractive as long as it does not involve something wrongful.’ He also said, ‘They are entitled to good company from and intimate relations with their husbands and they must obey their husbands.’ It is said that their right is that their husbands should not cause them any harm and in return they should not cause any harm to their husbands. Aṭ-Ṭabarī said that. Ibn Zayd said, ‘Fear Allah in respect of them as they should fear Allah in respect of you.’ The meanings are close and the āyah is general to all marital rights.

Ibn ‘Abbās said, ‘I adorn myself for my wife.’ Scholars say that a man’s adornment is dependent on his state. Men do that according to what is seemly and appropriate. Sometimes adornment is proper at one time but not at another, and some adornment suits young men but not old men, and some suits old men but not young men. Do you not see that when old men and mature men trim their moustaches, it is seemly and adorns them, but when young men do that, it is ugly and unseemly because their beard is not yet full. If someone trims his moustache as soon as the hair appears on his face, it is silly. If his beard is full and he trims his moustache, that adorns him. It is related that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘My Lord commanded me to leave my beard and trim my moustache.’ The same principle applies to dress.

This applies to all seeking of rights. A man acts according to what is seemly and appropriate with his wife in respect of adornment so that it delights her and makes her abstain from other men. The same is true of mature men: one type of adornment may be appropriate for some but not others. As for wearing perfume, using siwak and toothpicks, removing dirt, excess hair, washing and clipping the nails, that is clearly appropriate for everyone. Henna is for old men, and rings are adornment for all, young and old. That is the adornment of men, as will be made clear in Sūrat an-Nahl. A husband must bear in mind the times when a wife needs a man to satisfy her so that she has no need to look elsewhere. If a man sees that he is unable to carry out his wife's right to sexual satisfaction from him, he should take medicines to increase his potency.

The root of the word darajah (degree) means 'to roll up'. A darajah is a step which one steps on to ascend. Rijlah means 'strength' and a horse that is 'rajil' is strong in walking. The extra degree of a man is on account of intelligence, power to spend and maintain, paying blood money, larger shares of inheritance, and jihād. Ḥumayd said that the degree referred to is the beard, but even if this is sound from him, it is weak because it is not implied by the āyah nor does the āyah mean it. Ibn al-'Arabī said, 'Bliss to the slave who refrains from what he does not know, especially when it concerns the Book of Allah! The superiority of men over women is not hidden from someone who is intelligent, even if it were not that woman is created from man, and so he is her root. He can prevent her going out without his permission and she may only fast with his permission and only make ḥajj with him.'

It is said that the degree is the dower as ash-Sha'bī said. It is said that it is the permission to discipline. Thus the degree entails preference. You should be aware that the right she owes to her husband obliges the right that he owes to her. That is why the Prophet ﷺ said, 'If I were to command anyone to prostrate to other than Allah, I would have commanded a woman to prostrate to her husband.' Ibn 'Abbās said, 'The degree indicates encouragement for men to be good company and expansive to women in money and character, because the one preferred must make greater efforts.' Ibn 'Aṭīyyah said that this is an outstanding and excellent opinion. Al-Māwardī said that it is possible that it is about marital rights because he can initiate divorce but she cannot and he can call her to bed while she cannot force him to respond. Related to that are the words of the Prophet ﷺ, ‘If a woman is called to her husband’s bed and refuses, the angels curse her until morning.’

‘Allah is Almighty’ with power that none can resist, and ‘All-Wise’, knowing what is correct in His actions.

اَلَّا يُقِيْبَا حُدُودَ اللّٰهِ فَلَا جُنَاحَ عَلَيْهِمَا فِیْهَا اِفْتَدَتْ بِهٖ سَلِّكَ حُدُودَ
اللّٰهِ فَلَا تَعْتَدُوْهَا وَمَنْ يَّعَدَّ حُدُودَ اللّٰهِ فَاُولٰٓئِكَ هُمُ الظّٰلِمُوْنَ ﴿۲۲۹﴾

229 Divorce can be pronounced two times; in which case wives may be retained with correctness and courtesy or released with good will. It is not lawful for you to keep anything you have given them unless a couple fear that they will not remain within Allah’s limits. If you fear that they will not remain within Allah’s limits, there is nothing wrong in the wife ransoming herself with some of what she received. These are Allah’s limits so do not overstep them. Those who overstep Allah’s limits are wrongdoers.

Divorce can be pronounced two times;

It is confirmed that people in the time of Jāhiliyyah had no limit to the number of divorces they could pronounce although they did have a known waiting period (‘iddah). It was the same at the beginning of Islam: a man would divorce his wife as often as he wished. Then when she was almost free he would take her back. Then during the time of the Prophet ﷺ a man said to his wife, ‘I will not house you nor will I let you go.’ ‘How can you do that?’ she asked. He said, ‘I will divorce you and when your ‘iddah is almost up, take you back.’ The woman complained about that to ‘Ā’ishah and she mentioned it to the Prophet ﷺ and then Allah revealed this āyah, which clarifies the number of divorces a man can pronounce and then retract without having a new marriage with dower and wali. It superseded what they were doing. This was said by ‘Urwah ibn az-Zubayr, Qatādah, Ibn Zayd and others. Ibn Mas‘ūd, Ibn ‘Abbās, Mujāhid and others said that the āyah is simply meant to establish the sunnah of divorce: anyone who divorces twice should fear Allah in the third and either leave her without wronging any of her right or keep her correctly. The āyah includes both possibilities.

Divorce is accomplished by the removal of the contractual bond between a husband and wife by means of the pronouncement of certain words. It is permitted by this āyah and others and by the words of the Prophet ﷺ in the ḥadīth of Ibn ‘Umar, ‘If he wishes, he may keep her, and if he wishes, he may divorce her.’ The Prophet ﷺ divorced Ḥafṣah and then took her back. Ibn Mājah transmitted it. Scholars agree that it is sunnah to divorce when the woman concerned is free of menstruation in a period of purity in which he has not had sex with her. Then he follows the sunnah in the divorce and the ‘iddah which Allah has commanded. He retracts that if he has sex with her before the end of the ‘iddah. If it has ended, then he becomes a suitor like any other. The Book, Sunnah and consensus of the community is that divorce is permitted and not prohibited. Ibn al-Mundhir said that there is no report that confirms a prohibition of it.

Ad-Dāraquṭnī related from Abu-l-‘Abbās Muḥammad ibn Mūsā ibn ‘Alī ad-Dūlābī and Ya‘qāub ibn Ibrāhīm from al-Ḥasan ibn ‘Arafah from Ismā‘īl ibn ‘Ayyāsh ibn Ḥumayd ibn Mālīk al-Lakhmī from Makḥūl that Mu‘ādh ibn Jabal said, ‘The Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, “Mu‘ādh, Allah has not created on the face of the earth anything dearer to Him than setting free a slave and Allah has not created anything on the face of the earth more hateful to Him than divorce. When a man says to his slave, ‘You are free, Allah willing,’ he is free without exception. When a man says to his wife, ‘You are divorced, Allah willing,’ his exception holds good and there is no divorce.”” Muḥammad ibn Mūsā ibn ‘Alī related from Ḥumayd ibn ar-Rabī’ from Yazīd ibn Hārūn from Ismā‘īl ibn ‘Ayyāsh with a similar isnād. Ḥumayd said, ‘Yazīd ibn Hārūn said to me, “What a ḥadīth that would be if only Ḥumayd ibn Mālīk al-Lakhmī were recognised!” I answered, “He is my grandfather!” Yazīd said, “You have delighted me, Now it is a ḥadīth!”” Ibn al-Mundhir said, ‘Among those who believed that the exception “Allah willing” applied in divorce were Ṭāwūs, Ḥumayd, ash-Shāfi‘ī, Abū Thawr and the People of Opinion. According to the position of Mālīk and al-Awzā‘ī, the exception is not permitted in divorce. That is the view of al-Ḥasan and Qatādah about divorce in particular.

This means that you must do that or that it is obligatory for you to retain them correctly. ‘With good will’ means without wronging her in any way with respect to her rights or overstepping in words. ‘Imsāk’ (retaining) is the opposite of divorce. ‘Tasrīḥ’ (releasing) means to let something go. It is used for combing the hair since the hairs are released from one another. It is also used for releasing livestock. The releasing referred to here either means to leave the woman until the waiting period of the second divorce has ended so that she has control of herself, as as-Suddī and aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk said, or to divorce her a third time and let her go as Mujāhid, ‘Aṭā’ and others said.

The latter is more likely for three reasons. One is a ḥadīth in ad-Dāraquṭnī, reported by Anas that a man said, ‘Messenger of Allah, Allah says, “Divorce is twice.” Why does it become three?’ He replied, ‘Retaining with correctness or releasing with good will is the third.’ Ibn al-Mundhir mentioned it. The second possibility is that the word ‘release’ is one of the expressions used for divorce. The third is that it is allowed by the verbal form of ‘release’ which is causative. Abū ‘Umar said that scholars agree that Allah’s words: ‘...or released with good will’ is the third divorce after the second. It is also meant by His words: 'But if a man divorces his wife a third time, she is not lawful for him until she has married another husband.' (2:230) They agree that someone who divorces his wife once or twice can take her back. After the third divorce, she is not then lawful to him until she has married another man. This is a firm ruling of the Qur'an about whose interpretation there is no disagreement. The same is also related from reputable people. Sa'īd ibn Naṣr related from Qāsim ibn Aṣḡagh from Muḡammad ibn Waḡḡāḡ from Abū Bakr ibn Shaybah from Abū Mu'āwiyah from Ismā'īl ibn Sumay' that Abū Razīn said, 'A man came to the Prophet ﷺ and said, "Messenger of Allah, have you seen that Allah says, 'Divorce is twice.' Where is the third?" The Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, "Wives may be retained with correctness and courtesy or released with good will."' Ath-Thawrī and others related the like from Ismā'īl ibn Sumay' from Abū Razīn.

At-Ṭabarī mentioned this report and said that it is confirmed in its transmission. He preferred the statement of aḡ-Ḍaḡḡāk and as-Suddī that the third divorce is mentioned in the course of His words: 'If a man divorces his wife a third time.' (2:230) The third is mentioned in these words with the obliged separation and the prohibition only removed by another husband. So His words, 'released with good will', are a renewed point: the separation at the end of the 'iddah. The goal of the āyah is to explain the number of divorces which oblige making her unlawful and superseding what was permitted of an unlimited number of divorces. If 'released with good will' was the third divorce, the goal of causing the prohibition by three would not be clear since stopping at that would not indicate the separation which makes her prohibited without marriage to another. The prohibition is known from Allah's words: 'If a man divorces his wife a third time...' and there the earlier words do not mean the third. If it had meant the third, then the following words would mean a fourth divorce because the fā' entails consequence.

Al-Bukhārī has a section on 'The one who allowed a triple divorce

by the words of the Almighty: “Divorce can be pronounced two times; in which case wives can be retained with correctness and courtesy or released with good will””. This indicates that this is the maximum number allowed. It is binding for the one who has constricted himself. Our scholars said that the imams of fatwā agree that a triple divorce can take place in a single statement. That is the position of the majority of the Salaf with the exception of Ṭāwūs and some of the Zāhirīs who believe that saying it three times in one statement is only a single divorce. This is related from Muḥammad ibn Ishāq and al-Ḥajjāj ibn Arṭa’ah who said that nothing is obliged for him. It is the position of Muqātil. It is related from Dāwud that it does not occur. What is famous from al-Ḥajjāj ibn Arṭa’ah, the majority of the Salaf and the imams is that three must occur and there is no difference between saying the three together or separately.

Those who believe that nothing is obliged cite Allah’s words: ‘Divorced women should wait by themselves for three menstrual cycles.’ (2:228) This is general and includes every divorced woman except for certain specific ones. Allah also says: ‘Divorce can be pronounced two times’ and: ‘...wives can be retained with correctness and courtesy or released with good will.’ It is not binding for someone who divorces three times in one statement because it is not mentioned in the Qur’an.

Those who believe that it is a single divorce cite three ḥadīths. One is the ḥadīth of Ibn ‘Abbās transmitted by Ṭāwūs, Abu-ṣ-Ṣahbā’ and ‘Ikrimah. The second is the ḥadīth of Ibn ‘Umar as transmitted by those who related that he divorced his wife three times in a single statement and the Prophet ﷺ ordered him to take her back and count it as a single divorce. The third is that Rukānah divorced his wife like that and the Messenger of Allah ﷺ ordered him to take her back. The retraction makes clear that it was considered as a single divorce. The answer to the ḥadīths is what aṭ-Ṭaḥāwī mentioned that Sa’īd ibn Jubayr, Mujāhid, ‘Aṭā’, ‘Amr ibn Dīnār, Mālik ibn al-Ḥuwayrith, Muḥammad ibn Iyās ibn al-Bukhayr and an-Nu‘mān ibn Abī ‘Ayyāsh related from Ibn ‘Abbās that someone who divorces his wife three times in a single statement has disobeyed his Lord and his wife is parted from him and he can only marry her after she has married another husband.

Those imams related from Ibn ‘Abbās that which agrees with the general consensus and indicates the weakness of what Ṭāwūs and others related. Ibn ‘Abbās would not adopt his own opinion if it disagreed with that of the Companions as a whole. Ibn ‘Abd al-Barr said, ‘The transmission of Ṭāwūs is weak and an error which is not used as a basis by any of the fuqahā’ of the regions in the Hijaz, Syria, Iraq or the east and the west. It was said that Abu-ṣ-Ṣahbā’ is not known among the freemen of Ibn ‘Abbās.’ Qāḍī Abu-l-Walīd al-Bājī said, ‘I think that the transmission of Ibn Ṭāwūs about that is sound. Imams have related it from him: Ma‘mar, Ibn Jurayj and others. Ibn Ṭāwūs is an imam. The ḥadīth which they indicate is that which Ibn Ṭāwūs related from his father from Ibn ‘Abbās: “In the time of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ, Abū Bakr and two years of the caliphate of ‘Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb, divorce was three divorces in one. ‘Umar said, ‘People are hasty in a matter about which they should be slow. We should carry out something on them!’ and he did so.” The account means that they used to carry out a single divorce instead of what people do now with three divorces. The soundness of this interpretation is indicated by what ‘Umar said, “People are hasty in a matter about which they should be slow.” He disliked them innovating haste in divorce when they should be slow about it. If their state had been that in the time of the Prophet ﷺ, he would not have said it and there would have been nothing wrong in them being hasty about a matter in which they should be slow. The soundness of this interpretation is indicated by what is related from Ibn ‘Abbās by a different path: he gave a fatwā that the triple divorce was binding when someone did it all at once. If this is the meaning of the ḥadīth of Ibn Ṭāwūs, then it is what we said. If the ḥadīth of Ibn ‘Abbās is applied to the interpretation, no attention is paid to that statement. Ibn ‘Abbās went back to the position of the majority and the consensus. Our evidence by way of analogy is that this divorce was carried out by someone with the power to do so and so it must be binding, the same as is the case if it is a single one.’

The interpretation of al-Bājī is what aṭ-Ṭabarī mentioned from the scholars of ḥadīth, that they used this single divorce which became three: they did not divorce in one go, but did so once in the entire ‘iddah so that the woman was clear and the ‘iddah ended. Qāḍī Abū Muḥammad ‘Abd al-Wahhāb said, ‘It means that people used to confine themselves to one divorce. Then in the time of ‘Umar, they increased it to three.’ The Qāḍī said, ‘This is the closest to what the transmitter said: in the time of ‘Umar people used to hasten to do three, so he hastened that for them, i.e. obliged the ruling on them.’

As for the ḥadīth of Ibn ‘Umar, ad-Dāraquṭnī related from Aḥmad ibn Ṣubayḥ from Ṭarīf ibn Nāṣiḥ from Mu‘āwiyah ibn ‘Ammār adh-Dhahabī that Abu-z-Zubayr said, ‘I asked Ibn ‘Umar about a man who divorced his wife three times while she was menstruating. He said, “Do you know Ibn ‘Umar?” “Yes,” I answered. He said, “I divorced my wife three times in a single statement in the time of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ while she was menstruating. The Messenger of Allah ﷺ returned it to the Sunnah.”’ Ad-Dāraquṭnī said, ‘All of them are Shi‘ah. It is recorded that Ibn ‘Umar divorced his wife once while she was menstruating.’ ‘Ubaydullāh said, ‘The only thing contrary to the Sunnah is his divorcing her during menstruation.’ Similarly Ṣāliḥ ibn Kaysān, Mūsā ibn ‘Uqbah, Ismā‘īl ibn Umayyah, Layth ibn Sa‘d, Ibn Abī Dhi‘b, Ibn Jurayj, Jābir. Ismā‘īl ibn Ibrāhīm ibn ‘Uqbah said that Nāfi‘ said that Ibn ‘Umar did a single divorce. That is also what az-Zuhrī said from Sālīm from his father, Yūnus ibn Jubayr, ash-Sha‘bī and al-Ḥasan.

It is said that the ḥadīth of Rukānah is a muddled, severed ḥadīth. It has no authoritative isnād. Abū Dāwud related it from Ibn Jurayj from one of the Banū Abī Rāfi‘, among whom there is no one authoritative, from ‘Ikrimah from Ibn ‘Abbās. It says: Rukānah ibn ‘Abd Yazīd divorced his wife three times. The Messenger of Allah ﷺ told him, ‘Take her back.’ It is also related by various paths from Nāfi‘ ibn ‘Ujayr that Rukānah ibn ‘Abd Yazīd divorced his wife with a triple divorce and the Messenger of Allah ﷺ asked him to swear to what he meant by it. He swore that he had only intended a single divorce and so he returned her to him. There is confusion regarding the name and the action. No one uses something like this as an argument.

Ad-Dāraquṭnī transmitted this ḥadīth by various paths in the Sunan. In one of them Muḥammad ibn Yaḥyā ibn Mirdās related from Abū Dāwud as-Sijistānī from Aḥmad ibn ‘Amr ibn as-Sarḥ, Abū Thawr, Ibrāhīm ibn Khālīd al-Kalbī, and another that Muḥammad ibn Idrīs ash-Shāfi‘ī related from his uncle Muḥammad ibn ‘Alī ibn Shāfi‘ from ‘Abdullāh ibn ‘Alī ibn as-Sā’ib from Nāfi‘ ibn ‘Abd Yazīd that Rukānah ibn ‘Abd Yazīd divorced his wife Suhaymah al-Muzaniyyah with a final divorce. He informed the Messenger of Allah ﷺ about that and said, ‘By Allah, I only meant one!’ The Messenger of Allah ﷺ asked, ‘By Allah, did you only mean one?’ Rukānah said, ‘By Allah, I only meant one by it!’ So the Messenger of Allah ﷺ returned her to him. He divorced her a second time during the caliphate of ‘Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb and a third time during the caliphate of ‘Uthmān. Abū Dāwud said that it is a sound ḥadīth. What is sound in the ḥadīth of Rukānah is that he divorced his wife finally, not three times. There is disagreement about a final divorce as we will explain. So there is no argument. Allah knows best. Abū ‘Umar said that the transmission of ash-Shāfi‘ī from his uncle is more complete. The addition is not refuted by the sources and so it is obligatory to accept it because of the trustworthiness of its transmitters. Ash-Shāfi‘ī, his uncle and grandfather were from the household of Rukānah. All of them were from the Banū ‘Abd al-

Muṭṭalib ibn ‘Abd Manāf. They were people who knew the story.

Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad ibn Mughīth aṭ-Ṭulayṭilī mentioned this matter in al-Wathā’iq. He said, ‘There are two types of divorce: the sunnah divorce and the innovated divorce. The sunnah divorce occurs in the manner that the Sharī‘ah recommended. The innovated divorce is the opposite. It is to divorce a wife while she is menstrual or in post-natal lochia and to do three in one statement. If he does it, then the divorce is nevertheless binding.’

Then after the consensus that she is divorced, scholars disagree about what is obliged for someone after the divorce. ‘Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib and Ibn Mas‘ūd said that one divorce is obliged. Ibn ‘Abbās said that. He observed that his word triple has no sense because he did not divorce three times. The word ‘three’ is allowed if he is reporting about the past and says, ‘I divorced three times,’ reporting about three actions that he did three times. It is as when a man says, ‘Yesterday I recited the sūrah three times.’ That is sound. If he recited it once and says, ‘I recited it three times,’ he is lying. That is also the case if he swears by Allah three times to repeat the oath: that is three oaths. If, however, he says, ‘I swear by Allah trebly,’ that is one oath. That is the case with divorce. That was stated by az-Zubayr ibn al-‘Awwām and ‘Abd ar-Raḥmān ibn ‘Awf. We related all of that from Ibn Waḍḍāḥ and it is the position of the shaykhs of Cordoba: Ibn Zinbā‘, Muḥammad ibn Taqiyy ibn Mukhallad, Muḥammad ibn ‘Abd as-Salām al-Ḥasanī, the unique scholar and faqīh of his time, Aṣḥab ibn al-Ḥubāb and a group of others.

Part of the argument of Ibn ‘Abbās is that Allah separated the word ‘divorce’ in His Book. He said: ‘Divorce can be pronounced two times,’ meaning the maximum number after which there must be either retaining with correctness during the waiting period or releasing. Releasing means to leave her without returning to her until the end of the waiting period. That is being good to her if there is regret between them. Allah says: ‘You never know, it may well be that after that Allah will cause a new situation to develop' (65:1), which means regret about separation and the desire to return. The pronouncement of three in one go is not good because it is abandoning what is recommended in something Allah has allowed. Allah mentioned divorce separated [in the āyahs] to indicate that when someone combines it in one phrase, he has left what is analogous in other recommended matters that indicate that. An example of that is when a person says, 'My property is ṣadaqah for the poor': a third satisfies that. In the Ishrāf, Ibn al-Mundhir says, 'Sa'īd ibn Jubayr, Ṭāwūs, Abu-sh-Sha'thā', 'Aṭā', and 'Umar ibn Dīnār said that if someone divorces a virgin three times in one statement, it is one divorce.' Sometimes they make an exception for a woman whose marriage is unconsummated and has no 'iddah when he says, 'You are divorced three times.' Then she is clear of him as soon as he says, 'You are divorced,' before the 'three times'.

The same verb for 'release' is used in 33:49: Let them go. So this expression amounts to explicit divorce, according to ash-Shāfi'ī. Scholars disagree about the meaning of this and whether it is tantamount to divorce. Qāḍī Abū Muḥammad believed that an explicit expression must contain some form of the word 'divorce' like 'You are divorced,' 'I have divorced you,' 'Divorce is binding on you,' and other similar expressions which are used to allude to divorce. Abū Ḥanīfah said that. Qāḍī Abu-l-Ḥasan said, 'There are many explicit statements of divorce, some of which are clearer than others: ṭalāq (divorce), sarāḥ (release), separation, being unlawful, letting go and cut off. Ash-Shāfi'ī said, 'There are three explicit phrases which come in the Qur'an: divorce, release and separation. Allah says: "...part from them with correctness" (65:2), "...released with good will" and "...divorce them during their period of purity" (65:1).'

If this is affirmed, then there are two types of divorce: explicit and allusory. We have mentioned the explicit. That in which divorce alluded to is the other. The difference between them is that the explicit form does not require an intention. Divorce occurs by the mere articulation of the words. That which is alluded to requires an intention. The argument of those who say that ‘unlawful’, ‘letting go’ and ‘cutting off’ are explicit divorce is because they are so frequently used in divorce, to the point that it is common knowledge. Therefore the intention about divorcing is clear. Then ‘Umar ibn ‘Abd al-‘Azīz said, ‘If divorce is a thousand, nothing of it remains clear. If someone says, “Finally,” then that is the furthest end.’ Mālik transmitted it. Ad-Dāraquṭnī related that ‘Alī said, ‘The statements about letting go, being cut off, clear and unlawful constitute a triple divorce. The woman is not lawful to him until she has married another.’ It has come from the Prophet ﷺ that use of the word ‘finally’ constitutes a triple divorce. It comes from a path of transmission with some weakness in it which ad-Dāraquṭnī transmitted. It will be discussed in 2:231.

Scholars do not disagree that if someone tells his wife, ‘I have divorced you,’ it is an explicit divorce whether or not the marriage has been consummated. If someone tells his wife, ‘You are divorced,’ it is one unless he intends more than that. If he intends two or three, it is as he intended. If he does not intend anything, it is one divorce and he can take her back. If he says, ‘You are divorced (tāliq),’ and then says, ‘I meant to say “fetter (wathāq)”,’ his statement is not accepted and it is binding for him unless there is some evidence that he is telling the truth. If someone says, ‘You are divorced once and I will not take you back,’ the words, ‘I will not take you back’ are baseless. He can take her back because he said ‘once’, not ‘three times’.

They disagree about someone who tells his wife, ‘I have parted from you,’ ‘You are let go’, ‘cut off’, or ‘clear,’ ‘Your rope is on your withers,’ ‘You are unlawful to me,’ ‘Rejoin your family,’ ‘I have given you to your family,’ ‘I have let you go,’ or ‘I have no way to you.’ Abū Ḥanīfah and Abū Yūsuf said that they constitute a final divorce.

It is related that Ibn Mas‘ūd said, ‘When a man tells his wife, “You are in charge of your business,” “I give command to you,” or “Rejoin your family,” they accept it and it is one final divorce.’ It is related from Mālik that if someone says to his wife, ‘I have parted from you’ or ‘I have released you,’ it is an explicit divorce, just as when you say, ‘You are divorced.’ It is related from him that it is an allusion that refers to the intention of the one who says it and he is asked about the number he meant, whether or not the marriage was consummated. Ibn al-Mawwāz said, ‘The sounder of his two views is that it is one for an unconsummated marriage unless he intends more. Ibn al-Qāsim and Ibn ‘Abd al-Ḥakam said that. Abū Yūsuf said that it is three and is like, ‘I have slipped you off’ or ‘I have no authority over you.’

As for other allusions, Mālik considers them, when the speaker has no particular intention, to constitute a triple divorce in every consummated marriage and, in the case of an unconsummated marriage, only if there is a specific intention. If he swears that he only meant one, he is the same as any other suitor because he let go the wife with whom he had a consummated marriage and he only is free or cut off from her by three divorces. In the case of an unconsummated marriage, he is free and parted from her by one divorce. Mālik and a group of his people and a group of the people of Madīnah maintain that in all these expressions he has what he intends and divorce is obliged. It is related from him that it is only when the expression ‘final divorce’ in particular is used, rather than other allusions in which he does not intend that, whether or not it is consummated. If a man intends three, it is three. If he intends one, it is a final one and she has control over herself. If he intends two, it is one. Zufar said that if he intends two, it is two. Ash-Shāfi‘ī said, ‘He is not divorcing in any of those instances until he says, “The words I spoke meant divorce.” He has what he intended. If he intends less than three, it is revocable. If he divorces with a final one, it is revocable.’ Ishāq said, ‘All that resembles divorce is what he intends of divorce.’ Abū Thawr said, ‘It is a revocable divorce and he is not asked about his intention.’ It is related that Ibn Mas‘ūd did not think that there was a final divorce except in the case the khul‘ or ilā’. That is recorded from him. Abū ‘Ubayd said that.

Al-Bukhārī has a chapter entitled: ‘Chapter on if a man says, “I have parted from you,” “I have let you go,” or other expressions which indicate leaving or freeing, or that by which divorce was meant, it is according to what he intended.’ This indicates the position of the Kufans, ash-Shāfi‘ī and Ishāq when he says, ‘or that by which divorce is meant.’ The argument in that is that any statement that can be construed as being divorce or not being divorce does not necessitate divorce unless the one who said it says that he meant divorce by it. Then it is binding on him by his affirmation. It is not permitted to nullify a marriage because they agree that it is sound. Abū ‘Umar said, ‘The position of Mālik about the meaning of a man’s words to his wife, ‘Go out,’ ‘I have released you,’ or ‘Your rope is on your withers,’ varies. Once he said that intention concerning such statements is not taken into account and it constitutes a triple divorce and another time he said, ‘He has what he intends in all of that, whether or not it is consummated.’ I say that.

What the majority believe and what is related from Mālik is that intention in using these expressions is pivotal and the ruling is based on that. That is sound because of the evidence we have mentioned and the sound ḥadīth that Abū Dāwud, Ibn Mājah, ad-Dāraquṭnī and others transmitted from Yazīd ibn Rukānah: Rukānah ibn ‘Abd Yazīd divorced his wife Suhaymah and informed the Prophet ﷺ about that and said, ‘By Allah, I only meant one!’ The Prophet ﷺ asked, ‘By Allah, did you only mean one?’ Rukānah said, ‘By Allah, I only meant one!’ So the Messenger of Allah ﷺ returned her him. Ibn Mājah said that he heard Abu-I-Ḥasan aṭ-Ṭanāfīsī say, ‘How noble this ḥadīth is!’ Mālik said about a man who tells his wife, ‘You are like carrion, blood and pork to me!’: ‘I think that it is final even if he had no intention. She is not lawful to him until she has married another husband.’ Ash-Shāfi‘ī thought that if he meant a divorce, then it was a divorce and whatever number of divorces he meant, and if he did not mean a divorce, it is nothing after he takes an oath to that effect.

Abū ‘Umar said, ‘The basis of this topic regarding every allusion to divorce is what is related about the Prophet ﷺ saying to a woman he married when she said, “I seek refuge with Allah from you”, “You have sought refuge with One Who gives refuge. Rejoin your family.” That was a divorce. When the Prophet ﷺ told Ka‘b ibn Mālik to withdraw from his wife, he told her, “Rejoin your family,” but it was not a divorce. This indicates that the expression requires an intention and the only ruling is according to what a man intended by what he said. It is like that with all allusions that can possibly give rise to separation and others.’ Allah knows best. Most scholars say that there is no divorce on account of it unless that is what is intended by the speaker. Mālik said, ‘Divorce is obliged by whoever intends divorce by any expression he uses.’

It is not lawful for you to keep anything you have given them

This is addressed to husbands. They are forbidden to take anything from their wives which might cause them harm. The khul‘ divorce is only valid when it is the man alone who has not done anything which would constitute grounds for divorce. Husbands are mentioned because the custom among people is that, in separation, a man seeks what he has given his wife as a dower and support. That is why men are mentioned.

The majority agree that taking a payment for divorce is allowed and they agree that it is forbidden to take anything belonging to the wife unless it is a case of disobedience and bad behaviour on her part. Ibn al-Mundhir related that an-Nu‘mān said, ‘If the disobedience or injustice comes from him and she asks for a khul', it is allowed and he is a wrongdoer. What he did is not lawful but he cannot be forced to return what he has taken.' Ibn al-Mundhir says that this is contrary to the text of the Book of Allah and contrary to a firm report from the Prophet ﷺ, and contrary to what most scholars agree on. I do not think that if someone were told to exert himself to look for an error, he would find something worse than someone saying that the Book forbids something and then, having had that countered by a text, still saying that his view is permitted. Abu-l-Ḥasan ibn Battāl said that Ibn al-Qāsim related the like from Mālik. This position is contrary to the literal text of the Book of Allah and contrary to the ḥadīth about the wife of Thābit which will be dealt with.

unless a couple fear that they will not remain within Allah's limits.

In this āyah Allah forbids a man to take anything unless there is fear they will not establish the limits of Allah and he stresses the prohibition by a threat issued to the one who exceeds the limits. It means that each of them thinks that they will not be able to endure giving the obligatory rights to his or her companion due to the dislike she has for him or vice versa. This is not an objection to her ransoming herself, nor is there any objection to the husband taking what she pays. The āyah is addressed to the couple and the dual is used. 'Fear' here implies knowledge, so the inference is that they know that they will not be able to remain within the limits, and that is true fear. It is apprehension that something disliked is bound to happen. It is close to the meaning of supposition. Then it is said that 'unless they fear' is an exceptive severed from the general sentence. It means: if there is antipathy on their part, there is nothing wrong in them accepting fiḍyah. Ḥamzah recited 'yukhāfā' [instead of yakhāfā] in the passive with the subject elided. The subject in that case is guardians and judges. Abū 'Ubayd preferred that since He said 'if you fear' and so the fear comes from other than the couple. If the couple had been meant, Allah would have said 'khāfā'. This is evidence for those who say that the khul' should be referred to the ruler.

This is the view of Sa'īd ibn Jubayr and Ibn Sīrīn. Shu'bah said, 'I asked Qatādah, "From whom did al-Ḥasan take the idea of presenting a khul' to the ruler?" He answered, "Ziyād. He was the governor of 'Umar and 'Alī.'" An-Naḥḥās said, 'This is known from Ziyād. There is no sense in this position because when a man does a khul' from his wife, it is based on what they both consent to. The ruler cannot make him to do that. Therefore there is no sense in saying that it is up to the ruler.'

Abū 'Ubayd denied that he had a choice. I do not know that anything regarding a choice is more unlikely than the particle 'illā' because that is not obliged by the inflection, the word, or the meaning. As far as the inflection is concerned, Ibn Mas'ūd recited 'illā an yakhāfā' as 'takhāfā'. In Arabic, when reference is made to someone where the subject is not named, it is said, 'illā an yukhāf'. If the expression is 'yakhāfā', then it must be recited 'khāfā'. If it is based on the expression, 'in khiftum', then it must be said 'takhāfū'. As far as the meaning is concerned, it is not unlikely for someone to say: 'It is not lawful for you to take anything of what you have given them unless others fear...' So the khul' can be taken to the ruler. Aṭ-Ṭaḥāwī said, 'It is true that 'Umar, 'Uthmān and Ibn 'Umar allowed it to be carried out by other than the ruler. Just as divorce and marriage are permitted without a ruler, the same is true of the khul'. That is the view of most scholars.'

If you fear that they will not remain within Allah's limits,

The limits of Allah consists of what is obliged for them in respect of good company and affectionate fellowship. This is addressed to rulers, and mediators in this matter, even if they are not rulers. Not remaining within Allah's limits is when a woman makes light of her husband's due and does not obey him. Ibn 'Abbās, Mālik Ibn Anas and most fuqahā' say that. Al-Ḥasan ibn Abī 'l-Ḥasan and some people said that when a woman says, 'I will never obey anything you order, I will not have a ghuṣl on account of janābah, and I will not fulfill any oath to you,' then a khul' is lawful. Ash-Sha'bī said that it means 'if they fear they will not obey Allah.' That is due to anger with one another which makes them stop obeying. 'Aṭā' ibn Abī Rabāḥ said, 'The khul' is lawful as is taking property in cases where the woman tells her husband, "I hate you and will never love you." This is like: "there is nothing wrong with a wife ransoming herself."

Al-Bukhārī reports a ḥadīth from Ayyūb from 'Ikrimah from Ibn 'Abbās that the wife of Thābit ibn Qays came to the Prophet ﷺ and said, 'Messenger of Allah, I do not fault him in respect of the dīn or his character, but I will not obey him!' The Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, 'Will you return his garden to him?' 'Yes,' she replied. Ibn Mājah transmitted from Qatādah from 'Ikrimah from Ibn 'Abbās that Jamīlah bint Salūl came to the Prophet and said, 'By Allah, I do not fault Thābit in respect of his dīn or his character, but I dislike ingratitude in Islam and I will not obey him due to my hatred of him.' The Prophet ﷺ asked, 'Will you return his garden to him?' 'Yes,'" she replied, and he commanded him to take his garden from her and no more. It is said that she hated him intensely and he loved her fervently. The Messenger of Allah ﷺ separated them by means of the khul' divorce and it was the first khul' divorce in Islam.

Ibn 'Abbās is also reported as saying that the first person to have a khul' divorce in Islam was the sister of 'Abdullāh ibn Ubayy. She came to the Prophet ﷺ and said, 'Messenger of Allah, my head and his head will never be joined. I lifted the side of the tent and saw him in a group and he was the ugliest and shortest of them and had the ugliest face.' He asked, 'Will you return his garden to him?' 'Yes,' she replied, 'and if he wishes, I will give more.' He separated them. This is the basis of the khul' divorce and it is accepted by the majority of fuqahā. Mālik said, ‘That is what I have heard from those who possess knowledge, and it is what is done among us. If a man does not harm his wife and is not bad to her and she wants to leave him, it is lawful for him to take whatever she pays to ransom herself as the Prophet ﷺ did with the wife of Thābit ibn Qays.’

If the antipathy is on his side, as it is when he oppresses her and harms her, he should return to her anything he has taken from her. ‘Uqbah ibn Abī ‘ş-Şahbā’ said. ‘I asked Bakr ibn ‘Abdullāh al-Muzanī about a man who wanted his wife to pronounce a khul‘ divorce and he said, “It is not lawful for him to take anything from her.” I asked, “So where are the words of Allah: ‘If you fear that you will not remain within Allah’s limits, there is nothing wrong in the wife ransoming herself?’” “It was abrogated,” he replied. “Where?” I asked. He said, “In Sūrat an-Nisā: ‘If you desire to exchange one wife for another, and have given your original wife a large amount, do not take any of it. Would you take it by means of slander and downright crime?’” (4:20)” An-Naḥḥās said, ‘This is an aberrant view outside of the general consensus. Neither of the two contradicts the other so that there is abrogation because ‘If you fear...’ does not cancel the other āyah because, when they fear thus, the husband does not fall into the category designated by the words ‘If you desire to exchange...’ because the latter is addressed to men alone.’ Aṭ-Ṭabarī said, ‘This āyah is one of judgment and what Bakr said is nonsense.’

Those who think that khul‘ is specific to the state of schism and harm use this āyah, and say that it is a precondition for khul‘. They support this by what Abū Dāwud related from ‘Ā’ishah to the effect that Ḥabībah bint Sahl was married to Thābit ibn Qays and he hit her and broke her jaw. She went to the Messenger of Allah ﷺ after the Ṣubḥ prayer and complained to him. The Prophet ﷺ summoned Thābit and said, ‘Take some of her property and separate from her.’ He asked, ‘Is that proper, Messenger of Allah?’ ‘Yes,’ he said. He said, ‘I gave her the two gardens she has as a dower.’ The Prophet said, ‘Take them and separate from her.’ He took them and separated from her. However, the position of the majority is that khul‘ is permitted without any complaint of harm as we see in the ḥadīth of al-Bukhārī and other ḥadīths. The āyah is not a proof for it since Allah did not mention it as a precondition, but rather mentioned it because it is the usual case in the khul‘.

The āyah also indicates the permission for taking, in a khul‘ divorce, more than a husband gave to his wife. Scholars disagree about this. Mālik, ash-Shāfi‘ī, Abū Ḥanīfah and his people and Abū Thawr say that it is permitted to do whatever they agree on, whether that is less or more than he gave her. This is reported from ‘Uthmān ibn ‘Affān, Ibn ‘Umar, Qabīṣah and an-Nakha‘ī. Qabīṣah recited as proof: ‘... there is nothing wrong in the wife ransoming herself.’ Mālik said, ‘Doing that is not part of noble character, but I have not seen any of the people of knowledge express dislike of it.’

Ad-Dāraquṭnī related that Abū Sa‘īd al-Khudrī said, ‘My sister was married to a man of the Anṣār who married her in return for a garden he gave her. There were some words between the two of them and they took it to the Messenger of Allah ﷺ who said, “Will you return the garden he gave you and then he will divorce you?” “Yes,” she answered, “and I will give him more.” He said, “Return his garden to him and give him more.”’ We find in the ḥadīth of Ibn ‘Abbās: ‘If he wishes, I will give him more,’ and he did not object to it.

One group said that he should not take from her more than he gave her. That is what was stated by Ṭāwūs, ‘Aṭā’, and al-Awzā‘ī. Al-Awzā‘ī said, ‘Judges do not permit anyone to take other than what he gave his wife.’ Aḥmad and Ishāq said that. They argue by what Ibn Jurayj related from Abu-z-Zubayr that Thābit ibn Qays ibn Shammās was married to Zaynab bint ‘Abdullāh ibn Ubayy ibn Salūl. He gave her a dower of a garden. The Prophet ﷺ said, ‘Not more, but his garden.’ ‘Yes,’ she said. He took it and let her go.

When Thābit ibn Qays heard that, he said, ‘I have accepted the judgment of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ.’ Abu-z-Zubayr and others heard it. Ad-Dāraquṭnī transmitted it. It is related mursal from ‘Aṭā’ that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘The man does not take from a woman in a khul‘ more than what he gave her.’

In the view of Mālik, a khul‘ can be carried in exchange for unripe fruit, for a stray camel or runaway slave, an unborn child of a slavegirl and the like that and other unsure things which is not the case in sales and marriage. He can make a demand for all that. If it is sound, it is given to him and if it is not sound, he gets nothing. Divorce is carried out based on its ruling. Ash-Shāfi‘ī said, ‘The khul‘ is allowed [in this case] but he receives the appropriate dower.’ Ibn Khuwayzīmandād related that Mālik said, ‘That is because when contracts involving mutual exchange contain an unsound reimbursement and have passed, then one refers to what is necessary in similar substitutes.’ Abū Thawr said, ‘The khul‘ is invalid.’ The People of Opinion said, ‘The khul‘ is allowed and he has the unborn child of the slavegirl. If there is no child, then he has nothing.’

In al-Mabsūt, Ibn al-Qāsim reported that he said: ‘It is permitted in exchange for the fruits of his palm trees for a year or for what his sheep produce in a year.’ This differs from the position of Abū Ḥanīfah and ash-Shāfi‘ī. The proof for what Mālik and Ibn al-Qāsim say is the general nature of the words of the Almighty: ‘... there is nothing wrong in the wife ransoming herself.’ By way of analogy, it is part of what he owns by gift or bequest and so it is permitted for it to be an exchange in the khul‘, just as is the case with something known. Furthermore, khul‘ is a form of divorce, and divorce is valid without any recompense whatsoever. Since it is valid without any such recompense, then it is even more likely to be valid with unsound goods because the worst state of that which is spent is that about which one is silent. It is also true because marriage, a contract which makes something lawful, is not rendered unsound by unsound goods and so that is even more the case in divorce which destroys the lawfulness of a contract.

If she is given a khul' provided that she nurse her son for two years, that is also permitted. There are two views about the basis of the khul' being that she support her son after the two years for a known period. One is that it is permitted and that is the view of al-Makhzūmī and the view preferred by Saḥnūn. The second is that it is not permitted. Ibn al-Qāsim related that from Mālik and said that if the husband stipulated it, it is void and removed from the wife. Abū 'Umar said, 'Those who permit a khul' in exchange for a stray camel, runaway slave and the like of uncertain things make this permitted as well.' Other scholars of the Qarawīn say that Mālik did not forbid a khul' in exchange for maintenance for more than two years because of the uncertainty; he forbade it because it is a duty specifically for the father in every case and therefore he cannot transfer it to someone else. The difference between this and maintenance for two years is that the maintenance, which is for suckling, may be imposed on the mother while she is married and after the divorce if the father is in straitened circumstances. Therefore it is permitted to transfer this maintenance to the mother because she is subject to it. In al-Mabsūṭ, Mālik cited as evidence the words of the Almighty: 'Mothers should nurse their children for two full years – for those who wish to complete the full term of nursing.' (2:233)

If a khul' occurs in a permitted manner, based on providing for the son, and then the child dies before the end of the period, does the husband have recourse to her for payment of the rest of the maintenance? Ibn al-Mawwāz related from Mālik that he cannot pursue her for anything. Abu-l-Faraj related from him that he can pursue her because it is his confirmed due which is the responsibility of the wife by khul' and it is not cancelled by the death of the child. That is also the case if he does a khul' for money: she is liable for it. The reasoning behind the first view is that he did not stipulate for himself any wealth with which to enrich himself, but the duty of the support of his child. Then if the child dies, he has no right of restitution from her at all. That is like a case in which a man voluntarily supports a child for a year and then the child dies: he owes no restitution at all because he intended to take on his support. Allah knows best. Mālik said, 'I do not think that anyone should be pursued for something like this. If he does pursue it, he can make a statement regarding that.' They agree that if she dies, then the child is supported from her money because it was a right established before her death and is not removed by her death.

If in the khul' a man stipulates the maintenance of her unborn child and that she will have nothing, he must support the child if she has no wealth to spend on the child. If she then later becomes wealthy, he can pursue her for what he spent and take it from her. Mālik said, 'It is part of the duty of the man to maintain his child, even if he stipulates that the mother will support it, when she does not have the wherewithal to do so.'

Scholars disagree about whether the khul' is a divorce or annulment. It is related from 'Uthmān, 'Alī, Ibn Mas'ūd and a group of Tābi'ūn that it is a divorce. That was stated by Mālik, ath-Thawrī, al-Awzā'ī, Abū Ḥanīfah and his people and ash-Shāfi'ī in one position. If someone intends two or three divorces by the khul', that is binding for him according to Mālik. The People of Opinion said that if he intends three divorces, it is three, and if he intends two, it is one final one because it is one statement. Ash-Shāfi'ī said in his other view that if he intends divorce by the khul' and calls it divorce, then it is divorce, and if he did not intend divorce and did not call it such, that separation does not occur.' He said that in his Old School. I prefer his first position. Al-Muzanī said, 'It is the soundest in my view.' Abū Thawr said, 'When divorce is not named, then khul' is separation and not divorce. If it is called divorce, then it is divorce and the husband has the power to take her back as long as

Among those who said that khul‘ is annulment and not divorce unless it is intended are Ibn ‘Abbās, Ṭāwūs, ‘Ikrimah, Iṣḥāq and Aḥmad. For evidence they cite the ḥadīth of Ibn ‘Uyaynah from ‘Amr ibn Ṭāwūs from Ibn ‘Abbās that Ibrāhīm ibn Sa‘d ibn Abī Waqqāṣ asked him about when a man has divorced his wife two times and then does a khul‘ to part from her. Can he remarry her? He said, ‘Yes, he can remarry her. The khul‘ is not a divorce. Allah mentioned divorce at the beginning and end of the āyah, and the khul‘ is between that and so the khul‘ is not divorce.’ Then he quoted, ‘Divorce can be pronounced two times; in which case wives may be retained with correctness and courtesy or released with good will.’ (2:229) Then he recited, ‘If a man divorces his wife a third time, she is not lawful to him after that until she has married another husband.’ (2:230) He said, ‘That is because if khul‘ had been a divorce, it would have been the third after the two divorces. And His words after that “If a man divorces” would indicate a fourth divorce. Then the prohibition would be connected to a fourth divorce.’

They also use as evidence what at-Tirmidhī, Abū Dāwud and ad-Dāraquṭnī cited from Ibn ‘Abbās that the wife of Thābit ibn Qays obtained a khul‘ from her husband in the time of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ and the Messenger of Allah ﷺ ordered her to observe an ‘iddah of one menstruation. At-Tirmidhī said that it is a ḥasan gharīb ḥadīth. Ar-Rubayyi‘ bint Mu‘awwidh ibn ‘Afrā’ reported that she had a khul‘ in the time of the Prophet ﷺ and he told her to observe an ‘iddah of one menstruation. At-Tirmidhī said that the ḥadīth of ar-Rubayyi‘ is sound about her being ordered to observe an ‘iddah of one menstruation. He said that it indicates that khul‘ is annulment, not divorce because Allah says: ‘Divorced women should wait by themselves for three menstrual cycles.’ (2:228) If it had been a divorce, it would not have been confined to one cycle.

If someone divorces his wife twice and then does a khul‘ from her and then wants to marry her, he can do that, as Ibn ‘Abbās said, even if she had not married another husband, because he has only done two divorces and the khul‘ does not count. Someone who considers the khul‘ to be a divorce says that he is not permitted to take her back until she has married another husband because the three divorces are complete by the khul‘. That is sound, Allah willing. Qāḍī Ismā‘īl ibn Ishāq said, ‘How can it be permitted for a man whose wife has told him, “Divorce me for a sum” which he then does, to say that it is not a divorce? If he had put her authority in her hands without anything else and then she divorced herself, it would be divorce.’ He says that Allah’s words: ‘If a man divorces his wife a third time, she is not lawful to him after that until she has married another husband’ are added to His words: ‘Divorce can be pronounced two times’ because the words ‘released with good will’ mean ‘or divorced’. If khul‘ had been added to the two divorces, it would only be permitted to have a khul‘ after two divorces. No one says this.

Someone else said that their interpretation of this āyah is a mistake. ‘Divorce can be pronounced twice’ gives the ruling of two times when it occurs other than in a khul‘. It is confirmed that he can still take her back when Allah says: ‘...retained with correctness and courtesy’. Then He mentioned their ruling when it is by way of khul‘. So the khul‘ refers to the two already mentioned since what is meant by them is to explain divorce in general, divorce in exchange for recompense, and a triple divorce with or without recompense after which the woman is only lawful after another husband.

This is the answer to the evidence of the āyah. As for the ḥadīth, when mentioning the ḥadīth of Ibn ‘Abbās about one menstrual period, Abū Dāwud said that the ḥadīth was related by ‘Abd ar-Razzāq from Ma‘mar from ‘Amr ibn Muslim from ‘Ikrimah mursal from the Prophet ﷺ. Al-Qa‘nabī related from Nāfi‘ that Ibn ‘Umar said, ‘The ‘iddah of a woman separated by a khul‘ is the same as that for divorce.’ Abū Dāwud said, ‘We believe that our action is based on this.’ It is the school of Mālik, ash-Shāfi‘ī, Aḥmad, Ishāq, ath-Thawrī and the people of Kufa. At-Tirmidhī said, ‘That is the view of most of the people of knowledge among the Companions of the Prophet and others.’

The ḥadīth of Ibn ‘Abbās about a single menstruation is gharīb according to at-Tirmidhī and mursal according to what Abū Dāwud mentioned about it being said that the Prophet ﷺ made her ‘iddah one and a half menstrual cycles. Ad-Dāraquṭnī transmitted from Ma‘mar from ‘Amr ibn Muslim from ‘Ikrimah from Ibn ‘Abbās that the wife of Thābit ibn Qays got a khul‘ from her husband and the Prophet ﷺ made her ‘iddah one and a half menstrual cycles. Here a cycle and a half is mentioned by Ma‘mar while one menstrual cycle is also related from him. The transmitter was Abū ‘Abd ar-Raḥmān Hishām ibn Yūsuf aṣ-Ṣan‘ānī al-Yamānī. Only al-Bukhārī transmitted from him. The ḥadīth is unsettled in both its isnād and its text. It is not used to argue that the ‘iddah for khul‘ is one menstrual cycle. So the words of the Almighty: ‘Divorced women should wait by themselves for three menstrual cycle,’ remain for every divorced woman whose marriage has been consummated except for special cases. At-Tirmidhī said, ‘Some of the Companions of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said that the ‘iddah for a khul‘ is one menstruation.’ Ishāq said, ‘If someone believes this, it is a strong position.’ Ibn al-Mundhir said, ‘Uthmān ibn ‘Affān and Ibn ‘Umar said that her ‘iddah is one menstrual cycle. That was stated by Abān ibn ‘Uthmān and Ishāq.’ ‘Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib said that her ‘iddah is that of a divorced woman. I take the position of ‘Uthmān and Ibn ‘Umar. The ḥadīth of ‘Alī is not firm. We already mentioned from Ibn ‘Umar that the ‘iddah for a khul‘ is the same as that for a divorce. It is sound.

The position of Mālik varies about the case of someone who intends to carry out a khul‘ without any recompense. ‘Abd al-Wahhāb said, ‘Mālik considers it to be a khul‘ and the divorce is final.’ It also is reported that he said that it is not final unless there is recompense. Ashhab and ash-Shāfi‘ī said that because it is a divorce divested of recompense and the number must be observed. It is revocable as it would be if he had said ‘divorce’. Ibn ‘Abd al-Barr said, ‘I and the people of knowledge believe this to be the soundest of his views.’ The reason behind the first is the lack of recompense in the khul‘ does not remove it from what is demanded. The basis for that is if the khul‘ is based on wine or pigs.

The woman with a khul‘ is the one divested of all she has received and the woman who ransoms herself does so with some of it and takes some of it. A woman who frees herself is the one who frees herself from her husband before consummation, saying, ‘I am free of you, so be free of me.’ This is the view of Mālik. ‘Īsā ibn Dīnār related that Mālik said, ‘The freed woman is the one who does not take anything or give anything. The woman with a khul‘ is the woman who gives what she was given and may give more. The woman who ransoms herself is the one who ransoms herself with some of what she was given while keeping some. All of this is whether or not the marriage has been consummated. If it is before consummation, then she has no ‘iddah. A woman who conciliates is like the woman who frees herself.’

Qāḍī Abū Muḥammad and others said that these four expressions refer to the same idea, even if their qualities differ in respect of occurrence. It is a final divorce whether or not it is named. She cannot be taken back in the ‘iddah but she can be married in the ‘iddah or after it with her consent and with a walī and dower, before or after having another husband. This is not the view of Abū Thawr because of the fact that she gave him something in exchange for control over herself. If the khul‘ divorce had been revocable, she would not have control over herself. In that case, the husband would have both the recompense and that for which it was given.

This is in spite of the fact that the contract is usually carried out. If she gives him recompense and he stipulates the right of retraction, there are two transmissions about that which Ibn Wahb related from Mālik. One is that it is affirmed, which is the view of Saḥnūn. The other is that it is denied. Saḥnūn said that the reason for the first transmission is that they both agreed on the recompense in compensation for dropping the number of divorces. This is permitted. The reason for the second is that he made a stipulation in the contract which precludes the aim of the contract, and therefore it is not confirmed as would be the case if he stipulated in the marriage contract that he would not have sex with her.

These are Allah’s limits so do not overstep them.

After Allah has clarified the judgments of marriage and divorce, He says: ‘These are Allah’s limits...’ which you are commanded to obey, just as He explains those matters which are prohibited during the fast in another āyah and says: ‘Those are Allah’s limits, so do not go near them.’ (2:187) So He divided the limits into two categories: limits which one is commanded to obey and limits which one is commanded to avoid. Then He ends with the threat: ‘Those who overstep Allah’s limits are wrongdoers.’

فَإِنْ طَلَّقَهَا فَلَا تَحِلُّ لَهُ مِنْ بَعْدُ حَتَّىٰ تَنْكِحَ زَوْجًا غَيْرَهُ ۖ وَإِنْ طَلَّقَهَا فَلَا
 حُنَاحَ عَلَيْهِمَا أَنْ يَتَرَاجَعَا إِنْ طَلَّأ أَنْ يُفِيصَا حُدُودَ اللَّهِ ۗ وَتِلْكَ حُدُودُ
 اللَّهِ يُدَيِّنُهَا لِقَوْمٍ يَعْلَمُونَ ﴿٢٣٠﴾

230 But if a man divorces his wife a third time, she is not lawful for him after that until she has married another husband. Then if he divorces her, there is nothing wrong in the original couple getting back together provided they think they will remain within Allah’s limits. These are Allah’s limits which he has made clear to people who know.

But if a man divorces his wife a third time,

Some of the Khorasanī Hanafī shaykhs used this āyah as evidence that the khul’ should be followed by normal divorce. They said, ‘Allah prescribed an explicit divorce after she has ransomed herself through khul‘ because the use of the particle fā’ here is sequential. It is unlikely for it to refer back to: “Divorce can be pronounced twice” because the intervening words prevent: “If he divorces her” being based on it. It is more likely to refer to the exception close to it and it would only refer to something before that with some evidence as we see in 4:23.’

Scholars disagree about the divorce after the khul‘ during the ‘iddah. One group say that if a wife frees herself from her husband by khul‘ and then he divorces her again during the waiting period, the new divorce applies rather than the khul‘. That was stated by Sa‘īd ibn al-Musayyab, Shurayḥ, Ṭāwūs, an-Nakha‘ī, az-Zuhrī, al-Ḥakam, Ḥammād, ath-Thawrī and the People of Opinion. There is a second view and that is that the second divorce bears no legal weight and is not considered. Ibn ‘Abbās, Ibn az-Zubayr, ‘Ikrimah, al-Ḥasan, Jābir ibn Zayd, ash-Shāfi‘ī, Aḥmad, Ishāq and Abū Thawr take this position. It is also the position of Mālik, although Mālik says, ‘If she ransoms herself from him on the condition that he gives her a triple divorce consecutively, when he pronounces the divorce, then the full divorce has taken place. If there is a silence between that, what follows the silence is nothing. That is because the sequential and connected nature of the words demands one ruling. That is also the case when “Allah willing” is connected to the oath by Allah: it is preferred and the ruling of the exception is confirmed. When it is separated from it, then it is not connected to the previous words.’

she is not lawful for him after that until she has married another husband.

This is agreed upon and there is no disagreement about it. But there is disagreement about exactly what constitutes an intervening marriage and what it is permitted to be. Sa‘īd ibn al-Musayyab and those who agree with him said that the contract itself is enough. Al-Ḥasan ibn Abī ‘l-Ḥasan said that there must be ejaculation as well as sexual intercourse. A group of scholars and fuqahā' agree that sexual intercourse is enough, and that consists of the meeting of the private parts in the manner which would necessitate the ḥadd and ghusl, which would invalidate fasting and ḥajj, and which would make the payment of a full dowry obligatory. Ibn al-'Arabī said, 'I have not come across a question in fiqh more difficult than this one. That is because the basis of the legal position is contingent on what the ruling is connected to: the minimum to which it is possible to apply the term "marriage" or the full meaning of the term "marriage". If we say the minimum, then we take the position of Sa'īd ibn al-Musayyab. If it is connected to the latter, then there must be ejaculation and penetration, as al-Ḥasan said.'

Ibn al-Mundhir said that the term used in the ḥadīth, 'taste sweetness', means sexual intercourse and that is the position of the majority of scholars with the exception of Sa'īd ibn al-Musayyab who said, 'People say that she is not lawful to her first husband until she has had sex with the second husband. I, however, say that when he marries her in a sound marriage which is only intended to make her lawful, there is nothing wrong in her marrying the first husband.' We do not know of anyone who agrees with this statement except a group of the Khārijites. The Sunnah spares the need for anything else. Sa'īd ibn Jubayr took the position of Sa'īd ibn al-Musayyab. An-Naḥḥās mentioned it in Kitāb ma'ānī al-Qur'an. He said, 'The people of knowledge say that marriage here entails sexual intercourse because Allah says, "another husband". Being a spouse was already mentioned, and so "marriage" must mean sexual intercourse. Sa'īd ibn Jubayr, however, said that marriage here is sound marriage when it is not with the simple intention of making her lawful.'

I think that what is most likely is that they had not heard the ḥadīth about 'sweetness' or believed that it was not sound and took the literal text of the Qur'an when Allah says: 'until she has married another husband'. Allah knows best.

The imams like ad-Dāraqūṭnī related that 'Ā'ishah said that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, 'When a man divorces his wife three times, then she is not lawful to him until she has married another husband and each of them has tasted the sweetness of the other.' Some of the Ḥanafī scholars said, 'If someone makes a marriage contract based on the position of Sa'īd ibn al-Musayyab, the qāḍī can nullify it. Disagreement regarding it is not considered because it deviates from the consensus of scholars.' Our scholars said that his words ﷺ, '...each of them has tasted the sweetness of the other,' means that they are equal in enjoying the pleasure of sexual intercourse. It is the proof of one two views. We believe that if he has sex with her while she is asleep or unconscious, she still is not lawful to the man who divorced her because she has not tasted 'sweetness'.

An-Nasā'ī related from 'Abdullāh that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ cursed those women who tattoo and are tattooed, those who add hairpieces and those to whose hair they are added, those who consume and pay usury and those who facilitate re-marriage and those for whom that facilitation is done. At-Tirmidhī related that 'Abdullāh ibn Mas'ūd said, 'The Messenger of Allah ﷺ cursed those who facilitate re-marriage and those for whom that facilitation is done.' He said that this is a sound ḥasan ḥadīth. This ḥadīth is also related from the Messenger of Allah ﷺ by a different path. It was the normative position among the people of knowledge among the Companions of the Prophet ﷺ, including 'Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb, 'Uthmān ibn 'Affān, 'Abdullāh ibn 'Umar and others. It is the position of the fuqahā' among the Tābi'ūn. It was also the position of Sufyān ath-Thawrī, Ibn al-Mubārak, ash-Shāfi'ī, Mālik, Aḥmad and Ishāq. I heard al-Jārūd mention that Wakī' said, 'One must remove this topic from the People of Opinion.' Sufyān said, 'When a man marries a woman to make her lawful and then decides to keep her, she is not lawful to him until he marries her with a new marriage.'

Abū ‘Umar ibn ‘Abd al-Barr said, ‘Scholars disagree about a marriage to facilitate remarriage. Mālik said, ‘A man who married to facilitate remarriage does not remain in his marriage until he has a new marriage. If he has sex with her, then she receives an appropriate dower. It is not lawful for her first husband to have sex with her, whether or not they know that he has married her to make her lawful for her first husband. He is not confirmed in the marriage and it is nullified.’ Ath-Thawrī and al-Awzā‘ī said that.’

There is a second view about it related from ath-Thawrī about a marriage which is incorrect, or to facilitate remarriage, that the marriage is sound but the precondition is void. That is the view of Ibn Abī Laylā about that matter and the temporary (mu‘tah) marriage. Al-Awzā‘ī said that the marriage for facilitation is a bad action but the marriage is allowed. Abū Ḥanīfah, Yūsuf and Muḥammad said that the marriage is allowed if it is consummated and he can keep her if he wishes. Once Abū Ḥanīfah and his people said that she is not lawful to the first husband if someone married her just to facilitate that, and another time they said that he is lawful to her by this marriage provided he has sex with her and then divorces her. They do not disagree that a marriage of this kind is sound and he can maintain it.

There is a third view. Ash-Shāfi‘ī said that when a man says, ‘I will marry you to make you lawful,’ then there is no marriage between them after that. This is a sort of temporary marriage. It is unsound and not confirmed. It is annulled. If he has sex with her on this basis it does not legalise re-marriage. If he marries her with a simple marriage in which there is no stipulation and he does not stipulate that it is to legalise re-marriage, ash-Shāfi‘ī has two views on that in his old book: one is like the view of Mālik and the other is like that of Abū Ḥanīfah. His view in his new Egyptian book does not vary: the marriage is sound if he makes no stipulation. That is the view of Dāwud as well.

Al-Māwardī related from ash-Shāfi‘ī that if a man stipulates that legalisation is the object before the contract, the marriage is sound and he makes her lawful for the first husband. If they stipulate that in the contract, however, then the marriage is invalid and she is not lawful for the first husband. He said that it is the view of ash-Shāfi‘ī. Al-Ḥasan and Ibrāhīm said that if any one of the three people intends legalisation by it, then the marriage is invalid. This is stricter. Sālim and al-Qāsim said that there is nothing wrong in a man marrying a woman to legalise her when the couple do not know about it and he is paid. Rabī‘ah and Yaḥyā ibn Sa‘īd said that. Dāwud ibn ‘Alī said that: provided that it does not appear as a stipulation when the contract is made.

According to scholars, a marriage arranged with the ostensible purpose of legalising remarriage is permitted for the [second] husband who marries [the woman]. It is the same whether that was stipulated or intended [before the marriage], but when that actually occurs [for that sole purpose], then the marriage is unsound and not confirmed. His having sex with the woman does not make her lawful for her first husband. It is the same whether the first husband knows that or is ignorant of that. It is said that when he learns that the man married her for that purpose, he should not take her back. According to Mālik, she is only made lawful by a marriage in which he desires and has need of her and does not intend to legalise her. The new husband having sex with her [in that marriage] is permissible as long as she is not fasting, in iḥrām or menstruating, and he is an adult Muslim.

Ash-Shāfi‘ī, on the other hand, said, ‘If the new husband has sex with her on the basis of a valid marriage and fully consummates it, then they have tasted “sweetness”. It is the same whether it is a strong or weak marriage and whether the consummation was achieved by his or her hand, and whether he was a child, adolescent or eunuch as long as he still has part of his penis, and whether the woman is fasting or in iḥrām.’ This entire description of ash-Shāfi‘ī is also the position of Abū Ḥanīfah and his people, ath-Thawrī, al-Awzā‘ī, and al-Ḥasan ibn Ṣāliḥ, and it is also the position of some of the people of Mālik. Ibn Ḥabīb said that if he marries her and likes her, he can keep her. If he expects payment for making her legal, it is not permitted since he mixed marriage with the intention of legalisation. In that case she is not lawful for the first husband.

When a master has sex with his slavegirl who has been finally divorced by her husband, she does not become lawful for the first husband since the master is not a husband. That is related from ‘Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib and is the view of ‘Ubaydah, Masrūq, ash-Sha‘bī, Ibrāhīm, Jābir ibn Zayd, Sulaymān ibn Yasār, Ḥammād ibn Abī Sulaymān and Abu-z-Zinād. That is also the position of most of the fuqahā’ of the different regions. The opposite of that, however, is related from ‘Uthmān, Zayd ibn Thābit and az-Zubayr. They said that when her master has sex with her in a manner by which he does not intend deceit or legalisation, she may remarry her husband with a proposal and dower. The first view is sounder because the Almighty says: ‘...until she has married another husband’. A master has control by virtue of ownership not marriage. This is clearer.

We find in the Muwattā’ of Mālik that Sa‘īd ibn al-Musayyab and Sulaymān ibn Yasār were both asked whether, if a man married a slave of his to a slavegirl who then divorced her finally and then her master gave her to him, she was lawful to the slave by virtue of ownership. They said that she was not lawful to him until she had married another husband.

Mālik related that he asked Ibn Shihāb about a man who was married to a slavegirl owned by someone else and then bought her and divorced her with a single divorce. He said, ‘She is lawful to him by virtue of ownership as long as it was not a final divorce. If it was a final divorce, she is not lawful to him by virtue of ownership until she has married another husband.’ Abū ‘Umar said, ‘This is the position of the bulk of scholars and imams of fatwā: Mālik, ath-Thawrī, al-Awzā'ī, ash-Shāfi'ī, Abū Ḥanīfah, Aḥmad, Ishāq, and Abū Thawr. Ibn 'Abbās, 'Aṭā', Ṭāwūs, and al-Ḥasan said that if the one who finally divorced her buys her, then she is lawful to him by virtue of ownership based on the general nature of Allah's words: '...those you own as slaves'. (4:3) Abū 'Umar said, 'This is an erroneous view because Allah's statement: '...those you own as slaves' does not permit mothers or sisters or the rest of those forbidden by kinship.'

When a Muslim divorces his dhimmī wife three times and she then marries a dhimmī who consummates the marriage and then divorces her, one group say that the dhimmī is a proper husband for her and she can remarry the first husband. That is what al-Ḥasan, az-Zuhrī, Sufyān ath-Thawrī, ash-Shāfi'ī, Abū 'Ubayd and the People of Opinion said. Ibn al-Mundhir said, 'That is what we say because Allah says: '...until she has married another husband' and the Christian man is a husband. Mālik and Rabī'ah said that he does not make her lawful.

An invalid marriage does not permit a woman who has been divorced three times to remarry her first husband according to the majority position. Mālik, ath-Thawrī, ash-Shāfi'ī, al-Awzā'ī, the People of Opinion, Aḥmad, Ishāq and Abū 'Ubayd said that she is only lawful for the first husband if she has entered into a valid intervening marriage. Al-Ḥakam said that this refers to the husband. Ibn al-Mundhir said that it does not refer to the husband because the spousal rulings of zihār, ilā' and li'an are not confirmed between them. All of those scholars who are regarded say that if a woman says to the first husband, 'I have married and it was consummated,' and he believes her, she is lawful to him. Ash-Shāfi'ī said that it is scrupulous not to do it if he suspects that she is lying.

'Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb strongly condemned this practice of false marriage and said, 'If I am brought someone who makes remarriage legal or someone for whom it was done, I will stone them.' Ibn ‘Umar said, ‘False marriage in order to legalise re-marriage (taḥlīl) is fornication and people who do it are fornicators, even if they remain together for twenty years.’ Abū ‘Umar said, “Umar’s words are only taken to indicate the severity of his position because it is clear that the ḥadd punishment is removed from someone who has unlawful sexual intercourse when he is ignorant that it is unlawful and has the excuse of ignorance. This is a more appropriate interpretation. There is no dispute that he is not stoned for it.’

Then if he divorces her, there is nothing wrong in the original couple getting back together

The word ‘he’ here refers to the second husband. If he divorces the woman concerned there is nothing wrong if she and her first husband remarry. Ibn ‘Abbās said that there is no disagreement about this. Ibn al-Mundhir said that scholars agree that when a free man divorces his wife three times and her waiting period comes to an end and then she marries another husband who is free and the marriage is consummated and then he divorces her and her waiting period for that divorce ends, then she can re-marry the first husband.

They disagree about what happens when a man divorces his wife once or twice and then she marries someone else and then later remarries her first husband. One group say that she only has the number of divorces which remain from the time she was previously married to the man, as was stated by the great Companions of the Messenger of Allah: ‘Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb, ‘Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib, Ubayy ibn Ka‘b, ‘Imrān ibn Ḥuṣayn and Abū Hurayrah. That is also related from Zayd ibn Thābit, Mu‘ādh ibn Jabal and ‘Abdullāh ibn ‘Amr ibn al-‘Āṣ. It is also the position of ‘Abīdah as-Sulmānī, Sa‘īd ibn al-Musayyab, al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī, Mālik, Sufyān ath-Thawrī, Ibn Abī Laylā, ash-Shāfi‘ī, Aḥmad, Iṣḥāq, Abū ‘Ubayd, Abū Thawr, Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥasan and Ibn Naṣr.

There is a second position that the marriage is new and divorce starts afresh. That was the position of Ibn ‘Umar and Ibn ‘Abbās. That was also the position of ‘Aṭā’, an-Nakha‘ī, Shurayḥ, an-Nu‘mān and Ya‘qūb. Abū Bakr ibn Abī Shaybah mentioned from Abū Mu‘āwiyah and Wakī‘ from al-A‘mash that Ibrāhīm said, ‘The companions of ‘Abdullāh used to say, “Is a marriage destroyed by three and not destroyed by one or two?”’ Hāfiṣ related from Ḥajjāj from Ṭalḥah from Ibrāhīm that the companions of ‘Abdullāh used to say that a single or double divorce annuls as is the case with three, except for ‘Abīdah who said that a wife remains with the remaining unused divorces. Abū ‘Umar mentioned it. Ibn al-Mundhir said, ‘I take the first view.’ There is a third view which is that if there was consummation in the last one, it is a new divorce and new marriage, and if there was no consummation, the number remains as it was. This was the view of Ibrāhīm an-Nakha‘ī.

provided they think they will remain within Allah’s limits

Ṭāwūs said, ‘If they think that each of them will treat the other well.’ It is said that the limits of Allah refer to what He has made obligatory, so it means when they know that there will be correctness between them in the second marriage. If the husband knows that he is unable to support his wife or pay her dowry or provide for any of her obligatory rights, it is not lawful for him to marry her until he makes that clear to her and knows that he will, in fact, be able to fulfil her rights. It is the same if he has a defect which prevents sexual enjoyment. This is so that he does not deceive the woman regarding himself. Similarly he must not deceive her about his lineage or wealth or work by lying about that. Similarly if the woman knows that she will be unable to carry out the duties owed by her to the husband or has a defect which prevents sexual intercourse such as insanity, leprosy or genital defects, she is not permitted to deceive him and must make that clear to him. This same principle applies to those who sell goods: they must make any faults clear. If one of the couple discovers a defect in their partner, they can reject him or her. If it is the man who has the fault, the woman keeps her complete dower if the marriage is consummated and half the dower if it has not been consummated. If the fault is with the woman, the husband returns her and takes back the dower he has given her. It is related that the Prophet ﷺ married a woman from the Banū Bayāḍah and discovered that she had leprosy. He returned her saying, ‘You deceived me.’

There are varying views from Mālik about a woman who is frigid and refuses sex and whose marriage is ended because of that. Sometimes he says that she keeps all of her dower and sometimes that she only keeps half of it. This is because of the difference in his view about whether the entitlement to the dower is based on acceptance or consummation.

Ibn Khuwayzimandād said, ‘Our companions disagree about whether the wife has to serve or not. Some say that a man cannot oblige his wife to serve and that is because the contract specifies enjoyment, not service. Do you not see that it is not a contract of hire or slavery? It is a contract of pleasure and what is entailed by the contract is enjoyment and nothing more and so more than that may not be demanded of her. Do you not see the words of Allah Almighty: “But if they obey you do not look for a way to punish them” (4:34)? Others among our companions say that she owes the service of a woman of her standing. If she is noble due to the wealth or lineage of her parents, she must manage the house and direct the servants. If she is middle-class, she must make the bed and the like. If she is less than that, she should attend to the house, cooking and washing. If she is a woman from the Kurds, Daylam and the mountains, she is obliged to do what their women are normally obliged to do. That is because Allah says: “Women possess rights similar to those held over them to be honoured with fairness.” (2:228) The custom of Muslims in their lands, ancient and modern, is as we have mentioned it. Do you not see that the wives of the Prophet ﷺ and his Companions used to undertake grinding, bread-making, baking, making beds, serving food and the like? We do not know of any woman who refused to do that. She could not refuse and they used to beat their wives when they fell short in doing that and oblige them to serve. Had that not been an entitlement [at that time], they would not have asked for it.’

These are Allah’s limits which he has made clear to people who know.

The ‘hudūd’ (limits) are what He has forbidden. The root of the verb is used for confining and denying good. A man who is maḥdūd is deprived of good. The verb is used for a woman in mourning who is forbidden adornment. A doorkeeper can be called ḥaddād, because he prevents people from entering. The words ‘a people who know’ are used because when someone ignorant is subject to a lot of commands and prohibitions, he will not observe them or abide by them. The one who knows will do so. This is why those who know are addressed and not the ignorant.

بِمَعْرُوفٍ وَلَا تُمْسِكُوهُنَّ ضِرَارًا لِّتَعْتَدُوا وَمَنْ يَفْعَلْ ذَلِكَ فَقَدْ ظَلَمَ نَفْسَهُ وَلَا
تَتَّخِذُوا آيَاتِ اللَّهِ هُزُوعًا وَادْكُرُوا فِعْمَتَ اللَّهِ عَلَيْكُمْ وَمَا أَنْزَلَ عَلَيْكُم مِّنَ الْحِكْمَةِ
يَعْظُمُ عَلَيْكُمْ وَاتَّقُوا اللَّهَ وَاعْلَمُوا أَنَّ اللَّهَ بِكُلِّ شَيْءٍ عَلِيمٌ ﴿٣١﴾

231 When you divorce women and they reach the end of their waiting period, then either retain them with correctness and courtesy or release them with correctness and courtesy. Do not retain them by force, thus overstepping the limits. Anyone who does that has wronged himself. Do not make a mockery of Allah’s Signs. Remember Allah’s blessing to you and the Book and Wisdom He has sent down to admonish you. Be fearful of Allah and know that Allah has knowledge of all things.

When you divorce women and they reach the end of their waiting period,

The word ‘balagha’ (reach) here means ‘to draw near to’ according to the consensus of scholars, because, if she actually reaches the end, her husband no longer has a choice about keeping her. It is a mutual prohibition in the āyah after it because the idea demands that.

then either retain them with correctness and courtesy

This means the husband must undertake to fulfil his legal obligations towards his wife. That is why a group of scholars said that an aspect of retaining with correctness is that if the husband does not have what is necessary for the maintenance of his wife, he must divorce her. If he does not do so, he is no longer in the right and the divorce can be forced upon him by the judge due to the harm she would suffer by remaining with someone who cannot support her. That was the position of Mālik, ash-Shāfi‘ī, Aḥmad, Ishāq, Abū Thawr, Abū ‘Ubayd, Yaḥyā al-Qaṭṭān, and ‘Abd ar-Raḥmān ibn Maḥdī. It was stated by ‘Umar, ‘Alī and Abū Hurayrah among the Companions, and Sa‘īd ibn al-Musayyab among the Tābi‘ūn. He said that it is sunnah. Abū Hurayrah related that from the Prophet ﷺ.

Another group say that the couple are not separated in that situation and she must put up with that. Maintenance is made his responsibility by the ruling of a judge. That is the position of ‘Aṭā’ and az-Zuhrī and it is the position which is taken by the Kufans and ath-Thawrī. Their evidence is found in the āyahs: ‘If someone is in difficult circumstances, there should be a deferral until things are easier’ (2:280) and: ‘Marry off those among you who are unmarried.’ (24:32). So Allah recommends that poor people marry and so poverty cannot be a reason for separation. It is, however, recommended along with marriage. Also marriage between a couple is established by consensus and there is no separation except by consensus or an irrefutable sunnah from the Prophet ﷺ. The evidence for the first position is in Ṣaḥīḥ Bukhārī: ‘The woman says, “Either feed me or divorce me.” This provides a text in case of dispute. We consider separation due to hardship to constitute a revocable divorce, differing from ash-Shāfi‘ī who thinks it is final. This is because it is a separation after consummation when the number of divorces has not been used up, not in exchange for compensation nor due to harm on the part of the husband. Therefore it is revocable.

This means to divorce them as was already mentioned.

Do not retain them by force, thus overstepping the limits.

Mālik related from Thawr ibn Zayd ad-Dīlī that a man would divorce his wife and then take her back, having no need for her and not intending to keep her, but simply to make the waiting period longer for her and to thereby hurt her more, and so Allah revealed this.

Anyone who does that has wronged himself.

Az-Zajjāj says that ‘wronging himself’ here means that he exposes himself to punishment by doing what Allah has forbidden. This report agrees with the report which was revealed about abandoning what the people of the Jāhiliyyah used to do in divorce and taking wives back as we mentioned earlier. These two reports tell us that the revelation of these two āyahs was about the same idea of a man keeping a woman and taking her back in order to cause harm to her. This is evident.

Do not make a mockery of Allah’s Signs.

This means ‘Do not mock Allah’s judgments’. They are all serious. If someone mocks them, they are still binding on him. Abu-d-Dardā’ said that in the time of Jāhiliyyah a man used to pronounce a divorce by saying, ‘You are divorced and I am joking,’ as he would do in marriage and emancipation. So Allah revealed this āyah and the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘If anyone divorces, emancipates, marries or gives in marriage and then says, “I was only joking,” what he said is taken seriously.’ Ma‘mar related it from ‘Īsā from ‘Amr from al-

Ḥasan from Abu-d-Dardā'. We find in the Muwattā' that a man said to Ibn 'Abbās, 'I divorced my wife a hundred times. What do you think?' Ibn 'Abbās said, 'She was divorced from you by three, and you made a mockery of Allah's Signs in the ninety-seven.' Ad-Dāraquṭnī transmitted from Ismā'īl ibn Umayyah al-Qurashī that 'Alī said, 'The Prophet ﷺ heard a man do a final divorce and he became angry and said, "Do you make a mockery of Allah's Signs or the dīn of Allah and make a game of final divorce? We obliged that it is three and she is not lawful to you until she marries another husband.'" This Ismā'īl ibn Umayyah is Kufan and weak in ḥadīth.

It is related that 'Ā'ishah said, 'A man used to divorce his wife and say, "By Allah, I will neither let you inherit nor will I let you go."' "How is that?" she asked. He said, "When you are about to finish your 'iddah, I will take you back.'" So the āyah was revealed. Our scholars say that all such expressions are included in what is said in this āyah because it is said of someone who mocks the Signs of Allah as well as someone who rejects them and someone who discards them and acts on another basis. Thus all are included in this āyah. The Signs of Allah are His proofs, commands and prohibitions.

There is no disagreement between scholars that, if someone divorces in jest, the divorce is binding but they disagree about other matters as will be dealt with in Sūrat at-Tawbah, Allah willing. Abū Dāwud related from Abū Hurayrah that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, 'Three matters are serious and jests about them are taken seriously: marriage, divorce and taking back in marriage.' It is related from 'Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib, Ibn Mas'ūd and Abu-d-Dardā': 'There is no jest in three matters and someone who plays with them is serious: marriage, divorce and emancipation.' It is said that it means: 'Do not abandon Allah's commands so that you fall short and are playing.' This āyah includes verbally asking for forgiveness while persisting in the deed. That is the case with everything of this sort, so know that.

Remember Allah's blessing to you and the Book and Wisdom He has sent down to you to admonish you.

The blessing is Islam and Allah making His judgments clear. 'Wisdom' refers to the Sunnah which makes things clear on the tongue of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ in respect of things about which there is no text in the Qur'an. He admonishes you to frighten you.

وَإِذَا طَلَّقْتُمُ النِّسَاءَ فَبَلَغْنَ أَجَلَهُنَّ فَلَا تَعْضُلُوهُنَّ أَنْ يَنْكِحْنَ أَزْوَاجَهُنَّ إِذَا تَرَاصُوا
بَيْنَهُم بِالْمَعْرُوفِ ذَلِكَ يُوعَظُ بِهِ مَنْ كَانَ مِنْكُمْ يُؤْمِنُ بِاللَّهِ وَالْيَوْمِ الْآخِرِ ذَلِكَ خَيْرٌ
أَنْ كُنِيَ لَكُمْ وَأَطْهَرُ وَاللَّهُ يَعْلَمُ وَأَنْتُمْ لَا تَعْلَمُونَ ﴿٣٢﴾

232 When you divorce women and they reach the end of their waiting period, do not prevent them from marrying their first husbands if they have mutually agreed to it with correctness and courtesy. This is an admonition for those of you who believe in Allah and the Last Day. That is better and purer for you. Allah knows and you do not know.

When you divorce women and they reach the end of their waiting period, do not prevent them from marrying their first husbands

Ma'qil ibn Yasār related that his sister was married to Abu-l-Baddāḥ and he divorced her and left her until after the end of her waiting period and then regretted it and proposed and she agreed to remarry him. Her brother refused to give her in marriage. He said, 'It will be unlawful for us to see one another if you marry him,' and the āyah was revealed. Muqātil said that the Prophet ﷺ summoned Ma'qil and said, 'If you are a believer, you will not prevent your sister from remarrying Abu-l-Baddāḥ.' He said, 'I believe in Allah and give her in marriage to him.' Al-Bukhārī related from al-Ḥasan that the sister of Ma'qil ibn Yasār was divorced by her husband. Her 'iddah ended and he proposed to her. Ma'qil refused him and the āyah was revealed. Ad-Dāraquṭnī also transmitted from al-Ḥasan that Ma'qil ibn Yasār told him, 'I had a sister and proposals were made to me and I used to refuse her to people. A cousin of mine came and proposed and I married her to him. They were together for as long as Allah wished and he divorced her with a revocable divorce and left her until her ‘iddah had ended. Then he proposed together with other suitors. I said, “I kept her from people and married her to you and then you divorced her with a revocable divorce and left her until her ‘iddah had ended. Now you propose to me and come to me along with other suitors! I will never marry her to you!” So Allah revealed: “When you divorce women and they are near the end of their ‘iddah, do not prevent them from marrying their first husbands.” So I expiated my oath.’ The variant of al-Bukhārī has: ‘Ma‘qil was angry out of pride and said, “He kept away from her when he could keep her and now he proposes to her again!” Allah revealed the āyah and the Messenger of Allah ﷺ summoned him and recited it to him and so he set aside his anger and obeyed Allah’s command.’ He was Ma‘qil ibn Sinān. An-Nahḥās said, ‘Ash-Shāfi‘ī related it in his books from Ma‘qil ibn Yasār or ibn Sinān.’ Aṭ-Ṭaḥāwī said that it is Ma‘qil ibn Sinān.

If this is true it indicates that it is not permitted for any woman to marry without a walī because the sister of Ma‘qil had clearly previously been married. If the matter had been left to her and not to her guardian, she would have married by herself and would have had no need of Ma‘qil. So the words ‘do not prevent’ are addressed to guardians. They are commanded to give the women concerned in marriage with their consent. It is also said that it is addressed to the husbands, because taking the woman back to cause her harm keeps her from marrying another and makes her waiting period longer. The people of Abū Ḥanīfah use it as evidence that a woman can give herself in marriage. They said that that is because Allah Almighty ascribes that to her as He says: ‘She is not lawful to him after that until she has married another husband.’ (2:230) He did not mention a walī. This has already been discussed. The first position is sounder since we mentioned the reason for the revelation. Allah knows best.

The word ‘reach’ in this instance really means that the iddah has actually ended because initiating marriage is only conceivable after the end of the iddah. The verb for “prevent” is ‘adala, meaning to restrain them. Al-Khalīl said that a mu‘dil is a hen which cannot lay eggs. It is said that ‘adl is to constrict and prevent, from the meaning of confinement. The verb is used for being prevented from doing something. The verb a‘dala is used for a matter when one cannot solve it. Al-Azharī said, ‘The root of ‘adl comes from the verb used for a she-camel when the foetus is stuck and hard to get out, just as is the case with a chicken which cannot lay its eggs.

That is better and purer for you.

If you do that you will be righteous.

وَالْوَالِدَاتُ يُرْضِعْنَ أَوْلَادَهُنَّ حَوْلَيْنِ كَامِلَيْنِ لِمَنْ أَرَادَ أَنْ يُنَمِّمَ الرِّضْعَةَ وَعَلَى

233 Mothers should nurse their children for two full years – those who wish to complete the full term of nursing. It is the duty of the fathers to feed and clothe them with correctness and courtesy – no self is charged with more than it can bear. No mother should be put under pressure in respect of her child nor any father in respect of his child. The same duty is incumbent on the heir. If the couple both wish weaning to take place after mutual agreement and consultation, there is nothing wrong in their doing that. If you wish to find wet-nurses for your children, there is nothing wrong in your doing that provided you hand over to them what you have agreed to give with correctness and courtesy. Be fearful of Allah and know that Allah sees what you do.

Mothers should nurse their children for two full years – those who wish to complete the full term of nursing.

After Allah has spoken of marriage and divorce He then speaks about children, since a couple may have children when they separate. So the āyah is about divorced women who have children by their ex-husbands. As-Suddī, aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk and others said that, meaning that they are more entitled to nurse their children than other women because they will be more compassionate towards them and it is harmful to both mother and child to remove a small child from her. This also indicates that, even if the child is weaned, the mother is still more entitled to custody because of her compassion for it. She remains more entitled unless she remarries as will be mentioned.

This renders problematic the words: ‘It is the duty of the fathers to feed and clothe them’, because, if it is not a revocable divorce, divorced women are not entitled to clothing. They are entitled to a wage. Noble character, however, would ensure that the wage was adequate for both her food and her clothing. It is said that the āyah is general to both divorced women who have children and to wives. The most evident position is that it is about wives while the marriage remains, because they are entitled to maintenance and clothing, whether they nurse or not. Maintenance and clothing are according to the man’s ability. If she is busy with nursing and he lacks ability, it might be imagined that maintenance is cancelled. To remove that idea, the Almighty says: ‘It is the duty of fathers – referring to the husband – to feed and clothe them’ while they are nursing because, in doing it, they are occupied with the interests of the husband. So if she were to travel for what the husband needs with his permission, maintenance is not cancelled.

Nursing is mandatory for some and recommended for some. It is said that it is reporting about what is prescribed. People disagree about whether nursing is a right for or against the mother. The expression can mean either because, taken literally, it means that it is obligatory for mothers to nurse their children just as fathers are obliged to maintain them. But that is only while she is married and also only when custom demands it. If she is noble and wealthy, the custom is for her not to nurse. That is like a stipulation. If the child will not, however, accept another woman, then nursing becomes mandatory for her. This is also the case if no one else is available. If the father dies and the child has no property, the position of Mālik in the Mudawwanah is that the mother is still obliged to nurse without being paid a wage. Ibn al-Jallāb said that the wage should be paid from the Treasury. ‘Abd al-Wahhāb said that that only applies when the father is a Muslim who is poor.

When a woman has been trebly divorced, she does not have to nurse and only does so if she wishes to. If she does so, she is entitled to a suitable wage if the husband is wealthy. If he does not have wealth, he cannot oblige her to nurse unless she is the only one the child will accept. If she is obliged to nurse and some excuse arises which prevents her from doing so, nursing then becomes the father’s responsibility. It is related from Mālik that if he is poor and the child has no property the mother must nurse. If she has no milk and has wealth, the child is nursed at her expense. Ash-Shāfi‘ī said that paying for nursing is only mandatory for the father or grandfather. This will be further discussed later.

The words ‘two full years’ denote a measure of time that revolves in a full cycle. The word for ‘year,’ ḥawl, comes from the verb ḥāla, which means ‘to be transferred, so a ‘year’ is transferred from one moment to another. It is also said that it is called that because it is normal period for the transformation of things. The word ‘full’ is added because the word ‘year’ by itself can be used for less than a complete year, so ‘two years’ can actually be a year and part of another year. Allah says: ‘those who hurry on in two days’ (2:203) and that is actually in a day and part of another day. Allah’s words: ‘those who wish to complete the full term of nursing’ indicates that the two full years is not a definitive term. Weaning can take place before the two years are up. A limit is set merely to eliminate any dispute between the couple about the length of nursing. The father does not have to pay for more than two years and, if the father wants the child to be weaned before two years and the mother does not consent, he cannot enforce that. An increase or decrease in the two years can be made provided that the child is not harmed and that the parents agree.

Mālik and those who follow him and another group of scholars deduce from this āyah that the nursing which creates a milk relationship only occurs within this first two year period and ends when those two years end, so that any nursing after that is not considered. He states that in the Muwattā’. Muḥammad ibn ‘Abd al-Ḥakam related it from him. It is the position of Ibn ‘Umar and Ibn ‘Abbās. It is related from Ibn Mas‘ūd and was also stated by az-Zuhrī, Qatādah, ash-Sha‘bī, Sufyān ath-Thawrī, al-Awzā‘ī, ash-Shāfi‘ī, Aḥmad, Ishāq, Abū Yūsuf, Muḥammad and Abū Thawr. Ibn ‘Abd al-Ḥakam related from him that it is two years and a few days more. ‘Abd al-Malik said that it is like a month or so more. Ibn al-Qāsim related that saying, ‘Nursing is two years, and two months after the two years.’ Al-Walīd ibn Muslim related that he said, ‘A month or two or three after the two years is part of the two years. What is after that is of no consequence.’ It is related that an-Nu‘mān said, ‘Nursing up to six months after the two years is still considered nursing. The first view is the sound one since Allah says: “Mothers should nurse their children for two full years.” This indicates that no ruling is attached to it when the child is nursed after the two years.’ Sufyān related from ‘Amr ibn Dīnār from Ibn ‘Abbās that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘Suckling is only in the first two years.’ Ad-Dāraquṭnī said that only al-Haytham ibn Jamīl has it from Ibn ‘Uyaynah. He is trustworthy with good memory.

This report, the āyah and the meaning make it clear that an adult cannot be suckled. It has no standing. The statement that they can was related from ‘Ā’ishah. Among scholars, al-Layth ibn Sa’d said that. It is related that Abū Mūsā al-Ash‘arī thought that an adult could receive suckling, and then it is related that he retracted that. This will be explained in Sūrat an-Nisā’.

A group of commentators say that the period of suckling is two years for each child. It is related from Ibn ‘Abbās that that is when the child is in the womb for six months. If it remains for seven months, the nursing period is twenty-three months. If it is nine months, the nursing is twenty-one months going by Allah’s words: ‘His bearing and weaning is thirty months.’ (46:15) So the period of pregnancy and the period of nursing are interconnected and one reduces the length of the other.

It is the duty of the fathers to feed and clothe them with correctness and courtesy – no self is charged with more than it can bear.

‘Rizq’ in this ruling is adequate food. This is evidence for the obligation of the father to maintain the child since it is weak. The feeding referred to is the nourishment which reaches the child by means of the mother through nursing. Scholars agree that a man must support all his children who have no money. When Hind bint ‘Utbah told the Prophet ﷺ, ‘Abū Sufyān is miserly and does not give me adequate maintenance and what is enough for my son. If I take from his property without his knowledge, do I do anything wrong?’ he told her, ‘Take what is adequate for you and your child in a correct manner.’ ‘Kiswah’ is clothing. ‘Ma’rūf’ (correctness) means what is customary in the usage of the Shari‘ah without excess or negligence. Then Allah made it clear that a man’s duty of maintenance is according to his wealth and position, and that no specific amount is stipulated, by His words: ‘no self is charged with more than it can bear.' This will be clarified later. It is said that it means that a woman should not be made to endure stinting in her wage and a husband should not be forced to be extravagant. Rather the basic aim should be taken into account.

Mālik thought that this āyah indicates that a mother should have custody of her sons until puberty and of her daughters until marriage. That is her right, and Abū Ḥanīfah stated the same. Ash-Shāfi'ī said that when the child is eight years old, which is the age of discrimination, it is given a choice between his parents. At that stage its interest and desire should be stimulated to learn the Qur'an, manners and the duties of worship. That is the same for both boys and girls.

An-Nasā'ī and others reported from Abū Hurayrah that a woman came to the Prophet ﷺ and said, 'My husband wants to take my son.' The Prophet ﷺ said to him, 'This is your father and this is your mother: choose whichever of them you want,' and he took his mother's hand. We find in Abū Dāwud that Abū Hurayrah said, 'A woman went to the Messenger of Allah ﷺ while I was sitting with him and she said, "Messenger of Allah, my husband wants to take my son. He brings me water from the well of Abū 'Inabah and helps me." The Prophet ﷺ said, "Draw lots for him." Her husband exclaimed, "Who contends with me for my son?" The Prophet ﷺ said, "This is your father and this is your mother: choose whichever of them you want," and he took his mother's hand and went with her.' Our evidence is what Abū Dāwud related, that al-Awzā'ī related from 'Amr ibn Shu'ayb from his father from his grandfather 'Abdullāh ibn 'Amr that a woman came to the Prophet ﷺ and said, 'Messenger of Allah, my womb was a vessel for this son of mine, my breasts a source of drink for him, and my lap a protection for him. His father has divorced me and wants to take him away from me.' The Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, 'You are more entitled to him as long as you do not marry.' Ibn al-Mundhir said, 'The consensus of eminent scholars is that when a couple separate and have a child, the mother is more entitled to it as long as she does not remarry.’ Abū ‘Umar said, ‘I do not know of any disagreement among scholars that a divorced woman, as long as she does not marry again, is more entitled to her child than the father, while he is still young and lacking discrimination; this is when he is safe with her and sufficiently supported and no dissoluteness or ostentation is confirmed about her.’

They disagree about the child being given a choice when he understands the situation and who is most entitled to look after the child then. Ibn al-Mundhir said, ‘It is confirmed that the Prophet ﷺ judged that the daughter of Ḥamzah should go to her maternal aunt. The Prophet did not give a choice to Ḥamzah’s daughter.’ Abū Dāwud reports that when Zayd ibn Ḥārithah went to Makkah and brought Ḥamzah’s daughter, Ja‘far said, ‘I am more entitled to her. She is my uncle’s daughter and her maternal aunt is married to me, and that maternal aunt is also a mother.’ ‘Alī said, ‘I am more entitled to care for her. She is my uncle’s daughter and I am married to the daughter of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ and she is more entitled to her.’ Zayd said, ‘I am more entitled to her. I went and travelled to get her and brought her!’ The Prophet ﷺ said, ‘I judge the girl to go to Ja‘far so she can be with her maternal aunt. The maternal aunt is in the position of the mother.’

Ibn al-Mundhir said, ‘The esteemed people of knowledge agree that a mother does not have the right to the child when she remarries.’ That is what he states in Kitāb al-Ashrāf. Qāḍī ‘Abd al-Wahhāb mentioned in his commentary on the Risālah from al-Ḥasan that her right to custody is not cancelled simply by marriage. Mālik, ash-Shāfi‘ī, an-Nu‘mān and Abū Thawr agree that the mother’s mother is most entitled to the custody of the child [after the mother]. They disagree about when she has no mother but the father’s mother is available. Mālik said, ‘The father’s mother is more entitled when the child has no maternal aunt.’ Ibn al-Qāsim said that Mālik said, ‘I have heard that the maternal aunt is more entitled to custody than the father’s mother.’ In the view of ash-Shāfi‘ī and an-Nu‘mān the father’s mother is more entitled than the maternal aunt. It is said that the father is more entitled to his son than the father’s mother. Abū ‘Umar said, ‘I believe that this is the case when he does not have another wife.’

Then the sister is next after the father and then the paternal aunt. This is when each of those can be trusted with the child and it is in a state of security and adequacy with them. When that is not the case, there is no right to custody. In awarding custody one investigates who will protect the child, be good to him in preserving him and teaching him good. This is the position of those who say that custody is the right of the child. That is related from Mālik and a group of his people also said that. They also do not think that custody should be granted to a reprobate woman or one who is too weak to look after the child’s right due to illness or chronic illness.

Ibn Ḥabīb mentioned from Muṭarrif and Ibn al-Mājjishūn from Mālik that custody goes first to the mother, then the mother’s mother, then the maternal aunt, then the father’s mother, then the child’s sister, then the child’s paternal aunt, then the daughter of the child’s brother, then the father. The father’s mother is more entitled than the sister. The sister is more entitled than the paternal aunt. The paternal aunt is more entitled than those who come after her. The most entitled of men are the guardians. There is no right to custody for an aunt’s daughter or the daughters of the child’s sister.

When it is not feared that the guardian may cause the death of the child or cause corruption to him, he remains his guardian until he reaches puberty. It is also said that it only lasts until the child loses his milk-teeth. In the case of a girl, it is until she marries. This is the case unless the father wants to travel and resettle somewhere else. In that case, he is more entitled to the child than the mother and others if they do not wish to move. If he wants to leave for the sake of trading, he does not have the right to the child's custody. The same is true of the relatives of the child, to whom he has been allotted, when they move with the intention of resettling. The mother cannot move her child from the place where the father resides except for a short distance, such that it would not entail shortening the prayer. When the father moves from the mother's land and stipulates that he will not leave his child with her unless she is responsible for his maintenance and support for a number of known years and she takes that on, it is binding on her. If she dies, however, her heirs are not pursued for that maintenance and support from her estate. It is also said, however, that it does constitute a debt that should be taken from her estate. The first view is sounder, Allah willing. That is also the case if the father dies, or if he made an agreement with her for the support of pregnancy and nursing: it is cancelled and she is not pursued for any of that.

According to Mālik, if the mother remarries, the child is not removed from her until the marriage is consummated. Ash-Shāfi'ī said, 'When she marries, her right is severed.' If her husband then divorces her, according to what we think is the best known position of Mālik in his school, custody does not then revert to her. Qāḍī Ismā'īl and Ibn Khuwayzimandād mentioned that Mālik's position about that varied. Sometimes he said that the child is returned to her and sometimes he said that it is not. Ibn al-Mundhir said, 'If the mother leaves the land where her child is and then returns to it, she is more entitled to her child according to ash-Shāfi'ī, Abū Thawr and the People of Opinion. That is also the case if she marries and then is divorced or widowed: her right to the child is restored.' That is like the position of Qāḍī Abū Muḥammad 'Abd al-Wahhāb. If she is divorced or widowed, she can take the child back since the pretext for removing it no longer exists.

When a mother forgoes the right to custody and she is not married to another man and then later wants to take the child back, she can only do so if she had a legitimate excuse for what she did. If she left it out of dislike for the child, then she cannot take it back.

They disagree about what happens to a couple who are divorced when the wife is a dhimmī. One group say that there is no difference between a dhimmī and Muslim mother: they are both entitled to their child. This is the position of Abū Thawr, the People of Opinion, and Ibn al-Qāsim, the follower of Mālik. Ibn al-Mundhir says that there is a marfūʿ ḥadīth which states this, although there is some dispute about its isnād. The other position is that the child remains with the Muslim parent. This is the position of Mālik, Sawwār, and Ibn al-Qāsim, and is reported from ash-Shāfiʿī. There is the same disagreement when one of the couple is free and the other a slave. One group said that the free parent is more entitled to custody. This is the view of ʿAṭāʾ, ath-Thawrī, ash-Shāfiʿī, and People of Opinion. Mālik said, ‘If the father is free, the child is free, and the mother is a slave, then the mother is more entitled to custody unless she is sold and moves. Then the father is more entitled.

No mother should be put under pressure in respect of her child nor any father in respect of his child.

The mother should not refuse to nurse her child in order to harm the father or ask for more than an appropriate wage and it is not lawful for the father to refuse to let the mother nurse when she wants to. This is the position of the majority of commentators. Nāfiʿ, ʿĀṣim, Ḥamzah and al-Kisāʿī recited ‘taḍārra’ (‘put under pressure’) in the jussive because it is a firm prohibition. It means: ‘Do not remove the child from her if she is content to nurse and the child is fond of her.’ Abū ʿAmr, Ibn Kathīr, Abān ibn ʿĀṣim and a group recite ‘taḍārru’ added to His words, ‘no self is charged’. So it is a report by which the command is meant. Yūnus related that al-Ḥasan said, ‘She should not harm her husband by saying, “I will not nurse him,” and he should not harm her by removing the child from her if she says that she will nurse him.’

The same duty is incumbent on the heir.

There is disagreement about the interpretation of this phrase. Qatādah, as-Suddī, al-Ḥasan, and ‘Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb said that the heir referred to is the heir of the child if he dies. Some said that it is only the male heirs who must pay the nurse, as the father of the child would have that duty if he were alive. Mujāhid and ‘Aṭā’ said that. Qatādah and others said that the heirs of the child can be both men and women and they must have it nursed paying in proportion with their shares of inheritance. Aḥmad and Ishāq said that. Qāḍī Abū Ishāq Ismā‘īl ibn Ishāq said in his book, Meanings of the Qur’an, ‘Abū Ḥanīfah said that the maintenance and nursing of the child is incumbent on every relative. For instance, in the case of the young son of a sister who is needy and the young son of an uncle when he is his heir: maintenance is incumbent on the maternal uncle if his sister’s son becomes fatherless even though he does not inherit from him. The responsibility is removed from the son of an uncle if there is another son of an uncle who is an heir.’ Abū Ishāq said that those who say this are taking a position which is not in the Book of Allah and we do not know of anyone who says it.

Aṭ-Ṭabarī reported that Abū Ḥanīfah and his adherents said that the heir who must pay for the nurse is the child’s heir who is a close relative. As for nephews and those who are not close relatives, they are free of that responsibility. It is said that what is meant is that the paternal relatives of the father must maintain and clothe the child. Aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk said, ‘If the child’s father dies and the child has property, his nursing is paid for from his own property. If he has no property, it is taken from the paternal relatives. If they have no money, then the mother is compelled to nurse him.’ Qabīṣah ibn Dhu‘ayb, aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk and Bashīr ibn Naṣr, the Qāḍī of ‘Umar ibn ‘Abd al-‘Azīz, said, ‘The “heir” means the child himself. It means that he must pay for nursing from his own property since he was his father’s heir.’

Sufyān said, ‘The heir here is the remaining parent of the child after the death of one of them. If the father dies, then the mother must care for the child if he has no property. The paternal kin share with her in payment for nursing the child according to their share of the estate. Ibn Khuwayzimandād said, ‘If an orphan is poor and has no money, the ruler must support him from the Treasury. If the ruler does not do it, then the Muslims must do it, starting with those specified in order. The mother is the first specified and it is obliged for her to nurse him and sustain him. She does not resort to him or anyone else.’

Nursing is mandatory and maintenance is recommended. Husbands are obliged to maintain the women who nurse their children. If the husband is unable to pay what is due owing to death or hardship, the duty is not cancelled for the mothers. A waiting period is mandatory for them, as is maintenance and lodging by their husbands. If maintenance is impossible, their waiting period is not thereby cancelled. In al-Asadiyyah ‘Abd ar-Rahmān ibn al-Qāsim reported that Mālik ibn Anas said, ‘A man is not obliged to maintain a sister or a relative.’ He said that Allah’s words: ‘The same duty is incumbent on the heir’ are abrogated. An-Naḥḥās said, ‘This is what Mālik said. Neither he nor ‘Abd ar-Rahmān ibn al-Qāsim explained what abrogated it. I do not know of any of their people who made that clear. Allah knows best, but it seems that he believes that what abrogates it is that at first Allah made it obligatory for the widow to receive maintenance for a year and lodging from the property of the deceased and then that was abrogated and removed and it was also abrogated for the heir.’ According to this, the child is obliged to pay for his upkeep from his property and not his heir.

Ibn al-‘Arabī said, ‘Ibn al-Qāsim said that Mālik said that the instruction: “the same duty is incumbent on the heir”, is abrogated. These are words which the hearts of the heedless abhor and which bewilder the minds of the isolated. But the business is close! The early fuqahā' and commentators used to refer to specification (takhṣīṣ) as abrogation because it removes part of what was entailed by the generality of the āyah. They used that language and what they meant became unclear to later people. The verification of that is that Allah's words: "The same duty is incumbent on the heir", indicate what was before. Some people refer it to all of the obligation of maintenance and prohibition of harm, including Abū Ḥanīfah among the fuqahā' and Qatādah and al-Ḥasan among the Salaf, deriving it from 'Umar.

One group of scholars said that the āyah does not refer to all of that, but means that the heir is forbidden to harm the mother by withholding what is due from the father. This is the basic principle. Whoever claims that that it refers to all must provide the proof. 'This is the basic principle' means to refer the pronoun to closest person mentioned. That is sound. If it had meant all, which is nursing, spending and lack of harm, Allah would have said, 'The same duties – using the plural – are incumbent...'. This indicates that it is added to the prohibition to harm. All commentators interpret in that way according to what is related from Qāḍī 'Abd al-Wahhāb. What is meant by it is that mother may not harm her child by not nursing him when the father pays her a suitable wage, and the father may not harm the mother when she is paid to nurse him for an appropriate wage, because the mother is kinder and gentler towards the child and her milk is better for him than the milk of other women.

Ibn 'Aṭīyyah said, 'Mālik and all his adherents, ash-Sha'bī, az-Zuhrī, aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk and all scholars, say that what is meant by "the same duty" is that she should not be harmed. He is not obliged to give anything in respect of food and clothing.' Ibn al-Qāsim related from Mālik that the āyah includes the fact that the heir owes food and clothing, but then the consensus of the community is that this was abrogated by the heir not being put under pressure. The disagreement is about whether or not he owes food and clothing. Yaḥyā ibn Ma‘mar recited ‘heirs’ in the plural. That would demand the generality of the āyah. They took as evidence the words of the Prophet ﷺ: ‘Allah does not accept ṣadaqah when there are relatives in need.’ The answer to them is that ‘relatives’ is general and includes every relative, mahram or not. There is no doubt that giving ṣadaqah to relatives is better because the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘Give it to your relatives.’ The ḥadīth is taken in that manner and there is no proof in it for what they claim. Allah knows best.

An-Naḥḥās said that the opinion of those who say that ‘the same duty is incumbent on the heir’ means not to harm is a good opinion because people’s property is protected and so none of it taken except by decisive evidence. As for the position of those who say that it refers to the heirs of the father, their argument is that maintenance is the responsibility of the father and so his heirs are more suitable to provide it than the heirs of the son. The argument of those who say that it is the responsibility of the son’s heirs is that as they inherit from him, so they should support him.

An-Naḥḥās said, ‘Muḥammad ibn Jarīr preferred the position of those who say that the heir here is the son. It is an odd position. Deduction by it is sound and the argument based on it is evident because he is more entitled to his own property. With the exception of the odd aberrant position, fuqahā’ agree that if a man has a child who is a minor and the child has property and the father is in straitened circumstances, neither maintenance nor nursing are obliged from the father but rather they are taken from the child’s property. If it is said that Allah says: “It is the duty of the fathers to feed and clothe them with correctness and courtesy,” then it is answered that it is a feminine pronoun. Nonetheless, the consensus defines and explains the āyah and no Muslim can depart from it. As for those who say that it is owed by the remaining parent, their argument is that it is not permitted for a mother to let her child perish, given that the one who supported her and the child has died.’

Al-Bukhārī has a chapter that refutes that entitled “The same duty is incumbent on the heir.” Does a woman owe any support?’ He provides the ḥadīths about Umm Salamah and Hind. Umm Salamah had sons by Abū Salamah who had no property. She asked the Prophet ﷺ who told her that she would have a reward for that. This ḥadīth indicated that she was not obliged to spend on her sons. If she had been obliged to do so, then she would not have said to the Prophet ﷺ, ‘I would not leave them.’ In the ḥadīth of Hind, the Prophet ﷺ allowed her to take the maintenance for her and her son from the father’s property and he did not oblige her to spend from herself as he obliged it for the father. Al-Bukhārī deduced from this that since mothers are not obliged to support their children while their father is alive, neither are they obliged to support them after their father’s death.

As for the view of those who say that the spending and clothing is the duty of every maḥram relative, their argument is that a man must spend on all maḥram relatives if they are poor. An-Naḥḥās said, ‘This view is countered by the fact that it is not taken from the Book of Allah, consensus, or sound Sunnah. It is only known from what we mentioned. The Qur’an, however, says: “The same duty is incumbent on the heir,” so the heir owes maintenance and clothing. They differ from that and said, “If he leaves a maternal uncle and a son of a paternal uncle, then maintenance is owed by his uncle and the cousin owes nothing.” This differs from the text of the Qur’an because the maternal uncle does not inherit with the son of a paternal uncle according to one view, and he does not inherit alone according to the view of most scholars. Most scholars take a different view than the one they hold about owing maintenance to every relative.’

If the couple both wish weaning to take place

The dual pronoun refers to the parents. Weaning is the child leaving nourishment by the mother's milk for other foods. The root meaning of the noun fiṣāl (weaning) means 'separation'. It is called weaning because the child is separated from the mother's breast. This āyah refers to it happening before the two years are up. In that case 'there is nothing wrong in' weaning him. That is because when Allah set two years as the period of nursing, He made it clear that no one can dispute the time of weaning unless the parents agree on less than that amount of time, as long as that does not harm the child. That is permitted based on this clarification. Qatādah said, 'Nursing was mandatory for the two years and weaning before that time was forbidden, and then it was lightened and it was allowed to nurse less than two years when Allah said: "If the couple both wish weaning to that place."' This indicates that Allah has allowed ijtihād in the rulings on that, when the parents consult one another, about the course which will be in the best interests of the child. That is based on their predominant opinions, not on reality and certainty. Tashāwur is joint consultation. Mashūrah and mushāwarah mean the same. The verb shāra is used for extracting honey and it is also used for making a horse run before buying it. Shawār are household utensils because they are evident to someone who looks. Shārah is a man's shape and ishārah is bring out something from inside yourself and reveal it.

If you wish to find wet-nurses for your children,

This means other than the mother. Az-Zajjāj said that. An-Naḥḥās said, 'In Arabic it implies looking for other women to nurse your children.' This is evidence for hiring a wet-nurse when the parents agree to that. 'Ikrimah said that the words: 'No mother should be put under pressure', refer to getting a wet-nurse. Ibn 'Aṭīyah says that the basic position is that every mother is obliged to nurse her child as Allah mentions and their husbands are obliged to give them maintenance and clothing while they are married. If nursing had been a requirement of the father, Allah would have mentioned it with the requirements of maintenance and clothing. Mālik, however, excepted noble women and said that they are not obliged to nurse. He removed them from the general category by the legal principle of custom. This is a principle which only Mālik understands. This splendid principle is that the matter existed in the Jāhiliyyah, regarding those of noble birth, and then Islam came and did not alter it. So those of wealth and high birth continued to free the mothers among them for enjoyment by giving suckling infants to wet-nurses for a period of time. He stated that position and it continues until now and so it is part of the Sharī'ah.

provided you hand over to them what you have agreed to give

This means that the father is responsible for paying the wages of the wet-nurse. Sufyān said that. Mujāhid said that it means to hand over the wages to the mothers for their nursing until the time they wish to find a wet-nurse. Six of the seven readings has 'ātaykum', meaning 'give' and Ibn Kathīr has 'ataykum' meaning 'bring and do'. Qatādah and az-Zuhrī said that it means: 'you hand over what you have done in desiring to seek a wet-nurse', which means that both parents submit and are satisfied. That is based on their agreement, good intention and seeking what is correct regarding the matter. According to this possibility, 'hand over' is addressed to men and women. According to the first two views, it is only addressed to men. Abū 'Alī said that it means 'when you hand over what you have given of money or gift and there is some elision. According to this interpretation, it refers to men because they are the one who pay the wages of the wet-nurses.' Abū 'Alī also said that it is possible that 'mā' acts as a verbal noun and has the same meaning as the first view.

وَالَّذِينَ يَتُوفَوْنَ مِنْكُمْ وَيَذُرُونَ أَزْوَاجًا يَرَوْنَ بِأَنْفُسِهِنَّ أَزْوَاجَهُنَّ أَشْهُرًا
 وَعَشْرًا فَإِذَا بَلَغْنَ أَجَلَهُنَّ فَلَا جُنَاحَ عَلَيْكُمْ فِيهَا فَعَلْنَ فِي أَنْفُسِهِنَّ بِالْمَعْرُوفِ
 وَاللَّهُ عَمَّا تَعْمَلُونَ خَبِيرٌ ﴿٣٧﴾

234 Those of you who die leaving wives behind: they should wait by themselves for four months and ten nights. When their waiting period comes to an end, you are not to blame for anything they do with themselves with correctness and courtesy. Allah is aware of what you do.

Those of you who die leaving wives behind: they should wait by themselves for four months and ten nights.

After Allah has mentioned the waiting period of divorce followed by nursing, He speaks about the waiting period for widowhood as well so that it is not assumed that the waiting period for widows is the same as the waiting period for divorce. The words 'those of you' refer to husbands and 'they' to widows. Az-Zajjāj said that and an-Naḥḥās also mentioned that. 'Abū 'Alī al-Fārisī said, 'It implies: "those of you who die and leave wives: they should wait after them."' The expression is extremely succinct. Al-Mahdawī said that Sībuwayh said that it means: 'In what is recited to you: those of you who die...'

This āyah is about the waiting period of widows. Its literal meaning is general while its actual meaning is specific. Al-Mahdawī related from one scholar that the āyah concerned pregnant women and that it was abrogated by: 'The time for those who are pregnant is when they give birth.' (65:4) Most scholars say that this āyah abrogates: 'Those of you who die leaving wives behind should make a bequest to their wives...' (2:240) because, in the beginning of Islam, when a man died and left a pregnant wife, he would make a bequest for her of maintenance for a year and provide lodging for her until she left and remarried. Then this was abrogated by four months and ten days and a share of inheritance. Other people have said that there is no abrogation in this and that it constitutes a reduction from the original year in the same way that the travelling prayer was reduced from four to two rak'ahs. This is not abrogation.

This view is a clear error because the ruling was a waiting period for a year provided the widow did not go out. If she went out, she was not prevented from doing so but the maintenance would thereby be brought to an end. Then this was removed and a waiting period of four months and ten days was imposed. This is an abrogation, and it has nothing to do with the case of the travelling prayer. In any case, ‘Ā’ishah said, ‘The prayer was prescribed as two rak’ahs each, and then the resident prayer was increased and the travel prayer remained the same.’ That will be dealt with in due course.

The waiting period of a pregnant widow lasts until she gives birth according to the majority of scholars. It is related from ‘Alī and Ibn ‘Abbās that the end of the waiting period is whichever of the two terms is longer. Among our scholars Saḥnūn chose this view. It is also related that Ibn ‘Abbās retracted his statement. Their reasoning is that they prefer to combine both āyahs (2:234 and 65:4) and maintain acting on them by taking the longer term. If her ‘iddah ends by giving birth, then she has not acted on the āyah containing the waiting period of the widow. According to the people of fundamentals, joining them is better than giving preference to one of them. This view would be good were it not for the fact that it is overturned by the ḥadīth of Subay‘ah al-Aslamiyyah. She gave birth some days after the death of her husband and she mentioned that to the Messenger of Allah ﷺ and he told her to marry. It is transmitted in the Ṣaḥīḥ. So the ḥadīth makes it clear that this ruling applies both to widows and divorced women when they are pregnant, and the waiting period of a widow is specifically for one who is not pregnant. This is reinforced by the view of Ibn Mas‘ūd: ‘The relationship between the two is that the short “Āyah of Women” was revealed after the āyah dealing with the waiting period of widows.’

Our scholars say that the apparent meaning of the words is that abrogation has taken place. That is not what is meant, and Allah knows best. What is actually meant is that it is specific to her. Certain circumstances have removed her from the ruling. The incident involving Subay‘ah took place after the revelation of the āyah about the waiting period of widowhood because it occurred after the Farewell Hajj. Her husband was Sa‘d ibn Khawlah, one of the Banū ‘Āmir ibn Lu‘ayy, who had been present at the Battle of Badr. He died in Makkah while she was pregnant. The Messenger of Allah ﷺ told her that he had died in Makkah, and she gave birth after about half a month. Al-Bukhārī said that it was forty days. Muslim related from ‘Umar ibn ‘Abdullāh ibn al-Arḡam that Subay‘ah asked the Messenger of Allah ﷺ about that and he gave her a fatwā that she was lawful for remarriage when she gave birth and told her that she could marry if that seemed proper for her.

Ibn Shihāb said, ‘I do not think that there is anything wrong in her marrying after she gives birth, even if she is still bleeding, but her husband should not approach her until she is pure.’ This is the position of the majority of scholars and imams of the fuqahā’. Al-Ḥasan, ash-Sha‘bī, an-Nakha‘ī and Ḥammād said that a woman should not marry in the period of lochia. They had two stipulations: giving birth and purity after the bleeding of lochia. The ḥadīth provides the argument against them. They have no argument in his words ﷺ, ‘When she finished her lochia, she beautified herself for suitors’, as we find in Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim and Abū Dāwud, because although the root of the word ‘finished’ means to be pure of the blood of lochia, according to what al-Khalīl says, it is possible that what is meant here is that she is finished with the pains of lochia. If we accept that it means what al-Khalīl said, there is no argument in it. The proof lies in what the Prophet ﷺ said to Subay‘ah: ‘You are lawful when you give birth.’ So she becomes lawful when she gives birth. He ﷺ did not say that it is at the end of bleeding or when she has purified herself. What is sound then is what the majority stated.

There is no disagreement that the end of the waiting period of every pregnant divorced woman ends when she gives birth, whether that was a revocable divorce or not, and whether she is free, a slave, a mudabbarah or mukātabah. There is some disagreement about the end of the waiting period of a pregnant widow, as we have stated. All of them agree, without any disagreement, that if a man dies leaving a pregnant widow, even after the period of four months and ten days she is still not lawful until she has given birth. Therefore it is known that what is meant is giving birth.

The word ‘wait’ here means to refrain from remarrying and leaving the marital home. That means not leaving it at night. Allah did not mention the residence of widows in His Book as He did that of divorced woman when He says: ‘let them live...’ (65:6). There is nothing in the term ‘iddah that indicates mourning. He says, ‘wait’ and the Sunnah clarifies that and there are many ḥadīths from the Prophet ﷺ indicating that the waiting period of widowhood is a period of mourning, which should be marked by not wearing jewelry, beautiful dyed garments, perfume and the like. This is the statement of the majority of scholars. Al-Ḥasan said that it has nothing to do with mourning and it is only about not marrying, and so a widow is free to adorn herself and use perfume. This is weak because it is contrary to the Sunnah as we will make clear.

It is confirmed that the Prophet ﷺ said to Furay‘ah bint Mālīk when she was widowed, ‘Remain in your house until the term is reached.’ She said, ‘My waiting period was for four months and ten days.’ This is a confirmed ḥadīth transmitted by Mālīk from Sa‘īd ibn Ishāq ibn Ka‘b ibn ‘Ujrah. It was related from him by Mālīk, ath-Thawrī, Wuhayb ibn Khālid, Ḥammād ibn Zayd, ‘Īsā ibn Yūnus and a great number of others. Ibn ‘Uyaynah, al-Qaṭṭān and Shu‘bah. Mālīk related it from Ibn Sha‘bān. That is enough for you! Al-Bājī said that no one else related it from him. ‘Uthmān ibn ‘Affān accepted it. Abū ‘Umar says that it contains the judgment for the widow spending the waiting period in her house. It is a famous ḥadīth among scholars of the Hijaz and Iraq who maintain the widow should spend the waiting-period in her house and not leave. It is the position of a group of the fuqahā' of the cities in the Hijaz, Syria, Iraq and Egypt.

Dāwud, however, said that a widow may spend the waiting period wherever she wishes because, in the Qur'an, lodging is only mentioned in the case of divorced women. He argues that it is a disputed question. They said that this ḥadīth was related by a woman not known for conveying knowledge. Lodging and other rulings are only obliged by a text of the Qur'an, Sunnah or consensus. Abū 'Umar said, 'The Sunnah is confirmed. Praise be to Allah. There is no need for consensus when the Sunnah exists, because when a disagreement occurs about a question, the argument goes in favour of the position that agrees with the Sunnah. Success is by Allah.' What has come from 'Alī, Ibn 'Abbās, Jābir, and 'Ā'ishah supports the opinion of Dāwud and that position was taken by Jābir ibn Zayd, 'Aṭā' and al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī. Ibn 'Abbās said that it is because Allah says: '...they should wait by themselves for four months and ten days' and did not say, 'wait in their houses'. So she does the 'iddah wherever she wishes. It is also reported from Abū Ḥanīfah.

'Abd ar-Razzāq related from Ma'mar from az-Zuhrī that 'Urwah reported that when 'Ā'ishah's sister, Umm Kulthum, was widowed when her husband, Ṭalḥah ibn 'Ubaydullāh, was killed, 'Ā'ishah took her to Makkah on 'umrah. Her judgment was that a widow could go out during her waiting period. Ath-Thawrī related that 'Ubaydullāh ibn 'Umar heard al-Qāsim ibn Muḥammad remark that some people rejected that position of hers. Ma'mar related that az-Zuhrī said, 'Those who make allowances for widows take the position of 'Ā'ishah and those who are scrupulous and firm take that of Ibn 'Umar.' It states in the Muwattā' that 'Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb sent back some widows from al-Bayḍā' when they were on their way to ḥajj and prevented them from doing it. This was based on his ijtihād because he thought that widows must stay in their husbands' houses and that that is demanded by the Qur'an and the Sunnah. A widow is not permitted to go on a ḥajj or ‘umrah until her ‘iddah is over. Mālik said that she is sent back as long as she has not adopted iḥrām.

If the husband owns the dwelling, his widow observes her waiting period in it according to most fuqahā’ – Mālik, Abū Ḥanīfah, ash-Shāfi‘ī and Aḥmad among them – based on the ḥadīth of Furay‘ah. But can the house then be sold if it belonged to the deceased and the heirs want to sell it? Most of our people say that the sale is permitted but a precondition of the sale must be that the widow can observe her waiting period there. Ibn al-Qāsim said that is because she is entitled to her lodging as a creditor. Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥakam said that the sale is invalid until the end of the widow’s waiting period. The reasoning behind the view of Ibn al-Qāsim is that soundness is predominant and doubt is rare and so that does not cause the contract to be invalid. If the sale occurs with this precondition, that causes uncertainty. Mālik said in the book of Muḥammad, that the widow is entitled to reside until the doubt ends. He said that he preferred the buyer to have the option to cancel the sale or carry it out and not retract anything, because it is based on a known amount of time. If the sale has the precondition of the removal of doubt, it is unsound. Saḥnūn said, ‘The buyer has no argument, even if the doubt lasts for five years. The like of that is related by Abū Yazīd from Ibn al-Qāsim.

If the husband has a dwelling that is not owned, she can live in it for the waiting period. Abū Ḥanīfah and ash-Shāfi‘ī disagree since the Prophet ﷺ said to Furay‘ah, knowing that her husband did not own the house, ‘Stay in your house until the period is concluded.’ It is not said that the house was hers. That is why he said to her, ‘Stay in your house.’ Ma‘mar related from az-Zuhrī that she mentioned to the Prophet ﷺ that her husband had been killed and he had left her in a house which was hers and she sought his permission. He mentioned the ḥadīth. We take it to mean that he left a house in which she could live and would not be pursued for. So the wife had to do the waiting period in it. The basis of that is owning the right to live in it.

This is when her deceased husband paid the rent. If he has not paid it, the Mudawwanah states that she has no right of lodging from the property of the deceased, even if he was wealthy, because her right was contingent on what he owned completely. She has only what she receives by inheritance and that is property and not lodging. Muḥammad reported that Mālik said that renting a lodging for the widow is an obligation and must be paid for from the property of the deceased.

The words of the Prophet ﷺ to Furay‘ah, ‘Stay in your house until the term is concluded’ may mean that he commanded her to do that since her husband had paid the rent or had provided for her lodging in his will or that the owner of the house allowed her to spend her waiting period there with or without rent. It is whatever Allah meant by that, in view of the fact that it is necessary for her to have somewhere to live until the end of her waiting period.

They disagree about a woman who is informed of her husband’s death while she is in a house other than that of her husband. Some relate that she should return to his house and Mālik ibn Anas said that. He related it from ‘Umar ibn ‘Abd al-Azīz. Sa‘īd ibn al-Musayyab and an-Nakha‘ī said that she does the waiting period where the news reaches her and does not leave until the end of her waiting period. Ibn al-Mundhir says that the sound position of Mālik is that she should return to the deceased husband’s house unless he himself had moved her to her current location. In that case, she stays at that place.

She is permitted to go out for her needs and her work, at the time when people normally go out for such things, up until the time of the ‘Ishā’ prayer. She should, however, spend the night in that house alone. We find in al-Bukhārī and Muslim from Umm ‘Aṭīyah that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘A woman should not mourn for a dead person more than three days, except in the case of a husband, when the mourning period is four months and ten days. A widow should not wear a dyed garment except for one made of pre-dyed yarn. She should not wear eye make-up (kohl) or perfume until her waiting period has ended, except for costus or azfar (types of aromatic wood).’ Umm Ḥabībah said, ‘It is not lawful for a woman who believes in Allah and the Last Day to mourn for a dead person more than three days unless it is her husband. She should mourn him for four months and ten days.’ Mourning consists of abandoning all adornment in respect of clothing, perfume, jewellery, make-up and henna during the waiting period, because adornment is a sign of seeking a husband and so it is forbidden as a protection and in order to make sure that that does not happen. Oiling the hair is not considered as adornment but henna is. The Arabic for a woman in mourning is ḥādd and muhidd.

We believe that the fact that the Prophet ﷺ described a woman with faith indicates the soundness of one of the two views about a widowed Kitābī woman not having to observe mourning. That is the view of Ibn Kinānah and Ibn Nāfi‘. Ashhab related it from Mālik. That is also what is stated by Abū Ḥanīfah and Ibn al-Mundhir. It is related from Ibn al-Qāsim that she must mourn like a Muslim. That is the view of al-Layth, ash-Shāfi‘ī, Abū Thawr and most of our people because it is one of the rulings about the ‘iddah and so it is obliged for the Kitābī wife of a Muslim just as lodging and ‘iddah are also obliged.

The words of the Prophet ﷺ, ‘more than three days’ indicate that it is unlawful for Muslim women to observe mourning for other than their husbands for more than three days, and the fact that it is definitely permitted to mourn them for three days, starting the number with the night before to the end of the third day. If her close friend dies at the end of a day or night, it is not counted and the number starts from the following night.

This ḥadīth indicates a general ruling which applies to all widows and it included slave-girls and young and old free women. That is the position of the majority of scholars. Abū Ḥanīfah believed that neither a slave-girl nor a young girl have to observe mourning. Qāḍī Abu-l-Walīd al-Bāji related it from him. Ibn al-Mundhir said that a married slave-girl is included with wives in general since the reports are non-specific. That is the view of Mālik, ash-Shāfi‘ī, Abū Thawr and the People of Opinion. I do not recall any disagreement about that from anyone and I do not know that they disagree about mourning in respect of an umm walad if her master dies because she is not a wife and the ḥadīths are about wives. Al-Bāji said, ‘When the young girl is one of those who understands commands and prohibitions, she is obliged to observe the mourning period prescribed for her, but if she does not grasp any of that because of her youth, Ibn Muzayn related from ‘Īsā that her family should make her avoid what an adult woman would avoid. She must do that. The evidence for the obligation of mourning for a young girl is something related from the Prophet ﷺ. A woman asked him about a daughter of hers who was widowed and had something wrong with her eye. Could she treat it with kohl? The Prophet ﷺ answered, ‘No,’ saying it two or three times. He did not ask about her age. If there had been a separate judgment about young and old, he would have asked about her age to make the ruling clear. It is not permitted to delay clarification about something like this. All who are obliged to observe the waiting period of a widow must observe mourning as is the case with an adult woman.

Ibn al-Mundhir said, ‘I do not know of any disagreement about dyeing being part of the forbidden adornment. They agree that she is not permitted to wear dyed clothing except for that made with black. There is an allowance for it from ‘Urwah ibn az-Zubayr, Mālik and ash-Shāfi‘ī. Az-Zuhrī said that she should not wear a black head-scarf. That differs from the ḥadīth. In the Mudawwanah Mālik said, ‘She should not wear fine black Yemenī fabric,’ but he makes an allowance if it is coarse. Ibn al-Qāsim said that the reason for that is that fine fabric is like dyed garments. She can wear fine garments of silk, linen and cotton. Ibn al-Mundhir said, ‘Everyone from whom I have reported makes an allowance for white clothing.’ Qāḍī ‘Iyāḍ said, ‘Ash-Shāfi‘ī said that every dye is adornment and the woman in mourning should not touch it, whether it is fine or coarse. Qāḍī ‘Abd al-Wahhāb says something similar. He said, ‘A mourning woman is forbidden from enjoying any colour that women use to adorn themselves for their husbands.’ Some of our later shaykhs forbid fine white cloth that is used for adornment. The same is true of fine black cloth. Ibn al-Mawwāz related from Mālik that a woman should not wear jewellery if she is in mourning. In general, any kind of jewellery that a woman wears for adornment should not be worn by a woman in mourning. There is no specific text on gems, rubies, emeralds and things of that sort. Allah knows best.

The people agree that Muslim widows should go into mourning – with the exception of al-Ḥasan who says that it is not mandatory. He based that on the ḥadīth of ‘Abdullāh ibn Shaddād ibn al-Hādī about Asmā’ bint ‘Umays when Ja‘far ibn Abī Tālib was killed. She said that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ told her, ‘Withdraw for three and then do what you wish.’ Ibn al-Mundhir said, ‘It is only al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī among scholars who did not think that there was mourning. He said that a divorced woman and a widow observe three days. They may then wear kohl, dye and do whatever they like.’ Reports from the Prophet ﷺ confirm mourning. No one who heard those reports did not accept them. Perhaps they did not reach al-Ḥasan, or they reached him, but he interpreted them by the ḥadīth of Asmā’ bint ‘Umays who asked the Prophet ﷺ for permission to mourn for her husband, Ja‘far. He gave her permission for three days and then after three days he sent word to her to purify herself and wear kohl. Ibn al-Mundhir said that the people of knowledge present this ḥadīth with various aspects. Aḥmad ibn Ḥanbal said. ‘This is aberrant in the ḥadīth and not taken.’ Ishāq said it.

Mālik and ash-Shāfi‘ī believed that a woman divorced finally, once, or more, or revocably, does not have to mourn. That is the view of Rabī‘ah and ‘Aṭā’. The Kufans, namely Abū Ḥanīfah and his people, ath-Thawrī, al-Ḥasan ibn Ḥayy, Abū Thawr and Abū ‘Ubayd said that a woman divorced trebly must mourn. That is also the view of Sa‘īd ibn al-Musayyab, Sulaymān ibn Yasār, Ibn Sīrīn, and al-Ḥakam ibn ‘Uyaynah. Al-Ḥakam said, ‘It is more stressed for her than a widow. Part of the idea is that they both observe a waiting period by which lineage is protected.’ Ash-Shāfi‘ī, Aḥmad and Ishāq said that part of caution is that a divorced woman avoids adornment. Ibn al-Mundhir said, ‘The words of the Prophet ﷺ, “It is not lawful for a woman who believes in Allah and the Last Day to mourn for a deceased person other than her husband for more than three days. For a husband it is four months and ten days,” are evidence that a woman who is divorced three times and whose husband is alive does not mourn.’

Scholars agree that if someone divorces his wife in a manner in which he can take her back and then dies before the end of the waiting period, she must observe the waiting period of a widow and she inherits from him. They disagree about the ‘iddah of a woman triply divorced while the husband is ill. One group said that she observes the waiting period for a divorce. This is the view of Mālik, ash-Shāfi‘ī, Ya‘qūb, Abū ‘Ubayd and Abū Thawr. Ibn al-Mundhir said, ‘That is what I say because Allah Almighty made the waiting period of divorced women three menstrual cycles. They agree that if the husband of a woman who has been divorced three times dies, she does not inherit from him because she is not his wife. If she is not his wife, he is not her husband. Ath-Thawrī said that she should observe the longer of the two waiting periods. An-Nu‘mān and Muḥammad said that she must observe four months and ten days in which the three menstrual cycles are completed.

They disagree about a woman who hears that her husband has died or has divorced her. One group say that the waiting period for both begins from the day he dies or she was divorced. This is the position of Ibn ‘Umar, Ibn Mas‘ūd and Ibn ‘Abbās. That is also stated by Masrūq, ‘Aṭā’, and a group of Ṭābi‘ūn. It was the position of Mālik, ash-Shāfi‘ī, Aḥmad, Ishāq, Abū ‘Ubayd, ath-Thawrī, Abū Thawr, the People of Opinion and Ibn al-Mundhir. There is a second view regarding her, which is that it starts from the day the news reaches her. This view was related from ‘Alī. That is the view of al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī, Qatādah, ‘Aṭā’ al-Khurāsānī and Jullās ibn ‘Amr. Sa‘īd ibn al-Musayyab and ‘Umar ibn ‘Abd al-‘Azīz said, ‘If there is evidence, her waiting period starts from the death or divorce. If there is no evidence, then it starts from the day the news reaches her.’ The first is the sound position because Allah Almighty connected the waiting period to death or divorce and because, had she known of his death, she would have finished mourning and the ‘iddah would have ended. It is easier for her to have left it when she did not know. Do you not see that a young girl finishes her waiting period and does not observe mourning? Scholars also agree that if the woman is pregnant and does not know that her husband has divorced her or died and then gives birth, her ‘iddah is over. There is no difference between this question and the disputed one. The reasoning of those who say that her waiting period begins from the day the news reaches her is that it is an act of worship by abandoning adornment which is only valid by aim and intention. There is only an intention after knowledge. Allah knows best.

The waiting period for widowhood must be observed by both free women and slaves, young and old, those who have not reached the age of menstruation, those who menstruate, those past the age of menstruation and Kitābī women, whether or not the marriage has been consummated, when the woman is not pregnant. Except for slave-girls, the waiting period of all of them is four months and ten days since the āyah is general. The waiting period of a slave-girl is two months and five days. Ibn al-‘Arabī said that the consensus is that it is half of that of a free woman except for what is related from al-Aṣamm that it is the same for a slave-girl and free woman. The consensus of the community preceded that, but perhaps he had not heard it because of his deafness. Al-Bājī said, ‘We do not know of any disagreement except what is related from Ibn Sīrīn, which is not actually confirmed from him, about slave-girls having the same ‘iddah as free women.’

The position of al-Aṣamm is sound from the point of view of reflection as the āyahs which deal with the waiting person for widowhood and divorce mention months and menstrual cycles and have general application to both slave-girls and free women. Therefore their waiting period is the same, based on this consideration. Generalities do not make a distinction between free and slave and, as the free woman and slave-girl are the same in respect of marriage, so they should be the same in respect of waiting period. Allah knows best. Ibn al-‘Arabī said, ‘It is related from Mālik that a kitābī woman should observe an ‘iddah for three menstruations when she is not pregnant. This is very unsound because it removes her from the generality of the āyah of widowhood when she is in fact part of it and includes her in the generality of the āyah of divorce when she is actually not part of it.’ This is the basis for what is found in the Mudawwanah about her not having to observe a waiting period if the marriage has not been consummated because it is known that she is not pregnant. This entails the fact that she can marry a Muslim or someone else after her husband’s death because she does not have to observe an ‘iddah for widowhood nor wait to see if she is pregnant. Therefore she is lawful for marriage.

They disagree about the ‘iddah of an umm walad whose master has died. One group said that it is four months and ten days as was stated by a group of Tābi‘ūn, including Sa‘īd, az-Zuhrī, al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī and others. Al-Awzā‘ī and Ishāq said that. Abū Dāwud and ad-Dāraquṭnī related from Qabīṣah ibn Dhu‘ayb that ‘Amr ibn al-‘Āṣ said, ‘Do not muddle up the Sunnah of our Prophet ﷺ for us. The waiting period of an umm walad is four months and ten days.’ Ad-Dāraquṭnī said that this is mawqūf. That is correct: it is mursal because Qabīṣah did not listen to ‘Amr. Ibn al-Mundhir said that Aḥmad and Abū ‘Ubayd said that this ḥadīth is weak. It is related from ‘Alī and Ibn Mas‘ūd that her waiting period is three menstrual periods. This is the position of ‘Aṭā’, Ibrāhīm an-Nakha‘ī, Sufyān ath-Thawrī and the People of Opinion who said that it is because the ‘iddah is obliged when the woman is free and so it must be a full ‘iddah. The basis of the ‘iddah is that of a free woman. Mālik, ash-Shāfi‘ī, Aḥmad and Abū Thawr said that her ‘iddah is one menstrual period. That is the view of Ibn ‘Umar. It is related from Ṭāwūs that her ‘iddah is half that of a widowed free woman. Qatādah said that. Ibn al-Mundhir said, ‘I take the position of Ibn ‘Umar because it is the minimum of what is said about it and there is no sunnah which is followed nor any consensus which is relied on.’ He mentioned their disagreement about her waiting period when she is freed as well as when she is widowed. Al-Awzā‘ī, however, said that her ‘iddah when she is freed is three menstrual periods.

The soundest position is that of Mālik since Allah says: ‘Divorced women should wait by themselves for three menstrual cycles.’ (2:228) So the precondition for waiting based on menstrual cycles is that it is on account of divorce. So he said that it is not for other things. Allah says: ‘Those of you who die leaving wives behind: they should wait by themselves for four months and ten days,’ and He connected that to the woman being a widow. This indicates that a slave-girl is different; and also a slave-girl with whom the master has had sex based on ownership observes istibrā' of one menstrual period. That is the basic principle.

If this is confirmed, then the question about the waiting period of an umm walad is whether it is 'iddah' or istibrā'. Abū Muḥammad mentioned in al-Ma'ūnah that one menstrual period is istibrā' and it is not 'iddah'. According to the Mudawwanah, an umm walad must observe an 'iddah' and her 'iddah' is one menstrual period as that of a free woman is three menstrual periods. The point of the difference lies in calling it 'iddah'. Mālik said, 'I do not like anyone promising to marry her until she has had one menstrual period.' Ibn al-Qāsim said, 'I heard that he said that she should only spend the night in her house.' He confirmed that the period of her istibrā' has the same ruling as 'iddah'.

Scholars agree that the husband must support a trebly divorced woman and a revocably divorced woman while she is pregnant since Allah says: 'If they are pregnant, maintain them until they give birth.' (65:6)

They disagreed about the obligation of the maintenance of a pregnant widow. One group said that she has no maintenance, as was stated by Jābir ibn 'Abdullāh, Ibn 'Abbās, Sa'īd ibn al-Musayyab, 'Aṭā', al-Ḥasan, 'Abd al-Malik ibn Ya'lā, Yaḥyā al-Anṣārī, Rabī'ah, Mālik, Aḥmad and Iṣḥāq. Abū 'Ubayd also related that from the People of Opinion. The second view is that she receives maintenance from the entire estate. This position is related from 'Alī and 'Abdullāh. It was affirmed by Ibn 'Umar, Shurayḥ, Ibn Sīrīn, ash-Sha'bī, Abū 'Āliyah, an-Nakha'ī, Jullās ibn 'Amr, Ḥammād ibn Abī Sulaymān, Ayyūb as-Sijistānī, Sufyan ath-Thawrī and Abū 'Ubayd. Ibn al-Mundhir said, 'I take the first view because they agree that if someone is obliged to maintain someone while he is alive, like his young children, wife and parents, it is cancelled for him in death. The same is true of maintenance for his pregnant wives ceasing.' Qāḍī Abū Muḥammad said, 'That is because maintenance of a pregnant widow is not a confirmed debt, so it is attached to his property after his death with the evidence that it is cancelled for him in case of hardship. So it is more likely that it would be cancelled for him after his death.’

Scholars disagree about the period of ‘four months and ten nights’ which Allah set for the waiting period of a widow and whether it requires menstruation to take place in it or not. Some say that a widow with whom the deceased husband has had sex must have at least one menstrual period within the four months and ten days. Otherwise there is the possibility that she is pregnant. Others state that she does not owe more than the four months and ten days in any circumstance unless she herself is uncertain, because this is a period of time in which a woman normally has a period, unless she is a woman who does not menstruate or she is a woman who knows that her menstrual period will occur in a longer period than this.

Wakī‘ related from Abū Ja‘far ar-Rāzī from ar-Rabī‘ ibn Anas that Abu-l-‘Āliyah was asked why the ten days were added to the four months. He said, ‘Because the spirit is breathed in during that time.’ This will be explained in al-Hajj, Allah willing. Al-Aṣma‘ī said, ‘It is said that the foetus of every pregnant woman moves halfway through the pregnancy.’

Al-Khaṭṭābī said, ‘Allah knows best, but “ten” means the days with the nights.’ Al-Mubarrad said that ‘ten’ is feminine because it means the period (muddah). The ‘ten’ means every period of a day and a night. The night and day is a known period. It is said that Allah does not say ‘ashrah’ in the feminine because the night predominates, since night comes before day and the day is included in it. Also ‘ashr’ is easier to say. Night take precedence over day when they are together in dating because the months begin with the night when the new moon is sighted. Since the month begins with a night, it takes precedence. Mālik, ash-Shāfi‘ī and the Kufans believe that what is meant are days and nights. Some fuqahā’ believe that when four months and ten nights have passed, the widow can lawfully remarry. That is because ‘iddah is undefined and so the feminine takes preference and it is interpreted as meaning nights. This is the view of al-Awzā'ī among the fuqahā' and Abū Bakr al-Aṣamm among the mutakallimūn. It is related that Ibn 'Abbās recited 'ten nights'.

When their waiting period comes to an end, you are not to blame for anything they do with themselves with correctness and courtesy.

The waiting period referred to is that of women whose husbands have died. The words 'you are not to blame' are addressed to people in general, but particularly to judges and relatives. What widows do with respect to marriage and adornment once they leave mourning is their own business. 'Correctness' refers to what is permitted regarding choosing husbands and determining dowry without actually making a contract, because it is the guardian who makes the contract. But this does provide evidence that relatives have the right to prevent widows from adorning themselves and seeking a husband during the time of their waiting period. This refutes Ishāq's view that a divorced woman can do that once she starts her third menstrual period. She is not completely free until she has had a ghusl. Sharīk said that a divorced woman's husband can take her back as long as she has not had a ghusl, even if twenty years have passed. However, Allah's words in this āyah mean that the waiting period ends with the blood of the third menstrual period. Allah did not mention ghusl. When the waiting period ends, then it is lawful for her to remarry and there is no blame for anything she does of that then. If the ḥadīth from Ibn 'Abbās is sound, then it may simply be a recommendation.

235 Nor is there anything wrong in any allusion to marriage you make to a woman, nor for any you keep to yourself. Allah knows that you will say things to them. But do not make secret arrangements with them, rather only speak with correctness and courtesy. Do not finally decide on the marriage contract until the prescribed period has come to its end. Know that Allah knows what is in your selves, so beware of Him! And know that Allah is Ever-Forgiving, All-Forbearing.

‘Wrong’ (junāh) in this context means sin. That is sounder in the Sharī‘ah. It is said that it means something difficult. The āyah is addressed in particular to any man who wants to marry a woman who is still in her waiting period, saying that there is no sin in alluding to marriage during that time. An allusion is not an explicit statement. It produces understanding of what is alluded to in words whose expression is not explicit. It is like circling around something without actually saying it. It is said that it means ‘to offer’ as in offering someone a present and we find that usage of the verb in ḥadīth. Alluding to something in words connects a person to something whose meaning is understood.

Ibn ‘Aṭīyah said that the Community is agreed that speaking to a woman in her waiting period about marriage in an explicit way is not permitted. They agree that speaking to her mentioning sex or its encouragement or anything like that is not permitted. Other than that is permitted. The closest to that which is explicit is found in the words of the Prophet ﷺ to Fāṭimah bint Qays, ‘Stay with Umm Sharīk. Do not advance yourself too quickly.’ There is a consensus that it is not permitted to allude to marriage with a woman who is in her waiting period following a revocable divorce, because, in that, case, she is still in fact a wife. It is, however, permitted in the case of a woman who is in her waiting period after a final divorce. Allah knows best.

It is related that there are many such allusions and they fall into two categories. The first is to mention her to her guardian to tell him not to give her in marriage before his offer. The second category is to indicate that to her without an intermediary by saying to her things like, 'I'm intending to marry,' 'You're very beautiful,' 'Allah will bring you good,' 'I desire you and who could not?' 'I am in need of a wife' or 'Allah will decree good for you.' Mālik and Ibn Shihāb used these as examples. Ibn 'Abbās said, 'There is nothing wrong in saying, 'Do not be hasty with yourself.' There is nothing wrong in a man giving her a present or doing some work for her while she in the waiting period when it is part of his business. Ibrāhīm said that. He is permitted to praise himself and mention his deeds as part of an allusion to marriage. Abū Ja'far Muḥammad ibn 'Alī ibn al-Ḥusayn is mentioned as doing that.

Sukaynah bint Ḥanzalah said, 'Muḥammad ibn 'Alī asked for permission to visit while I was still in my waiting period after the death of my husband. He said, "You know my kinship to the Messenger of Allah ﷺ and my kinship to 'Alī and my place among the Arabs." I said, "May Allah forgive you, Abū Ja'far! You are a man from whom people take knowledge and yet you propose to me while I am in my 'iddah!" He answered, "I have informed you of my kinship to the Messenger of Allah ﷺ and 'Alī. The Messenger of Allah ﷺ visited Umm Salamah when she became the widow of Abū Salamah and said, 'You know that I am the Messenger of Allah and know my goodness and position among my people.' That was a proposal." Ad-Dāraquṭnī transmitted it.

It is permitted to give a gift to a woman in her 'iddah. That is part of making an allusion. Saḥnūn and many scholars said that. Ibrāhīm also stated it. Mujāhid disliked anyone saying, 'Do not hasten to offer yourself to anyone before me.' He thought that it amounted to a secret arrangement. Qāḍī Abū Muḥammad ibn 'Aṭīyah said, 'I consider this to be an interpretation of the words of the Prophet ﷺ to Umm Salamah as a sort of opinion about who should marry her, not that he meant to marry her himself.

Khūbah (proposal) is the action of a suitor with an intention either by word or deed. Khattāb is a man who frequently proposes to women. Khatīb and khātīb mean ‘suitor’ as does khūb. Khutbah means words that can be about marriage or something else.

not for any (allusion) you keep to yourself.

This means what you conceal during a woman’s waiting period when you want to marry her after it has finished. Iknān is covering and concealment. Kanna and ikanna both mean ‘to conceal’. It means to protect something from disaster whether or not it is concealed. Maknūn is therefore used of eggs and pearls. It can be concealed by a garment, a house, land or something else. It can also be concealed in oneself although the Arabs do not use it in that way. So Allah removed any wrong action from a man who wants to marry a woman who is still in her waiting period and conceals it. He forbade any arrangements which involve a clear statement of desire for marriage, such as a proposal. Allah made this dispensation because He knows people have human weaknesses.

Shāfi‘īs use this as evidence that the ḥadd punishment is not required in the case of a slanderous allusion. They say that, since Allah said that allusion is not wrong in this case, an allusion implying slander should not incur the ḥadd either, because Allah makes it clear here that an allusion is not the same as an explicit statement. We disagree and say that this is an invalid analogy because Allah did not allow explicit marriage proposals, but an allusion by which marriage is understood. An allusion to slander acts in the same way and so the ḥadd punishment is required because the slander is in fact clearly understood just as the allusion to marriage was.

Allah knows that you will say things to them.

He knows, whether that is secretly or openly, in yourselves or on your tongues. There is an allowance in respect of allusions but not explicit statements. Al-Ḥasan said that it means, ‘He knows that you will propose to them.’

But do not make secret arrangements with them,

Scholars disagree about what is meant by ‘secret’ here. It is said that it means to actually arrange a marriage, in other words a man should not say to a woman during her waiting period, ‘Will you marry me?’ He should merely allude to what he intends and not secretly make an agreement whereby she will not marry someone else. This is the position of Ibn ‘Abbās, Ibn Jubayr, Mālik and his people, Mujāhid, ‘Ikrimah, as-Suddī and most of the people of knowledge. It is also said that ‘secret’ in this context implies fornication, in other words ‘do not agree to fornicate during the waiting period’. Jābir ibn Zayd, Abū Miljāz Lāḥiq ibn Ḥumayd, al-Ḥasan, Qatādah, an-Nakha‘ī and aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk said that and that ‘secret’ in this āyah refers to fornication. So it means: ‘Do not make secret arrangement to fornicate with them.’ Aṭ-Ṭabarī preferred that. It is also said that ‘secret’ refers to sexual intercourse, meaning, ‘Do not describe yourselves to them as being someone who likes a lot of sexual intercourse to make them desire to marry you.’ Mentioning that to other than one’s spouse is lewdness. Ash-Shāfi‘ī said that. It could also be that the secret is the marriage contract, whether it is secret or public. Ibn Zayd says that it means to not marry them secretly. If it is lawful, then make it public and consummate it with them. This is the same as the first view. According to this, Ibn Zayd took the first view, but it is very odd to call the contract ‘an arrangement’. That is unsettled. Makkī and ath-Tha‘labī said that it is abrogated by Allah’s words in this ayah: ‘Do not finally decide on the marriage contract...’.

Abū Muḥammad ibn ‘Aṭīyah said, ‘The Community agree that it is disliked to arrange a marriage with a woman during her waiting period or for her father to do so for his virgin daughter or a master for his slave-girl.’ Ibn al-Mawwāz said, ‘I dislike a walī, who does not have the power of compulsion, doing it but if it happens, I do not invalidate it.’ Malik said, ‘If they make an arrangement during the waiting period and then marry afterwards, I prefer them to separate, whether or not the marriage has been consummated, and it is one divorce. When she can lawfully marry, then he is just one among other suitors.’ This is what is transmitted from Ibn Wahb. Ashhab related from Mālik that they must be separated. Ibn al-Qāsim said that as well. Ibn al-Ḥārith related the same thing from Ibn al-Mājishūn. He added that it obliges a perpetual prohibition of marriage between the two. Ash-Shāfi‘ī said, ‘If someone makes an explicit proposal and the woman explicitly consents but the marriage does not take place until after the waiting period has ended, the marriage is valid and it was the explicit proposal which was disliked.’ Ibn al-Mundhir said that.

This refers to those allusions which are permitted. Aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk mentioned that such courteous words might be to say to a woman in ‘iddah, ‘Keep yourself for me. I desire you,’ to which she replies, ‘The same applies here.’ This is a sort of arrangement.

Do not finally decide on the marriage contract until the prescribed period has come to its end.

The meaning of ‘azm, to resolve or decide on something, has already been discussed. Here it means: ‘Do not resolve on the marriage contract.’ It is clear that the Qur’an uses the most eloquent language. What it brings cannot be opposed and its soundness and eloquence is undoubted. Allah says: ‘If they are determined (‘azamū) to divorce’ (2:227) and here He uses the same verb. It means: ‘Do not decide on the contract of marriage during the time of the waiting period.’ An-Naḥḥās said that it means ‘make the contract’.

‘Kitāb’ (prescribed period) literally means ‘book’ and here denotes the limit which is set and the length of the period. It is called a ‘book’ since it is defined and imposed in the Book of Allah. The same word is used elsewhere in reference to the prayer, as in 4:103. So ‘kitāb’ is the obligation, and it means ‘until the obligation reaches its end.’ The term is also used of the fast in 2:183. It is said that there is some elision in the words, i.e. until the prescribed obligation reaches its end. According to this, ‘kitāb’ here means the Qur’an and there is no elision. That is more appropriate.

Allah has definitively forbidden marriage during the waiting period. This is firmly agreed on. It is not allowed until the waiting period is finished although indirect allusions to marriage are permitted during the waiting period. As we have mentioned, there is disagreement about which forms of expression are allowed. There is disagreement about a man who proposes to a woman during her waiting period out of ignorance, or who makes an arrangement and then concludes the contract after its end. We have already discussed this.

There is also disagreement about deciding on marriage while a woman is in her waiting period and when that is discovered and declared invalid by a judge. ‘Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb and a group of scholars say that it does not create a perpetual ban and the man concerned simply becomes one of the suitors. Mālik and Ibn al-Qāsim said that in the Mudawannah at the end of the chapter after ‘Setting a term for a missing person’. Ibn al-Jallāb related from Mālik that there is a perpetual ban against marriage, even if the marriage is declared invalid before it takes place. His reasoning is that it is marriage within the waiting period and therefore there is a perpetual ban. This is based on the marriage being consummated. If the contract is made within the waiting period and then the marriage consummated afterwards, some scholars say that it is the same as when it is consummated inside the waiting period – there is a perpetual ban between them – whereas other scholars said that there is not a perpetual ban. Mālik said that it does bring about a perpetual ban. Once he stated that the perpetual ban is based on clear evidence. Both views are found in the Mudawwanah in the section on the sunnah divorce.

If the union is consummated in the waiting period, Mālik, al-Layth and al-Awzā'ī said that they must be parted and she will never be lawful to him. Mālik and al-Layth said that that includes ownership, although they do not permit marriage with someone with whom she has fornicated. Their argument is that 'Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb said, 'They may never be joined together.' Sa'īd said, 'She receives her dower because he was allowed to have sex with her.' Mālik transmitted that in the Muwattā'. Ath-Thawrī, the Kufans and ash-Shāfi'ī said that they are separated but the prohibition is not perpetual. The marriage is invalidated and she observes a waiting period and then he is one of the suitors. Their argument is based on the consensus that, if he commits fornication with her, she is not unlawful for him to marry. Therefore the same must be true if he has sex with her while she is in the waiting period. They stated that that is the view of 'Alī. 'Abd ar-Razzāq mentioned it. Something similar is mentioned from Ibn Mas'ūd and al-Ḥasan. 'Abd ar-Razzāq mentioned from ath-Thawrī from Ash'ath from ash-Sha'bī from Masrāuq that 'Umar retracted that and permitted them to be joined.

Qādī Abu-l-Walīd al-Bājī mentioned in al-Muntaqā: 'When someone marries a woman in 'iddah, then he must consummate it either within or after the end of the 'iddah. If he consummates it within the 'iddah, then the well-known position of the school is that the ban is perpetual. Aḥmad ibn Ḥanbal said that.' Shaykh Abū l-Qāsim related in at-Taḥfī that there are two transmissions about a man who knowingly marries a woman who is in 'iddah on account of divorce or becoming a widow. One is that she is perpetually unlawful to him as we already stated. The second view is that he commits fornication and receives the ḥadd punishment and the child is not attached to him. He can marry her at the conclusion of the ʿiddah. That is the view of ash-Shāfiʿī and Abū Ḥanīfah.

The reasoning behind the first view, which is the well-known one, is based on what is confirmed of the judgment ʿUmar gave regarding that and his establishing that among the people. His judgments have travelled and spread throughout the regions and no one is known to dispute them. It is confirmed that it is the consensus. Qaḍī Abū Muḥammad said, ‘The same thing is related from ʿAlī ibn Abī Ṭālib and no one opposes them in spite of that being well known and widespread, and so this has the ruling of consensus.’

The reasoning behind the second view is that this is forbidden sexual intercourse and so her prohibition is not perpetual, as would be the case if she had given herself in marriage, done a muʿtah marriage or fornicated. Qaḍī Abu-l-Ḥasan said that the well-known school of Mālik regarding that matter is weak in respect of logical thought. Allah knows best.

Abū ʿUmar related from ʿAbd al-Wārith ibn Sufyān from Qāsim ibn Aṣḥab from Muḥammad ibn Ismāʿīl from Nuʿaym ibn Ḥammād from Ibn al-Mubārak from Ashʿath from ash-Shaʿbī that Masrūq said, “Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb heard that a woman of Quraysh had married a man of Thaḳīf during her ʿiddah and he sent to them and separated them and punished them. He said, “You will never marry her!” He put her dower in the treasury. The news of that spread among people and the news reached ʿAlī. He said, “May Allah have mercy on the Amīr al-Muʿminīn! What business does the treasury have with dowries? They were ignorant and the leader must return them to the sunnah.” He was asked, “Then what do you say about them?” He answered, “She has her dower which makes sex lawful. They are separated but not flogged. She completes her first ʿiddah and then does a second full ʿiddah of three menstrual cycles. Then he can propose to her if he wishes to do so.” ʿUmar heard that and he addressed the people and said, “People! Prefer ignorance to the Sunnah!””

At-Ṭabarī said, ‘There is no disagreement among fuqahā’ that if someone makes a marriage contract with a woman during her waiting period for another marriage, that marriage is invalid. The fact that ‘Umar and ‘Alī agreed that they are not subject to the ḥadd punishment indicates that an invalid marriage does not necessitate the ḥadd punishment. That is agreed upon if they are ignorant of the fact that it is forbidden, but there is disagreement when they do know about it.

They also disagree about whether she does an ‘iddah for both of them. This is the question about two ‘iddahs. The Madinans related from Mālīk that she completes the rest of the first ‘iddah and then starts a new one for the other. That is the position of al-Layth, al-Ḥasan ibn Ḥayy, ash-Shāfi‘ī, Aḥmad and Ishāq. It is also related from ‘Alī as we mentioned, and also from ‘Umar. Muḥammad ibn al-Qāsim and Ibn Wahb related from Mālīk that her ‘iddah for the second is enough from the day they are parted, whether by pregnancy, menstrual cycles or months. That is the view of ath-Thawrī, al-Awzā‘ī, and Abū Ḥanīfah. Their argument is the consensus that the first husband may not marry her in the rest of the waiting period and so that indicates that she is in the waiting period for the second husband. Were it not for that, he would have married her in her waiting period for his marriage. The people with the first view reply that that is not necessary and that, because the first husband refused to marry her in the rest of the waiting period, it is mandatory when it is followed by the waiting period for the second. These are two duties which she owes two husbands, just like rights and duties owed to other human beings. One does not diminish the other.

Mālīk transmitted from Ibn Shihāb from Sa‘īd ibn al-Musayyab and Sulaymān ibn Yasār that Ṭulayḥah al-Asadiyyah was married to Rashīd ath-Thaqafī. He divorced her and she remarried during her ‘iddah. ‘Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb beat her and beat her new husband with a scourge and separated them. Then ‘Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb said, ‘If any woman marries during her ‘iddah and the new husband has not consummated the marriage, separate them. Then she finishes her ‘iddah from her first husband and the new husband becomes one of the suitors. If he has consummated the marriage, separate them. Then she finishes her ‘iddah from her first husband and then observes another ‘iddah for the new husband and they are never united.’ Mālik added that Sa‘īd ibn al-Musayyab said, ‘She has her dower because sex was made lawful.’ Abū ‘Umar said, ‘This Ṭulayḥah is Ṭulayḥah bint ‘Ubaydullāh, the sister of Ṭalḥah ibn ‘Ubaydullāh at-Taymī. Some copies of the Muwattā’ in the transmission of Yaḥyā have Ṭulayḥah al-Asadiyyah. That is an ignorant error and I do not know of anyone who said that.’

When he said that he beat them with a scourge, it means as a punishment for committing something forbidden, which is marriage during the waiting period. Az-Zuhrī said, ‘I do not think that it reached the level of flogging.’ He said, ‘Abd al-Malik flogged both of them with forty lashes for that.’ He said, ‘Qabīṣah ibn Dhu’ayb was asked about that and said, “You should have been lighter and given them twenty!”’ Ibn Ḥabīb said about when a woman marries in the waiting period and then the new husband touches her, kisses her, winks or looks with a look of pleasure, then the couple should be punished as well as the walī, the two witnesses and anyone who knew that she was still in her ‘iddah. There is no punishment for any of them who did not know that. Ibn al-Mawwāz said that if they did that deliberately, the couple are flogged with the ḥadd punishment. It is possible that the position of Ibn Ḥabīb is about the one who knows about the ‘iddah. It is possible that he was ignorant of the prohibition and did not intend to commit something prohibited. That is the one who is merely punished. Accordingly, ‘Umar beat the woman and her husband with a scourge. The punishment and discipline for that is according to the circumstances of the one punished. The statement of Ibn al-Mawwāz can be taken to mean that they knew of the prohibition and committed what was forbidden out of boldness. Shaykh Abu-l-Qāsim said that these are two transmissions about doing it deliberately: one is that there is the ḥadd and the other that there is punishment and no ḥadd.

Know that Allah knows what is in yourselves, so beware of Him!

This is an extreme warning against falling into what is forbidden.

لَا جُنَاحَ عَلَيْكُمْ إِنْ طَلَقْتُمُ النِّسَاءَ مَا لَمْ تَمْسُوهُنَّ أَوْ تَفْرِضُوا لَهُنَّ
فَرِيضَةً وَمَتَّعُوهُنَّ عَلَى الْمَوْسِعِ قَدْرَهُ، وَعَلَى الْمُقْتِرِ قَدْرُهُ، مَتَاعًا
بِالْمَعْرُوفِ حَقًّا عَلَى الْمُحْسِنِينَ ﴿٥٦﴾

236 There is nothing wrong in your divorcing women before you have touched them or allotted a dower to them. But give them a gift – he who is wealthy according to his means and he who is less well off according to his means – a gift to be given with correctness and courtesy: a duty for all good-doers.

This is another of the rulings which deal with divorced women. It deals with removing any aspersion of wrongdoing from a man who divorces before the consummation of a marriage, whether or not a dower has been stipulated. So the Messenger of Allah ﷺ forbade marriage merely for the sake of gratification and sexual indulgence and instructed people to marry for the sake of protection and in order to obtain Allah’s reward, and with the intention of having a constant companion. The believers did not like divorcing before a marriage had been consummated, as they believed that it was disliked and so this āyah was revealed to remove their prejudice against it, since the basis of marriage lies in the good intention behind it. Some people said that ‘nothing wrong’ means that you should not ask for the return of the entire dower. You are only entitled to get back half of what has been allotted to her and you should give a gift to the woman if the amount of the dower has not been stipulated. It is said that when the command to pay the dower was confirmed in the Shari‘ah, it was thought that a dower was obligatory, either stipulated or appropriate. In this āyah the wrong was removed from someone who divorces before any dower has been stipulated. Some people have said that it refers to those who pronounce divorce during menstruation when the marriage has not been consummated since in that case the woman does not have to observe a waiting period.

There are four types of divorced women:

- Women in a consummated marriage with an allotted dower and Allah has mentioned before this āyah that the ruling in respect of their ‘iddah is three menstrual periods. They are not asked to return any of their dower.
- Women without an allotted dower whose marriage has not been consummated and this āyah is about them. They are not allotted a dower but Allah says that they should be given a gift. And it is made clear in Sūrat al-Aḥzāb (33) that a woman whose marriage has not been consummated and who is divorced has no ‘iddah.
- Women who have been allotted a dower whose marriage has not been consummated who will be mentioned after this āyah in 2:237.
- Women without a dower whose marriage has been consummated. They will be mentioned in Sūrat an-Nisā’ (4:24).

This āyah is about women divorced before either consummation or the allotment of a dower, and the next is about women who are divorced before consummation but after the allotment of dower. The first receives a gift and the second receives half of the dower because of the specification of the contract.

Allah divided divorced women into two groups: those with an allotted dower and those without. He indicated that tafiwīd marriage is permitted. This is a marriage in which the dower is not mentioned. It is not disputed and in it the woman is allotted a dower after the contract. If it is allotted, it is connected to the contract and permitted. If it is not allotted to her and there is a divorce, the consensus is that the dower is not obliged. Qāḍī Abū Bakr ibn al-‘Arabī said that. Al-Mahdawī related from Ḥammād ibn Abī Sulaymān that when a man divorces a wife without having consummated the marriage, and has not allotted her a dower, he is compelled to give half of a suitable dower. If the dower has been allotted after the marriage contract and before divorce, Abū Ḥanīfah said that it is not made half by divorce because it was not obliged by the contract. This is contrary to the literal meaning of the text of His words: ‘If you divorce them before you have touched them but have already allotted them a dower.’ (2:237) It is also contrary to analogy. The allotment after the contract is connected to the contract and so it is obliged to be halved by divorce. The basic position is that the allotment is connected to the contract.

Concerning what happens if death occurs before allotment, at-Tirmidhī mentioned that Ibn Mas‘ūd was asked about a man who married a woman without allotting her something and had not consummated the marriage before he died. Ibn Mas‘ūd said, ‘She receives the like dower of other women of her class, neither more nor less. She has to observe the ‘iddah and she inherits.’ Ma‘qil ibn Sinān al-Ashja‘ī said, ‘The Messenger of Allah ﷺ gave a similar decision about Barwa‘ bint Wāshiq, one of our women.’ Ibn Mas‘ūd was very happy to hear that. At-Tirmidhī said that it is a sound ḥasan ḥadīth. It is also related from him by another path of transmission. This was the normative practice among some of the people of knowledge among the Companions of the Prophet ﷺ and others. It is also the view of ath-Thawrī, Aḥmad and Iṣḥāq. Some of the people of knowledge among the Companions of the Prophet ﷺ, including ‘Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib, Zayd ibn Thābit, Ibn ‘Abbās and Ibn ‘Umar said that when a man marries a woman and does not consummate the marriage and has not allotted her a dower before he dies, then she inherits but has no dower and must observe ‘iddah. That is the position of ash-Shāfi‘ī who said, ‘If the ḥadīth of Barwa‘ bint Wāshiq is confirmed, it is argument for what is related from the Prophet ﷺ.’ It is related from ash-Shāfi‘ī that he retracted this position in Egypt and accepted the ḥadīth of Barwa‘ bint Wāshiq.

There is disagreement about the firmness of the ḥadīth of Barwa‘ bint Wāshiq. Qāḍī Abū Muḥammad ‘Abd al-Wahhāb said in his commentary on the Risālah of Ibn Abi Zayd: ‘The experts in ḥadīth and leaders of the people of knowledge reject the ḥadīth of Barwa‘ bint Wāshiq.’ Al-Wāqidī said, ‘This ḥadīth was situated in Madīnah and none of the scholars accept it.’ As we and Ibn al-Mundhir mentioned, at-Tirmidhī considered it to be sound. Ibn al-Mundhir said, ‘It is confirmed like the report of ‘Abdullāh ibn Mas‘ūd from the Messenger of Allah ﷺ. We say that.’ He mentioned that it is the view of Abū Thawr and the People of Opinion. A similar position to that of ‘Alī, Zayd, Ibn ‘Abbās and Ibn ‘Umar is mentioned from az-Zuhri, al-Awzā‘ī, Mālik and ash-Shāfi‘ī. There is a third position which is that the woman has no inheritance until she has a dower. Masrūq said that.

Part of the argument of Mālik, that a marriage which is ended before any allotment does not oblige a dower, is that its basis is divorce, but if the ḥadīth is sound, then the analogy opposing it is unsound. Abū Muḥammad ‘Abd al-Ḥamīd related from the School that which is in agreement with the ḥadīth. Praise be to Allah. Abū ‘Umar said, ‘The ḥadīth of Barwa‘ bint Wāshiq was related by ‘Abd ar-Razzāq from ath-Thawrī from Maṣṣūr from Ibrāhīm from ‘Alqamah from Ibn Mas‘ūd. It says in it: ‘Ma‘qil ibn Sinān stood up.’ Ibn Mahdī related from ath-Thawrī from Firās from ash-Sha‘bī from Masrūq that ‘Abdullāh said, ‘Ma‘qil ibn Yasār stood up’ I believe that what is correct is Ma‘qil ibn Sinān rather than Ma‘qil ibn Yasār because Ma‘qil ibn Yasār was a man of Muzaynah and this ḥadīth is about a woman of Ashja‘, not Muzaynah. That is how Abū Dāwud related it from ash-Sha‘bī from ‘Alqamah. He says in it: ‘Some people of Ashja‘.’ Ma‘qil ibn Sinān was killed in the Battle of al-Ḥarrah. A poet says:

The Anṣār weep for their leaders, and Ashja‘ weeps for Ma‘qil ibn Sinān.

In the phrase ‘before you have touched them’, mā means ‘which’. It means ‘If you have divorced women without touching them.’ The recitation of Nāfi‘, Ibn Kathīr, Abū ‘Amr, ‘Āṣim and Ibn ‘Āmir is ‘tamassūhunna’ and that of Ḥamzah and al-Kisā’ī is ‘tumāssūhunna’ from Form III because sexual intercourse needs the participation of both of them. The first reading also has an associative meaning. Abū ‘Alī preferred it because the verbs with this meaning normally are in Form I, but both readings are good. ‘Aw’ (‘or’) means ‘and’ here, meaning, ‘before you have touched them and have not allotted them.’

But give them a gift –

This means give them something they will enjoy having. Some, like ‘Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib, al-Ḥasan ibn Abī ‘I-Ḥasan, Sa‘īd ibn Jubayr, Abū Qilābah, az-Zuhrī, Qatādah, and aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk, take it as being mandatory. Others, such as Abū ‘Ubayd, Mālik ibn Anas and his people, Qāḍī Shurayḥ and others, see it as merely being a recommendation. The people with the first position take it as a command and those with the second view look at the words, ‘a duty for good-doers’ and ‘for all who are godfearing’ (2:241) and say that if it had been mandatory, it would have been made general to all people. The first view is more appropriate because of the universal nature of the command to give and connecting the gift to them by the particle of possession in the words: ‘Divorced women should receive maintenance.’ (2:241) That is more apparently an obligation than a recommendation. The second āyah stresses the fact that it is an obligation because everyone must have fear of Allah in respect of shirk and disobedience. Allah says: ‘guidance for the godfearing.’

There is disagreement about the pronoun ‘them’ and which women are meant. Ibn ‘Abbās, Ibn ‘Umar, Jābir ibn Zayd, al-Ḥasan, ash-Shāfi‘ī, Aḥmad, ‘Aṭā’, Ishāq and the People of Opinion say that a gift is mandatory for a woman divorced before consummation or the allotment of a dower and recommended for others. Mālik and his people said that it is recommended in every divorce even if the marriage was consummated. In the case of a woman whose marriage has been consummated and who has an allotted dower, she should receive her dower but no extra gift. Abū Thawr says she should receive a gift as well, as should every divorced woman. The people of knowledge say that in the case of a woman who has not been allotted a dower and whose marriage has not been consummated, she should only receive a gift. Az-Zuhrī said that the qāḍī decides it for her. Most people say that he does not decide it.

This consensus is about free women. If a slave-girl is divorced before allotment and consummation, then most say that she receives a gift. Al-Awzā‘ī and ath-Thawrī said that she receives no gift because she belongs to her master and he is not entitled to property in exchange for the harm to his property by divorce. As for the fixed school of Mālik, Ibn Sha‘bān said, ‘The gift is on account of the sorrow of divorce. That is why there is no gift before or after consummation for a woman parted by khul‘, freeing herself and li‘ān because in that instance she is the one who chose divorce.’ At-Tirmidhī, ‘Aṭā’ and an-Nakha‘ī said that the wife should receive a gift after khul‘. The People of Opinion said that a woman separated by li‘ān receives a gift. Ibn al-Qāsim said that there is no gift where an invalid marriage is concerned. Ibn al-Mawwāz said, ‘There is no gift in a marriage which becomes unsound after a sound contract, such as when one of the couple becomes the owner of the other.’ Ibn al-Qāsim said, ‘The basis of that is that Allah’s words: “Divorced women should receive maintenance/a gift” only apply to divorce, not invalidity.’ Ibn Wahb related from Mālik that a wife given a choice receives a gift which is not the case with a slave-girl who is freed while married to a slave. She has a choice about herself. Such a wife does not receive a gift. As for a free woman given a choice, or who is given authority [for divorce] or whose husband marries a slave-girl, and she chooses herself, in all such instances she receives a gift because the husband is the cause of the separation.

Mālik says that it is not specified whether the gift should be a little or a lot. People disagree about this. Ibn ‘Umar said that the minimum is about thirty dirhams. Ibn ‘Abbās said, ‘The largest gift is a servant, then clothes, then maintenance.’ ‘Aṭā’ said that a medium-sized gift is a dress, veil (khimār) and mantle. Abū Ḥanīfah said, ‘That is the minimum it should be.’ Ibn Muḥayriz said that anyone receiving a state pension should give thirty dinars and a slave should also give a gift. Al-Ḥasan says that it is according to ability and continued, ‘One gives a servant, another gives clothes, another a garment and another money.’ That is what Mālik said because the āyah says ‘according to his means’ and there is no amount or limit specified. Al-Ḥasan ibn ‘Alī gave a gift of 20,000 and skins full of honey. Shurayḥ gave a gift of 50,000 dirhams.

It is said that one considers the circumstances of the woman as well. Some Shāfi‘īs said that. They said, ‘If we were consider the state of the man alone, and then if he were to marry two women, one of whom is noble and the other lowly and divorce both before consummation without naming any dower, would they be equal in the gift, the lowly receiving the same as the noble woman? This is contrary to the words of Allah “...a gift to be given with correctness.” That would oblige that when a wealthy man marries a lowly woman, he is like her because if he divorces her before consummation and allotting a dower, he is obliged to give a gift commensurate with his state and a dower suitable for someone like her. According to this, the gift would be many times greater than the suitable dower and so she would be entitled before consummation many times more than what she would be entitled to afterwards in the form of a suitable dower which is in exchange for sexual intercourse.’ The People of Opinion and others say that the gift to a woman divorced before consummation is half of a suitable dower and nothing else, because a suitable dower becomes due by the contract and the gift is part of the suitable dower. Therefore it is obliged for her as the half of the specified dower is obliged when she is divorced before consummation. This is refuted by Allah’s words: ‘...he who is wealthy according to his means, and he who is less well off according to his means.’ This is evidence which refutes a limit. Allah knows the realities of all matters.

Ath-Tha’labī mentioned a ḥadīth and said that the words: ‘There is nothing wrong in your divorcing women...’ were revealed about a man of the Anṣār who married a woman of the Banū Ḥanīfah without specifying a dower for her. He divorced her before touching her and the āyah was revealed. The Prophet ﷺ said, ‘Give her a gift, even if it is your hat.’ Ad-Dāraqūṭnī related that Suwayd ibn Ghafalah said, “Ā’ishah al-Khath‘amiyyah was married to al-Ḥasan ibn ‘Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib. When ‘Alī was struck down and allegiance was given to al-Ḥasan as the caliph, she said, “Congratulations on the caliphate, Amīr al-Mu’minīn!” He said, “‘Alī is murdered and you make a show of gloating! Go, you are divorced three times.” She wrapped herself in her garments and waited until her ‘iddah was over. He sent her 10,000 as a gift along with the rest of her dower. She said: “A scant gift from a parting lover!” When he heard what she had said, he wept and said, “If it had not been that I heard my grandfather (or my father told me that he heard my grandfather) say, ‘If a man divorces his wife three times finally or three times over cycles, she is not lawful to him until she has married another husband,’ I would have taken her back.” One variant has: ‘When the messenger informed him, he wept and said, “If I had not divorced her finally, I would have taken her back. But I heard the Messenger of Allah ﷺ say, ‘If a man divorces his wife three times with a divorce in each period of purity, or a divorce at the beginning of each month, or three times all at once, she is not lawful to him until she has married another husband.’”’

If someone is ignorant about the need to give a gift, he should still give it to his divorced wife, even if years have passed and she has since married someone else, or to her heirs if she has died. Ibn al-Mawwāz related that from Ibn al-Qāsim. Aṣḡbagħ said that he does not owe anything if she has died because it is solace for the wife on account of being divorced and that has occurred. The reasoning behind the first is that it is a right confirmed against him and it moves from her to her heirs, as is the case with other rights. This notes its obligatory nature in the school. Allah knows best.

he who is wealthy according to his means and he who is less well off according to his means –

This is also taken as evidence of the mandatory nature of the gift. Most recite ‘al-mūsi’, who is someone in a wealthy situation. One says, ‘he spends according to his means (qadaruhu)’. Ibn Kathīr, Nāfi‘, Abū ‘Amr and ‘Āṣim in the transmission of Abū Bakr recite ‘qadruhu’ in both places, while Ibn ‘Āmir, Ḥamzah, al-Kisā’ī and ‘Āṣim in the variant of Ḥafṣ recite ‘qadaruhu’. Abu-l-Ḥasan al-Akhfash said that they mean the same. Abū Zayd also related that and that is used elsewhere in the Qur’an. ‘Muqtir’ is someone with little property.

a gift to be given with correctness and courtesy:

The words ‘with correctness and courtesy’ here mean with moderation according to the Shari‘ah.

This is further evidence for the mandatory nature of the gift. The verb haqqa means to decide and oblige. The word ‘duty’ stresses it. It is also said that this means that it is for the believers because only they can be called ‘godfearing’ and ‘good-doers’. All people are commanded to do good and be godfearing. They do good by performing the obligations of Allah and avoiding actions in which they disobey Him so that they do not enter the Fire. So it is obliged for all people to do good and be godfearing.

237 If you divorce them before you have touched them but have already allotted them a dower, they should have half the amount which you allotted, unless they forgo it or the one in charge of the marriage contract forgoes it. To forgo it is closer to taqwā. Do not forget to show generosity to one another. Allah sees what you do.

If you divorce them before you have touched them but have already allotted them a dower,

People disagree about this āyah. One group, including Mālik and others, says that it removes the ruling of the gift in the previous āyah from any woman who is divorced after a dower has been allotted. Sa‘īd ibn al-Musayyab said that this āyah abrogates the āyah in Sūrat al-Aḥzāb (33:49) because it includes giving a gift to all wives whose marriage has not been consummated. Qatādah says that it abrogates the āyah preceding it. I say that the positions of Sa‘īd and Qatādah are debatable since the preconditions for abrogation do not exist and it is possible for it to coexist with the other āyahs. Ibn al-Qāsim said in the Mudawwanah, ‘The gift is for every divorced woman in 2:241 and for any woman whose marriage has not been consummated in the āyah in Sūrat al-Aḥzāb.’ So Allah excluded a woman who has been allotted a dower by this āyah. Here it is confirmed that she has half of what has been allotted. One group of scholars, including Abū Thawr, say that the command to give a gift to every divorced woman is universal and that this āyah makes it clear that a woman who has had a dower allotted to her receives half of it and the āyah does not mean that the gift is cancelled. Rather she receives a gift as well as half the dower.

they should have half the amount which you allotted,

This is mandatory. The consensus is that the allotted dower is divided equally between the man and the woman. ‘Half’ is the portion of something divided in two.

If a husband allots his wife a dower and then divorces her before consummation, the dower being in her possession, Mālik says that the growth of every property or slave given to her as a dower is shared between them, just as any decrease or destruction is shared between them. The woman owes nothing of it. If he gives her gold or silver and she uses it to purchase a slave or house, or she uses it to buy a share of something or buys something else like perfume, kitchen utensils or something else which she uses for her outfitting and putting things in order for remaining with him, all of that is in the position of the dower given to her and they both share in any growth or decrease in it. If he divorces her before consummation, she only keeps half of it. She is indebted to him for half of what she took from him. If she bought something personal with some or part of it, then she can be in debt to him for half of the dower that she took from him. That is also the case if she buys a slave or a house with a thousand that he gave her as a dower. If he then divorces her before consummation: she owes him half of the thousand.

There is no disagreement that if a man consummates his marriage and then dies having named something for her, she receives the total that he named for her as well as her share of the inheritance and she must observe ‘iddah.

They disagree about a man who has been alone with a woman but has not had sexual intercourse with her before parting from her. The Kufans and Mālik say that he owes the total dower and she must observe ‘iddah’ based on the report of Ibn Mas‘ūd who said, ‘The Rightly-guided Caliphs judged that when someone closes the door or lowers the curtain, she inherits and must observe ‘iddah.’ It is related marfū‘ and ad-Dāraquṭnī transmitted it. It will be mentioned in an-Nisā’. Ash-Shāfi‘ī did not oblige a full dower and says that she does not have to observe ‘iddah’ if there was no consummation. That is based on the apparent text of the Qur’an. Shurayḥ said, ‘I did not hear Allah mention a door or a curtain in His Book. When he claims that he has not touched her, then she receives half the dower. That is the position of Ibn ‘Abbās.’ What our scholars say about this will be mentioned in an-Nisā’ (4:21).

This is forgoing the half they are due because of the marriage. This refers to women who have charge of their own affairs. Allah allowed them to forgo it after it has become mandatory since it is solely their due and they can see that it is carried out or they can forgo it as they like. Women in charge of their own affairs are those who are adult, sane and sensible. Ibn ‘Abbās and a group of fuqahā’ and Tābi‘ūn said that it is permitted for a virgin who does not have a walī to do that. Saḥnūn related it in the Mudawwanah from other than Ibn al-Qāsim after Ibn al-Qāsim mentioned that she was not permitted to set aside the half. If she is a ward of someone or a child, it is not permitted for her to cancel the half. There is no disagreement about that as far as I know.

People disagree about who is meant by this. Ad-Dāraquṭnī related that Jubayr ibn Muṭ‘im married a woman from the Banū Naṣr and divorced her before consummation. He sent her the full dower and said, ‘I am entitled to forgo it. Allah says: “...unless they forgo it, or the one in charge of the marriage contract forgoes it.” Therefore I am entitled to forgo it.’ He interpreted the āyah as referring to himself in every situation before and after divorce, namely the marriage contract, since he could act on it or not. Ad-Dāraqūṭnī also related marfū‘ from Qutaybah ibn Sa‘īd from Ibn Lahī‘ah from ‘Amr ibn Shu‘ayb from his father from his grandfather that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘The walī of the marriage contract is the husband.’ This also comes from ‘Alī, Ibn ‘Abbās, Sa‘īd ibn al-Musayyab and Shurayḥ. He said that that was stated by Nāfi‘ ibn Jubayr, Muḥammad ibn Ka‘b, Ṭāwūs, Mujāhid, ash-Sha‘bī and Sa‘īd ibn Jubayr. That is also true of Mujāhid and ath-Thawrī. Abū Ḥanīfah preferred it, and it is the sound view from ash-Shafi‘ī. They all say that a guardian has no control over any of his ward’s dower as there is a consensus that it would not be permitted for him to absolve the husband of all the dower if there were no divorce. So the same applies if there is. They agree that a guardian does not have the power to give away any of his ward’s property, and the dower is her property. They agree that guardians cannot absolve the husband, no matter whether they are nephews, uncles or fathers. Allah knows best.

Some of them say that a guardian has that right. Ad-Dāraqūṭnī also has a report from Ibn ‘Abbās regarding that, and it is the position of Ibrāhīm, ‘Alqamah and al-Ḥasan, and others added ‘Ikrimah, Ṭāwūs, ‘Aṭā’, Abu-z-Zinād, Zayd ibn Aslam, Rabī‘ah, Muḥammad ibn Ka‘b, Ibn Shihāb, al-Aswad ibn Yazīd, ash-Sha‘bī, Qatādah and Mālīk, and it was the old position of ash-Shāfi‘ī. According to them it is permitted for a father to forgo half of the dower of his virgin daughter if she is divorced before the consummation of her marriage whether or not she has reached the age of menstruation. ‘Īsā ibn Dīnār said, ‘She does not have recourse to any of it from her father.’

The evidence that it is the walī that is meant is found in the words of Allah at the beginning of the āyah: ‘If you divorce them before you have touched them but have already allotted them a dowry, they should have half the amount you allotted.' So He mentioned the husbands and addressed this to them. Then He says, '...unless they forgo it,' and mentioned women. Then a third group are mentioned: '...or the one in charge of the marriage contract forgoes it.' This does not refer to the previously mentioned husband unless no one but him exists. But the guardian exists and so he is the one who is meant. Makkī said that and Ibn al-'Arabī mentioned it. Furthermore, Allah says: '...unless they forgo it,' and it is known that a minor girl is not in a position to forgo. A young girl, and one who is a ward, are not in a position to forgo and so Allah made the two categories clear. He said: '...unless they forgo' when they are entitled to do that: '...or the one in charge of the marriage contract,' who is the walī: '...forgoes it' because he is in charge of the matter.

That is what is related by Ibn Wahb, Ashhab, Ibn 'Abd al-Ḥakam and Ibn al-Qāsim from Mālik about the father of a virgin girl and the master of a slave-girl. The walī is permitted to forgo when he is one of the appropriate people. He is not permitted to forgo if he is a simpleton.

If it is said that we do not agree that it is the walī, but rather it is the husband. He is more entitled to this title because he has more control over the contract than the walī, as was already stated, then we reply that we do not accept that the husband has more control over the contract than the father of a virgin girl. The father of the virgin has control of it, rather than the husband, because the object of the contract is the dowry of the virgin. The husband does not have the right to contract that, but rather it is the father who does. Shurayḥ allowed the brother to forgo half the dowry. That is what 'Ikrimah said: 'The one who makes the contract of marriage between them can forgo, whether he is an uncle, father or brother, even she dislikes it.'

To forgo it is closer to taqwā. Do not forget to show generosity to one another.

This is addressed to both men and women according to Ibn ‘Abbās. Mujāhid said, ‘What is best is for a man to forgo all the dower or for a woman to forgo half of it.’

Allah sees what you do.

This is a promise to the good-doer and warning for the one who does not do good. Nothing you do is hidden from Allah.

حَافِظُوا عَلَى الصَّلَوَاتِ وَالصَّلَاةِ الْوُسْطَىٰ وَقَوْمُوا لِلَّهِ قَنِينًا ﴿٢٣٨﴾

238 Safeguard the prayer – especially the middle one.

Safeguard the prayer – especially the middle one.

The command is in the plural, directed at the entire Community. The āyah is a command to persevere in performing the prayers at their correct times with all their preconditions. Safeguarding implies constancy in a thing and perseverance in it. The ‘middle’ of something is the best and most balanced part of it. Allah uses the term in another place in the same way when He says: In this way We have made you a middlemost community.’ (2:143). A desert Arab praised the Prophet ﷺ:

O midmost of all people in praise!

Noblest of people in mother and father!

The middle prayer is singled out for mention because it is in the middle of all the prayers, to honour it. An example of this is found in Allah’s words: When We made a covenant with all the Prophets – with you and with Nūh’ a(33:7) and: In them are fruits and date-palms and pomegranates.’ (55:68) There are various positions regarding what constitutes the middle prayer:

– One is that it is Zuhr because it is in the middle of day, according to the sound position that the day starts from dawn. We begin with Zuhr because it is the first prayer prayed in Islam. Those who said that it is the middle prayer include Zayd ibn Thābit, Abū Sa‘īd al-Khudrī, ‘Abdullāh ibn ‘Umar and ‘Ā’ishah ﷺ. One thing that indicates that it is the middle prayer is what ‘Ā’ishah and Ḥafṣah said when they recited the āyah and said, ‘especially the middle one and the ‘Aṣr prayer.’ It is related that it is harder for the Muslims because it comes at a time of when it is very hot and they are distracted from it by work in their property. Abū Dāwud reports from Zayd: ‘The Prophet ﷺ used to pray Zuhr at midday and he did not pray any prayer which was harder for the Companions of the Prophet ﷺ. Then: “Safeguard the prayer – especially the middle one...” was revealed.’ He said that there are two prayers before it and two prayers after it. Mālik related in the Muwattā’ and Abū Dāwud aṭ-Ṭayālīsī in the Musnad that Zayd ibn Thābit said, ‘The middle prayer is Zuhr.’ Aṭ-Ṭayālīsī added, ‘The Prophet ﷺ used to pray it at midday.’

– It is said to be ‘Aṣr because the two prayers of the day are before it and the two prayers of the night after it. An-Naḥḥās said, ‘Better than this is the argument that it is called “middle” because it is between two prayers. One of them is the first to be made obligatory and the other was the second to be made obligatory. Among those who said this were ‘Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib, Ibn ‘Abbās, Ibn ‘Umar, Abū Hurayrah, and Abū Sa‘īd al-Khudrī. This view is the one preferred by Abū Ḥanīfah and his people and ash-Shāfi‘ī and most of the traditionists. It was the view of ‘Abd al-Malik ibn Ḥabīb and preferred by Ibn al-‘Arabī in al-Qabas. In his tafsīr, Ibn ‘Aṭīyyah said, ‘It is the position of the majority of people, and I also say that.’ Hadiths transmitted by Muslim and others are offered as evidence for this position. Ibn Mas‘ūd reported that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘The middle prayer is the ‘Aṣr prayer.’ At-Tirmidhī transmitted it and said that it is a sound ḥasan ḥadīth. We dealt with more of this in al-Qabas, a commentary on the Muwattā’ of Mālik ibn Anas.

– It is said to be Maghrib. Qubayṣah ibn Abī Dhu‘ayb said that as well as others. Their evidence is that it is middle in the number of rak'ahs neither more nor less and is not shortened on a journey, and the Prophet ﷺ did not delay it or bring it forward. Prayers are aloud after it and silent before it. 'Ā'ishah reported that he ﷺ said, 'The best of prayers in the sight of Allah is the Maghrib prayer. It is not decreased for a traveller or someone who is resident. Allah began the night prayers with it and sealed the day prayers with it. If someone prays Maghrib and prays two rak'ahs after it, Allah will built him a castle in the Garden. If someone prays four rak'ahs after it, Allah will forgive him the wrong actions of twenty years (or forty years).'

– It is said to be Ishā' because it is between two prayers which may not be shortened and it comes at the time of sleep and it is recommended to delay it, so that makes it difficult to safeguard.

– It is said to be Ṣubḥ, because the two night prayers before it are those in which the prayer is said out loud and the two daytime prayers after it are silent and because it is a time when people are asleep and rising for it is hard in the winter because of the cold and in the summer because the night is short. Those who said that it was Ṣubḥ include 'Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib and 'Abdullāh ibn 'Abbās. It is also transmitted in the Muwattā' and at-Tirmidhī reports it from Ibn 'Umar and Ibn 'Abbās in commentary. It is related from Jābir ibn 'Abdullāh. It is the position of Mālik and his people and ash-Shāfi'ī inclined to it according to al-Qushayrī.

The sound report from 'Alī is that it is 'Asr which is related from him by a sound known path. For evidence that it is Ṣubḥ, they cite, 'Stand in obedience to Him,' i.e. in it, and there is no prayer in which al-qunūt (standing in obedience) is prescribed except Ṣubḥ. Abū Rajā' said, 'Ibn 'Abbās led us in the morning prayer in Basra and did the qunūt in it before rukū'. He raised his hands and when he finished, he said, 'This is the middle prayer in which Allah commanded us to stand in obedience.' Anas said, 'The Prophet ﷺ did the qunūt in the

– Some say that it refers to the Jumu‘ah prayer because one is encouraged to go to it and listen to the khutbah in it and it is made a festival. Ibn Ḥabīb and Makkī mentioned that. Muslim related from ‘Abdullāh that the Prophet ﷺ said about some people who failed to come to Jumu‘ah, ‘I thought about commanding a man to lead the people in the prayer and then burning the houses of some men who failed to come to Jumu‘ah.’

– Ṣubḥ and ‘Aṣr together. Shaykh Abū Bakr al-Abharī said that his evidence for that is found in the words of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ, ‘The angels of the night and the angels of the day succeed one another in overseeing you.’ Abū Hurayrah related it. Jarīr ibn ‘Abdullāh said, ‘We were sitting with the Prophet ﷺ when he looked at the full moon and said, “You will see your Lord as you see this moon without any doubt that you are seeing Him. If you are able not to miss the prayer before sunrise and before sunset, do so.”’ He means ‘Aṣr and Fajr. Then Jarīr recited, ‘Glorify your Lord with praise before the rising of the sun and before its setting.’ (20:130) ‘Umārah ibn Ru‘aybah related that he heard the Messenger of Allah ﷺ say, ‘Someone who prayed before the rising of the sun and before its setting will not enter the Fire.’ It means ‘Aṣr and Fajr. The Prophet ﷺ also said, ‘Whoever prays the two cool ones will enter the Garden.’ It is confirmed in Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim and elsewhere. He called them that because they are done in times of coolness.

– ‘Ishā’ and Ṣubḥ. Abu-d-Darda’ said in his final illness. ‘Listen and convey to your descendants: safeguard these two prayers (i.e. in the group): ‘Ishā’ and Ṣubḥ. If you had known what was in them, you would have come to them, even crawling on your hands and knees.’ ‘Umar and ‘Uthmān said that. The imams related that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘If you had known what was in ‘Ishā’ and Ṣubḥ, you would have come to them, even crawling.’ He said that they are the hardest prayers for hypocrites. It makes the one who prays Ṣubḥ in the group rise at night and ʿIshāʾ is in the middle of the night. Mālik mentioned it mawqūf, stopping at ʿUthmān and Muslim has it marfūʿ. Abū Dāwud and at-Tirmidhī transmitted that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘Whoever attends ʿIshāʾ in the group, it is as if he prayed half the night. Whoever prays ʿIshāʾ and Fajr in the group, it is as if he had prayed the entire night.’ This is contrary to what Mālik and Muslim related.

– The five prayers as a group. Muʿādh ibn Jabal said that. That is because ‘Safeguard the prayer’ includes the obligatory and the supererogatory. Then he singles out the obligatory.

– It is unspecified. Nāfiʿ quoted Ibn ʿUmar as saying that. Ar-Rabīʿ ibn Khaytham said that. Allah concealed it among the five prayers as He concealed the Night of Power in Ramadan, the time of acceptance on the day of Jumuʿah and the times of the night when supplication is accepted so that people will pray at night in the darkness to converse with the Knower of secrets. Evidence for the validity of its being undefined and not specified is found in what Muslim related in the Ṣaḥīḥ at the end of the chapter where al-Barāʾ ibn ʿAzib said, “‘Safeguard the prayer – especially ʿAṣr’” was revealed and we recited it for as long as Allah wished and then Allah abrogated it and said, “Safeguard the prayer – especially the middle one.” A man asked, ‘So it is the ʿAṣr prayer?’ Al-Barāʾ said, ‘I have informed you of how it was revealed and how Allah abrogated it. Allah knows best.’ This implies that after it was specified, its specification was abrogated and made unknown. Allah knows best. This is what Muslim preferred because he puts it at the end of the chapter. More than one of the later scholars said that it is sound, Allah willing, because of the contradictory evidence and lack of preference. All that is left, then, is to persevere in all of them and perform them at their times.

of the position of those who claim that the words ‘and the ‘Aṣr prayer’ in the ḥadīth of Yūnus, the freedman of ‘Ā’ishah, where she told him to write out the Qur’an for her were actually part of the Qur’an. Our scholars said that it is like a commentary from the Prophet ﷺ as indicated by the ḥadīth of ‘Amr ibn Rāfi’: ‘Ḥafṣah told me to write out the Qur’an for her. Part of what she dictated to me was: “Safeguard the prayer – especially the middle one (which is ‘Aṣr.) Stand in obedience to Allah.” She said, “That is how I heard the Messenger of Allah ﷺ recite it.” So her words about ‘Aṣr indicate that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ explained the middle prayer as being ‘Aṣr. Nāfi’ related ‘and the ‘Aṣr prayer’ from ‘Ā’ishah and from Ḥafṣah, but without ‘and’. Abū Bakr al-Anbārī said, ‘This extra word indicates that it is false, and that what is in the copy of the community of Muslims is sound.’

There is another argument which is that if someone says, ‘the middle prayer and the ‘Aṣr prayer,’ he makes the ‘middle prayer’ other than ‘Aṣr. This is refuted by the ḥadīth of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ that is related by ‘Abdullāh. He said, ‘On the Day of the Confederates, the idolaters kept the Messenger of Allah ﷺ from the ‘Aṣr prayer until the sun was yellow. The Messenger of Allah said, ‘They have kept me from the middle prayer. May Allah fill their bellies and graves with fire!’

‘The middle prayer’ is evidence that the odd number is mandatory because the Muslims agreed that the number of obligatory prayers is less than seven and more than three, and there is only five between seven and three. Pairs have no ‘middle’ and so it is confirmed that the number is five. We find in the ḥadīth of the Night Journey: ‘They are five and they are fifty. The word is not changed with Me.’

Stand in obedience to Allah.

This means in the prayer. People disagree about the meaning of the word qānītīn. Ash-Sha‘bī said that it means ‘in obedience’. Jābir ibn Zayd, ‘Aṭā’ and Sa‘īd ibn Jubayr said that. Aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk said, ‘Every use of the word qanūt in the Qur’an refers to obedience.’ Abū Sa‘īd said, quoting the Prophet ﷺ, that the people of every dīn will stand as rebels on the Day of Rising, but this Community will be told, ‘Stand in obedience to Allah.’ Mujāhid said that it means ‘in humility’. Qunūt means long bowing, humility, and lowering the eye. Ar-Rabī‘ said that qunūt means long bowing. Ibn ‘Umar said that and he recited: ‘...he who spends the night hours in prayer (qānīt), prostrating and standing up?’ (39:9) The Prophet ﷺ said, ‘The best prayer is the long qunūt.’ Muslim and others transmitted it. A poet said:

Obedient (qānītan) to Allah, calling on his Lord and intentionally withdrawing from people.

Ibn ‘Abbās said that qānīṭīn means calling or supplicating, and it is used with that meaning in the ḥadīth: ‘The Prophet ﷺ did the qanūt for a month, invoking against Ri‘l and Dhakwān.’ Some people said that it means to supplicate. Other people said that it means to stand for a long time. As-Suddī said that it means to be silent, and his evidence is that the āyah was revealed to forbid speaking in the prayer which was permitted at the beginning of Islam. This is sound based on Muslim and others relating that ‘Abdullāh ibn Mas‘ūd said, ‘We used to greet the Messenger of Allah ﷺ while he was praying and he would reply to us. When we returned from the Negus, we greeted him and he did not reply to us. We said, “Messenger of Allah, we used to greet you during the prayer and you would reply to us.” He answered, “One is occupied in the prayer.”’ It is related that Zayd ibn Arqam said, ‘We used to speak in the prayer and a man would speak to the man at his side until it was revealed: “Stand in obedience to Allah.” So we were commanded to be silent and forbidden to speak.’

It is said that the linguistic root means to be constant in a thing. Since that is the linguistic root in language, it is permitted to describe someone who is constant in obedience as ‘qānīt’. That same is true about someone who stands long in the prayer, recitation, and supplication in the prayer, or has long-standing humility and silence. All of these are aspects of the idea of qunūt.

Abū ‘Umar said, ‘All Muslims agree that deliberately speaking in the prayer while knowing that one is in the prayer, when it is not to put the prayer right, invalidates the prayer. Al-Awzā’ī’s position that when one speaks to revive a person or other important matters, the prayer is not invalidated by that, is logically weak since Allah says: “Stand in obedience to Allah,” and Zayd ibn Arqam said, “We used to speak in the prayer until Allah revealed: ‘Stand in obedience to Allah.’” Ibn Mas‘ūd said that he heard the Messenger of Allah ﷺ say, ‘Allah introduced that you should not speak in the prayer.’ This is when it is not a major matter which obliges that one stop the prayer and for which one must start anew. When someone does stop the prayer because of the excellence of saving a person’s life, or on account of property or something similar, he should start the prayer again and not build on what he has done. This is the sound position regarding the question, Allah willing.

They disagree about someone who speaks out of forgetfulness. Mālik, ash-Shāfi‘ī and their people believe that speaking in the prayer out of forgetfulness does not invalidate it. Mālik, however, said, ‘The prayer is not spoiled by deliberately speaking in it when that is about the prayer and putting it right.’ That is the view of Rabī‘ah and Ibn al-Qāsim. Saḥnūn related from Ibn al-Qāsim that Mālik mentioned the case when an imam leads the people in prayer for two rak‘ahs and says the salām out of forgetfulness and they say, ‘Subḥānallāh,’ but he does not understand. So one of the men praying behind him in the prayer says, ‘You have not finished! Finish the prayer!’ and he turns to the people and asks, ‘Is he telling the truth?’ and they say, ‘Yes.’ The imam leads them in the rest of the prayer and both those who spoke and those who did not finish the prayer with him owe nothing. In doing that they are doing what the Prophet ﷺ did on the day Dhu-l-Yadayn spoke in the prayer. This is the position of Ibn al-Qāsim in the Mudawwanah and he related it from Mālik. It is the well known position of Mālik's school. Ismā'īl ibn Ishāq imitated it and cited it as evidence in his book in which he refutes Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥasan. Al-Ḥārith ibn Miskīn said, 'All of Mālik's adherents take a different position to that of Mālik in the question of Dhu-l-Yadayn with the sole exception of Ibn al-Qāsim who took Mālik's position.

Others rejected that, saying that that took place at the beginning of Islam. Now that people know their prayer, whoever speaks in it must repeat it. That is the position of the Iraqis: Abū Ḥanīfah and his people and ath-Thawrī. They believe that speaking in it makes it unsound in every instance, whether that is deliberate or out of forgetfulness and whether it is about the prayer or something else. That is the view of Ibrāhīm an-Nakha'ī, 'Aṭā', al-Ḥasan, Ḥammād ibn Abī Sulaymān and Qatādah. The people of Abū Ḥanīfah claimed that this ḥadīth from Abū Hurayrah about Dhu-l-Yadayn is abrogated by the ḥadīth of Ibn Mas'ūd and Zayd ibn Arqam. They said that Abū Hurayrah became a Muslim later and he has the ḥadīth of Dhu-l-Yadayn mursal as he has another ḥadīth mursal: 'If Fajr catches someone in janābah, he has no fast.' They said that he has many mursal ḥadīths.

'Alī ibn Ziyād mentioned that Abū Qurrah heard Mālik say, 'When a man speaks in the prayer, it is recommended for him to repeat it and not build on what he has already done.' He said, 'Mālik said to us, "One day the Messenger of Allah ﷺ spoke to his Companions because they thought that the prayer had been shortened. No one is permitted to do that today.'" Sahnūn related from Ibn al-Qāsim about a man who prayed alone and thought that he had finished four rak'ahs and a man at his side said, 'You have only prayed three.' The man turned to another and asked, 'Is what he said true?' 'Yes,' was the answer. He said that his prayer was spoiled and that he should not have spoken nor looked at him. Abū ‘Umar said, ‘Regarding this question, they differentiated between an imam with a group and someone praying alone. They permitted speech about the prayer for the imam and those with him, but not for someone praying alone. Other people took Ibn al-Qāsim’s answer to refer to the person praying alone and to the imam and those with him, based on the disagreement about what he said about using the ḥadīth of Dhu-l-Yadayn as the position of Mālik on that differed.’

Ash-Shāfi‘ī and his people said that whoever speaks deliberately, knowing that he is praying, should not complete the prayer and he renders the prayer invalid. If he speaks out of forgetfulness, or speaks thinking that he is not in the prayer because he has finished it, he builds on what he has already done.

The position of Aḥmad varies regarding this matter. Al-Athram mentioned that he said, ‘What a person says in his prayer to put the prayer right does not invalidate his prayer. If he speaks for any other reason, it is invalidated.’ This is the well-known view of Mālik. Al-Khiraqī mentioned that Aḥmad’s view is that if someone speaks deliberately or out of forgetfulness, his prayer is invalid, with the exception of the imam who can speak to put the prayer right in which case his prayer is not invalidated.

Among Mālik’s adherents, with the exception of Saḥnūn, if someone says the salām after two ra‘ahs in a four ra‘ah prayer, his words do not invalidate the prayer. If he says something else, then the prayer is invalidated. What is, in fact, sound is what Mālik believed in his well-known position, holding to the ḥadīth and taking the basic universal principles about violation of rulings and the generality of the Shari‘ah and removing what is imagined of its being specific when there is no proof of that being the case. If someone were to say that the words spoken are about the prayer and forgetfulness, the Prophet ﷺ told them, ‘Saying “Subḥanallāh” is for men and clapping for women.’ So why did not they not say ‘Subḥanallāh’? The answer is that it is possible that at that time it was not their custom, and if it is as you have said, they did not say ‘Subḥanallāh’ because they thought that the prayer had been shortened. That comes in the ḥadīth: ‘People went out quickly, saying, “Has the prayer been shortened.”’ That required speech. Allah knows best.

Some of those who disagree said that the words of Abū Hurayrah, ‘The Messenger of Allah ﷺ led us in the prayer’ can mean that he led the Muslims while he [Abū Hurayrah] was not one of them, as is seen in what is related from an-Nazzāl ibn Sabrah who said, ‘The Messenger of Allah ﷺ said to us, “We and you used to be called the Banū ‘Abd Manāf. Today you are the Banū ‘Abdullāh and we are the Banū ‘Abdullāh.’ By that he meant that he said to his people. This view is unlikely. It is not permitted to say, ‘He led us in the prayer’ when at that time he was an unbeliever and not one of the people of the prayer, and so that is a lie. In the ḥadīth of an-Nazzāl, the speaker was one of the people and heard what he heard from the Messenger of Allah ﷺ. As for what the Ḥanafis claim of it being abrogated and being mursal, our scholars and others, especially Ḥāfiẓ Abū ‘Umar ibn ‘Abd al-Barr in at-Tamhīd, answered their position and refuted it. He mentioned that Abū Hurayrah became Muslim in the year of Khaybar and came to Madīnah that year. He was the Companion of the Prophet ﷺ for four years and was present for the incident of Dhu-l-Yadayn. That was not before Badr as they claim and Dhu-l-Yadayn was killed at Badr. He said that Abū Hurayrah being present on the day of the incident with Dhu-l-Yadayn is preserved by trustworthy transmitters, Qunūt can mean ‘standing’. It is one of its possible meanings as mentioned by Abū Bakr ibn al-Anbārī. The community agree that standing in the obligatory prayer is mandatory for every healthy person who is able to stand, whether praying alone or as imam. The Prophet ﷺ said, ‘The imam is appointed to be followed. When he prays standing, pray standing.’ The imams transmitted the ḥadīth. It clarifies the āyah.

They disagree about whether a healthy person should pray sitting down when he prays behind a sick imam who cannot stand. A group of scholars allow that, indeed the majority of them, based on the words of the Prophet ﷺ about the imam: ‘When he prays sitting, then all pray sitting.’ This is the sound position regarding this matter as we will soon explain, Allah willing. One group of scholars allow someone to pray standing behind a sick imam because each is performing his obligation according to his ability in imitation of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ who prayed sitting in his final illness while Abū Bakr was standing beside him, following his prayer and the people were standing behind him. He did not indicate to them or Abū Bakr to sit. He completed the prayer with them sitting while they were standing. It is known that that was after he fell from his horse and it is known that the later action abrogates the earlier one

Abū ‘Umar said, ‘Among those who took this position and argued for it were ash-Shāfi‘ī and Dāwud ibn ‘Alī. It is transmitted by al-Walīd ibn Muslim from Mālik. He said, ‘I prefer someone to stand beside him to inform the people in the prayer.’ This is an unusual (gharīb) transmission from Mālik. One group of the people of Madīnah and others said that, and it is sound, Allah willing, because it was the last prayer that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ prayed. What is well-known from Mālik is that someone sitting does not lead people standing in the prayer. If he leads them sitting, then both his prayer and their prayer is invalid because the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘After me, no one should lead the prayer sitting down.’ He said that if the imam is ill, the prayer of the imam is complete and the prayer of those following him is spoiled. He said, ‘If someone prays sitting down and is not ill, he must repeat the prayer.’ This is the transmission of Abū Muṣ‘ab from Mālik in the Mukhtaṣar. So someone who prays sitting must repeat the prayer whether that is within the time or after it. It is related from Mālik that they only have to repeat it if it is within the time. Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥasan has a similar position in this to the well-known position of Mālik. He argued for his position and school by quoting the ḥadīth that Abū Muṣ‘ab mentioned.

Ad-Dāraquṭnī transmitted from Jābir that ash-Sha‘bī said that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘After me, no one should lead the prayer sitting down.’ Ad-Dāraquṭnī said, ‘Only Jābir al-Ju‘fī related it from ash-Sha‘bī, and his ḥadīths are abandoned. It is mursal and not used as evidence.’ Abū ‘Umar said, ‘Jābir al-Ju‘fī does not have anything authoritative related from him with an isnād, so how much more is that the case with what is related as mursal?’

Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥasan said, ‘When a sick imam leads the prayer sitting for both those who are healthy and other ill people who are sitting, his prayer and the prayer of those behind him who cannot stand is valid and permitted, but the prayer of those behind him who can stand is invalid.’ Abū Ḥanīfah and Abū Yūsuf said that both his prayer and their prayer is allowed. They said, ‘If he prays and indicates to people who are bowing and prostrating, it does not satisfy them all in their view and the prayer of the imam is allowed.’ Zufar said, ‘Their prayer is allowed because they prayed their obligatory prayer and their imam prayed his obligatory prayer as ash-Shāfi‘ī said.

As for what Abū ‘Umar and other scholars before and after him said about that being the last prayer that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ prayed, I have seen others who collected the paths of transmission of ḥadīths about this and discussed it speaking about the disagreement of the fuqahā’ regarding that. We will mention a brief summary of it so that it is clear to you what is correct, Allah willing, regarding the soundness of those who say that the prayer of someone healthy behind a sick imam is allowed. Abū Ḥātim Muḥammad ibn Ḥabbān al-Bustī mentioned in his sound Musnad from Ibn ‘Umar that while the Messenger of Allah ﷺ was in a group of his Companions, he said, ‘Do you not know that I am the Messenger of Allah to you?’ ‘Yes,’ they replied, ‘we bear witness that you are the Messenger of Allah!’ He continued, ‘Do you not know that whoever obeys me has obeyed Allah, and part of obeying Allah is obeying me?’ They answered, ‘Yes, we bear witness that whoever obeys you has obeyed Allah and part of obeying Allah is obeying you.’ He said, ‘Part of obeying Allah is to obey me, and part of obeying me is to obey your commanders. If they pray sitting, then pray sitting.’ ‘Uqbah ibn Abī ‘ş-Şahbā’ is in the path of transmission, and he is trustworthy as Yaḥyā ibn Ma‘īn said.

Abū Ḥātim said that this report is clear evidence that following the imam praying sitting when their imam prays sitting is part of obeying Allah Almighty which Allah has commanded His servants to do. I consider it to be a sort of consensus. They agree that it is permitted because four of the Companions of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ gave a fatwā to that effect: Jābir ibn ‘Abdullāh, Abū Hurayrah, Usayd ibn Ḥuḍayr and Qays ibn Qahd. They did not relate, from any of the Companions who witnessed the descent of revelation and sought refuge from alteration and change, anything different to what those four said, whether with a connected or broken isnād. Therefore it is as if the Companions agreed that when the imam prays sitting down, those who follow him must also pray sitting down. That is what was stated by Jābir ibn Zayd, al-Awzā‘ī, Mālik ibn Anas, Aḥmad ibn Ḥanbal, Ishāq ibn Ibrāhīm, Abū Ayyūb Sulaymān ibn Dāwud al-Hāshimī, Abū Khaythamah, Ibn Abī Shaybah, Muḥammad ibn Ismā‘īl and those of the people of ḥadīth who followed them like Muḥammad ibn Naṣr and Muḥammad ibn Ishāq ibn Khuzaymah. This is the Sunnah that was related from the Prophet ﷺ from Anas ibn Mālik, ‘Ā’ishah, Abū Hurayrah, Jābir ibn ‘Abdullāh, ‘Abdullāh ibn ‘Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb, and Abū Umāmah al-Bāhilī.

The first in this community to invalidate the prayer of someone following an imam sitting when his imam is sitting was al-Mughīrah ibn Miqsam, the companion of an-Nakha‘ī. Ḥammād ibn Abī Sulaymān took it from him, and then Abū Ḥanīfah took it from Ḥammād, and his people after him followed him. The report with the best isnād which they use as evidence is what is related by Jābir al-Ju‘fī from ash-Sha‘bī who said that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘After me, no one should lead the prayer sitting.’ If its isnād is sound, it is mursal. Abū Ḥanīfah said, ‘Among those I have met, I have not seen anyone better than ‘Aṭā’, nor among those I met any more mendacious than Jābir al-Ju‘fī. I have not gone to him with anything without him bringing me a ḥadīth about it and claiming that he had so many thousands of ḥadīths from the Messenger of Allah ﷺ that he had not uttered.’ So Abū Ḥanīfah discredited Jābir al-Ju‘fī and thought him a liar, differing from the position of those of his companions who adopt his position.

Abū Ḥātim said, ‘Many reports, both summary and abridged, have come about the prayer of the Prophet ﷺ while he was ill. Some of them have clear details. According to some of them: “The Prophet ﷺ came and sat beside Abū Bakr. Abū Bakr followed the Prophet ﷺ and the people followed Abū Bakr.” One of them has: “He sat to the left of Abū Bakr.” This is an explanation.’ So it says that the Prophet ﷺ prayed sitting with the people while Abū Bakr prayed standing. Abū Ḥātim said, ‘In short regarding this report, ‘Ā’ishah related about this prayer up to this point, and Jābir ibn ‘Abdullāh has the rest of the story. He said that the Prophet ﷺ commanded them to sit in that prayer as he commanded them to do when he had fallen from his horse. Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥasan ibn Qutaybah related from Yazīd ibn Mawhab from al-Layth ibn Sa‘d from Abu-z-Zubayr that Jābir said, ‘The Messenger of Allah ﷺ was ill and we prayed behind him while he was sitting and Abū Bakr let the people hear his takbīr.’ He said, ‘He turned to us and saw us standing and indicated for us to sit. So we followed his prayer sitting. When he said that salām, he said, “You almost did what Persia and Rome did. They stood for their kings while they were seated. Do not do it. Follow your imam. If he prays standing, pray standing. If he prays sitting, then pray sitting.”

Abū Ḥātim said, “This report provides evident clarification that the Prophet ﷺ sat to the left of Abū Bakr and Abū Bakr moved to follow his prayer and said the takbīr so the people could hear it and follow his prayer. Then the Prophet ﷺ commanded them to sit when he saw that they were standing. When he finished the prayer, he commanded them to sit when their imam prayed sitting. Jābir ibn ‘Abdullāh saw his prayer when he had fallen from his horse and his right side was scratched. He ﷺ fell in Dhu-l-Ḥijjah 5 AH. He witnessed this prayer when he ﷺ was ill on another occasion. He gives each report. Do you not see that he mentions about this prayer: “Abū Bakr raised his voice with the takbīr so that people could follow him”? When he fell from his horse, the prayer that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ prayed was in his house and there was no need to raise his voice with the takbīr so that people could hear it because ‘Ā’ishah’s room was small. He raised his voice in the Great Mosque where the Messenger of Allah ﷺ prayed when he was ill. Since what we described is not sound, we cannot make some reports abrogate others. This is the prayer to which he ﷺ went supported by two men, and he was the imam in it and prayed sitting and commanded them to sit. As for the prayer that he prayed at the end of his life, he went out to it between Barīrah and Thawbah. He followed the imam in it and prayed sitting behind Abū Bakr while wrapped in a garment.’

Anas ibn Mālik related: ‘The last prayer that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ prayed with the people, he prayed wrapped in a single garment, sitting behind Abū Bakr.’ So the Prophet ﷺ prayed two prayers in the mosque in the group, not one prayer. We find in the report of ‘Ubaydullāh ibn ‘Abdullāh from ‘Ā’ishah that the Prophet ﷺ came out between two men, one of whom was Ibn ‘Abbās and the other ‘Alī. Masrūq reported from ‘Ā’ishah: ‘The Prophet ﷺ felt better and so he came out between Barīrah and Thawbah. I could see his sandals hitting the pebbles and saw the bottom of his feet.’ This indicates that there were two prayers, not one prayer.

Abū Ḥātim reported from Muḥammad ibn Ishāq ibn Khuzaymah from Muḥammad ibn Bashshār from Badal ibn al-Muḥabbar from Shu‘bah from Mūsā ibn Abī ‘Ā’ishah from ‘Ubaydullāh ibn ‘Abdullāh from ‘Ā’ishah that Abū Bakr led the people in the prayer while the Messenger of Allah ﷺ was in the row behind him. Abū Ḥātim said, ‘Shu‘bah ibn al-Ḥajjāj differed from Zā’idah ibn Qudāmah about the text of this report from Mūsā ibn Abī ‘Ā’ishah. Shu‘bah had the Prophet ﷺ following in the prayer sitting while the people were standing. Zā’idah made the Prophet ﷺ the imam when he prayed sitting while the people were standing. They are both trusted custodians. How can one make one of these two apparently contradictory transmissions abrogate the previous accounts? If someone makes one of the two reports abrogate the earlier position of the Prophet ﷺ and leaves the other without evidence that confirms its validity that allows his opponents to take what other of the two reports and leave the one he took.’

Similar to this in the sunan is the report of Ibn ‘Abbās about the Prophet ﷺ marrying Maymūnah while he was in iḥrām and the report of Abū Rāfi‘ that states that he married her while they were both out of iḥrām. So the two reports are apparently contradictory about the same action while we do not think that there is any real contradiction between them. One group of ḥadīth scholars consider the two reports about the marriage of Maymūnah contradictory and believe in the report of ‘Uthmān ibn ‘Affān from the Prophet ﷺ: ‘No one in iḥrām should marry or give someone in marriage.’ They take it since it agrees with one of the reports related about the marriage of Maymūnah and abandon the report of Ibn ‘Abbas who said that the Prophet ﷺ married her while he was in ihrām. Someone who does that must say that the two reports about the prayer of the Prophet ﷺ when he was ill are contradictory according to what we mentioned, and so one must take the report containing the command for the followers to pray sitting when the imam prays sitting. That view is taken, and it agrees with one of the two transmissions about the Prophet’s prayer ﷺ when he was ill. He should abandon the other report as is done in the case of Maymūnah’s marriage. Abū Hātim said, ‘Some Iraqis who follow the Iraqī school say that his words, “When the imam prays sitting, then pray sitting,” mean when he says that tashahhud sitting, all do the tashahhud sitting. So they twisted the report from the general meaning in the report without any evidence to support that interpretation.’

 عَلَّمَكُمْ مَا لَمْ تَكُونُوا تَعْلَمُونَ ﴿٢٣٩﴾

239 If you are afraid, then do the prayer on foot or mounted. But when you are safe, remember Allah in the way He taught you when previously you did not know.

If you are afraid, then do the prayer on foot or mounted.

‘Rijāl’ means ‘on foot’. It is the plural of rājil or rajul. It describes a person walking on his feet. Allah commanded people to stand in the prayer with gravity and stillness and with the limbs at rest, and this applies when there is security and peace of mind. Then Allah mentions the occasional state of fear and makes it clear that this act of worship is not cancelled for His slaves in any circumstances, but in certain situations people are allowed to do the prayer while walking or on the backs of horses, camels and the like, and are permitted to pray with nods and gestures in any direction. This is the position of the scholars. This is the prayer performed by someone praying alone when he is constricted by fear for himself during fighting, or fear of a wild animal that is after him, or of an enemy who is pursuing him or of a flood that is overflowing. In general, in every matter in which he fears for his life, he is permitted to do what is mentioned in this āyah. There is a consensus of the scholars on this dispensation when someone is acting and moving in a manner by which he thinks that he will save his life.

They disagree about exactly what constitutes the fear in which it is permitted to pray like this. Ash-Shāfi'ī said that it applies to the situation when the Muslims are actually in sight of the enemy and are not in a fortified position protecting them from being hit by arrows, or when the enemy is so close that they can strike at any time, or when someone whose information is trusted comes and tells them that the enemy is close and making for them. Otherwise it is not permitted to pray the fear prayer. If people pray it based on a report and then the enemy leaves, they do not have to repeat the prayer. Some say that they should, which is the position of Abū Ḥanīfah. Abū 'Umar said, 'The situation in which it is permitted for someone in fear to pray on foot or mounted, facing the qiblah or not facing the qiblah, is in one of intense fear. The circumstances in the reports about it are other than this.' This refers to the fear prayer with an imam and the division of people (into two groups). Its ruling is not dealt with in this āyah. The fear prayer behind an imam will be dealt with in Sūrat an-Nisā'. Mālik differentiated between fear of the enemy and fear of wild beasts and the like which might attack and bring about death. When it is on account of other than the enemy, it is recommended to repeat the prayer within the time if one reaches safety. Most scholars view fear as having the same ruling in either instance.

Abū Ḥanīfah said that fighting invalidates the prayer but the ḥadīth of Ibn 'Umar refutes that and the evidence of the āyah reinforces Ibn 'Umar's position. The literal meaning of the āyah is the strongest proof of it as will be dealt with Sūrat an-Nīsā'. Ash-Shāfi'ī said that since Allah made a dispensation permitting the omission of some of the preconditions of the prayer, that indicates that fighting does not invalidate the prayer. Allah knows best.

The number of rak'ahs is not reduced in the fear prayer to below that of the travel prayer according to Mālik, ash-Shāfi'ī and a group of scholars. Al-Ḥasan ibn Abī 'l-Ḥasan, Qatādah and others said that the rak'ah is prayed by indication. Muslim related from Bukayr ibn al-Akhnas from Mujāhid that Ibn 'Abbās said, 'Allah prescribed the prayer on the tongue of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ as four rak'ahs when resident, two when travelling and one in fear.' Ibn 'Abd al-Barr said that only Bukayr ibn al-Akhnas has this. It is more fitting to safeguard the prayer. When someone prays two rak'ahs when travelling and in a state of fear, he leaves disagreement in favour of certainty. Aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk ibn Muzāhim said, 'Someone in fear of death in hand-to-hand fighting and elsewhere prays one rak'ah. If he is unable to do that, then he says two takbīrs.' Iṣḥāq ibn Rāhawayh said, 'If he is only able to say one takbīr, that is enough.' Ibn al-Mundhir mentioned.

But when you are safe, remember Allah in the way He taught you

This means return to the full pillars of the prayer you are commanded to do normally. Mujāhid said that it means when you are resident, and aṭ-Ṭabarī also reported this position. One group say that it means when the fear you were subject to, which made you resort to the fear prayer, is removed.

Scholars disagree about whether the person in fear builds on the prayer to complete it if the situation becomes safe. Mālik said that if someone prays one rak'ah in a safe situation and then fear occurs, he should mount and complete the prayer while mounted. That is the same if he prays one rak'ah in fear and then becomes safe: he should dismount and complete the prayer. This is also one of the positions of ash-Shāfi'ī and is what al-Muzanī said. Abū Ḥanīfah says that if someone begins the prayer safe and then fears, he starts anew and does not complete what he has done. If he prays in fear and then becomes safe, he completes it. Ash-Shāfi'ī said that the one who dismounts completes it but the one mounted does not. Abū Yūsuf said that he does not complete it in any of those situations.

The words 'remember Allah' here mean to thank Him for the blessing of teaching you the form of the fear prayer, which satisfies the obligation of prayer imposed on us, so you do not miss any of the prayers. This is something that you did not know. The kāf in 'kamā' implies thankfulness.

Our scholars say that the basis of the prayer is supplication and a state of fear is one in which supplication is most appropriate which is why the prayer is not cancelled by fear. If the prayer were to be cancelled by fear, it would be more likely to be cancelled by other things, such as illness or the like. Allah commanded us to safeguard the prayers in every situation: health or illness, at home or on a journey, in strength or weakness, fear or security. The obligation of prayer is never removed from the responsible person. The ruling of someone ill will come in Āl 'Imrān. It means perform the prayer as best you can. It is not cancelled in any state so that if you can only do it by indication by the eyes, then you must still do it. This is why the prayer differs from other acts of worship, all of which can be cancelled by excuses. Ibn al-'Arabī says, 'Our scholars say that this is an immense matter and the one who abandons the prayer is killed because it resembles faith in that the obligation to do it is never removed.' They said that the prayer is one of the pillars of Islam and nothing can replace it nor can it be delegated. Someone who abandons it is killed. This will be discussed in at-Ta'wabah.

240 Those of you who die leaving wives behind should make a bequest to their wives of maintenance for a year without them having to leave their homes But if they do leave you are not to blame for anything they do with themselves with correctness and courtesy. Allah is Almighty, All-Wise.

Those of you who die leaving wives behind should make a bequest to their wives of maintenance for a year without them having to leave their homes

A group of commentators have said that this means that a widow should stay in the house of her husband for a year and that she is entitled to maintenance from his estate as long as she does not leave it. If she leaves, the heirs can stop the maintenance. The waiting period of four months and ten days and the maintenance were abrogated by the shares of inheritance in Sūrat an-Nisā'. Ibn 'Abbās, Qatādah, aḍ-Ḍahḥāk, Ibn Zayd and ar-Rabī' followed this opinion. Scholars disagree about lodging. Al-Bukhārī related that Ibn az-Zubayr said, 'I said to 'Uthmān about this āyah in al-Baqarah: "Those of you who die leaving wives behind..." which was abrogated by the other āyah, "Why do you write it down?" He answered, "Nephew, I will not change any of it from its place." Aṭ-Ṭabarī said that Mujāhid said, "This āyah is one of judgment and is not abrogated. The 'iddah was confirmed as four months and ten days but then Allah gives widows a further bequest of lodging for seven months and twenty days during which they may continue to live in their husband's house if they wish or leave if they wish. That is from the words of Allah: "...without them having to leave their homes. But if they do leave, you are not to blame." Ibn 'Aṭīyyah says that all this is removed by abrogation, which is agreed upon by everyone except for what aṭ-Ṭabarī said that Mujāhid said. Qāḍī 'Iyāḍ said that the consensus is that the 'year' is abrogated and her waiting period is four months and ten days. Other said that 'waṣiyyah' (bequest) is an instruction from Allah which was mandatory for wives after the death of their husband, allowing them reside in the house for a year, and it was then abrogated.

What at-Ṭabarī mentioned from Mujāhid is sound and confirmed. Al-Bukhārī transmitted from Iṣḥāq from Rawḥ from Shibl from Ibn Abī Najīḥ that Mujāhid said about: ‘Those of you who die leaving wives behind...’, ‘A widow was obliged to spend this waiting period with her husband’s family. Then Allah revealed: “Those of you who die leaving wives behind should make a bequest to their wives...” He added, ‘Allah then allotted a full year for her, another seven months and twenty days as a bequest. If she wished, she could stay with his executor, and if she wished, she could leave. That is from the words of the Almighty: “... without them having to leave their homes. But if they do leave, you are not to blame.”’

The first position is more apparent since the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘It [the ‘iddah] is four months and ten days. In the Jāhiliyyah, one of you would throw a piece of dung at the end of a year.’ He was reporting about the state of widows before the Sharī‘ah. When Islam came, Allah Almighty commanded them to stay in their houses for a year and then that was abrogated by four months and ten days. In addition to its clarity in the firm Sunnah transmitted by single reports, it is the undisputed consensus of Muslim scholars. Abū ‘Umar said that. The same is true of the rest of the āyah. According to the majority of scholars this āyah is all abrogated. Then the command to provide wives lodging for the year was abrogated except for an aberrant, avoided transmission from Ibn Abī Najīḥ from Mujāhid which is not corroborated. None of the Muslim scholars among the Companions and Ṭābi‘ūn or those after them said that she has more than four months and ten days as far as I know. Ibn Jurayj related the like of what people say from Mujāhid. So the consensus is reached and disagreement removed. Success is by Allah.

‘Bequest’ is recited by Nāfi‘, Ibn Kathīr, al-Kisā‘ī and ‘Āṣim in the transmission of Abū Bakr in the nominative. It is possible that it means: ‘they should make a bequest’ and ‘to their wives’ describes it. That is how it is in the reading of ‘Abdullāh ibn Mas‘ūd. Abū ‘Amr, Ḥamzah and Ibn ‘Āmir recite it in the accusative based on an implied verb: ‘make a bequest’. Someone deceased does not make a bequest. It means when someone is close to death. It is said that it means: ‘Allah commands’ and it means to give them maintenance, so Allah has assigned that for them. It is also possible that it is in the accusative for the adverbial ḥāl or because it is a verbal noun. ‘Matā’ here is their maintenance for a year.

‘Without them having to leave their homes’ means that the relatives of the deceased and his heirs who inherit the house should not expel the deceased’s widow from it.

But if they do leave you are not to blame for anything they do with themselves with correctness and courtesy.

This refers to them leaving voluntarily before the year is up. Then there is nothing held against the guardian, judge or anyone else because the widow does not have to stay in the house for a whole year. It is said that it means that there is nothing wrong in cutting off their maintenance or in them looking for new husbands since that is cut off from them under the supervision of the heirs. They cannot remarry until their waiting period is finished but there is nothing wrong in them remarrying after the end of the waiting period. The words ‘with correctness and courtesy’ here mean in accordance with the Sharī‘ah.

Allah is Almighty

It entails a threat to those who oppose the limits in this case and expel the wife when she does not want to leave.

 ءَايَاتِهِ لَعَلَّكُمْ تَعْقِلُونَ ﴿٢٤٢﴾

241 Divorced women should receive maintenance given with correctness and courtesy: a duty for all who are godfearing. 242 In this way Allah makes His Signs clear to you, so that hopefully you will use your intellect.

People disagree about this āyah. Abū Thawr says that it is one of the āyahs of judgment, and every divorced woman is owed maintenance. That is what az-Zuhrī said, adding that it even applies to divorced slave-girls. Sa‘īd ibn Jubayr said that every divorced woman should receive maintenance. That is one of the positions of ash-Shāfi‘ī. Mālik says that every woman divorced once or twice receives it, except in the case of a woman divorced before consummation whose dowry has been allotted; she simply receives half her dowry. If it has not been allotted, then she receives maintenance not exceeding the dower of a woman of her status. There is no definition of the amount of maintenance, as Ibn al-Qāsim said.

Ibn al-Qāsim said in the Mudawwanah about when the curtain has been lowered (privacy between the couple has been established), ‘Allah Almighty has appointed maintenance for every divorced woman on the basis of this āyah. Then in the other āyah He makes an exception for a woman whose dower has been allotted and whose marriage has not been consummated: she does not receive maintenance. Ibn Zayd claimed that it is abrogated.’ Ibn ‘Aṭīyyah said, ‘Ibn al-Qāsim fled from the word “abrogation” to “exception” and that is not proper in this place. It is indeed pure abrogation as was stated by Zayd ibn Aslam. When Ibn al-Qāsim makes “divorced women” include every divorced woman, he must then say that there is abrogation.’

it mentions the maintenance of those whose marriage has not been consummated. This position is about a woman who has been allotted a dower before consummation and whose marriage has not been consummated in general. That is on the basis that Allah's words in 2:247 specifies this category of women. When it is said that this is general and undefined, then that is abrogation and not specification.

Ash-Shāfi'ī said in another view that there is only a gift for a woman who has been divorced before consummation when there has been no touching or allotment, because someone who is entitled to something of the dower does not need a gift. The words of Allah about the wives of the Prophet ﷺ: 'Come and I will give you all you need' (33:27), are taken as being voluntary on the part of the Prophet ﷺ, not mandatory, and His words: '...there is no 'iddah for you to calculate for them, so give them a gift' (33:49), are also taken to be not mandatory. Ash-Shāfi'ī said that when a woman has been allotted a dower, she has no gift if she is divorced before consummation, because she takes half of the dower when there has been no sexual intercourse. In the case of a woman whose marriage has been consummated, she receives a gift when she is divorced because the dower is in compensation for sexual intercourse and the gift on account of the dissolution of the contract. Ash-Shāfi'ī obliged a gift for a woman after a khul' and buying her freedom. Mālik's people said, 'How can a woman who ransoms herself be given a gift when she is the one who spends? How can she then take a gift?' There is no gift due to a woman who chooses separation, whether by khul', ransoming herself, buying her freedom, or by mutual agreement, li'ān or emancipation, when she chooses separation, whether or not it has been consummated and whether a dower has been stipulated or not.

243 What do you think about those who left their homes in thousands in fear of death? Allah said to them, ‘Die!’ and then brought them back to life. Allah shows great favour to mankind, but most people are not grateful.

The literal meaning of the words ‘What do you think...?’ is ‘Do you not see?’ but in this usage it refers to the vision of the heart and means ‘Do you not know?’ Sībuwayh says that the phrase is used to call attention to the story of those people.

The story behind the āyah is that some of the tribe of Israel suffered a plague in a town called Dāwardān and fled from it. They went into a valley and Allah caused them to die there. Ibn ‘Abbās said that there were four thousand of them and they said, ‘We will go to a land where there is no death,’ but Allah made them die anyway. A Prophet passed by them and prayed to Allah and He brought them back to life. It is said that they were dead for seven or eight days, and Allah knows best. Al-Ḥasan said that Allah made them die before their time was up as a punishment for them and then brought them back for the rest of their lifespans. It is said that he did that to them as a miracle for one of the Prophets whose name is said to be Sham‘ūn. An-Naqqāsh related that they fled from the fever.

It is also related that they fled from fighting or from jihād. When Allah commanded them to fight through Ezekiel and they feared death in jihād, they left their homes and fled from it, so Allah made them die to teach them that nothing could save them from death. Then He brought them back to life and commanded them to fight by His words: ‘Fight in the Way of Allah.’ (2:190) Aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk said that.

Ibn ‘Aṭīyyah says that all these stories have weak isnāds. The important point about the āyah is that, in it, Allah informs his Prophet Muḥammad ﷺ about the importance of taking note of the mistakes of the people of the past and to acquaint him with some people who left their homes in flight from death and how Allah made them die and then brought them back to life to show them and all those after them that death is in the hand of Allah and no one else and so there is no sense in having fear of it or the delusion of being able to escape from it. Allah revealed this āyah before commanding the believers of the Community of Muḥammad ﷺ to fight jihād. This is the position of at-Ṭabarī. It is the apparent meaning of the āyah.

‘Ulūf’ (thousands) is the plural of alf. The number referred to by the word ‘thousands’ is said to be 60,000 or 80,000. Ibn ‘Abbās said 40,000. Abū Mālīk said 30,000. As-Suddī said 37,000. It was said by ‘Aṭā’ ibn Abī Rabāḥ to be 70,000. Ibn Jurayj related from him that it was 8,000. The sound position is that it was more than 10,000 because of the plural used for ‘thousands’. It is not used for less than 10,000. Ibn Zayd said that the expression means they were united (the verbal root alafa has the meaning of unite), meaning that one group of their people did not leave nor was there any dissension between them, but they were united. This group then differed from them and left in order to flee from death and to seek to live. So Allah made them die in the place where they claimed that they were safe. According to this, ulūf is the plural of ālif.

Ibn al-‘Arabī said, ‘Allah caused them to die for a time as a punishment and then brought them back to life. This death was a punishment after which there was life. There is no life after the death which is the end of one’s term.’ Mujāhid said, ‘When they were brought to life, they returned to their people, and they recognised that they had been dead. The blackness of death was on their faces. None of them touched a garment without it becoming a grimy shroud until they finally died at the time written for them.’ Ibn Jurayj said that Ibn ‘Abbās said, ‘The smell remains on that clan of the tribe of Israel until today. It is related that they were in the middle of Iraq.’ It is said that they were brought back to life after they were putrid. That smell exists in their descendants until today.

The expression ‘in fear of death’ means in order to avoid death. It is said that two angels shouted the word ‘Die!’ at them, meaning that Allah said this by means of the angels, and Allah knows best.

The soundest of these positions, and best known, is that they were fleeing from the plague, as Sa‘īd ibn Jubayr related from Ibn ‘Abbās who said, ‘They left, fleeing the plague, and died. Then one of the Prophets asked Allah to bring them back to life so that they could worship Allah, and Allah brought them back to life.’ ‘Amr ibn Dīnār said about this āyah: ‘The plague broke out in their town and some people left and some remained. More left than remained. Those who left were saved and those who remained died. When it happened again, they all went out except for a few and Allah caused them and their animals to die. Then He brought them to life and they returned to their town and reproduced.’ Al-Ḥasan said that they left to avoid the plague and Allah made them all die at the same moment, including their animals. They numbered 40,000.’

Rulings derive from this āyah. The imams related from ‘Āmir ibn Sa‘d ibn Abī Waqqāṣ who heard Usāmah ibn Zayd relate from Sa‘d that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘The plague was a punishment with which Allah punished some nations and some of it remained, and it comes and goes. Anyone who hears that it has broken out in a land should not go to it, and if someone is in a land where it has broken out, he should not leave it, fleeing it.’ Abū ‘Īsā at-Tirmidhī transmitted from Qutaybah from Ḥammād ibn Zayd from ‘Amr ibn Dīnār from ‘Āmir ibn Sa‘d from Usāmah ibn Zayd that the Prophet ﷺ mentioned the plague and said, ‘It is something that remains of a plague or punishment which Allah sent on a group of the tribe of Israel. When it breaks out in a land where you are, do not leave it. When it breaks out in a land where you are not, do not go to it.’ He said that it is a sound ḥasan ḥadīth.

‘Umar and the Companions acted according to these ḥadīths when he returned from Saragh when ‘Abd ar-Raḥmān ibn ‘Awf informed them of the ḥadīth, as is well known in the Muwattā’ and elsewhere. People dislike fleeing from the plague and a land with disease. It is related that ‘Ā’ishah said, ‘Fleeing from the plague is like fleeing from battle.’ There is the story of ‘Umar who was on his way to Syria with Abū ‘Ubaydah and returned. Aṭ-Ṭabarī said, ‘The ḥadīth of Sa’d contains evidence that a person should guard against disliked things before they occur and avoid feared things before they attack and that one must have steadfastness and lack of terror after such things occur. That is because the Prophet ﷺ forbade someone who is not in a land where the plague is to enter the land where it is raging and he forbade someone who is in the land where the plague has broken out from fleeing from it. That is what is mandatory with respect to the general ruling of everyone who fears fearful matters. In that he follows what one follows in the case of the plague. This idea is like the words of the Prophet ﷺ: ‘Do not wish to meet the enemy. Ask Allah for well-being. If you meet the enemy, be steadfast.’

This is what is sound in respect of this matter and it is what is demanded by what the Messenger ﷺ said and by the action of his noble righteous Companions. When Abū ‘Ubaydah argued with ‘Umar and asked, ‘Are you fleeing from Allah’s decree?’ ‘Umar answered, ‘Would that someone other than you said that, Abū ‘Ubaydah! Yes, we are fleeing from Allah’s decree to Allah’s decree.’ It means that the human being cannot escape what Allah has decreed for and against him. However, Allah has commanded us to be cautious about perilous matters and put energy into guarding ourselves against disliked things. Then ‘Umar said to him, ‘If you had camels and descended into a valley where one side was lush and the other barren, would you not graze on the lush side? Doing so is based on Allah's decree. If you were to graze them on the barren side, that is also by the decree of Allah.' 'Umar returned to Madīnah from that place.

Aṭ-Ṭabarī said, 'We do not know of any disagreement about the fact that when unbelievers or highwaymen make for a weak land whose people will not be able to resist those who are coming, they can remove themselves from them. Life-spans are decreed and can be neither lengthened nor shortened. It is said that it is forbidden to flee from the plague because the one who is in the place where it breaks out might have already taken his portion of it, since he shared with the people of that place in the cause of that prevalent illness. So there is no point in him fleeing. So he adds the hardship of travel to the first signs of the plague. Then his pains are doubled and harm increased. They will die on every road and be cast into every ravine and mountain pass. Therefore it is said that no one flees from the plague and is safe.' Ibn al-Madā'inī related that.

There is enough warning about that in Allah's words in this āyah. If he flees and is safe, he might say, 'I was saved because I left it,' and his belief will thereby be deficient. Generally speaking, fleeing from the plague is forbidden based on what we mentioned and also because it entails emptying the land when there are oppressed people in it for whom it would be difficult to leave. They will be harmed if the wealthy, who are the pillars of the land and support the oppressed, evacuate it. When the plague has broken out in a land, no one should go it, being cautious about harmful situations and averting ideas which disturb. There may be destruction in entering that place and it is not permitted in the judgment of Allah expose oneself to it. It is mandatory to protect oneself from what is disliked. It is feared that what someone believes will be false so that he might say, 'If I had not entered this place, that disliked matter would not have happened to me.' This is the point of the prohibition of entering a land where the plague has broken out or leaving it.

Allah knows best.

Ibn Mas'ūd said, 'The plague is a trial for those who remain and those who flee. Someone who flees may say, "I was saved because I fled." Someone who stays may say, "I stayed and so I died."' Mālik indicated something similar when he was asked about disliking to look at a leper. He said, 'I have not heard that there is any dislike of doing that. I can only think that what has come about that being forbidden is out of fear of being alarmed by him or the fear that it will cause wrong thinking in a person. The Prophet ﷺ said about the plague, "When you hear that the plague has broken out in a land, do not go to it. If it breaks out where you are, do not leave it to flee from it."' He was also asked about a land in which there was death and illnesses and whether it was disliked to leave it. He answered, 'I see no harm in leaving or staying.'

The Prophet ﷺ said, 'When the plague breaks out in a land where you are, do not leave it, fleeing from it.' This indicates that it is permitted to leave a plague land if one is not fleeing from it since he is certain that what befalls him could not have missed him. That is also the ruling of someone who enters it when he is certain that entering it will not bring him anything unless Allah has decreed it for him. Then a person is permitted to enter or leave it within the parameters that we mentioned. Allah knows best.

The word for plague is 'ṭā'ūn'. It is generally used for death from pestilence. It is related from 'Ā'ishah that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, 'The annihilation of my community comes about through defamation (ta'n) and plague (ṭā'ūn).' She said, 'We know what ta'n is. What is ṭā'ūn?' He said, 'It is a bubo like the ganglion of a camel in the groin and armpits.' Our scholars say that this pestilence was sent by Allah as revenge and a punishment to whomever He wishes of His disobedient and unbelieving servants. He sent it as martyrdom and mercy to the righteous. Mu'ādh said about the 'Amwas Plague, 'It is martyrdom and mercy for them and the supplication of your Prophet: “O Allah, give Mu‘ādh and his family a portion of Your mercy.” It appeared on his hand.’ Abū Qilābah said, ‘I knew what martyrdom and mercy are, but I did not know what the supplication of your Prophet meant. I asked and was told that he asked for the obliteration of his community to be by stabbing and the plague.’

Jābir and others reported that the Prophet ﷺ said about the plague, ‘The one who flees from it is like someone who flees from battle. Whoever is patient is like someone who is steadfast in battle.’ We find in al-Bukhārī from Yaḥyā ibn Ya‘mar that ‘Ā’ishah informed him that she asked the Messenger of Allah ﷺ about the plague, the Prophet of Allah ﷺ, told her, ‘It is a punishment which Allah sent to those before you. He made it a mercy for the believers. There is no one who comes into contact with the plague and then remains where he is with fortitude and in expectation of the reward, knowing that only what Allah has written for him will befall him, who will receive any other reward than that of a martyr.’ This explains the words of the Prophet ﷺ: ‘The plague is martyrdom and the one who dies of it is a martyr.’ It means someone who is steadfast in it in expectation of a reward from Allah, knowing that what afflicts him was only what Allah decreed for him. That is why Mu‘ādh hoped to die in it since he knew that whoever dies in it is a martyr. The one who fears and dislikes the plague and flees from it is not included in the meaning of the ḥadīth.

Abū ‘Umar said, ‘I have not heard that any people of knowledge fled from the plague except for what Ibn al-Madā’inī mentioned about ‘Alī ibn Zayd ibn Jud‘ān fleeing from the plague to Sayala. He used to go to every Jumu‘ah and returned. When he went to Jumu‘ah, they shouted to him, ‘Flee from the plague!’ He died at Sayala.’ He said, ‘Amr ibn ‘Ubayd and Rabāṭ ibn Muḥammad fled to ar-Rabāṭiyyah. Ibrāhīm ibn ‘Alī al-Fuqaymī said about that:

When death startled every denier,
I was steadfast, but Rabāṭ and ‘Amr were not.

Abū Ḥātim mentioned that al-Aṣmā'ī said, 'One of the Basrans fled from the plague and mounted a donkey of his and travelled with his family in the direction of Safawān. He heard someone chanting behind him:

He will not outrun Allah on a donkey or on an unbeaten fast horse. Death comes as decreed. In the morning it is in front of the traveller.

Al-Madā'inī said, 'The plague broke out in Egypt while 'Abd al-'Azīz ibn Marwān was governor. He fled from it and stopped in one of the towns of Upper Egypt called Sukar. When he had stopped there, the messenger of 'Abd al-Malik ibn Marwān reached him. 'Abd al-'Azīz asked, 'What is your name?' He answered, 'Ṭālib ibn Mudrik,' which means 'Seeker, son of the one who reaches.' He exclaimed, 'Oh! I do not think that I am returning to Fuṣṭāṭ!' He died in that town.'

244 Fight in the Way of Allah. Know that Allah is All-Hearing, All-Knowing.

This is addressed to the Community of Muhammad ﷺ ordering them to fight in the Way of Allah. The purpose of this fighting is to make the word of Allah uppermost. The ways of Allah are many and varied, and the āyah applies to all of them. Allah says: 'Say: "This is My way."' (12:108) Mālik said, 'The ways of Allah are many and there is not one of them which should not be fought on, in or for. The greatest of them is the dīn of Islam. There is no disagreement about this.'

It also is said that the people addressed are those of the tribe of Israel who were brought to life. That is related from Ibn 'Abbās and aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk, who say that the wa (and) which comes at the beginning of the āyah connects it to the previous matter and if this is the case then something is elided and what is intended is: ‘He said to them, “Fight...”’

An-Naḥḥās said that the āyah is a command to the believers not to flee in the face of fighting. It means, ‘Know that Allah hears your words if you say the like of what those people said and He knows your intention.’ Aṭ-Ṭabarī said that those who say that it is those who were brought to life who were commanded to fight have no basis for what they say. Allah knows best.

245 Is there anyone who will make Allah a generous loan so that He can multiply it for him many times over? Allah both restricts and expands. And you will be returned to Him.

Is there anyone who will make Allah a generous loan

Allah commanded jihād and fighting for the truth and there is nothing in the Sharī‘ah which it is not permitted to fight for, the greatest object being the dīn of Islam as Mālik said. Then Allah encouraged people to spend to that end and included this in this passage about fighting in the Way of Allah. So a person spends hoping for the reward for fighting, as ‘Uthmān ibn ‘Affān did in the case of the Army of Hardship.

When this āyah was revealed, Abu-d-Daḥdāḥ set out to give all his wealth as ṣadaqah, seeking the reward of his Lord. The Shaykh, faqīh and imam, Qāḍī Abū ‘Āmir Yaḥyā ibn ‘Āmir ibn Aḥmad ibn Manī‘ al-Ash‘arī (by lineage and school) reported to us in Cordoba in Rabī‘ al-Ākhir 628 AH, when I read to him from Abū Ijāzah by reading from Abū Bakr ‘Abd al-‘Azīz ibn Khalaf ibn Madyan al-Azdī from Abū ‘Abdullāh ibn Sa‘dūn from Abu-l-Ḥasan ‘Alī ibn Mahrān from Abu-l-Ḥasan Muḥammad ibn ‘Abdullāh ibn Zakariyyā ibn Ḥaywah an-Naysābūrī in 366 AH from his uncle, Abū Zakariyyā Yaḥyā ibn

Zakariyyā from Muḥammad ibn Mu‘āwiyah ibn Ṣāliḥ from Khalaf ibn Khalīfah from Ḥumayd al-A‘raj from ‘Abdullāh ibn al-Ḥārith that ‘Abdullāh ibn Mas‘ūd said, ‘When: “Is there anyone who will make Allah a generous loan,” was revealed, Abu-d-Daḥdāḥ said, “Messenger of Allah, does Allah desire a loan from us?” He replied, “Yes, Abu-d-Daḥdāḥ.” Abu-d-Daḥdāḥ said, “Give me your hand.” He gave it to him and he said, “I have lent Allah a garden with six hundred palm trees in it.” Then he walked to the garden where Umm ad-Daḥdāḥ was with his family. He called her. “Umm ad-Daḥdāḥ!” “At your service!” she replied. He said, “Come out. I have lent my Lord a garden with six hundred palm trees in it.”

Zayd ibn Aslam said, ‘When: “Is there anyone who will make Allah a generous loan,” was revealed, Abu-d-Daḥdāḥ said, “May my father and mother be your ransom, Messenger of Allah! Does Allah ask us for a loan when He has no need of a loan?” He said, “Yes, He wants to admit you to the Garden by it.” He said, “If I lend my Lord a loan will He guarantee the Garden for me and my daughter, Daḥdāḥah?” “Yes,” he replied. He said, “Give me your hand.” The Messenger of Allah ﷺ gave him his hand and he said, “I have two gardens, one at as-Sāfilah and one at al-‘Āliyah. By Allah, they are all that I own. I have made them a loan to Allah Almighty!” The Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, “Make one of them for Allah, and leave the other as livelihood for you and your dependants.” He said, “I bear witness, Messenger of Allah, that I have made the better of them a loan for Allah Almighty.” It was a garden of six hundred palm-trees. The Prophet ﷺ said, “Allah will repay you with the Garden for them.” Abu-d-Daḥdāḥ went to Umm ad-Daḥdāḥ who was with heir children in the garden going around in the palm-trees and said:

My Lord has guided me to the paths of guidance, to the path of good and correctness.
Leave the garden at al-Widād.

It is a loan until the Meeting.
I have lent it to Allah, relying voluntarily, not seeking a favour or its return,
Only the hope for many times more in the Hereafter.
So set out with yourself and your children.
There is no doubt that piety is the best provision which someone sends ahead to the Hereafter.

Umm ad-Daḥdāḥ said, ‘A profitable sale! May Allah bless you in what you purchased!’ Then Umm ad-Daḥdāḥ answered him in verse:

Allah has given you the good news of good and joy.
A person like you settles what he owes and is faithful.
Allah has provided for my dependants and given black ‘ajwah dates and bright flowers.
The slave strives and has what he toiled for in the long nights and owes what he procured.

Then Umm ad-Daḥdāḥ told her children to remove what was in their mouths and what was in their sleeves and went to the other garden. The Prophet ﷺ said, ‘How many heavy clusters and abundant houses Abu-d-Daḥdāḥ will have!’

Ibn al-‘Arabī said, ‘By the judgment, wisdom, power, will and decree of the Creator, when people heard this āyah, they were separated into categories and divided into three groups. The first group are base. They said, “The Lord of Muḥammad is poor and in need of us and we are rich and independent.” This is unconcealed ignorance. They are refuted by His words: “Allah has heard the words of those who say, ‘Allah is poor and we are rich.’” (3:181) The second group preferred avarice and miserliness and desired wealth and did not spend in the way of Allah or ransom captives or help anyone, being too lazy to obey and relying on this world. The third group set out to obey Allah, choosing to respond to what they heard with haste like Abu-d-Daḥḍāḥ and others, and Allah knows best.

The word used for ‘loan’ here is qard. It is everything for which there is repayment. Aqrada means to advance money to someone. Qird is used in another dialect. Az-Zajjāj said that linguistically it means a good or bad test. Al-Kisā’ī said that it is what you advance of good or bad actions. Its root means ‘cutting’. The word miqrād, meaning scissors, comes from it, because aqrada implies cutting out a piece of one’s wealth which will be repaid. Another form of the word is used for when the traces of a people are cut off and they are destroyed. Qard here is a noun but Allah could say iqrād. The word is used to make it familiar to people in a way that they will understand. Allah is Rich-beyond-need and Praiseworthy, but He likens what the believer gives in this world in exchange for what he hopes for of reward in the Next World to a loan, as He likens the giving of lives and property in order to obtain the Garden to buying and selling, as will be discussed in Sūrat-Tawbah, Allah willing.

It is said that the aim of this āyah is to encourage ṣadaqah and spending wealth in the Way of Allah to help the poor and needy and to be generous with them, and ‘in the Way of Allah’ also means to support the Dīn. Allah alludes to the poor by mentioning Himself, even though He is sublime and beyond need of anything, to encourage ṣadaqah, as He alludes to the sick, hungry and thirsty by mentioning Himself in the famous ḥadīth: ‘Son of Ādam, I was ill and You did not visit Me; I asked you for food and you did not feed Me; I asked you for water and you did not give it to Me.’ The reply was, ‘O Lord, how could I give you water when You are the Lord of the worlds?’ He said, ‘My slave asked you for water and you did not give it to him. If you had given it to him, you would have found that with Me.’ This ḥadīth can be found in both al-Bukhārī and Muslim. All of this is to ennoble the person alluded to in order to encourage those who are addressed.

Someone who asks for a loan is duty bound to repay the loan and Allah has made it clear that those who spend in the Way of Allah certainly do not lose by doing so. Allah absolutely rewards it. In a ḥadīth we read, ‘Spending in the Way of Allah is multiplied seven hundred times or more.’ This will be explained in 2:261. Here Allah says: ‘...so that He can multiply it many times over’. This has no end or limit.

The reward for the loan is so large because it gives expansion to the Muslim and relieves him. Ibn Mājah related in the Sunan from Anas ibn Mālik that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘On the Night Journey I saw written on the gate of the Garden, “Ṣadaqah is rewarded ten times over and a loan eighteen times.” I asked Jibrīl, “Why is a loan better than ṣadaqah?” He replied, “Because a beggar may ask when he has something but the one who asks for a loan only does so out of real need.”

Muḥammad ibn Khalaf al-‘Asqalānī related from Ya‘lā from Sulaymān ibn Yusayr from Qays ibn Rūmī that Sulaymān ibn Udhubān lent ‘Alqamah a thousand dirhams to be repaid when he received his stipend. When his stipend arrived, Sulaymān demanded repayment and was hard on ‘Alqamah, so he paid it. It seemed that ‘Alqamah was angry. A month passed and then he went to him again and said, ‘Lend me a thousand dirhams until my stipend comes.’ He answered, ‘Yes, and with honour! Umm ‘Utbah! Bring that sealed bag you have!’ She brought it and he said, ‘By Allah, they are your dirhams that you paid me. Not a single dirham has moved.’ He asked, ‘What has made you do this for me?’ He said, ‘It is because of what I heard from you.’ He asked, ‘And what did you hear from me?’ He replied, ‘I heard you mention from Ibn Mas‘ūd that the Prophet ﷺ said, “If any Muslim gives a loan to another Muslim twice, it is as if he had given it as ṣadaqah once.”’ He said, ‘That is what Ibn Mas‘ūd told me.’

A loan in the Sharī‘ah is one to one, in other words, a person returns what has been lent him. Scholars agree that it is permitted to lend dinars, dirhams, wheat, barley, dates and all similar goods. The Muslims agree that stipulating an increase over and above what has been lent is usury, even if it is only a handful of fodder, as Ibn Mas‘ūd said, or a single grain. It is, however, permitted to give more when repaying provided that it was not a precondition because that is courtesy and the ḥadīth transmitted by Abū Hurayrah reports, ‘The best of you is the best of you in repayment.’ The imams transmitted it: al-Bukhārī, Muslim and others. The Prophet ﷺ praised repaying well. That is undefined and not limited by any description. That is how the Prophet ﷺ repaid the loan of a young camel with a four-year-old camel. This ḥadīth contains evidence for the permission to lend animals. That is the school of the majority while Abū Ḥanīfah forbade that as already mentioned.

It is not permitted for someone who takes a loan to give a gift to the one who gave him the loan while it is still outstanding nor is it permitted for the lender to accept it unless that is their normal custom, and the Sunnah has brought this. Ibn Mājah transmitted from Hishām ibn ‘Ammār from Ismā‘īl ibn ‘Ayyāsh from ‘Utbah ibn Ḥumayd aḍ-Ḍabbī that Yaḥyā ibn Abī Ishāq al-Hunā’ī said, ‘I asked Anas ibn Mālīk about one of our men who lent his brother some money. Could he give him a gift?’ He answered, ‘The Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, “When one of you gives his brother a loan and then he gives him a gift or lets him ride his animal, he should not accept and not ride unless that was the normal custom between them before that.”’

A loan can be property, whose ruling we have explained, or it can be in the form of reputation. We find in a ḥadīth from the Prophet ﷺ: ‘Is one of you unable to be like Abū Ḍamḍam? When he left his house he would say, “O Allah, I have given my reputation as ṣadaqah to Your servants.”’ It is related that Ibn ‘Umar said, ‘Give a loan of your reputation for day when you are poor.’ He meant: ‘Do not take your due from someone who insults you and do not carry out a ḥadd on him until the Day of Rising when there will be a full reward.’ Abū Ḥanīfah said, ‘It is not permitted to give reputation as ṣadaqah because it is Allah’s right.’ That is related from Mālik. Ibn al-‘Arabī said, ‘This is false. The Prophet ﷺ said in the Ṣaḥīḥ: “Your lives, property and honour are unlawful to you...” This demands that these three matters are treated in the same way: as a human right.’

Al-Wāqidi said that the word ‘generous’ (ḥasan, literally “good”) means what is reckoned as good by the lender. ‘Amr ibn ‘Uthmān aṣ-Ṣadafī said that it means not entailing obligation or harm. Sahl ibn ‘Abdullāh said, ‘He does not believe that there is compensation for the loan.’

so that He can multiply it for him many times over?

‘Āṣim and others recited ‘yudā‘ifahu’ while Ibn ‘Āmir and Ya‘qūb recited ‘yuda‘afahu’, Ibn Kathīr, Abū Ja‘far and Shaybah recited ‘yuda‘afuhu’, and others recited ‘yudā‘ifuhu’. This stresses the idea of great increase. Al-Ḥasan and as-Suddī say only Allah knows what this multiplication entails since He says: ‘...pay out an immense reward direct from Him.’ (4:40) Abū Hurayrah said that this is about money given to help in jihād.

Allah both restricts and expands.

This is general to everything. ‘You will be returned to Him’ is a threat. He will repay every action.

246 What do you think about the council of the tribe of Israel after Mūsā’s time when they said to one of their Prophets, ‘Give us a king and we will fight in the Way of Allah!’? He said, ‘Is it not possible that if fighting were prescribed for you, you would not fight?’ They said, ‘How could we not fight in the way of Allah when we have been driven from our homes and children?’ But then when fighting was prescribed for them, they turned their backs – except for a few of them. Allah knows the wrongdoers.

What do you think about the council of the tribe of Israel

In order to encourage fighting, Allah mentions another story which concerns the tribe of Israel. The ‘council’ (malaʿ) are the nobles among a people. It is as if they were filled with honour. Az-Zajjāj said that they are called this because they are filled (malaʿa) with everything they need. Here the ‘council’ means representatives of the people, and malaʿ can be used as the name for a group, like qawm and raht. The word also means good character. Part of that is found in a ḥadīth: ‘Make the council good. All of you will be seen.’ Muslim transmitted it.

after Mūsā’s time

After his death.

When they said to one of their Prophets, ‘Give us a king and we will fight in the Way of Allah!’?

It is said that the Prophet referred to was Shamwīl ibn Bāl ibn ‘Alqamah who was known as ‘the son of the old woman’. It is also said that it was Sham‘ūn [Samuel] as as-Suddī said. It is said that he was known as ‘the son of the old woman’ because his mother was old and barren and asked Allah for a child. It is said that he was called ‘Sham‘ūn’ because she prayed to Allah to give her a child and He heard her prayer and she bore a boy. Therefore she called him ‘Sham‘ūn’ and said, ‘Allah has heard (samiʿa) my prayer.’ The sīn becomes a shīn in Hebrew. He was one of the descendants of Ya‘qūb. Muqātil said that he was one of the descendants of Hārūn. Qatādah said that the Prophet was Yūsha‘ ibn Nūn. Ibn ‘Aṭīyyah said that this is weak because Dāwud was generations after Mūsā and Yūsha‘ ibn Nūn was Mūsā's servant. Al-Muḥāsibī mentioned that his name was Ismā'īl. Allah knows best.

This āyah tells us that at that time the tribe of Israel were abased and defeated by their enemies and asked for permission to fight and were commanded to do so. When the command came many were faint-hearted. A few, however, were steadfast and so Allah gave them victory. One reports states that these were the ones who were made to die and then brought back to life. Allah knows best.

He said, 'Is it not possible that if fighting were prescribed for you, you would not fight?'

Nāfi' reads "asītum" while the rest read "asaytum" which is the best known. The word kutiba (lit. written) here means 'prescribed'. When they saw the reality of fighting and thought about actually taking part in the battle, their resolve weakened.

But then when fighting was prescribed for them, they turned their backs

The words 'turned their backs' means that their intentions became muddled and their resolve failed. This happens with wealthy nations who incline to comfort and an easy life. When war occurs, they are reluctant to fight and follow their nature. Part of this idea is found in the prohibition of the Prophet ﷺ when he said: 'Do not wish to meet the enemy. Ask Allah for well-being. But when you do meet them, then stand firm.' The imams have related it. Then Allah reported that a small number of them remained firm on their first intention and their resolve to fight in the Way of Allah continued.

بِكُمْ عَنْ آلِيكُمْ وَاللَّهُ عَلِيمٌ ذَوْنُ الْحُرْمِ ﴿٥٤﴾

247 Their Prophet said to them, 'Allah has appointed Tālūt to be your king.' They said, 'How can he have kingship over us when we have much more right to kingship than he does? He has not even got much wealth!’ He said, ‘Allah has chosen him over you and increased him greatly in knowledge and physical strength. Allah gives kingship to anyone He wills. Allah is All-Encompassing, All-Knowing.’

Their Prophet said to them, ‘Allah has appointed Ṭālūt to be your king.’

Their Prophet responded to their request. Ṭālūt (Saul) was a water-bearer, or tanner, or a mule driver, but he was a man of knowledge and so Allah elevated him. He was from the tribe of Benjamin and not from the tribe of either prophethood or kingship. Prophethood was in the descendants of Levi and kingship in the tribes of Yahūdihā (Judah). That is why they objected. Wahb ibn Munabbih said, ‘When the Council of the tribe of Israel said this to Samuel, he asked Allah to send them a king and to show him who he was. Allah said to him, “Keep an observant eye on the horn in your house. When a man comes to you at the time when the oil is bubbling up in the horn, he is the king of the tribe of Israel. Then anoint his head with it and make him their king.”’ He said, ‘Ṭālūt was a tanner and went out looking for an animal he had lost. He went to Shamwīl to ask him to pray for him to find the animal or to find some relief and the oil bubbled up. So Shamwīl took him and anointed his head and told him, “You are the king of the tribe of Israel whom Allah has commanded to be advanced to kingship.” Then he told the tribe of Israel, “Allah has appointed Ṭālūt to be your king.”’

Ṭālūt and Jālūt are two Arabicised foreign names and so they are not declined. The same is true of Dāwud.

They said, ‘How can he have kingship over us

‘How can he rule us when we are more entitled to be kings than he is?’ Their custom was that the Prophets would name the king by Allah’s command. When they asked, ‘How?’ it means ‘From what path when we are from the tribe of kings and he is not?’ They also pointed out that he was poor, completely ignoring the strongest reason, which was the prior decree of Allah, and their Prophet pointed out this conclusive argument against them: ‘Allah has chosen him over you.’ His choice is the definitive argument. He made it clear to them that that was the reason why Ṭālūt was chosen.

He said, ‘Allah has chosen him over you and increased him greatly in knowledge and physical strength.

He also possessed knowledge, which is the basis of a person’s character, and physical strength which helped him in war and fighting. This āyah, therefore, provides the description of what a ruler should be like and the conditions governing rulership. A ruler merits his authority on the basis of knowledge, piety and strength, not on the basis of lineage. Lineage has no real say in the matter since knowledge and virtue supersede it as Allah makes clear by informing us that He chose Ṭālūt over them on account of his knowledge and strength even though their lineage was more noble. We have already mentioned the preconditions of leadership at the beginning of the sūrah. This āyah is the basis for it. Ibn ‘Abbās said, ‘At the time, Ṭālūt was the most knowledgeable man among the tribe of Israel, and the most complete. His physical stature alarmed the enemy.’ It is said that he was called Ṭālūt because of his height (tawl). It is also said that the increased strength took the form of great charity and courage, not actual physical strength. A poet says:

You see a thin man and think little of him when a bold lion is in his clothes.
You admire a handsome man and put him to the test, and the handsome man is not as you had thought.
A camel may be immense but lacking in heart and the camel has no need of its great size.

This is the meaning of the words of the Prophet ﷺ to his wives:

‘The first of you to join me will be the one with the longest hand.’ They used to measure their hands, and then it was Zaynab who died first because she used to work with her hands and give ṣadaqah. Muslim transmitted it. One of the interpreters said that what is meant by knowledge here is knowledge of war. This is making the general particular without any evidence for doing so. It is said that ‘increased knowledge’ refers to the fact that Allah gave him revelation, but this would mean that Ṭālūt was a Prophet.

Allah gives kingship to anyone He wills.

Some commentators believe that these words are something that Allah said to Muhammad ﷺ. It is also said these are the words of Shamwīl and that is more likely. He said that to them when he saw their obstinacy and argumentativeness. He wanted to conclude his words with some definitive statement which could not be gainsaid, and so he said this. The ascription of a worldly kingdom to Allah is because He owns it. Then, without them asking, he informed them that ‘the sign of kingship...’ It is also possible that they had asked him for proof of his truthfulness about Allah choosing Ṭālūt to be king. Ibn ‘Aṭīyah said, ‘The first is more apparent based on the context of the āyah. The second is more in keeping with the blameworthy qualities of the tribe of Israel. Aṭ-Ṭabarī believed that.’

وَقَالَ لَهُمْ نَبِيُّهُمْ إِنَّ آيَةَ مُلْكِهِ أَنْ يَأْتِيَكُمُ التَّابُوتُ فِيهِ
 سَكِينَةٌ مِّن رَّبِّكُمْ وَبَقِيَّةٌ مِّمَّا تَرَكَ آءَالُ مُوسَىٰ وَآءَالُ هَارُونَ
 تَحْمِلُهَا الْمَلَائِكَةُ إِنَّ فِي ذَلِكَ لَآيَةً لِّكُمْ إِن كُنْتُمْ
 مُّؤْمِنِينَ ﴿١٧﴾

248 Their Prophet said to them, ‘The sign of his kingship is that the Ark will come to you, containing serenity from your Lord and certain relics left by the families of Mūsā and Hārūn. It will be borne by angels. There is a sign for you in that if you are believers.’

Their Prophet said to them, ‘The sign of his kingship is that the Ark will come to you.

It is said that the Ark (tābūt) was sent down to Ādam. From him it reached Ya‘qūb and from then on remained with the tribe of Israel. Those who fought with it were victorious until they disobeyed Allah and the Ark was seized and then the Amalekites defeated them: Jālūt (Goliath) and his people according to as-Suddī. So the tribe of Israel were forced to surrender the Ark to them. This is the strongest evidence that disobedience is the cause of failure, and this is clear.

An-Naḥḥās said that it is related that the sign in the Ark was that a groan was heard coming from it. When they heard that, they went out to fight. When there was no groan, they did not go out. It is said that they used to place it at a critical place on the battlefield and they would have victory. This continued until they disobeyed Allah and were defeated and the Ark was taken from them and they were abased. When they saw this, some of them arranged for a Council and they asked the Prophet of the time for a king. When he told them that Ṭālūt was their king, they then rejected him as Allah tells us. When he gave them the decisive argument, they then asked for a clear sign of that.

We read in at-Ṭabarī, ‘When they asked their Prophet for the clear sign regarding what he said, he called on his Lord and, because of that, affliction descended on the people who had taken the Ark. There is some disagreement about that. It was said that they put it in a temple of theirs in which there were idols and the idols were overturned. They said, “Put it in the temple of the idols under the great idol,” and in the morning it was on top of the idol. They tied it to its feet and in the morning the hands and feet of the idol were cut off and cast under the Ark. So they took it and put it in a village and those people experienced pains in their necks.’ It is said that they put it in a lavatory and then they were afflicted by haemorrhoids. When the affliction was great, they said, ‘It is this Ark which is the problem,’ and they returned it to the tribe of Israel. They put it on a cart between two oxen and let them loose in the land in the direction of the tribe of Israel. Allah sent angels to drive the oxen until they reached the tribe of Israel who were under the command of Ṭālūt. Then they were certain of victory. The angels carried the Ark in this transmission. It is related that the angels came to carry it. Yūsha‘ ibn Nūn put it on the earth. It is related that they saw the Ark in the air when it descended among them. Ar-Rabī‘ ibn Khaytham said that. Wahb ibn Munabbih said that the size of the Ark was three cubits by two cubits. Al-Kalbī said that it was made of acacia wood from which combs are made.

People disagree about the “sakīnah” (serenity) and the “baqiyyah” (relics). The word sakīnah is derived from sukūn, meaning tranquillity, gravity and serenity. So it means that the Ark was the cause of serenity in their hearts despite their disagreement over Ṭālūt. We find a similar use of the word when Allah says: “Allah sent down His serenity on him” (9:40), meaning something which made his heart tranquil. He meant that the Ark was the cause of tranquillity in their hearts. Wherever they were, they relied on it and did not abandon it when it accompanied them in war.

Wahb ibn Munabbih said, ‘The sakīnah is a rūḥ (spirit) from Allah which spoke. When they disagreed about something, it clarified the matter for them, and when it shouted in war, they had victory.’ ‘Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib said, ‘It was a wind which blew and had a face like a human being.’ It is said that he said that it was a gale with two heads. Mujāhid said, ‘It was an animal like a cat with two wings, a tail and shining eyes. When it looked at an army, that army was defeated.’ Ibn ‘Abbās said that it was a gold basin from the Garden in which the hearts of the Prophets were washed. As-Suddī said that. Ibn ‘Aṭīyyah said, ‘The sound view is that the Ark contained some excellent objects left by the Prophets and the hearts of the people were strengthened by that.’

We read in Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim that al-Barā’ said, ‘A man was reciting Sūrat al-Kahf and he had a horse with him tethered by two ropes. Then a cloud came over him and began to draw near and his horse began to shy away from it. In the morning he went to the Prophet ﷺ and mentioned that to him and he said, “That was the sakīnah which descended on account of the Qur’an.”’ We find in the ḥadīth of Abū Sa’īd al-Khudrī that Usayd ibn al-Ḥuḍayr was reciting the Qur’an at night in his drying-floor. In it the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘Those were the angels who were listening to you. If you had continued, the people would have seen them in the morning and they would not have been concealed from them.’ Al-Bukhārī and Muslim transmitted it. Sometimes the Prophet ﷺ mentioned the descent of the sakīnah and sometimes the descent of the angels. It indicates that the sakīnah was in that canopy and that it always descends with the angels. This is the argument of those who said that the sakīnah was a spirit (rūḥ) or something with a spirit because it is not valid that listening to the Qur’an be done by something that is not sentient. Allah knows best.

Several things are said about the relics (baqīyyah). It is said that they consisted of the staff of Mūsā, the staff of Hārūn, and fragments of the tablets because they were broken when Mūsā threw them down. Ibn ‘Abbās said that. ‘Ikrimah added the Torah to the list. Abū Ṣāliḥ said that it was the staff and garment of Mūsā, the garment of Hārūn and two tablets of the Torah. ‘Aṭīyyah ibn Sa’d said that it was the staff of Mūsā, the staff of Hārūn, their garments, and fragments of the tablets. Ath-Thawrī said that some people said it was a measure of manna in a gold basin, the staff of Mūsā, the turban of Hārūn and fragments of the tablets. Some said that it was the staff and sandals. The meaning of this is what is related about when Mūsā came to his people and found them worshipping the Calf. He threw down the tablets in anger and they broke. He extracted from them what was unbroken and took the fragments of what was broken and put them in the Ark. Aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk said that the word refers to jihād and fighting the enemy. Ibn ‘Aṭīyah said the command to do that was in the Ark, either written or by the mere fact of it being brought. They are ascribed to the families of Mūsā and Hārūn since the command comes from one people to another, all of whom were from the families of Mūsā and Hārūn. The family (āl) of a man are his kin.

249 When Tālūt marched out with the army, he said, ‘Allah will test you with a river. Anyone who drinks from it is not with me. But anyone who does not taste it is with me – except for him who merely scoops up a little in his hand.’ But they drank from it – except for a few of them. Then when he and those who believed with him had crossed it, they said, ‘We do not have the strength to face Jālūt and his troops today.’ But those who were sure that they were going to meet Allah said, ‘How many a small force has triumphed over a much greater one by Allah’s permission! Allah is with the steadfast.

When Tālūt marched out with the army,

The word for ‘march out’ (faṣala) means to go out with them but the verb also means ‘to separate from’. Wahb ibn Munabbih said, ‘When Tālūt set out, they said to him, “The water will not be enough for us, so ask Allah to make a river flow for us.” He said, “Allah will test you with a river.”” According to as-Suddī, there were eighty thousand soldiers. Wahb continued, ‘No one stayed behind the army except for those excused by youth, age or illness. Ibtīlā’ is testing.’

Nahar and nahr (river) are two dialectical forms. The word is derived from the meaning of expansion. Nahār (day) comes from it. Qatādah said, ‘The river with which Allah tested them was a river between Jordan and Palestine.’ The reason for the test was so that Tālūt would know that those who left the water alone would obey him in respect of other things and those who were overcome by desire for water and disobeyed his command would disobey him in more important matters. It is related that they reached the river and were thirsty and the water was very sweet and good. That is why those who obeyed had an allowance of scooping up a handful to remove the pain of thirst from themselves. It is clear that a handful is to relieve the harm caused by thirst for those who are resolute and steadfast in the hardship of life and whose concern is for other than just being comfortable. It is as ‘Urwah said:

Feel the purity of water, and the water is cool.

This is the sense of the words of the Prophet ﷺ, ‘Enough for a person are a few morsels with which to keep his back straight.’ One of those with a grasp of profound meanings said that this āyah is an example that Allah has made which represents this world. Allah likened the river and the one who drinks from it to someone who inclines to this world and seek to have a lot of worldly things. The one who does not drink from it is like someone who turns from it and makes do with little of it. Someone who scoops up a handful is like someone who only takes what he needs from it. These three have different states in the sight of Allah. This is excellent, although it moves from the literal to an interpretation, but the meaning is nevertheless sound.

he said, ‘Allah will test you with a river.

Those who say that Tālūt was a Prophet take these words as a proof, since it is clear that Allah had revealed to him that this was a test from Allah for them. Those who say that he was not a Prophet say that it was Shamwīl who informed him of the revelation and then he informed the people. The test was to distinguish the sincere people from the false-hearted. Some people believe that ‘Abdullāh ibn Ḥudhāfah, the Companion of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ, commanded his companions to light a fire and enter it to test their obedience, but his nature led him to make the matter he imposed harsh. This will be dealt with in an-Nisā’, Allah willing.

Anyone who drinks from it is not with me.

‘He will not be one of my companions in this battle.’ It was not a test of their faith so they did not become unbelievers by doing that. As-Suddī said that they were eighty thousand and so they inevitably included believers, hypocrites, and both serious and lazy people. We find in a ḥadīth: ‘Whoever cheats us is not one of us,’ meaning ‘He is not one of our Companions and not following our path and guidance.’ It is said:

When you try to deceive Asad by iniquity,
I am not from you and you are not from me.

This saying is used by the Arabs. If a man’s son is following a different path, he may say, ‘You are not from me.’

But anyone who does not taste it is with me —

Allah uses the verb ṭama‘a (taste) rather than shariba (drink). Allah does not repeat the same word, because the best style in Arabic is to avoid repetition and the style of the Qur’an is the most eloquent possible. This is an aspect of that eloquence.

Our scholars use this as evidence for the principle of sadd adh-dharā‘i‘ because the least taste is included in the word ‘taste’. When ‘tasting’ is forbidden, there is no way for someone to drink from what is forbidden.

The use of the word ‘taste’ also indicates that water is considered to be food. If it is food, it means that it nourishes and supports the body. So usury may occur in respect of it. Ibn al-‘Arabī said, ‘That is sound in the School.’ Abū ‘Umar said, ‘Mālik said, “There is nothing wrong in selling water on the bank for water different in amount and on credit.’ That is the view of Abū Ḥanīfah and Abū Yūsuf. Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥasan said, ‘It is one of the commodities that are measured and weighed. According to this position, there should be no disparity in it.’ He considers that to be usury because the cause with respect of it being usury is weighing and measuring. Ash-Shāfi‘ī said, ‘It is not permitted to sell water with different amounts or on credit.’ His reason for its being usury is that water is one sort of combustible.

Ibn al-‘Arabī said, ‘Abū Ḥanīfah said, “If someone says, ‘If my slave so-and-so drinks from the Euphrates, he is free,’ he is only free if he drinks directly from the river with his mouth. If he drinks using his hand or scoops it up with a vessel, he is not freed because Allah made a difference between drinking directly from the river and drinking with the hand.”’ He continued, ‘This is unsound because the drinking of water is used for every form of doing so in Arabic, whether that is scooping up with the hand and drinking directly by mouth. It is one application. When he finds that water which the oath was about in language and actuality, that fulfils the oath.’

I say that the view of Abū Ḥanīfah is sounder. The people who understand language make a distinction between them as does the Book and the Sunnah. Al-Jawharī and others said that the verb kara‘a denotes drinking water directly from the place without using one’s hands or a vessel. In the Sunnah, Ibn Mājah mentioned in the Sunan from Wāṣil ibn ‘Abd al-A‘lā from Ibn Fuḍayl from Layth from Sa‘īd ibn ‘Āmir that Ibn ‘Umar said, ‘We passed by a pond and began to drink directly (nakri‘u) from it. The Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, “Do not drink directly from it. Rather wash your hands and then drink from it. There is no more sweeter vessel than the hand.”” This is a text. Muslim transmitted from Layth ibn Abi Sulaym and said that he is weak.

Scooping is taking up something with the hand or some implement. Mighrafah (ladle) comes from the same root. Gharf and ightirāf (scooping) mean the same. This usage means to do it once. Some say that when the word gharfah (Warsh) is used it means with one hand and when ghurfah (Ḥafṣ) is used it means with two, and some say that they both mean the same thing.

Whoever desires what is purely ḥalāl in these times without any suspicion or doubt should drink water with his own hands from springs and rivers whose flow is subjected by the flow at the end of the night and end of the day, seeking from Allah by that to gain good deeds, remove burdens, and join the imams and pious. The Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘If someone drinks with his hand while able to use a vessel, desiring to be humble by doing that, Allah will record good deeds for him according to the number of his fingers. That was the vessel of ‘Īsā ibn Maryam when he cast aside the cup and said, “Uff! This is part of this world.”’ Ibn Mājah transmitted it from Ibn ‘Umar. He said, ‘The Messenger of Allah ﷺ forbade us to drink on our bellies: that is kar‘ (drinking directly from the water with the mouth). He forbade us to scoop it up with one hand. He said, “None of you should drink like a dog nor drink with one hand as was done by people with whom Allah was angry. He should not drink from a vessel at night without first shaking it, unless it was covered. If someone drinks with his hand while able to use a vessel...”’ Baqiyah ibn al-Walīd is in the isnād. Abū Ḥātim said, ‘His ḥadīths are recorded but not used as an authority.’ Abū Zur‘ah said, ‘If Baqiyah relates from trustworthy sources, then he is trustworthy.’

But they drank from it – except for a few of them.

Ibn ‘Abbās said that they drank according to the degree of their certainty. The unbelievers drank eagerly, and those who were merely disobedient less than that. Seventy-six thousand of the people failed the test and only the believers remained, some of whom did not drink at all and some of whom took a handful. Those who drank were not quenched, but remained intensely thirsty. Those who completely left the water were in a good situation and were more steadfast than those who took a handful.

Then when he and those who believed with him had crossed it,

This means that they crossed the river. ‘Huwa’ is used for stress. The verb jāwaza means ‘to cross a place’. Ibn ‘Abbās and as-Suddī said, ‘Four thousand men crossed the river with him, including those who drank from it. When they saw Jālūt and his armies, which numbered one hundred thousand, all of them heavily armed, three thousand six hundred and eighty of his army left.’ If this is so, the believers who had certainty in the resurrection and the return to Allah and who said, ‘How many a small force has triumphed over a much greater one by Allah’s permission’ were same number as the people of Badr. Most commentators say that those who did not drink crossed the river with him and some of them said, ‘How can we face the enemy when they are so many!’ and those with true resolve made the other statement. Al-Barā’ ibn ‘Āzib said, ‘We used to say that the people of Badr were the same number as the companions of Ṭālūt who crossed the river him: about 310.’ One variant has ‘313’. He added, ‘Only those who believed crossed with him.’

But those who were sure that they were going to meet Allah Here zann means certainty. The word can also mean doubt. It means that they thought that they would be killed with Ṭālūt and would meet Allah as martyrs. So there was uncertainty about the possibility of being killed.

‘How many a small force has triumphed over a much greater one by Allah's permission!

A 'fi'ah (force) is a group of people and section of them. It also comes from a root meaning to cut with a sword, so it is like a section cut from the rest. This statement was to encourage fighting, being steadfast and obeying those who are true to their Lord. This is how it is mandatory for us to behave. But ugly actions and false intentions have prevented that until we have reached the stage where a large number of us can be defeated by a small number of the enemy as we have seen happen more than once. That is what we have brought on ourselves!

In al-Bukhārī, Abu-d-Dardā' said, 'We fight on the basis of our actions.' In the Musnad, the Prophet ﷺ said, 'Are you given provision and victory except on account of your weak ones?' Now actions are false and the weak are neglected. Steadfastness is scarce, reliance on Allah is weak and taqwā has completely disappeared! Allah says: 'Be steadfast, be supreme in steadfastness; be firm on the battlefield; and show fear of Allah' (3:200); 'Put your trust in Allah' (5:23); 'Allah is with those who show fear of Him and with those who are good-doers' (16:128); 'Allah will certainly help those who help Him' (22:40) and: 'When you meet a troop, stand firm and remember Allah repeatedly so that perhaps you will be successful.' (8:45)

These are the reasons for victory and its preconditions. They are lacking and do not exist with us. We belong to Allah and to Him we return! Only the mention of the word Islam remains, and only the merest trace of the dīn, due to the appearance of corruption, excessive transgression and lack of guidance so that the enemy has conquered the lands of the east and west, land and sea. Seditions have become widespread, and the trials are terrible. There is no protection except with the All-Merciful!

سَبْرًا وَثَقِّتْ أَقْدَامَنَا وَانصُرْنَا عَلَى الْقَوْمِ الْكَافِرِينَ ﴿٢٥﴾

250 When they came out against Jālūt and his troops, they said, ‘Our Lord, pour down steadfastness upon us, and make our feet firm, and help us against this unbelieving people.’

They went out onto the field of battle. Jālūt was the ruler of the Amalekites and their king. His shadow extended for a mile. It is said that the Berbers are descended from him. It is said that he had three hundred thousand warriors. ‘Ikrimah said seventy thousand. When the believers saw their numbers, they prayed to their Lord. This is like Allah’s words: ‘Many a Prophet fought when there were many thousands with him...’ (3:146-147) When the Prophet ﷺ met the enemy, he would say in the fighting, ‘O Allah, I attack and move by You.’ When the Prophet ﷺ met the enemy, he would say, ‘O Allah, I seek refuge with you from their evil and put You at their throats.’ At the Battle of Badr, he made supplication until his cloak fell from his shoulders, asking Allah to fulfil His promise as will be dealt with in Āl ‘Imrān, Allah willing.

فَهَزَمُوهُمْ بِإِذْنِ اللَّهِ وَقَتَلَ دَاوُدُ جَالُوتَ وَآيَاهُ اللَّهُ الْمَلِكَ
وَالْحِكْمَةَ وَعَلَّمَهُ مَا يَشَاءُ وَلَوْلَا دَفْعُ اللَّهِ لِلنَّاسِ
بَعْضَهُم بِبَعْضٍ لَفَسَدَتِ الْأَرْضُ وَلَكِنَّ اللَّهَ ذُو فَضْلٍ عَلَى
الْعَالَمِينَ ﴿١٥١﴾

251 And with Allah’s permission they routed them. Dāwud killed Jālūt and Allah gave him kingship and wisdom and taught him whatever He willed. If it were not for Allah’s driving some people back by means of others, the earth would have been corrupted. But Allah shows favour to all the worlds.

And with Allah’s permission they routed them.

Allah sent down victory on them. The root of the verb ‘hazamū’ (they routed) literally means to break. It also means to sink a well. Zamzam is called ‘the Hazmah of Jibrīl,’ meaning that he sunk it with his foot and water came out. Another form of the word means kindling.

Dāwud killed Jālūt

That was because King Ṭālūt selected him from his people to fight Jālūt. He was a short young man, sallow and sickly. Jālūt was one of the strongest and most powerful of men. He used to defeat entire armies on his own. Yet Jālūt was killed at Dāwud's hand in front of the Amalekite army. His full name was Dāwud ibn Ishā [Jesse] or Dāwud ibn Zakariyyā and he was descended from Yahudhā ibn Ya'qūb in whose line was both prophethood and kingship. He was a shepherd and the youngest of his brothers and looked after the sheep while his seven brothers accompanied Ṭālūt. When war came, he said to himself, 'I will go and see this fight.' When he started on the way, he passed by a stone and it called out to him, 'Dāwud! Take me. It is through me that you will kill Jālūt.' Then another stone called him and then another. So he took them and put them in his bag and went along.

Jālūt came forward seeking single combat. People backed away from him until Ṭālūt said, 'If someone goes out and kills him, I will marry my daughter to him and give him authority over my property.' Dāwud came forward and said, 'I will go and kill him.' Ṭālūt thought little of him when he saw him because of his youth and small size and rejected him. Jālūt called out a second and third time and Dāwud came out once more. Ṭālūt asked him, 'Have you had any experience of fighting?' 'Yes,' he replied. 'What was it?' he asked. He said, 'A wolf attacked my sheep and I hit it and then cut off its head.' Ṭālūt said, 'Wolves are weak. Have you tested yourself against anything else?' 'Yes,' he said, 'A lion came and I hit it and then took its jaws and split them. Do you think this man is stronger than a lion?' 'No,' he answered. Ṭālūt had armour intended only for the person who was to fight Jālūt. He told him about it and it was brought and he put it on. Ṭālūt said, 'Ride my horse and take my weapons,' which he did.

When he had gone a short distance, people said, ‘The youth is a coward!’ Dāwud said, ‘If Allah does not kill him for me and help me against him, this horse and armour will be of no use to me. I will fight him in the way I am used to fighting.’ Dāwud was extremely skilful with a slingshot. He dismounted and took his bag and tied it round him and took his sling and went out to Jālūt who was bristling in his armour. Jālūt said to him, ‘You, lad, come out against me!’ ‘Yes,’ he replied. ‘You are scarcely even a match for a dog!’ Ṭālūt said. ‘That may be so,’ replied Dāwud, ‘but you are less than that.’ He said, ‘I will feed your flesh to the birds and wild beasts today!’ They approached one another. Jālūt went to seize Dāwud with his hand since he thought little of him. Dāwud took the stone, put it in the sling, said the name of Allah and slung it and it hit him on the head and killed him. He removed his head and put it in his bag. The army was defeated in the subsequent confusion. It is said that he hit at the site of his nose. It is said that it hit his eye and emerged from the back of his head and hit some of his army and killed them. It is said that the stone split up until some of it hit everyone in the army. It was the handful which the Prophet ﷺ threw at Hawāzin in the Battle of Ḥunayn. Allah knows best. People have many stories about this āyah. I have mentioned to you what is meant by it and Allah is praised.

The meaning of the statement of Ṭālūt, ‘If someone goes out and kills him, I will marry my daughter to him and give him authority over my property,’ is confirmed in our Shari‘ah. It is when the leader says, ‘If someone brings a head, he will have such-and-such,’ or ‘If he brings a captive, he will have such-and-such.’ This will explained in al-Anfāl.

This indicates that going out for single combat can only be done with the permission of the leader, as Aḥmad, Iṣḥāq and others said. What is transmitted from al-Awzā‘ī varies. It is related that he said that no one should embark on that without the leader’s permission.

It is also related that he said that there is nothing wrong with it. If the leader forbids anyone going out to single combat, no one may do so except with his permission. One group permits going out, not mentioning whether it is with or without the permission of the leader. This is the position of Mālik. Mālik was asked about a man in the ranks who says, ‘Who will come forth?’ He said, ‘That is up to his intention. If he desires Allah by that, I hope that there is no harm. That was done in the past.’ Ash-Shāfi‘ī said, ‘There is nothing wrong in going out.’ Ibn al-Mundhir said, ‘It is good to go out with the permission of the leader, but someone who goes out without the permission of the leader does nothing wrong. That is not disliked because I do not know of any report that forbids it.’

and Allah gave him kingship and wisdom.

As-Suddī said, ‘Allah made him the inheritor of both the kingdom of Tālūt and the prophethood of Shamwīl. He taught him how to make chain mail, speak the language of the birds and other forms of knowledge.’ Ibn ‘Abbās said, ‘It is that Allah gave him a chain connected to the galaxy and celestial sphere. The end of which was at Dāwud’s hermitage. Nothing happened in the air without the chain ringing so that Dāwud knew what has happening. No one with a disease touched it without being healed. The sign of his people entering the dīn was when they touched it with their hands and then they wiped their palms on their chests. They used to take their arguments to it after Dāwud until it was removed.’

If it were not for Allah’s driving some people back by means of others, the earth would have been corrupted.

For the word ‘driving’ Nāfi‘ reads difā‘ while the rest read daf‘. They are both verbal nouns as Sībuwayh said. Abū Ḥātim said that they mean the same.

Scholars disagree about the people by whom corruption is driven back. It is said that they are the Abdāl, who are forty men. Whenever one of them dies, Allah replaces him with another. They will all die on the Last Day. Twelve of them are in Syria, eight in Iraq. It is related that ‘Alī said, ‘I heard the Messenger of Allah ﷺ say, “The Abdāl are in Syria and they are forty men. When one of them dies, Allah replaces him with another man. By them succour is poured forth and by them He helps the believers against their enemies and removes affliction from the people of trials.”’ At-Tirmidhī al-Ḥakīm mentioned it in Nawādir al-Uṣūl.

The following is also transmitted from Abu-d-Darda’: ‘The Prophets are the pegs which hold the earth in place. When Prophethood was brought to an end, Allah replaced the Prophets with some of the people from the Community of Muhammad ﷺ called the Abdāl. They are not superior to other people in respect of fasting or prayer, but on account of their good character, true scrupulousness, good intention, sound hearts and good counsel for all the Muslims, seeking Allah’s pleasure by steadfastness, forbearance, intelligence, and humility without abasement. They are the caliphs of the Prophets, the people Allah has chosen for Himself and whom He has selected for Himself by His knowledge. They are forty true men. Thirty of them have a similar certainty to that of Ibrāhīm, the Friend of the All-Merciful. By them Allah drives away disliked things from the people of the earth and innovations which people have introduced. It is because of them that people have rain and provision. None of them dies without Allah putting someone else in his place.’

Ibn ‘Abbās said, ‘If it were not for Allah’s driving back the enemy by the armies of the Muslims, the idolaters would have triumphed and killed the believers and ruined their towns and mosques.’ Sufyān ath-Thawrī said, ‘They are the martyrs who are the means by which the dīn is established.’ Makkī related that most commentators say, ‘If it were not that Allah has defended those who do not pray by those who do and those who are not fearful of Allah by those who are, people would have been destroyed for their wrong actions.’ That is like what an-Naḥḥās, ath-Tha‘labī and the rest of the commentators say, ‘If it were not for Allah’s driving back the impious unbelievers by the pious believers, the earth would have been corrupted.’

The Prophet ﷺ is reported as saying in a ḥadīth, ‘Allah drives the punishment away from those of my community who do not pray by those who do, from those who do not give zakat by those who do, from those who do not perform ḥajj by those who do, and from those who not do jihād by those who do. If they had all agreed to abandon these things, Allah would not put off their destruction for the blink of an eye.’ Then the Messenger of Allah ﷺ recited: ‘If it were not for Allah’s driving some people back by means of others, the earth would have been corrupted.’

The Prophet ﷺ also said, ‘The angels call out every day: “Were it not for Allah’s slaves who pray, suckling children and grazing animals, the punishment would already have fallen upon you.”’ Abū Bakr al-Khaṭīb transmitted the same idea from the ḥadīth of al-Fuḍayl ibn ‘Iyād. Maṣṣūr related from Ibrāhīm from ‘Alqamah from ‘Abdullāh that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘Were it not for humble men, grazing animals and suckling children, the punishment would already have fallen upon the believers.’ Someone said:

If it had not been for Allah’s slaves who bow and orphaned suckling children,
And animals grazing in the wild,
the most painful punishment would have fallen on them.

Jābir reported that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘By a man’s rectitude, Allah puts right his children and grandchildren and the people of his house and the houses around him and they will remain in Allah’s protection as long as he is among them.’ Qatādah said, ‘The believers experience trials on account of the unbelievers and the unbelievers experience well-being on account of the believers.’ Ibn ‘Umar reported from the Prophet ﷺ, ‘On account of a righteous believer Allah will drive away affliction from a hundred of the people of his household and his neighbours.’ Then he recited this āyah.

It is also said that this driving back is by means of the laws prescribed on the tongues of the Messengers. If it were not for that, people would plunder and loot one another and be destroyed. This is an excellent statement as it is general to restraining, defence and other things. Reflect on it. ‘But Allah shows favour to all the worlds’ indicates that the fact that the believers avert the evil of the unbelievers is a favour and blessing from Him.

252 Those are Allah’s Signs which We recite to you with truth. You are indeed one of the Messengers.

Allah is informing his Messenger ﷺ that only a sent Prophet will have knowledge of these signs which He mentions.

تِلْكَ الرُّسُلُ فَضَّلْنَا بَعْضَهُمْ عَلَى بَعْضٍ مِنْهُمْ مَنْ كَلَّمَ اللَّهُ وَرَفَعَ بَعْضَهُمْ دَرَجَاتٍ وَآتَيْنَا عِيسَى ابْنَ مَرْيَمَ الْبَيِّنَاتِ وَأَيَّدْنَاهُ بِرُوحِ الْقُدُسِ وَلَوْ شَاءَ اللَّهُ مَا اقْتَتَلَ الَّذِينَ مِنْ بَعْدِهِمْ مِنْ بَعْدِ مَا جَاءَتْهُمْ الْبَيِّنَاتُ وَلَكِنْ اخْتَلَفُوا فَمِنْهُمْ مَنْ آمَنَ وَمِنْهُمْ مَنْ كَفَرَ وَلَوْ شَاءَ اللَّهُ مَا اقْتَتَلُوا وَلَكِنَّ اللَّهَ يَفْعَلُ مَا يُرِيدُ ﴿٢٥٣﴾

253 These Messengers: We favoured some of them over others. Allah spoke directly to some of them and raised up some of them in rank. We gave Clear Signs to ‘Īsā, son of Maryam, and reinforced him with the Purest Rūḥ. If Allah had willed, those who came after them would not have fought each other after the Clear Signs came to them, but they differed. Among them there are those who believe and among them there are those who disbelieve. If Allah had willed, they would not have fought each other. But Allah does whatever He desires.

These Messengers: We favoured some of them over others.

This āyah is confusing. There are firm ḥadīths in which the Prophet ﷺ stated, ‘Do not choose between the Messengers,’ and ‘Do not give preference to any of the Prophets of Allah,’ meaning, ‘Do not say that this one is better than that one.’ They are related by trustworthy imams. Scholars disagree about this, some saying that these statements were made before there was revelation of his superiority and before he knew that he was the master of the children of Ādam and that the Qur’an abrogated the prohibition of preference with this āyah.

Ibn Qutaybah said that his words, ‘I am the master of the children of Ādam’, refer to the Day of Rising because he will intercede on that Day and he will have the Banner of Praise and the Basin. His words, ‘Do not prefer me to Mūsā’, are a mark of his humility, as Abū Bakr said, ‘I have been appointed and I am not the best of you.’ The same is true of his words ﷺ, ‘No one should say that I am better than Yunus ibn Mattā.’ That expresses humility. The words of Allah: ‘Do not be like the companion of the fish...’ (68:48) indicate that, in fact, the Messenger of Allah ﷺ was better than him because Allah says, ‘Do not be like him.’ That indicates that the other statements of the Prophet ﷺ were expressing humility. It is permitted to say, ‘Do not prefer me to him in action. He may be better in action than me,’ or to say in affliction and trial, ‘He has a greater trial than me.’

The leadership and excellence which Allah has given His Prophet ﷺ on the Day of Rising over all the Prophets and Messengers was not because of his actions, but rather because Allah preferred him and singled him out for this distinction. This is the interpretation which al-Muhallab preferred. One of them said, ‘It is forbidden to delve into that because delving into that is a means leading to argumentation and that would lead to mentioning the Prophets in a way which is not appropriate and might lessen the respect due to them.’ Our shaykh said that it means that one does not say, ‘The Prophet is better than all the other Prophets,’ which is the literal prohibition because that that might lead to deprecation of the other Prophets. The prohibition is about using the expression, not about what one might believe in that way. Allah has reported that the Prophets vary in excellence. One should not say, ‘Our Prophet is better than the Prophets,’ nor that he is better than a certain Prophet, in order to avoid what has been forbidden and to show proper courtesy and to act in accordance with belief in what the Qur’an contains of preference. Allah is the One who knows the realities of things.

The best that is said is that the prohibition of preference is in respect of the reality of Prophethood itself which is one trait in which there is no rivalry. Rivalry exists in increased states, election, miracles, and kindnesses, not in the fact of Prophethood itself. That is why there are Messengers and ‘those with resolve’, the one Allah took as a Friend, the one He spoke to, and those He raised in rank. Allah says: ‘We favoured some of the Prophets over others’ (17:55) and ‘These Messengers: We favoured some over others.’

This is excellent and combines the ḥadīths without need for any abrogation. Saying that some are favoured over others is based on virtuous qualities and means. Ibn ‘Abbās indicated that when he said, ‘Allah preferred Muḥammad over the Prophets and over the people of heaven.’ They asked, ‘Ibn ‘Abbās, what is his being favoured over the people of heaven?’ He replied, ‘Allah Almighty says: “Were any of them to say, ‘I am a god apart from Him,’ We would repay him with Hell. That is how We repayment the wrongdoers.” (21:29) He said to Muḥammad: “Truly We have granted you a clear victory, so that Allah may forgive you your earlier errors and any later ones.” (48:1)’ They asked, ‘What is his being favoured over the Prophets?’ He said, ‘Allah says: “We have not sent any Messenger except with the language of his people” (14:4) and He said to Muḥammad ﷺ: “We only sent you to the whole of mankind.” (35:28) He sent him to both jinn and men.’ Abū Muḥammad ad-Dārimī mentioned this in his Musnad.

Abū Hurayrah said, ‘The best of the sons of Ādam are Nūḥ, Ibrāhīm, Mūsā and Muḥammad. They are “those with resolve” among the Messengers.’ These are texts from Ibn ‘Abbās and Abū Hurayrah about specification. It is known that the Messengers are better than those who were not sent with a Message. The one who is sent is favoured over others by the Message while he is equal in Prophethood regarding what the Messengers encounter of their nations’ denial and being killed by them. This is not hidden.

However, Abū Muḥammad ‘Abd al-Ḥaqq ibn ‘Aṭīyah said, ‘The Qur’an demands preference. That is in general without any specification of anyone less favoured. That is also the case in the ḥadīths. That is why the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘I am the most honoured of the sons of Ādam with my Lord’ and ‘I am the master of the sons of Ādam.’ He was not specific. The Prophet ﷺ said, ‘No one should say that I am better than Yūnus ibn Mattā’ and ‘Do not prefer me to Mūsā.’ Ibn ‘Aṭīyah said, ‘This is a strong prohibition against specifying the less favoured because Yūnus was a young man and caved in under the burdens of Prophethood. If the Prophet ﷺ did not express that, neither should anyone else.’

Allah willing, what we prefer is better. When Allah reported that He favoured some over others, He made some of the rivalry clear and mentioned the circumstances in which others were favoured. He says: ‘Allah spoke directly to some of them and raised some of them in rank. We gave Clear Signs to ‘Īsā, the son of Maryam’ (2:253); ‘We gave Dāwud the Psalms’ (17:55); ‘We gave him the Gospel’ (5:46), ‘We gave to Mūsā and Hārūn the Discrimination and a Shining Light and a Reminder to those who are godfearing’ (21:480; ‘We gave knowledge to Dāwud and to Sulaymān’ (27:15); and ‘When We made a covenant with all the Prophets – with you and with Nūḥ.’;(33:7) So He was general and then specific. He began with Muḥammad ﷺ. This is clear.

That is similar to what was said about the Companions. They shared in being Companions of the Prophet ﷺ and then were distinct with respect to the virtues Allah bestowed on them in the form of gifts and means. By those gifts they vary in excellence although they are all Companions, upright and praised. How excellent are the words of Allah: ‘Muhammad is the Messenger of Allah, and those who are with him are fierce to the unbelievers...’ (48:29) He says: ‘He bound them to the expression of taqwā which they had the most right to and were most entitled to.’ (48:26) He says: ‘Those of you who gave and fought before the Victory are not the same.’ (57:10) He says: ‘Allah was pleased with the believers when they pledged allegiance under the tree.’ (48:18) So He was general and then specific. He forbade disgrace and deprecation. May Allah be pleased with all of them and provide us with love for them!

Allah spoke directly to some of them.

The one to whom Allah spoke was Mūsa. The Messenger of Allah ﷺ was asked about Ādam and whether he was a sent Prophet. He said, ‘He was a Prophet who was spoken to.’ Ibn ‘Aṭīyah said, ‘The interpretation of people regarding this is that Ādam was spoken to in the Garden and so the special quality of Mūsā remains.’

and raised up some of them in rank.

An-Naḥḥās said, ‘Some of the commentators, including Ibn ‘Abbās, ash-Sha‘bī and Mujāhid, said that this refers to Muḥammad ﷺ. He said, “I was sent to the red and black (i.e. all mankind), the earth was made a mosque for me, I was helped by terror at the distance of a month’s travel, booty was made lawful for me, and I was given intercession.”’ His marks of distinction include the Qur’an, the splitting of the moon, the tree speaking to him, his feeding a lot of people from a few dates, and his obtaining milk from the sheep of Umm Ma‘bad after its milk had dried up. Ibn ‘Aṭīyah said this and added, ‘He is the person with the largest community and by him all the Prophets are sealed, not to mention other aspects of the great and noble character which Allah granted him.’ It is possible that it means both Muhammad ﷺ and others whose signs are great. It is possible that it refers to Allah’s statement that He raised Idrīs up to a high place and to the ranks of the Prophets in the heavens as reported in the ḥadīth of the Mi‘rāj.

We gave Clear Signs to ‘Īsā, son of Maryam,

The clear signs of ‘Īsā were bringing the dead to life, healing the blind and lepers, and creating a bird of clay as we read in the Qur’an.

and reinforced him with the Purest Rūḥ.’

‘The Purest Rūḥ’ is Jibrīl as already stated.

If Allah had willed, those who came after them would not have fought each other

By ‘them’ Allah means the Messengers. It is said that the pronoun ‘them’ refers specifically to Mūsā and ‘Īsā. It is said that it is all the Messengers after them, which is the literal meaning of the āyah. It is said that fighting refers to what was done by people after they had all passed away but this is not the meaning. What is meant is people fighting one another after the time of the Prophet concerned. People fell into disagreement after each Prophet. Some believed, and some rejected out of rebellion, envy and desire for worldly goods. All of that is by the decree and will of Allah. If He had willed differently, whatever He had willed would have happened, but the secret in this matter is that He did not will other than what occurred.

1. Translator's note
2. 2. Sūrat al-Baqarah – The Cow 142 – 253
 1. 142 The fools among the people will ask, 'What has made them turn round from the direction they used to face?' Say, 'Both East and West belong to Allah. He guides whoever He wills to a straight path.'
 1. 143 In this way We have made you a middlemost community, so that you may act as witnesses against mankind and the Messenger as a witness against you. We only appointed the direction you used to face in order to know those who follow the Messenger from those who turn round on their heels. Though in truth it is a very hard thing – except for those Allah has guided. Allah would never let your faith go to waste. Allah is All-Gentle, Most Merciful to mankind.
 2. 144 We have seen you looking up into heaven, turning this way and that, so We will turn you towards a direction which will please you. Turn your face, therefore, towards the Masjid al-Harām. Wherever you all are, turn your faces towards it. Those given the Book know it is the truth from their Lord. Allah is not unaware of what they do.
 3. 145 If you were to bring every Sign to those given the Book, they still would not follow your direction. You do not follow their direction. They do not follow each other's direction. If you followed their whims and desires, after the knowledge that has - come to you, you would then be one of the wrongdoers.

4. 146 Those We have given the Book recognise it as they recognise their own sons. Yet a group of them knowingly conceal the truth.
 5. 147 The truth is from your Lord, so on no account be among the doubters.
 6. 148. Each person faces a particular direction so race each other to the good. Wherever you are, Allah will bring you all together. Truly Allah has power over all things.
 7. 149 Wherever you come from, turn your face to the Masjid al-Harām. This is certainly the truth from your Lord. Allah is not unaware of what you do. 150 Wherever you come from, turn your face to the Masjid al-Harām. Wherever you are, turn your faces towards it so that people will have no argument against you – except for those among them who do wrong and then you should not fear them but rather fear Me – and so that I can complete My blessing to you so that hopefully you will be guided.
 8. 151 For this We sent a Messenger to you from among you to recite Our Signs to you and purify you and teach you the Book and Wisdom and teach you things you did not know before.
 9. 152 Remember Me – I will remember you. Give thanks to Me and do not be ungrateful. 153 You who believe! seek help in steadfastness and the prayer. Allah is with the steadfast.
 10. 154 Do not say that those who are killed in the Way of Allah are dead. On the contrary, they are alive but you are not aware of it.

11. 155 We will test you with a certain amount of fear and hunger and loss of wealth and life and fruits. But give good news to the steadfast:
12. 156 Those who, when disaster strikes them, say, 'We belong to Allah and to Him we will return. 157 Those are the people who will have blessings and mercy from their Lord; they are the ones who are guided.
13. 158 Şafā and Marwah are among the Landmarks of Allah, so anyone who goes on ḥajj to the House or does 'umrah incurs no wrong in going back and forth between them. If anyone spontaneously does good, Allah is All-Thankful, All-Knowing.
14. 159 Those who hide the Clear Signs and Guidance We have sent down, after We have made it clear to people in the Book, Allah curses them, and the cursers curse them –
15. 160 except for those who sincerely repent and put things right and make things clear. I turn towards them. I am the Ever-Returning, the Most Merciful.
16. 161 But as for those who are unbelievers and die unbelievers, the curse of Allah is upon them and that of the angels and all mankind. 162 They will be under it for ever. The punishment will not be lightened for them. They will be granted no reprieve.
17. 163 Your God is One God. 'There is no god but Him, the All-Merciful, the Most Merciful.
18. 164 In the creation of the heavens and earth, and the alternation of the night and day, and the ships which sail the seas to people's benefit, and the water which Allah sends down from the sky – by which He brings the earth to life when it was dead and scatters about in it creatures of every kind – and the varying direction of the winds, and the clouds subservient between heaven and earth, there are Signs for people who use their intellect.

19. 165 Some people set up equals to Allah, loving them as they should love Allah. But those who believe have greater love for Allah. If only you could see those who do wrong at the time when they see the punishment, and that truly all strength belongs to Allah, and that Allah is severe in punishment.
20. 166 When those who were followed disown those who followed them, and they see the punishment, and the connection between them is cut,
21. 167 those who followed will say, ‘If only we could have another chance, we would disown them just as they have disowned us.’ In that way Allah will show them their actions as a cause of anguish and remorse for them. They will never emerge from the Fire.
22. 168 Mankind! eat what is good and lawful on the earth. And do not follow in the footsteps of Shayṭān. He truly is an outright enemy to you.
23. 169 He only commands you to do evil and indecent acts and to say about Allah what you do not know.
24. 170 When they are told, ‘Follow what Allah has sent down to you,’ They say, ‘We are following what we found our fathers doing.’ What, even though their fathers did not understand a thing and were not guided!
25. 171 The likeness of those who disbelieve is that of someone who yells out to something which cannot

- hear it is nothing but a cry and a call. Deaf – dumb – blind. They do not use their intellect.
26. 172 You who believe! eat of the good things We have provided for you and give thanks to Allah if you worship Him alone.
 27. 173 He has only forbidden you carrion, blood and pork and what has been consecrated to other than Allah But anyone who is forced to eat it – without desiring it or going to excess in it – commits no crime. Allah is Ever-Forgiving, Most Merciful.
 28. 174 Those who conceal what Allah has sent down of the Book and sell it cheap, take nothing into their bellies but the Fire. On the Day of Rising Allah will not speak to them or purify them. They will have a painful punishment.
 29. 175 Those are the ones who have sold guidance for misguidance and forgiveness for punishment. How steadfastly they will endure the Fire!
 30. 176 That is because Allah has sent down the Book with truth and those who differ from the Book are entrenched in hostility.
 31. 177 True goodness does not lie in turning your faces to the East or to the West. Rather, those with true goodness are those who believe in Allah and the Last Day, the Angels, the Book and the Prophets, and who, despite their love for it, give away their wealth to their relatives and to orphans and the very poor, and to travellers and beggars and to set slaves free, and who establish the prayer and pay zakat; those who honour their contracts when they make them, and are steadfast in poverty and illness and in battle.

- Those are the people who are true. They are the people who are godfearing.
32. 178 You who believe! retaliation is prescribed for you in the case of people killed: free man for free man, slave for slave, female for female. But if someone is absolved the thing by his brother, blood-money should be claimed with correctness and paid with good will. That is an easement and a mercy from your Lord. Anyone who goes beyond the limits after this will receive a painful punishment.
 33. 179 There is life for you in retaliation, people of intelligence, so that hopefully you will be godfearing.
 34. 180 It is prescribed for you, when death approaches one of you and if he has some goods to leave, to make a will in favour of his parents and relatives, correctly and fairly: a duty for all those who are godfearing.
 35. 181 Then if anyone alters it after hearing it, the crime is on the part of those who alter it. Allah is All-Hearing, All-Knowing.
 36. 182 But if someone fears bias or wrongdoing on the part of the person making the will, and puts things right between the people involved, in that case he has not committed any crime. Allah is Ever-Forgiving, Most Merciful.
 37. 183 You who believe! fasting is prescribed for you, as it was prescribed for those before you – so that hopefully you will become godfearing – 184 for a specified number of days. But any of you who are ill or on a journey should fast a number of other days. For those who are able to fast [only with difficulty.

and do not fast], their fidyah is to feed the poor. And if someone does good of his own accord, it is better for him. But that you should fast is better for you, If you only knew.

38. 185 The month of Ramadan is the one in which the Qur'an was sent down as guidance for mankind, with Clear Signs containing guidance and discrimination. Any of you who are resident for the month should fast it. But any of you who are ill or on a journey should fast a number of other days. Allah desires ease for you; He does not desire difficulty for you. You should complete the number of days and proclaim Allah's greatness for the guidance He has given you so that hopefully you will be thankful.
39. 186 If My slaves ask you about Me, I am near. I answer the call of the caller when he calls on Me. They should therefore respond to Me and believe in Me so that hopefully they will be rightly guided.
40. 187 On the night of the fast it is lawful for you to have sexual relations with your wives. They are clothing for you and you for them. Allah knows that you have been betraying yourselves and He has turned towards you and excused you. Now you may have sexual intercourse with them and seek what Allah has written for you. Eat and drink until you can clearly discern the white thread from the black thread of the dawn, then fulfil the fast until the night appears. But do not have sexual intercourse with them while you are in retreat in the mosques. These are Allah's limits, so do not go near them. In - this way does Allah make His Signs clear to people so that hopefully they will be godfearing.

41. 188 Do not devour one another's property by false means nor offer it to the judges as a bribe, trying through crime to knowingly usurp a portion of other people's property.
 42. 189 They will ask you about the crescent moons. Say, 'They are set times for mankind and for the hajj.' It is not devoutness for you to enter houses by the back. Rather devoutness is possessed by those who are godfearing. So come to houses by their doors and have fear of Allah, so that hopefully you will be successful.
 43. 190 Fight in the Way of Allah against those who fight you, but do not go beyond the limits. Allah does not love those who go beyond the limits.
 44. 191 Kill them wherever you come across them and expel them from where they expelled you. Fitnah is worse than killing. Do not fight them in the Masjid al-Ḥarām until they fight you there. But if they do fight you, then kill them. That is how the unbelievers should be repaid. 192 But if they cease, Allah is Ever-Forgiving, Most Merciful.
 45. 193 Fight them until there is no more fitnah and the dīn belongs to Allah alone. If they cease, there should be no enmity towards any but wrongdoers.
 46. 194 Sacred month in return for sacred month – sacred things are subject to retaliation. So if anyone oversteps the limits against you, overstep against him the same as he did to you. But have fear of Allah. Know that Allah is with those who are godfearing.

47. 195 Spend in the Way of Allah. Do not cast yourselves into destruction. And do good: Allah loves good-doers.
48. 196 Perform the Ḥajj and ‘umrah for Allah. If you are forcibly prevented, make whatever sacrifice is feasible. But do not shave your heads until the sacrificial animal has reached the place of sacrifice. If any of you are ill or have a head injury, the expiation is fasting or ṣadaqah or sacrifice when you are safe and well again. Anyone who comes out of iḥrām between ‘umrah and ḥajj should make whatever sacrifice is feasible. For any one who cannot, there is three days’ fast on ḥajj. and seven on your return – that is ten in all. That is for anyone whose family does not live near the Masjid al-Ḥarām. Be fearful of Allah and know that Allah is fierce in retribution.
49. 197 The Ḥajj takes place during certain well-known months. If anyone undertakes the obligation of ḥajj in them, there must be no sexual intercourse, no wrongdoing, nor any quarrelling during ḥajj. Whatever good you do, Allah knows it. Take provision; but the best provision is fearful awareness of Allah. So be fearful of Me, people of intelligence!
50. 198 There is nothing wrong in seeking bounty from your Lord. When you pour down from ‘Arafāt, remember Allah at the Sacred Landmark. Remember Him because He has guided you, even though before this you were astray.
51. 199 Then press on from where the people press on and ask Allah’s forgiveness. Allah is Ever-Forgiving, Most Merciful.

52. 200 When you have completed your rites, remember Allah as you used to remember your forefathers, or even more. There are some people who say, 'Our Lord, give us good in this world.' They will have no share in the Next World.
53. 201 And there are others who say, 'Our Lord, give us good in this world, and good in the Next World, and safeguard us from the punishment of the Fire.'
54. 202 They will have a good share from what they have earned. Allah is swift at reckoning.
55. 203 Remember Allah on the designated days. Those who hurry on in two days have done no wrong, and those who stay another day have done no wrong – those of them who are fearful of Allah. Be fearful of Allah. And know that you will be gathered back to Him.
56. 204 Among the people there is someone whose words about the life of this world excite your admiration, and he calls Allah to witness what is in his heart, while he is in fact the most hostile of adversaries.
57. 205 When he leaves you, he goes about the earth corrupting it, destroying crops and animals Allah does not love corruption.
58. 206 When he is told to be fearful of Allah, he is seized by a feeling of might which drives him to wrongdoing. Hell will be enough for him! What an evil resting-place!
59. 207 And among the people there are some who give up everything, desiring the good pleasure of Allah. Allah is Ever-Gentle with His slaves.

60. 208 You who believe! enter Islam totally. Do not follow in the footsteps of Shayṭān. He is an outright enemy to you.
61. 209 If you backslide after the Clear Signs have come to you, know that Allah is Almighty, All-Wise.
62. 210 What are they waiting for but for Allah to come to them in the shadows of the clouds, together with the angels, in which case the matter will have been settled? All matters return to Allah.
63. 211 Ask the tribe of Israel how many Clear Signs We gave to them. If anyone alters Allah's blessing after it has come to him, Allah is fierce in retribution.
64. 212 To those who disbelieve, the life of this world is painted in glowing colours and they laugh at those who believe. But on the Day of Rising those who fear Allah will be over them. Allah provides for whomever He wills without any reckoning.
65. 213 Mankind was a single community. Then Allah sent out Prophets, bringing good news and giving warning, and with them He sent down the Book with truth to decide between people regarding their differences. Only those who were given it differed about it, after the Clear Signs had come to them, envying one another. Then, by His permission, Allah guided those who believed to the truth of that about which they had differed. Allah guides whoever He wills to a straight path.
66. 214 Or did you suppose that you would enter the Garden without facing the same as those who came before you? Poverty and illness afflicted them and they were shaken to the point that the Messenger and those who believed with him said, 'When is

 1. 215 They will ask you what they should give away. Say, 'Any wealth you give away should go to your parents and relatives and to orphans and the very poor and travellers.' Whatever good you do, Allah knows it.
 2. 216 Fighting is prescribed for you even if it is hateful to you. It may be that you hate something when it is good for you and it may be that you love something when it is bad for you. Allah knows and you do not know.
 3. 217 They will ask you about the Sacred Month and fighting in it. Say, 'Fighting in it is a serious matter; but barring access to the Way of Allah and rejecting Him and barring access to the Masjid al-Harām and expelling its people from it are far more serious in the sight of Allah. Fitnah is worse than killing.' They will not stop fighting you until they make you revert from your dīn, if they are able. As for any of you who revert from their dīn and die unbelievers, their actions will come to nothing in this world and the Next. They are the Companions of the Fire, remaining in it timelessly, for ever. 218 Those who believe and make hijrah and do jihād in the Way of Allah can expect Allah's mercy. Allah is Ever-Forgiving, Most Merciful.
 4. 219 They will ask you about alcoholic drinks and gambling. Say, 'There is great wrong in both of them and also certain benefits for mankind. But the wrong in them is greater than the benefit.' They will ask you what they should give away. Say, 'Whatever - is surplus to your needs.’ In this way Allah makes the Signs clear to you, so that hopefully you will reflect.

5. 220 ...on this world and the Next. They will ask you about the property of orphans. Say, ‘Managing it in their best interests is best.’ If you mix your property with theirs, they are your brothers. Allah knows a squanderer from a good manager. If Allah had wanted, He could have been hard on you. Allah is Almighty, All-Wise.
 6. 221 Do not marry women of the idolaters until they believe. A slavegirl who is one of the believers is better for you than a woman of the idolaters, even though she may attract you. And do not give [your women] in marriage to men of the idolaters until they believe. A slave who is one of the believers is better for you than a man of the idolaters, even though he may attract you. Such people call you to the Fire whereas Allah calls you, with His permission, to the Garden and forgiveness. He makes His Signs clear to people so that hopefully they will pay heed.
 7. 222 They will ask you about menstruation. Say, ‘It is an impurity, so keep apart from women during menstruation and do not approach them until they have purified themselves. But once they have purified themselves, then go to them in the way that Allah has enjoined on you.’ Allah loves those who turn back from wrongdoing and He loves those who purify themselves.
 8. 223 Your women are fertile fields for you, so come to your fertile fields however you like. Send good ahead for yourselves and be fearful of Allah. Know that - you are going to meet Him. And give good news to the believers.

9. 224 Do not, by your oaths, make Allah a pretext to avoid good action and being fearful of Him and putting things right between people. Allah is All-Hearing, All-Knowing.
 10. 225 Allah will not take you to task for careless statements in your oaths, but He will take you to task for the intention your hearts have made. Allah is Ever-Forgiving, All-Forbearing.
 12. 228 Divorced women should wait by themselves for three menstrual cycles; and it is not lawful for them to conceal what Allah has created in their wombs if they believe in Allah and the Last Day. Their husbands have the right to take them back within that time, if they desire to be reconciled. Women possess rights similar to those held over them to be honoured with fairness; but men have a degree above them. Allah is Almighty, All-Wise.
 13. 229 Divorce can be pronounced two times; in which case wives may be retained with correctness and courtesy or released with good will. It is not lawful for you to keep anything you have given them unless a couple fear that they will not remain within Allah's limits. If you fear that they will not remain within Allah's limits, there is nothing wrong in the wife

- ransoming herself with some of what she received. These are Allah's limits so do not overstep them. Those who overstep Allah's limits are wrongdoers.
14. 230 But if a man divorces his wife a third time, she is not lawful for him after that until she has married another husband. Then if he divorces her, there is nothing wrong in the original couple getting back together provided they think they will remain within Allah's limits. These are Allah's limits which he has made clear to people who know.
 15. 231 When you divorce women and they reach the end of their waiting period, then either retain them with correctness and courtesy or release them with correctness and courtesy. Do not retain them by force, thus overstepping the limits. Anyone who does that has wronged himself. Do not make a mockery of Allah's Signs. Remember Allah's blessing to you and the Book and Wisdom He has sent down to you to admonish you. Be fearful of Allah and know that Allah has knowledge of all things.
 16. 232 When you divorce women and they reach the end of their waiting period, do not prevent them from marrying their first husbands if they have mutually agreed to it with correctness and courtesy. This is an admonition for those of you who believe in Allah and the Last Day. That is better and purer for you. Allah knows and you do not know.
 17. 233 Mothers should nurse their children for two full years – those who wish to complete the full term of nursing. It is the duty of the fathers to feed and clothe them with correctness and courtesy – no self is charged with more than it can bear. No mother should be put under pressure in respect of her child nor any father in respect of his child. The same duty is incumbent on the heir. If the couple both wish weaning to take place after mutual agreement and consultation, there is nothing wrong in their doing that. If you wish to find wet-nurses for your children, there is nothing wrong in your doing that provided you hand over to them what you have agreed to give with correctness and courtesy. Be fearful of Allah and know that Allah sees what you do.

18. 234 Those of you who die leaving wives behind: they should wait by themselves for four months and ten nights. When their waiting period comes to an end, you are not to blame for anything they do with themselves with correctness and courtesy. Allah is aware of what you do.
19. 235 Nor is there anything wrong in any allusion to marriage you make to a woman, nor for any you keep to yourself. Allah knows that you will say things to them. But do not make secret arrangements with them, rather only speak with correctness and courtesy. Do not finally decide on the marriage contract until the prescribed period has come to its end. Know that Allah knows what is in your selves, so beware of Him! And know that Allah is Ever-Forgiving, All-Forbearing.
20. 236 There is nothing wrong in your divorcing women before you have touched them or allotted a dower to them. But give them a gift – he who is wealthy according to his means and he who is less - well off according to his means – a gift to be given with correctness and courtesy: a duty for all good-doers.

21. 237 If you divorce them before you have touched them but have already allotted them a dower, they should have half the amount which you allotted, unless they forgo it or the one in charge of the marriage contract forgoes it. To forgo it is closer to taqwā. Do not forget to show generosity to one another. Allah sees what you do.
 22. 238 Safeguard the prayer – especially the middle one. Stand in obedience to Allah.
 23. 239 If you are afraid, then do the prayer on foot or mounted. But when you are safe, remember Allah in the way He taught you when previously you did not know.
 24. 240 Those of you who die leaving wives behind should make a bequest to their wives of maintenance for a year without them having to leave their homes But if they do leave you are not to blame for anything they do with themselves with correctness and courtesy. Allah is Almighty, All-Wise.
 25. 241 Divorced women should receive maintenance given with correctness and courtesy: a duty for all who are godfearing. 242 In this way Allah makes His Signs clear to you, so that hopefully you will use your intellect.
 26. 243 What do you think about those who left their homes in thousands in fear of death? Allah said to them, ‘Die!’ and then brought them back to life. Allah shows great favour to mankind, but most people are not grateful.

27. 244 Fight in the Way of Allah. Know that Allah is All-Hearing, All-Knowing.
28. 245 Is there anyone who will make Allah a generous loan so that He can multiply it for him many times over? Allah both restricts and expands. And you will be returned to Him.
29. 246 What do you think about the council of the tribe of Israel after Mūsā's time when they said to one of their Prophets, 'Give us a king and we will fight in the Way of Allah!?' He said, 'Is it not possible that if fighting were prescribed for you, you would not fight?' They said, 'How could we not fight in the way of Allah when we have been driven from our homes and children?' But then when fighting was prescribed for them, they turned their backs – except for a few of them. Allah knows the wrongdoers.
30. 247 Their Prophet said to them, 'Allah has appointed Ṭālūt to be your king.' They said, 'How can he have kingship over us when we have much more right to kingship than he does? He has not even got much wealth!' He said, 'Allah has chosen him over you and increased him greatly in knowledge and physical strength. Allah gives kingship to anyone He wills. Allah is All-Encompassing, All-Knowing.'
31. 248 Their Prophet said to them, 'The sign of his kingship is that the Ark will come to you, containing serenity from your Lord and certain relics left by the families of Mūsā and Hārūn. It will be borne by angels. There is a sign for you in that if you are believers.'

32. 249 When Tālūt marched out with the army, he said, ‘Allah will test you with a river. Anyone who drinks from it is not with me. But anyone who does not taste it is with me – except for him who merely scoops up a little in his hand.’ But they drank from it – except for a few of them. Then when he and those who believed with him had crossed it, they said, ‘We do not have the strength to face Jālūt and his troops today.’ But those who were sure that they were going to meet Allah said, ‘How many a small force has triumphed over a much greater one by Allah’s permission! Allah is with the steadfast.
33. 250 When they came out against Jālūt and his troops, they said, ‘Our Lord, pour down steadfastness upon us, and make our feet firm, and help us against this unbelieving people.’
34. 251 And with Allah’s permission they routed them. Dāwud killed Jālūt and Allah gave him kingship and wisdom and taught him whatever He willed. If it were not for Allah’s driving some people back by means of others, the earth would have been corrupted. But Allah shows favour to all the worlds.
35. 252 Those are Allah’s Signs which We recite to you with truth. You are indeed one of the Messengers.
36. 253 These Messengers: We favoured some of them over others. Allah spoke directly to some of them and raised up some of them in rank. We gave Clear Signs to ‘Īsā, son of Maryam, and reinforced him with the Purest Rūḥ. If Allah had willed, those who came after them would not have fought each other after the Clear Signs came to them, but they differed. Among them there are those who believe and among them there are those who disbelieve. If Allah had willed, they would not have fought each other. But Allah does whatever He desires.

2. Sūrat al-Baqarah – The Cow 142 – 253	7
142 The fools among the people will ask, 'What has made them turn round from the direction they used to face?' Say, 'Both East and West belong to Allah. He guides whoever He wills to a straight path.'	7
143 In this way We have made you a middlemost community, so that you may act as witnesses against mankind and the Messenger as a witness against you. We only appointed the direction you used to face in order to know those who follow the Messenger from those who turn round on their heels. Though in truth it is a very hard thing – except for those Allah has guided. Allah would never let your faith go to waste. Allah is All-Gentle, Most Merciful to mankind.	13
144 We have seen you looking up into heaven, turning this way and that, so We will turn you towards a direction which will please you. Turn your face, therefore, towards the Masjid al-Ḥarām. Wherever you all are, turn your faces towards it. Those given the Book know it is the truth from their Lord. Allah is not unaware of what they do.	18
145 If you were to bring every Sign to those given the Book, they still would not follow your direction. You do not follow their direction. They do not follow each other's direction. If you followed their whims and desires, after the knowledge that has come to you, you would then be one of the wrongdoers.	20

- 146 Those We have given the Book recognise it as they 21 recognise their own sons. Yet a group of them knowingly conceal the truth.
- 147 The truth is from your Lord, so on no account be 22
 among the doubters.
148. Each person faces a particular direction so race each 23 other to the good. Wherever you are, Allah will bring you all together. Truly Allah has power over all things.
- 149 Wherever you come from, turn your face to the 26
 Masjid al-Ḥarām. This is certainly the truth from your Lord. Allah is not unaware of what you do. 150 Wherever you come from, turn your face to the Masjid al-Ḥarām.
 Wherever you are, turn your faces towards it so that people will have no argument against you – except for those among them who do wrong and then you should not fear them but rather fear Me – and so that I can complete My blessing to you so that hopefully you will be guided.
- 151 For this We sent a Messenger to you from among you 28 to recite Our Signs to you and purify you and teach you the Book and Wisdom and teach you things you did not know before.
- 152 Remember Me – I will remember you. Give thanks 29 to Me and do not be ungrateful. 153 You who believe! seek help in steadfastness and the prayer. Allah is with the steadfast.
- 154 Do not say that those who are killed in the Way of 31 Allah are dead. On the contrary, they are alive but you are not aware of it.
- 155 We will test you with a certain amount of fear and 32 hunger and loss of wealth and life and fruits. But give good news to the steadfast:

156 Those who, when disaster strikes them, say, ‘We belong to Allah and to Him we will return. 157 Those are the people who will have blessings and mercy from their Lord; they are the ones who are guided. 33

158 Şafā and Marwah are among the Landmarks of Allah, so anyone who goes on ḥajj to the House or does ‘umrah incurs no wrong in going back and forth between them. If anyone spontaneously does good, Allah is All-Thankful, All-Knowing. 36

159 Those who hide the Clear Signs and Guidance We have sent down, after We have made it clear to people in the Book, Allah curses them, and the cursers curse them – 41

160 except for those who sincerely repent and put things right and make things clear. I turn towards them. I am the Ever-Returning, the Most Merciful. 45

161 But as for those who are unbelievers and die unbelievers, the curse of Allah is upon them and that of the angels and all mankind. 162 They will be under it for ever. The punishment will not be lightened for them. They will be granted no reprieve. 46

164 In the creation of the heavens and earth, and the alternation of the night and day, and the ships which sail the seas to people’s benefit, and the water which Allah sends down from the sky – by which He brings the earth to life when it was dead and scatters about in it creatures of every kind – and the varying direction of the winds, and the clouds subservient between heaven and earth, there are Signs for people who use their intellect. 50

- 165 Some people set up equals to Allah, loving them as they should love Allah. But those who believe have greater love for Allah. If only you could see those who do wrong at the time when they see the punishment, and that truly all strength belongs to Allah, and that Allah is severe in punishment. 60
- 166 When those who were followed disown those who followed them, and they see the punishment, and the connection between them is cut, 62
- 167 those who followed will say, ‘If only we could have another chance, we would disown them just as they have disowned us.’ In that way Allah will show them their actions as a cause of anguish and remorse for them. They will never emerge from the Fire. 63
- 168 Mankind! eat what is good and lawful on the earth. And do not follow in the footsteps of Shayṭān. He truly is an outright enemy to you. 64
- 169 He only commands you to do evil and indecent acts and to say about Allah what you do not know. 65
- 170 When they are told, ‘Follow what Allah has sent down to you,’ They say, ‘We are following what we found our fathers doing.’ What, even though their fathers did not understand a thing and were not guided! 66
- 171 The likeness of those who disbelieve is that of someone who yells out to something which cannot hear it is nothing but a cry and a call. Deaf – dumb – blind. They do not use their intellect. 70
- 172 You who believe! eat of the good things We have provided for you and give thanks to Allah if you worship Him alone. 71
- 173 He has only forbidden you carrion, blood and pork 72 and what has been consecrated to other than Allah But anyone who is forced to eat it – without desiring it or going to excess in it – commits no crime. Allah is Ever-Forgiving, Most Merciful.

174 Those who conceal what Allah has sent down of the Book and sell it cheap, take nothing into their bellies but the Fire. On the Day of Rising Allah will not speak to them or purify them. They will have a painful punishment. 92

175 Those are the ones who have sold guidance for misguidance and forgiveness for punishment. How steadfastly they will endure the Fire! 93

176 That is because Allah has sent down the Book with truth and those who differ from the Book are entrenched in hostility. 94

177 True goodness does not lie in turning your faces to the East or to the West. Rather, those with true goodness are those who believe in Allah and the Last Day, the Angels, the Book and the Prophets, and who, despite their love for it, give away their wealth to their relatives and to orphans and the very poor, and to travellers and beggars and to set slaves free, and who establish the prayer and pay zakat; those who honour their contracts when they make them, and are steadfast in poverty and illness and in battle. Those are the people who are true. They are the people who are godfearing. 95

178 You who believe! retaliation is prescribed for you in the case of people killed: free man for free man, slave for slave, female for female. But if someone is absolved the thing by his brother, blood-money should be claimed with correctness and paid with good will. That is an 99

easement and a mercy from your Lord. Anyone who goes beyond the limits after this will receive a painful punishment.

179 There is life for you in retaliation, people of intelligence, so that hopefully you will be godfearing. 114

180 It is prescribed for you, when death approaches one of you and if he has some goods to leave, to make a will in favour of his parents and relatives, correctly and fairly: a duty for all those who are godfearing. 115

181 Then if anyone alters it after hearing it, the crime is on the part of those who alter it. Allah is All-Hearing, All-Knowing. 127

182 But if someone fears bias or wrongdoing on the part of the person making the will, and puts things right between the people involved, in that case he has not committed any crime. Allah is Ever-Forgiving, Most Merciful. 128

183 You who believe! fasting is prescribed for you, as it was prescribed for those before you – so that hopefully you will become godfearing – 184 for a specified number of days. But any of you who are ill or on a journey should fast a number of other days. For those who are able to fast [only with difficulty and do not fast], their fidyah is to feed the poor. And if someone does good of his own accord, it is better for him. But that you should fast is better for you, If you only knew. 130 number of other days. Allah desires ease for you; He does not desire difficulty for you. You should complete the number of days and proclaim Allah's greatness for the guidance He has given you so that hopefully you will be thankful.

185 The month of Ramadan is the one in which the Qur'an was sent down as guidance for mankind, with Clear Signs containing guidance and discrimination. Any of you who are resident for the month should fast it. But any of you who are ill or on a journey should fast a 150

186 If My slaves ask you about Me, I am near. I answer the call of the caller when he calls on Me. They should therefore respond to Me and believe in Me so that hopefully they will be rightly guided. 168

187 On the night of the fast it is lawful for you to have sexual relations with your wives. They are clothing for you and you for them. Allah knows that you have been betraying yourselves and He has turned towards you and excused you. Now you may have sexual intercourse with them and seek what Allah has written for you. Eat and drink until you can clearly discern the white thread from the black thread of the dawn, then fulfil the fast until the night appears. But do not have sexual intercourse with them while you are in retreat in the mosques. These are Allah's limits, so do not go near them. In this way does Allah make His Signs clear to people so that hopefully they will be godfearing. 176

188 Do not devour one another's property by false means nor offer it to the judges as a bribe, trying through crime to knowingly usurp a portion of other people's property. 202

189 They will ask you about the crescent moons. Say, 'They are set times for mankind and for the ḥajj.' It is not devoutness for you to enter houses by the back. Rather devoutness is possessed by those who are godfearing. So come to houses by their doors and have fear of Allah, so that hopefully you will be successful. 206

- 190 Fight in the Way of Allah against those who fight you, but do not go beyond the limits. Allah does not love those who go beyond the limits. 211
- 191 Kill them wherever you come across them and expel them from where they expelled you. Fitnah is worse than killing. Do not fight them in the Masjid al-Ḥarām until they fight you there. But if they do fight you, then kill them. That is how the unbelievers should be repaid. 192 But if they cease, Allah is Ever-Forgiving, Most Merciful. 216
- 193 Fight them until there is no more fitnah and the dīn belongs to Allah alone. If they cease, there should be no enmity towards any but wrongdoers. 219
- 194 Sacred month in return for sacred month – sacred things are subject to retaliation. So if anyone oversteps the limits against you, overstep against him the same as he did to you. But have fear of Allah. Know that Allah is with those who are godfearing. 220
- 195 Spend in the Way of Allah. Do not cast yourselves into destruction. And do good: Allah loves good-doers. 228
- 196 Perform the Ḥajj and ‘umrah for Allah. If you are forcibly prevented, make whatever sacrifice is feasible. But do not shave your heads until the sacrificial animal has reached the place of sacrifice. If any of you are ill or have a head injury, the expiation is fasting or ṣadaqah or sacrifice when you are safe and well again. Anyone who comes out of iḥrām between ‘umrah and ḥajj should make whatever sacrifice is feasible. For any one who cannot, there is three days’ fast on ḥajj. and seven on your return – that is ten in all. That is for anyone whose family does not live near the Masjid al-Ḥarām. Be fearful of Allah and know that Allah is fierce in retribution. 233

- 197 The Ḥajj takes place during certain well-known months. If anyone undertakes the obligation of ḥajj in them, there must be no sexual intercourse, no wrongdoing, nor any quarrelling during ḥajj. Whatever good you do, Allah knows it. Take provision; but the best provision is fearful awareness of Allah. So be fearful of Me, people of intelligence! 281
- 198 There is nothing wrong in seeking bounty from your Lord. When you pour down from ‘Arafāt, remember Allah at the Sacred Landmark. Remember Him because He has guided you, even though before this you were astray. 289
- 199 Then press on from where the people press on and ask Allah’s forgiveness. Allah is Ever-Forgiving, Most Merciful. 304
- 200 When you have completed your rites, remember Allah as you used to remember your forefathers, or even more. There are some people who say, ‘Our Lord, give us good in this world.’ They will have no share in the Next World. 308
- 201 And there are others who say, ‘Our Lord, give us good in this world, and good in the Next World, and safeguard us from the punishment of the Fire.’ 310
- 202 They will have a good share from what they have earned. Allah is swift at reckoning. 312
- 203 Remember Allah on the designated days. Those who hurry on in two days have done no wrong, and those who stay another day have done no wrong – those of them who are fearful of Allah. Be fearful of Allah. And know that you will be gathered back to Him. 315
- 204 Among the people there is someone whose words 331

- about the life of this world excite your admiration, and he calls Allah to witness what is in his heart, while he is in fact the most hostile of adversaries.
- 205 When he leaves you, he goes about the earth corrupting it, destroying crops and animals Allah does not love corruption. 334
- 206 When he is told to be fearful of Allah, he is seized by a feeling of might which drives him to wrongdoing. Hell will be enough for him! What an evil resting-place! 336
- 207 And among the people there are some who give up everything, desiring the good pleasure of Allah. Allah is Ever-Gentle with His slaves. 337
- 208 You who believe! enter Islam totally. Do not follow in the footsteps of Shayṭān. He is an outright enemy to you. 339
- 209 If you backslide after the Clear Signs have come to you, know that Allah is Almighty, All-Wise. 342
- 210 What are they waiting for but for Allah to come to them in the shadows of the clouds, together with the angels, in which case the matter will have been settled? All matters return to Allah. 342
- 211 Ask the tribe of Israel how many Clear Signs We gave to them. If anyone alters Allah's blessing after it has come to him, Allah is fierce in retribution. 345
- 212 To those who disbelieve, the life of this world is painted in glowing colours and they laugh at those who believe. But on the Day of Rising those who fear Allah will be over them. Allah provides for whomever He wills without any reckoning. 346
- 213 Mankind was a single community. Then Allah sent out Prophets, bringing good news and giving warning, and with them He sent down the Book with truth to 348

decide between people regarding their differences. Only those who were given it differed about it, after the Clear Signs had come to them, envying one another. Then, by His permission, Allah guided those who believed to the truth of that about which they had differed. Allah guides whoever He wills to a straight path.

214 Or did you suppose that you would enter the Garden without facing the same as those who came before you? Poverty and illness afflicted them and they were shaken to the point that the Messenger and those who believed with him said, ‘When is Allah’s help coming?’ Be assured that Allah’s help is very near. 352

215 They will ask you what they should give away. Say, ‘Any wealth you give away should go to your parents and relatives and to orphans and the very poor and travellers.’ Whatever good you do, Allah knows it. 355

216 Fighting is prescribed for you even if it is hateful to you. It may be that you hate something when it is good for you and it may be that you love something when it is bad for you. Allah knows and you do not know. 356

217 They will ask you about the Sacred Month and fighting in it. Say, ‘Fighting in it is a serious matter; but barring access to the Way of Allah and rejecting Him and barring access to the Masjid al-Ḥarām and expelling its people from it are far more serious in the sight of Allah. Fitnah is worse than killing.’ They will not stop fighting you until they make you revert from your dīn, if they are able. As for any of you who revert from their dīn and die unbelievers, their actions will come to nothing in this world and the Next. They are the Companions of the Fire, remaining in it timelessly, for ever. 218 Those who believe and 358 make hijrah and do jihād in the Way of Allah can expect Allah’s mercy. Allah is Ever-Forgiving, Most Merciful.

219 They will ask you about alcoholic drinks and gambling. Say, ‘There is great wrong in both of them and also certain benefits for mankind. But the wrong in them is greater than the benefit.’ They will ask you what they should give away. Say, ‘Whatever is surplus to your needs.’ In this way Allah makes the Signs clear to you, so that hopefully you will reflect. 370

220 ...on this world and the Next. They will ask you about the property of orphans. Say, ‘Managing it in their best interests is best.’ If you mix your property with theirs, they are your brothers. Allah knows a squanderer from a good manager. If Allah had wanted, He could have been hard on you. Allah is Almighty, All-Wise. 381

221 Do not marry women of the idolaters until they believe. A slavegirl who is one of the believers is better for you than a woman of the idolaters, even though she may attract you. And do not give [your women] in marriage to men of the idolaters until they believe. A slave who is one of the believers is better for you than a man of the idolaters, even though he may attract you. Such people call you to the Fire whereas Allah calls you, with His permission, to the Garden and forgiveness. He makes His Signs clear to people so that hopefully they will pay heed. 387

222 They will ask you about menstruation. Say, ‘It is an impurity, so keep apart from women during menstruation and do not approach them until they have purified themselves. But once they have purified themselves, then go to them in the way that Allah has enjoined on you.’ Allah loves those who turn back from wrongdoing and He loves those who purify themselves. 405

fertile fields however you like. Send good ahead for yourselves and be fearful of Allah. Know that you are going to meet Him. And give good news to the believers.

224 Do not, by your oaths, make Allah a pretext to avoid good action and being fearful of Him and putting things right between people. Allah is All-Hearing, All-Knowing. 424

225 Allah will not take you to task for careless statements in your oaths, but He will take you to task for the intention your hearts have made. Allah is Ever-Forgiving, All-Forbearing. 426

226 Those who swear to abstain from sexual relations with their wives can wait for a period of up to four months. If they then retract their oath, Allah is Ever-Forgiving, Most Merciful. 430

227 If they are determined to divorce, Allah is All-Hearing, All-Knowing.

228 Divorced women should wait by themselves for three menstrual cycles; and it is not lawful for them to conceal what Allah has created in their wombs if they believe in Allah and the Last Day. Their husbands have the right to take them back within that time, if they desire to be reconciled. Women possess rights similar to those held over them to be honoured with fairness; but men have a degree above them. Allah is Almighty, All-Wise. 441

229 Divorce can be pronounced two times; in which case wives may be retained with correctness and courtesy or released with good will. It is not lawful for you to keep anything you have given them unless a couple fear that they will not remain within Allah's limits. If you fear that they will not remain within Allah's limits, there is nothing wrong in the wife ransoming herself with some of what she received. These are Allah's limits so do not overstep them. Those who overstep Allah's limits are wrongdoers. 457

for him after that until she has married another husband. Then if he divorces her, there is nothing wrong in the original couple getting back together provided they think they will remain within Allah's limits. These are Allah's limits which he has made clear to people who know.

231 When you divorce women and they reach the end of their waiting period, then either retain them with correctness and courtesy or release them with correctness and courtesy. Do not retain them by force, thus overstepping the limits. Anyone who does that has wronged himself. Do not make a mockery of 494 Allah's Signs. Remember Allah's blessing to you and the Book and Wisdom He has sent down to you to admonish you. Be fearful of Allah and know that Allah has knowledge of all things.

232 When you divorce women and they reach the end of their waiting period, do not prevent them from marrying their first husbands if they have mutually agreed to it with correctness 498 and courtesy. This is an admonition for those of you who believe in Allah and the Last Day. That is better and purer for you. Allah knows and you do not know.

233 Mothers should nurse their children for two full years – 500 those who wish to complete the full term of nursing. It is the duty of the fathers to feed and clothe them with correctness and courtesy – no self is charged with more than it can bear.
No mother should be put under pressure in respect of her child nor any father in respect of his child. The same duty is incumbent on the heir. If the couple both wish weaning to take place after mutual agreement and consultation, there is nothing wrong in their doing that. If you wish to find wet-nurses for your children, there is nothing wrong in your doing that provided you hand over to them what you have agreed to give with correctness and courtesy. Be fearful of Allah and know that Allah sees what you do.

234 Those of you who die leaving wives behind: they should wait by themselves for four months and ten nights. When their waiting period comes to an end, you are not to blame for anything they do with themselves with correctness and courtesy. Allah is aware of what you do. 516

235 Nor is there anything wrong in any allusion to marriage you make to a woman, nor for any you keep to yourself. Allah knows that you will say things to them. But do not make secret arrangements with them, rather only speak with correctness and courtesy. Do not finally decide on the marriage contract until the prescribed period has come to its end. Know that Allah knows what is in your selves, so beware of Him! And know that Allah is Ever-Forgiving, All-Forbearing. 533

236 There is nothing wrong in your divorcing women before you have touched them or allotted a dower to them. But give them a gift – he who is wealthy according to his means and he who is less well off according to his means – a gift to be given with correctness and courtesy: a duty for all good-doers. 544

237 If you divorce them before you have touched them but have already allotted them a dower, they should have half the amount which you allotted, unless they forgo it or the one in charge of the marriage contract forgoes it. To forgo it is closer to taqwā. Do not forget to show generosity to one another. Allah sees what you do. 553

239 If you are afraid, then do the prayer on foot or mounted. But when you are safe, remember Allah in the way He taught you when previously you did not know. 575

- 240 Those of you who die leaving wives behind should make a bequest to their wives of maintenance for a year without them having to leave their homes But if they do leave you are not to blame for anything they do with themselves with correctness and courtesy. Allah is Almighty, All-Wise. 579
- 241 Divorced women should receive maintenance given with correctness and courtesy: a duty for all who are godfearing. 242 In this way Allah makes His Signs clear to you, so that hopefully you will use your intellect. 582
- 243 What do you think about those who left their homes in thousands in fear of death? Allah said to them, ‘Die!’ and then brought them back to life. Allah shows great favour to mankind, but most people are not grateful. 584
- 244 Fight in the Way of Allah. Know that Allah is All-Hearing, All-Knowing. 591
- 245 Is there anyone who will make Allah a generous loan so that He can multiply it for him many times over? Allah both restricts and expands. And you will be returned to Him. 592
- 246 What do you think about the council of the tribe of Israel after Mūsā’s time when they said to one of their Prophets, ‘Give us a king and we will fight in the Way of Allah!’? He said, ‘Is it not possible that if fighting were prescribed for you, you would not fight?’ They said, ‘How could we not fight in the way of Allah when we have been driven from our homes and children?’ But then when fighting was prescribed for them, they turned their backs – except for a few of them. Allah knows the wrongdoers. 598
- 247 Their Prophet said to them, ‘Allah has appointed Ṭālūt to be your king.’ They said, ‘How can he have kingship over us when we have much more right to kingship than he does? He has not even got much wealth!’ He said, ‘Allah has chosen him 600 over you and increased him greatly in knowledge and physical strength. Allah gives kingship to anyone He wills. Allah is All-Encompassing, All-Knowing.’

248 Their Prophet said to them, ‘The sign of his kingship is that the Ark will come to you, containing serenity from your Lord and certain relics left by the families of Mūsā and Hārūn. It will be borne by angels. There is a sign for you in that if you are believers.’ 603

249 When Tālūt marched out with the army, he said, ‘Allah will test you with a river. Anyone who drinks from it is not with me. But anyone who does not taste it is with me – except for him who merely scoops up a little in his hand.’ But they drank from it – except for a few of them. Then when he and those who believed with him had crossed it, they said, ‘We do not have the strength to face Jālūt and his troops today.’ But those who were sure that they were going to meet Allah said, ‘How many a small force has triumphed over a much greater one by Allah’s permission! Allah is with the steadfast.’ 607

250 When they came out against Jālūt and his troops, they said, ‘Our Lord, pour down steadfastness upon us, and make our feet firm, and help us against this unbelieving people.’ 613

251 And with Allah’s permission they routed them. Dāwud killed Jālūt and Allah gave him kingship and wisdom and taught him whatever He willed. If it were not for Allah’s driving some people back by means of others, the earth would have been corrupted. But Allah shows favour to all the worlds. 614

252 Those are Allah’s Signs which We recite to you with truth. You are indeed one of the Messengers. 620

253 These Messengers: We favoured some of them over others. Allah spoke directly to some of them and raised up some of them in rank. We gave Clear Signs to ‘Īsā, son of Maryam, and 620

reinforced him with the Purest Rūḥ. If Allah had willed, those who came after them would not have fought each other after the Clear Signs came to them, but they differed. Among them there are those who believe and among them there are those who disbelieve. If Allah had willed, they would not have fought each other. But Allah does whatever He desires.

The Publisher have books from both Authentic and Deviant scholars. The Readers are requested to be careful and differentiate such scholars to make sure about the Authenticity of the knowledge. The sufism mentioned here refers to early stage sufism which is entirely different from what it is today. We recommend the reader to read the book "Devil's Deception" by Ibn Jawzi for further clarification on this issue.

TRANSLATOR'S NOTE

The Arabic for the āyats is from the Algerian State edition of the riwāyah of Imam Warsh from the qirā'ah of Imam Nāfi' of Madina, whose recitation is one of the ten mutawātir recitations that are mass-

transmitted from the time of the Prophet ﷺ.

There are minor omissions in the text. Some poems have been omitted which the author quotes to illustrate a point of grammatical usage or as an example of orthography or the usage of a word, often a derivative of the root of the word used in the āyah, but not the actual word used. Often it is difficult to convey the sense in English. Occasionally the author explores a grammatical matter or a tangential issue, and some of these may have been shortened. English grammatical terms used to translate Arabic grammatical terms do not have exactly the same meaning, sometimes rendering a precise translation of them problematic and often obscure.

The end of a juz' may vary by an āyah or two in order to preserve relevant passages.

2. SŪRAT AL-BAQARAH – THE COW 254 – 286

يٰۤاَيُّهَا الَّذِيْنَ ءَامَنُوْا اَنْفِقُوْا مِمَّا رَزَقْنَاكُمْ مِنْ قَبْلِ اَنْ يَّاْتِيَ يَوْمٌ لَا يَبِيعُ
فِيْهِ وَلَا خِئْلَةٌ وَلَا شَفْعَةٌ وَالْكٰفِرُوْنَ هُمُ الظّٰلِمُوْنَ ﴿٢٥٤﴾

254 You who believe! give away some of what We have provided for you before a Day arrives on which there is no trading, no close friendship and no intercession. It is the unbelievers who are the wrongdoers.

Al-Ḥasan said that this āyah refers to obligatory zakāt. Ibn Jurayj and Sa‘īd ibn Jubayr said that it includes both obligatory zakāt and ṣadaqah. Ibn ‘Aṭīyah says that this is sound, but the previous āyahs, which mention fighting and tell us that Allah drives back the unbelievers by means of the believers, makes it probable that this is a recommendation rather than an explicit command. It is in the Way of Allah. That is reinforced by the words at the end: ‘It is the unbelievers who are the wrongdoers,’ meaning: ‘Fight with your lives and also by spending your wealth.’

According to this interpretation, spending wealth is sometimes mandatory and sometimes recommended according to whether jihād is obligatory individually or not. Allah commands His slaves to spend from what He has provided them with and blessed them by, and warns them against withholding from spending until a day comes on which it is not possible to buy or sell or obtain maintenance. It is as He says: ‘He says, “My Lord, if only You would give me a little more time so that I can give ṣadaqah.”’ (63:10)

‘Khullah’ (close friendship) means sincere mutual love. It is derived from the word takhallala, which refers to the interpenetration of secrets between friends. Khilālah, khulālah and khalālah are all words for true friendship and love. A poet says:

How do you connect with someone whose true friendship (khalālah) is like the welcoming shade?

Khullah can also mean sweet herbage. It is said that ‘khullah’ is the bread of camels and salty herbage is their fruit. Khallah means need and poverty. It is also a male camel in its second year, as al-Aṣmā’ī said. An expression says, ‘They brought them a round cake of bread as though it were the foot of a khallah.’ One says of a dead person, ‘May Allah put right the gap (khallah) he has left.’ Khallah is also sour wine. Khillah is the scabbard of a sword. More will be said about the derivation of Khalīl (friend) in Sūrat an-Nisā’. Allah tells us that there will no friendship or intercession in the Next World except by the permission of Allah. Its reality is mercy from Him to honour the one who is permitted to intercede.

Ibn Kathīr and Abū ‘Amr recited ‘bay‘a fīhi walā khullata walā shafā‘ata’ in the accusative without tanwīn. The same is found in 14:31 and 42:23. The rest recite all of that in the nominative and with tanwīn. Having a fathḥah in the general negative embraces all the aspects of this category. It is as if it is an answer to the person who asks, ‘Is there any trading on that day?’ asking a general question which has a general negative response. ‘Lā’ with a negative noun is in the position of one noun in the nominative case by the inceptive whose predicate is ‘on it’. If you wish, you can make it an adjective of ‘Day’. Those who make it nominative put ‘lā’ in the position of ‘laysa’ and give an answer which is not undefined. It is as if it is the answer to someone who asks, ‘Is there trading on it?’ omitting ‘any’. So the answer is not changed from the nominative case. Makkī said, ‘The nominative is preferred because most reciters have it, and it is permitted outside of the Qur’an. [SOME OMISSION]

It is the unbelievers who are the wrongdoers.

‘Unbelievers’ is the inceptive and ‘who’ is a second inceptive and ‘wrongdoers’ is the predicate of the second. If you wish, ‘who’ can be redundant for the distinction and ‘wrongdoers’ is the predicate of ‘unbelievers’. ‘Aṭā’ ibn Dīnār said, ‘Praise be to Allah who said this, and did not say that the wrongdoers are the unbelievers!’

اللَّهُ لَا إِلَهَ إِلَّا هُوَ الْحَيُّ الْقَيُّومُ لَا تَأْخُذُهُ سِنَّةٌ وَلَا نَوْمٌ لَهُ مَا فِي
السَّمَوَاتِ وَمَا فِي الْأَرْضِ مَنْ ذَا الَّذِي يَشْفَعُ عِنْدَهُ إِلَّا بِإِذْنِهِ يَعْلَمُ مَا بَيْنَ
أَيْدِيهِمْ وَمَا خَلْفَهُمْ وَلَا يُحِيطُونَ بِشَيْءٍ مِنْ عِلْمِهِ إِلَّا بِمَا شَاءَ وَسِعَ كُرْسِيُّهُ
السَّمَوَاتِ وَالْأَرْضَ وَلَا يَئُودُهُ حِفْظُهُمَا وَهُوَ الْعَلِيُّ الْعَظِيمُ ﴿٢٥٥﴾

255 Allah, there is no god but Him, the Living, the Self-Sustaining. He is not subject to drowsiness or sleep. Everything in the heavens and the earth belongs to Him. Who can intercede with Him except by His permission? He knows what is before them and what is behind them but they cannot grasp any of His knowledge save what He wills. His Footstool encompasses the heavens and the earth and their preservation does not tire Him. He is the Most High, the Magnificent.

Allah, there is no god but Him,

This is the Throne Verse, the Master of the āyahs of the Qur’an and the greatest āyah. It was revealed at night and the Prophet ﷺ summoned Zayd and he wrote it down. It is related that Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥanafiyyah said, ‘When the Āyat al-Kursī was revealed, every idol in this world prostrated, every king in this world prostrated and the crowns fell from their heads. The shayṭāns fled, hitting one another, and went to Iblīs and told him what was happening among them. He commanded them to investigate what had occurred and they went to Madīnah and heard that the Throne Verse had been revealed.’

The Imams report from Ubayy ibn Ka’b: ‘The Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, “Abu-l-Mundhir! Do you know which verse of the Book of Allah is the greatest?” I said, “Allah and His Messenger know best.”’ He repeated, “Abu-l-Mundhir! Do you know which verse of the Book of Allah is the greatest?” I said, “Allah, there is no god but Him, the Living, the Self-Sustaining.” He struck my chest and said, “May you enjoy this knowledge, Abu-l-Mundhir!” Abū ‘Abdullāh at-Tirmidhī al-Ḥakīm added, ‘By the One Who has my soul in His hand, this āyah has a tongue and two lips with which it proclaims the sanctity of the King at the foot of the Throne.’ Abū ‘Abdullāh said, ‘Allah revealed this āyah and made the reward for its reciter both immediate and later. The immediate reward is that it protects the one who recites it from disasters.’ It is related that Nawf al-Bikālī said, ‘In the Torah the Throne Verse is called the friend of Allah.’ He means that the one who recites it is called ‘dearest’ (‘azīz) in the domains of the heaven and earth.’ When ‘Abd ar-Raḥmān ibn ‘Awf entered his house, he would recite the Āyat al-Kursī in the four comers of his house, intending by that to guard the four sides and to expel Shayṭān from the House.

It is related that ‘Umar wrestled a jinn and threw him to the ground. The jinn said to him, ‘Let me go and I will teach that which will protect you from me.’ He let him go and he said, ‘You will be protected from me by the Throne Verse.’ This is sound. We read in a tradition, ‘If someone recites the Āyat al-Kursī after every prayer, the Master of Majesty and Nobility will take his spirit directly and he will be like one who fights alongside the Prophets of Allah until he is martyred.’ ‘Alī said, ‘I heard your Prophet ﷺ say on the minbar, “If someone recites the Āyat al-Kursī after every prayer, only death keeps him from entering the Garden, and only someone who is true or a worshipper will persist in it. If someone recites it when he goes to bed, Allah will protect him, his neighbour, his neighbour’s neighbour and the houses around him.”’

We find in al-Bukhārī in the story of Abū Hurayrah regarding Shayṭān, when the Prophet ﷺ put him in charge of guarding the zakāt of Ramadan, that he said, ‘Messenger of Allah, he claimed that he would teach me some words by which Allah would benefit me. So

I let him go.’ ‘What were they?’ he asked. He said, ‘He told me, “When you go to bed, recite the Throne Verse from beginning to end.” He told me, “A guardian will continue to watch over you and Shayṭān will not come near you until morning.”’ They were the most eager of people for good. The Prophet ﷺ said, ‘He has told you the truth although he is a liar. Do you know to whom you were speaking the past three nights, Abū Hurayrah?’ ‘No,’ he answered. He said, ‘That was Shayṭān.’

We find in the Musnad of Abū Muḥammad ad-Dārimī that ash-Sha‘bī said that ‘Abdullāh ibn Mas‘ūd said, ‘One of the Companions of Muḥammad ﷺ met a man of the jinn and they wrestled and the human being threw him down. The human told him, ‘I see that you are scrawny and thin, with forearms like those of a dog. Are all the jinn like this or just you?’ He answered, ‘No, by Allah! I am considered one of the strong ones among them! Let us wrestle again. If you throw me down, I will teach you something which will be of benefit to you!’ ‘Yes,’ he replied. So he wrestled and he threw him down. The jinn said, ‘Recite the Throne Verse.’ ‘Yes,’ he agreed. He said, ‘No one recites it in a house but that shayṭān leaves it, breaking wind like a donkey and then will not enter it again until morning.’ Abū Nu‘aym transmitted it from Abū ‘Āṣim ath-Thaqafī from ash-Sha‘bī. Abū ‘Ubaydah mentioned it in the gharīb hadiths of ‘Umar from Abū Mu‘āwiyah from Abū ‘Āṣim ath-Thaqafī from ash-Sha‘bī from ‘Abdullāh. ‘Abdullāh was asked, ‘Was it ‘Umar?’ He said, ‘Who else could it have been but ‘Umar?’

It is reported in at-Tirmidhī from Abū Hurayrah that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘Whoever recites the beginning of Sūrah al-Mu‘min (40:1-3) and the Throne Verse in the morning will be protected until evening. Whoever recites them in the evening will be protected until morning.’ He said that it is a gharīb hadith. Abū ‘Abdullāh at-Tirmidhī al-Ḥakīm said that it is related that the believers are recommended to seek protection by reciting it after

Anas has a marfū‘ hadith going back to the Prophet ﷺ in which he said, ‘Allah revealed to Mūsā: “If someone continues to recite Āyat al-Kursī after every prayer he will be given what the thankful are given: the reward of the Prophets and the actions of the true. I will stretch out my hand to him with mercy, and all that keeps him from entering the Garden is the arrival of the Angel of Death.” Mūsā said, “Lord, is there anyone who hears this who will not persevere in it?” He replied, “Among My slaves I will only give it to a Prophet, a true person, a man I love, or a man I want to be martyred in My Path.”’ It is reported from Ubayy ibn Ka‘b that Allah Almighty said to Musa, ‘Musa, anyone who recites the Āyat al-Kursī after every prayer will be given the reward of the Prophets.’ Abū ‘Abdullāh said, ‘I think that it means that he will be given the reward of the action of the Prophets. None but the Prophets have the reward of Prophethood.’ This āyah contains the truth of tawhīd and the lofty attributes. It is fifty words long, and each word contains fifty blessings. It is equal to a third of the Qur’an, as a hadith reports. Ibn ‘Aṭīyyah mentioned that. Within a long hadith, Abū Dharr said, ‘I asked the Messenger of Allah ﷺ which is the greatest āyah revealed by Allah in the Qur’an. He answered, ‘Allah, there is no god but Him, the Living, the Self-Sustaining.’ Ibn ‘Abbās said, ‘The noblest āyah in the Quran is the Throne Verse.’ One scholar said, ‘That is because the name of Allah is repeated it, either directly or indirectly, eighteen times.’

the Living, the Self-Sustaining.

These are combined attributes of Allah. ‘Al-Ḥayy’ (The Living) is one of His Beautiful Names. It is said that it is the Greatest Name of Allah. It is said that when ‘Īsā wanted to bring the dead to life, he made this supplication, ‘O Living, O Self-Sustaining.’ It is said that it was used by Āsaf ibn Barkhiyā when he wanted to bring the throne of Bilqīs to Sulaymān. He made the supplication: ‘O Living,

O Self-Sustaining.’ It is said that the tribe of Israel asked Mūsā about the Greatest Name of Allah and he said to them, ‘Ayā Hayā Sharā Hayā’ which means: ‘O Living, O Self-Sustaining.’ It is said that it is the supplication people at sea should make when they fear drowning. Aṭ-Ṭabarī said that some people said that it is like a description of Himself and that should not be examined. It is said that He called Himself ‘Living’ since He disposes of matters exactly and determines things precisely. Qatādah says that it is the Living who does not die. As-Suddī says that it means the One who goes on forever. Labīd said:

If you see me sound today,
I am not among the living from Kilāb and Ja‘far.

‘Al-Qayyūm’ (The Self-Sustaining), means the One who undertakes to uphold everything He has created, as Qatādah said. Al-Ḥasan said that it means the One who attends to every self in respect of what it earns until He has repaid it for its actions, as He knows them, and nothing is hidden from Him. Ibn ‘Abbās said, ‘It means: the One who does not change or vanish.’ Umayyah ibn Abi-ṣ-Ṣalt said:

The heavens and the stars as well as the sun and the moon only abide
As determined by the Self-Sustaining Guardian.
The gathering, the Garden and bliss are only for a matter which is immense.

Al-Bayhaqī said that he saw in ‘Uyūn at-tafsīr’ that Ismā‘il aḍ-Ḍarīr said, ‘Qayyūm means the One who does not sleep,’ which is taken from the verse after it. Al-Kalbī said, ‘Al-Qayyūm is the One with no beginning.’ Al-Anbārī mentioned that. A poet says:

The Master of the Throne is the One Who provides for people.
He is Living and the One Who sustains them.

He is not subject to drowsiness or sleep.

Then Allah denies that He is subject to drowsiness or sleep. Drowsiness, according to all, is what affects the eyes and sleep is what affects the heart. Al-Mufaḍḍal made a distinction between them: sinah is what is in the head, nu'ās is in the eye, and sleep (nawm) is in the heart. Ibn Zayd said that wasnān is when someone rises from sleep so confused that he might even unleash his sword against his family. Ibn 'Aṭīyah said, 'What Ibn Zayd said is debatable. It is not understood from Arabic.' As-Suddī said, 'Sinah is the wind of sleep which touches the face and makes a person drowsy.' Generally speaking, it is fatigue which affects a person. What is meant by the āyah is that Allah Almighty is not affected by lapses or weariness in any way. The root of sinah (drowsiness) is wasnah. Sleep is that which is heavy and removes a person's consciousness.

People mention what Abū Hurayrah reported about a story which the Messenger of Allah ﷺ recounted on the minbar: 'Once Mūsā wondered about whether Allah slept and so Allah sent an angel to him to keep him awake for three nights and then gave him two bottles, one in each hand, and commanded him to look after them. He began to fall asleep and his hands almost released them. Then he moved them apart. When he fell asleep, his hands banged together and the bottles broke. He said that Allah made an example by that illustrating the fact that if He were to sleep, the heavens and the earth would not be maintained.' This hadith is not sound. Others, including al-Bayhaqī, said that it is weak.

Everything in the heavens and the earth belongs to Him.

He owns them, so He is the Owner and Lord of all. 'Mā' is used even though sentient beings are included in the whole. Aṭ-Ṭabarī said, 'This āyah was revealed when the unbelievers said, "We only worship idols so that they might bring us close to Allah."'

Who can intercede with Him except by His permission?

It is affirmed in this āyah that Allah gives permission to whomever

He wishes to be an intercessor. They are the Prophets, the people of knowledge, those who strive, angels and others whom Allah has honoured and ennobled. Then they only intercede for those with whom Allah is pleased as we know from His words: ‘They do not intercede except on behalf of those with whom He is pleased.’ (21:28)

Ibn ‘Atiyyah said, ‘It appears that the scholars and righteous intercede for those who have not reached the Fire and are between the two stages, or have arrived there, but have righteous deeds to their credit.’ In Ṣaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī in ‘One of the remaining chapters on the Vision’ we find: ‘The believers will say, “Our Lord, our brothers used to pray with us and fast with us.”’ This is intercession for those who are borderline cases. As for the intercession of miscarried children at the gate of the Garden, it is for their parents. This intercession is for relatives and acquaintances. The Prophets intercede for the rebels of their community who are in the Fire for their wrong actions. It is not on account of kinship or acquaintance, but on account of faith alone. There then remains the intercession of the Most Merciful of the Merciful for those who were immersed in errors and wrong actions for which the intercession of the Prophets does not prevail. As for the intercession of Muhammad ﷺ to hasten the reckoning, that is his alone.

In his Ṣaḥīḥ, Muslim adequately explains how intercession takes place. The intercessors will enter the Fire and bring people out who deserve to be punished. So it is not unlikely that the believers have two intercessions: intercession for those who have not reached the Fire and the intercession for those who have reached it and entered it. May Allah protect us from it! We find mentioned in the hadith of Abū Sa‘īd al-Khudrī: ‘Then the bridge will be set up over Hell and intercession will be allowed. They will say, “O Allah, safety! Safety!”’ It was asked, ‘Messenger of Allah, what is the bridge?’ He answered, ‘A very slippery place on which are snares, hooks, and hard thorns which are like that found in Najd known as sa’dān. Some of the believers will cross over it like the blink of an eye, some like lightning, some like the wind, some like a bird, and some like the faster steed and camel. Some will escape unhurt, some will be scratched but released, and some will be pushed into the Fire until the believers are delivered from the Fire. By the One Who has my soul in His hand, on the Day of Rising there is none of you who will make more earnest entreaties of Allah for his rights than those the believers will make for their brothers in the Fire. They will say, “Our Lord, they used to fast with us, pray with us and go on ḥajj!” They will be told, “Go and bring out those you know.” Their forms are forbidden to the Fire and they will bring out many people who were taken by the Fire up to middle of their thigh or up to their knees. Then they will say, “None of those about whom You commanded us remains in it.” Then the Almighty will say, “Return and bring out whoever you find who has the weight of a dinar of good in his heart.” They will bring out many people and then will say, “Our Lord, we have not left in any of those about whom You commanded us.” Then He will say, “Return and bring out whoever you find who has the weight of half a dinar of good in his heart.” They will bring out many people and then will say, “Our Lord, we have not left in any of those about whom You commanded us.” Then He will say, “Return and bring out whoever you find who has an atom’s weight of good in his heart.” They will bring out many people and then say, “Our Lord, we have not left any good in it.” Abū Sa‘īd said, ‘If you do not believe me in respect of this hadith, then, if you wish, recite: “Allah does not wrong anyone by so much as the smallest speck. And if there is a good deed Allah will multiply it and pay out an immense reward direct from Him.”’ (4:40) Then Allah Almighty will say, “The angels have interceded, the Prophets have interceded and the believers have interceded. None remains but the Most Merciful of the merciful.” He will take a handful from the Fire, bringing out people who never did any good at all and have been turned into charcoal...’

It is mentioned from Anas that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘I will say, “O Allah, give me permission for those who said, ‘There is no god but Allah.’” He said, “That is not for you. By My might, pride, immensity and omnipotence, I will bring out those who said, ‘There is no god but Allah.’”’ Abū Hurayrah mentioned that he ﷺ said, ‘When Allah has finished judging between His slaves and wants to bring out those among the people of the Fire He wishes to, He will command the angels to bring out of the Fire anyone among those to whom Allah desires to show mercy who did not associate anything with Allah, those who said, “There is no god but Allah.”’ They will recognise them in the Fire by the mark of prostration. The Fire will consume all of the son of Ādam except for the mark of prostration. Allah has forbidden the Fire to consume the mark of prostration.’

These hadiths indicate that the intercession of the believers and others is for those who have entered the Fire. May Allah protect us from it! Ibn ‘Aṭīyyah said that it applies both to those who have reached it and those who have not reached it. It is possible that that is taken from other hadiths. Allah knows best. Ibn Mājah transmitted in the Sunan from Anas ibn Mālik that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘People will be lined up in rows on the Day or Rising (Ibn Numayr said ‘the people of the Garden’) and a man from the people of the Fire will pass by a man and say, “Do you not remember me? Do you not remember the day you asked me for water and I gave you a drink?” The man will intercede for him. A man will pass another man and say, “Do you not remember the day I brought you water for purification?” and he will intercede for him.’ Ibn Numayr said: ‘He will say, “Do you not remember the day when you sent me to get something you needed and I did it?” and he will intercede for him.’

As for the intercession of our Prophet Muhammad ﷺ, there is disagreement about it. It is said that it will occur three times, or two or five times. It will be dealt with elsewhere. We have also dealt with this in Kiṭāb at-Tadhkirah.

He knows what is before them and what is behind them

‘Them’ in this phrase refers to everyone who has sentience. They are all included in ‘everything in the heavens and the earth.’ Mujāhid said that ‘what is before them’ is this world and ‘what is behind them’ is the Next World. Ibn ‘Aṭīyah said, ‘All this is valid and there is nothing wrong with it because “what is before” means everything to which a person advances and “what is behind” is all that came before.’ Something similar to this was stated by as-Suddī and others.

but they cannot grasp any of His knowledge save what He wills.

Knowledge here means what is known, meaning that people do not encompass any of what He knows. This is like the statement of al-Khiḍr to Mūsā when the sparrow dipped its beak in the sea, ‘My knowledge and your knowledge does not diminish the knowledge of Allah except as this sparrow would diminish this sea.’ This and examples like it refer to known things because the knowledge of Allah is an attribute of His Essence which cannot be separated from it. The meaning is that no one knows other than what Allah wishes him to know.

His Footstool encompasses the heavens and the earth

In his History, Ibn ‘Asākir mentioned from ‘Alī that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘The Footstool is made of pearl and the Pen is made of pearl and the length of the Pen is seven thousand years and the height of the Footstool is only known by Allah.’ Ḥammād ibn Salamah related from ‘Āṣim ibn Bahdalah, who is ‘Āṣim ibn Abi-n-Nujūd, from Zirr ibn Ḥubaysh that Ibn Mas‘ūd is reported as saying, ‘There is a distance of five hundred years between every heaven and five hundred years between the seventh heaven and the Footstool, and between the Footstool and the Throne is a distance of five hundred years. The Throne is above the water and Allah is above the Throne. He knows what you are in and what you are on.’

preferred that. Indicating that is the derived word kurrāsah (notebook) which contains knowledge. Scholars are also called ‘karāsīy’ (thrones) because they are relied on. That is similar to the saying, ‘the supporting pegs of the earth.’ A poet said:

Noble people and a troop surround them, those who know (karāsīy) events when they occur.

It is also said that the Footstool is Allah’s Power by which He sustains the heavens and the earth, as the word kursī can be used for the underpinning of a thing. Kursī is the base of a wall which holds it up. This is close to what Ibn ‘Abbās said about ‘His Footstool encompasses’. Al-Bayhaqī said, ‘We related from Ibn Mas‘ūd and Sa‘īd ibn Jubayr that Ibn ‘Abbās said that “His Footstool encompasses” means His knowledge.

Other transmissions from Ibn ‘Abbās and others indicate that what is meant by the Footstool is something connected to the Throne. Isrā’īl related from as-Suddī reported that Abū Mālik said, ‘It is the rock on which the seventh earth stands and is the whole extent of creation in all its vastness. Four angels are over it. Each of them has four faces: a human face, a lion’s face, an ox’s face and an eagle’s face. They attend to it and encompass the earths and heavens. Their heads are under the Footstool, and the Footstool is under the Throne. Allah has placed His Footstool above the Throne.’ Al-Bayhaqī said, ‘This statement indicates that there are two Footstools. One is under the Throne and one is above the Throne.’ It is related in what Asbāṭ related from as-Suddī from Abū Mālik, and from Abū Ṣāliḥ from Ibn ‘Abbās, from Murrah al-Hamdānī from Ibn ‘Abbās, and from Murrah al-Hamdānī from Ibn Mas‘ūd from some of the Companions of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ about this that the heavens and earth are inside the Footstool and the Footstool is in front of the Throne.

The people of atheism apply it to the immensity of the kingdom and majesty of the sultan. They deny the existence of the Throne and Footstool and say that they are nothing. The people of the truth consider their existence conceivable since the power of Allah is vast and one must believe in it. Abū Mūsā al-Ash‘arī said, ‘The Footstool is the place where the feet are put. It creaks as a saddle creaks.’ Al-Bayhaqī said, ‘We also related this from Ibn ‘Abbās and we mentioned that it means, as he thinks, that it is part of the Throne, where the feet of someone on a throne would be placed. There is, however, no affirmation of “place” in it.’ Ibn Buraydah related that his father said, ‘When Ja‘far came from Abyssinia, the Messenger of Allah ﷺ asked him, “What was the most extraordinary thing you saw?” He answered, “A woman with a basket of food on her head. A horse passed and knocked it off. She sat down, collecting her food and then she turned to it and said, ‘Woe to you for a Day when the King will sit on His Throne and hear a tale from the wrongdoer and give to the wronged!’” The Messenger of Allah ﷺ affirmed her words and said, “A nation is not pure (or ‘how can a nation be pure?’) when its weak do not take their due from the strong?”

Ibn ‘Aṭīyyah said, ‘The statement, “The Footstool is the place of the feet” mean that it is part of the Throne of the All-Merciful, like the place for the feet on the thrones of kings. It is an immense created thing in front of the Throne. It is ascribed to it as the footstool is ascribed to a king’s throne.’ Al-Ḥasan ibn Abi-l-Ḥasan said that the Footstool is the Throne itself, but this is not acceptable. The hadiths clearly state that the Footstool is a creation which is in front of the Throne and the Throne is greater than it.

Abū Idrīs al-Khawlānī related that Abū Dharr said, ‘I asked, “Messenger of Allah, what is the greatest āyah revealed to you?” He replied, “The Āyat al-Kursī.” Then he said, “Abū Dharr, the heavens and the Footstool are only like a ring cast in the desert, and the size of the Throne compared to that of the Footstool is like the size of the desert compared to the ring.” Al-Ajurri, Abū Ḥātim al-Bustī in his sound Musnad and al-Bayhaqī transmitted it and said that it is sound.

Mujāhid said, ‘The heavens and the earth in comparison to the Throne are like a ring cast into the desert.’

their preservation does not tire Him

This āyah informs us about the immensity of what Allah has created. It is deduced from that that Allah is greater still since the preservation of this immense matter does not tire Him at all.

The word ‘tire’ means to find something burdensome and hard. This is how Ibn ‘Abbās, al-Ḥasan, Qatādah and others explained it. Az-Zajjāj says that the ‘him’ can refer to Allah or it can refer to the Throne. If it is the Footstool, that is part of the business of Allah.

He is the Most High, the Magnificent.

‘Al-‘Alī’ (The Most High) refers to height of power and position, not place, because Allah is free of being confined by space. Aṭ-Ṭabarī related that some people said that He is High above His creation as His place is above the places of creatures. Ibn ‘Aṭīyah said, ‘This is the view of ignorant anthropomorphists! The aspect is not related.’ ‘Abd ar-Raḥmān ibn Qurṭ related that in the Night Journey the Messenger of Allah ﷺ heard glorification in the high heavens: ‘Glory be to Allah, the High, the Most High! Glory be to Him and exalted is He!’ ‘Alī and ‘ālī’ is the one who conquers and overcomes things. The Arabs use the verb ‘alā’ for overcoming and overpowering. A poet said:

When we overpowered (‘alawnā) and firmly were over them,
We left them flat for the vultures and wild beasts.

‘Al-‘Azīm’ (The Magnificent) describes His immense power, importance and nobility, not His physical size. Aṭ-Ṭabarī related that some people said ‘azīm’ means esteemed (mu‘azzam) as is said that ‘atīq’ (ancient) means mu‘attiq. Other people rejected that and said, ‘Had it meant “esteemed”, that would imply that He is not magnificent before He created creation and after it is annihilated since there would be none to esteem Him then.

لَا إِكْرَاهَ فِي الدِّينِ قَدْ تَبَيَّنَ الرُّشْدُ مِنَ الْغَيِّ فَمَنْ يَكْفُرْ بِالطَّاغُوتِ وَيُؤْمِنْ
 عَلِيمٌ ﴿١٠٦﴾

256 There is no compulsion where the dīn is concerned. Right guidance has become clearly distinct from error. Anyone who rejects false gods and believes in Allah has grasped the Firmest Handhold, which will never give way. Allah is All-Hearing, All-Knowing.

There is no compulsion where the dīn is concerned.

The word 'dīn' in this āyah means what is believed and religion since it is followed by 'Right guidance has become clearly distinct from error'. Compulsion can take place in judgments regarding oaths, sales, gifts and other things. This will be explained in Sūrat al-Nahl (16:106), since this is not the place for it. Abū 'Abd ar-Raḥmān recited 'ar-rashad'. That is also related from al-Ḥasan and ash-Sha'bī. The form rashada, yarshudu, rushd is used when something you love is attained but the form rashida, yarshadu, rashad is also possible. Ghawā is its opposite. An-Naḥḥās said that. Ibn 'Aṭīyyah related that Abū 'Abd ar-Raḥmān as-Sulamī recited rushād rather than rushd and al-Ḥasan recited rushud. The root of 'ghayy' (error) refers to when someone is misguided in what he believes or thinks. The word 'error' (ghayy) is not used to denote complete misguidance.

Scholars disagree and hold various positions regarding the legal status and meaning of this āyah.

– It is said that it is abrogated because the Prophet ﷺ forced the Arabs to adopt the dīn of Islam and fought them and was only pleased with Islam for them. Sulaymān ibn Mūsā took that view, saying, 'It is abrogated by "O Prophet! Do jihād against the unbelievers and the hypocrites." (9:73)' That is related from Ibn Mas'ūd and many commentators.

– It is not abrogated and was sent down about the people of the Book in particular and means that they are not forced to adopt Islam when they pay jizyah. Those who are forced are the idolaters. Only Islam is accepted from them, and they are the ones about whom the āyah: ‘O Prophet! Do jihād against the unbelievers and the hypocrites’ (9:73) was revealed. This is the position of ash-Sha‘bī, Qatādah, al-Ḥasan and aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk. The evidence for this position is related by Zayd ibn Aslam from his father, ‘I heard ‘Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb say to an old Christian woman, “Become Muslim, old woman, you will be safe. Allah sent Muḥammad with the Truth.” She replied, “I am an old woman and close to death.” ‘Umar said, “O Allah, bear witness!” and he recited, “There is no compulsion where the dīn is concerned.”’

– Abū Dāwūd reported from Ibn ‘Abbās that this was revealed about the Anṣār. There was a woman all of whose children had died. She made a vow that if she had a child who lived she would make it a Jew. When the Banu-n-Naḍīr were exiled, among them were many of the children of the Anṣār. They said, ‘We will not abandon our children!’ Then Allah revealed this. One variant has, ‘We did what we did and we thought that their dīn is better than what we had.’ When Allah brought Islam, they denied it and this was revealed. Whoever wished remained with them and whoever wished, entered Islam. This is the position of Sa‘īd ibn Jubayr, ash-Sha‘bī and Mujāhid, but he added that the reason that they were with the Banu-n-Naḍīr was through suckling. An-Naḥḥās said, ‘The position of Ibn ‘Abbās regarding this āyah is the best position since its isnād is sound.’

– As-Suddī said that the āyah was revealed about a man of the Anṣār called Abū Ḥuṣayn who had two sons. Some merchants came from Syria to Madīnah with oil and when they wanted to leave, his sons went to them. They invited the two sons to become Christians and they did so and went back with them to Syria. Their father went to the Messenger of Allah ﷺ to complain about this and asked the Messenger of Allah to send someone to bring them back. Then the words: ‘There is no compulsion where the dīn is concerned’ were revealed. He had not at that time been commanded to fight the People of the Book. He said, ‘Allah has put them far away. They are the first to disbelieve.’ Abu-l-Ḥuşayn felt annoyed that the Prophet ﷺ did not send someone after them. Then Allah revealed: ‘No, by your Lord, they are not believers until they make you their judge in the disputes that break out between them’ (4:65). Then ‘No compulsion’ was abrogated and he was commanded to fight the People of the Book in Sūrat at-Tawbah. The sound view for the reason behind the words: ‘No, by your Lord, they are not believers ...’ is the hadith of az-Zubayr with his Christian neighbour about water as will be dealt with in Sūrat an-Nisā’, Allah willing.

– It is said that it means ‘do not call those who have submitted through the sword compelled and forced’.

– It is said that it was related about captives who were People of the Book. They are not compelled when they are adults. If they are Magians, young or old, or idolaters, they are compelled to adopt Islam because their captivity does not help them when they are idolaters. Do you not see that their slaughtered animals are not eaten nor their women married? That is what Ibn al-Qāsim reported from Mālik. Ashhab said that children are considered to have the dīn of those who have captured them. If they refuse that, they are compelled to become Muslim. Children have no dīn and that is why they are compelled to enter Islam so that they do not go to a false dīn. When other types of unbelievers pay the jizyah, they are not forced to become Muslim, whether they are Arabs or non-Arabs, Quraysh or otherwise. This will be dealt with in Sūrat at-Tawbah.

Anyone who rejects false gods and believes in Allah

The word for ‘false gods’ (tāghūt) comes from the root ṭaghā which means ‘to exceed the bounds’. The word can indicate the plural or the singular. It is said that the root of tāghūt is tughyān which means ‘overstepping the limits’. Al-Mubarrad said that it is a plural, but Ibn ‘Atīyyah says that that is rejected. Al-Jawharī said that the word tāghūt refers to soothsayers, shayṭāns and every leader in misguidance. It can have a singular meaning as we see in 4:60 or a plural meaning as we see in 2:257. It does have an actual plural: ṭawāghūth.

has grasped the Firmest Handhold,

This phrase is a metaphor. Commentators disagree about metaphorical usage (tashbīh). Mujāhid says that ‘the Firmest Handhold’ is true belief and as-Suddī says that it means Islam. Ibn ‘Abbās, Sa‘īd ibn Jubayr and aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk said, ‘It is ‘lā ilāha illa-llāh.’ All these understandings actually amount to the same thing.

Mujāhid said, ‘This should be understood alongside Allah’s statement that “He never changes a people’s state unless they change what is in themselves.” (13:11)’ In other words, He will not remove the designation of believer from them until they actually disbelieve. The word for ‘give way’ (infisām) means to break, but not completely. Qaṣm is completely breaking. Al-Jawharī said, ‘Faṣm is breaking, but not completely.’ The verb is used of rain stopping and a fever ending. When rejection of falsehood and faith in Allah are part of what the tongue articulates and the heart believes, Allah hears what is said and knows what is believed.

اللَّهُ وَلِيُّ الَّذِينَ آمَنُوا يُخْرِجُهُم مِّنَ الظُّلُمَاتِ إِلَى النُّورِ
 وَالَّذِينَ كَفَرُوا أَوْلِيَاؤُهُمُ الطَّاغُوتُ يُخْرِجُونَهُم مِّنَ النُّورِ إِلَى الظُّلُمَاتِ
 أُولَئِكَ أَصْحَابُ النَّارِ هُمْ فِيهَا خَالِدُونَ ﴿٥٥﴾

257 Allah is the Protector of those who believe. He brings them out of the darkness into the light. But those who disbelieve have false gods as protectors. They take them from the light into the darkness. Those are the Companions of the Fire remaining in it timelessly, for ever.

The word 'wali' (Protector) signifies the One who helps His believing slaves as al-Khaṭṭābī said. Qatādah said that the darkness mentioned in the āyah refers to misguidance and light to guidance. Aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk and ar-Rabī' said much the same thing. Mujāhid and 'Abdah ibn Abī Lubābah said that this was revealed about some people who believed in 'Isā ﷺ. When Muhammad ﷺ came, they rejected him. That was their being taken out of the light into the darkness. Ibn 'Aṭīyah said, 'The one with this belief who had a stronger light in it left it for darkness. The wording of the āyah has no need of specification. It applies to every disbelieving community who had partial belief, like the Arabs had. That is because Allah is the Protector of those of them who believed and He brought them out of the darkness of disbelief into the light of belief. Those who disbelieved after the coming of the sent Prophet ﷺ were misguided by their shayṭāns. It is as if Shayṭān brought them out of faith when they were ready to enter it and so they will enter the Fire for their disbelief. That is justice and Allah is not asked about what He does.' Al-Ḥasan recited 'tawāghūt' in the plural which means shayṭāns. Allah knows best.

أَلَمْ تَرَ إِلَى الَّذِينَ حَاجَّ إِبْرَاهِيمَ فِي رَبِّهِ أَنْ ابْنُ اللَّهِ الْمَلَكُ إِذْ قَالَ
إِبْرَاهِيمَ رَبِّيَ الَّذِينَ يَخْتَلِفُ فِيهِمْ وَنُوحِيَّتْ قَالَ أَنَا أُخْبِرُ وَأُمِّيَّتْ قَالَ
إِبْرَاهِيمُ فَإِنَّ اللَّهَ يَأْتِي بِالشَّمْسِ مِنَ الْمَشْرِقِ فَأْتِ بِهَا مِنَ الْمَغْرِبِ
فَبُهِتَ الَّذِينَ كَفَرُوا وَاللَّهُ لَا يَهْدِي الْقَوْمَ الظَّالِمِينَ ﴿١٢٥﴾

258 What about the one who argued with Ibrāhīm about his Lord, on the basis that Allah had given him sovereignty? Ibrāhīm said, 'My Lord is He who gives life and causes to die.' He said, 'I too give life and cause to die.' Ibrāhīm said, 'Allah makes the sun come from the East. Make it come from the West.' And the one who was an unbeliever was dumbfounded. Allah does not guide wrongdoing people.

The expression ‘What about?’ (a lam tara) literally means ‘Have you seen?’ and is frequently used in Arabic to introduce something surprising or astonishing. The ‘one’ referred to in the āyah is generally taken to be Nimrod, Numrūdh ibn Kūsh ibn Kan‘ān ibn Sām ibn Nuḥ, the king of his time and the one who built the fire into which Ibrāhīm was thrown and who was killed by a gnat. This is the position of Ibn ‘Abbās, Mujāhid, Qatādah, ar-Rabī’, as-Suddī, Ibn Ishāq, Zayd ibn Aslam and others. He was destroyed when he tried to fight against Allah. Allah sent a great cloud of gnats against him and they covered the sun and consumed his army until only their bones were left. One entered his brain and ate it until it became the size of a mouse. The dearest of people to him after that was the one who hit his head with a hammer! He suffered for forty days.

Ibn Jurayj said that he was the first king in the earth. Ibn ‘Aṭīyah says that this is rejected. Qatādah said that he was the first to become a tyrant; he was the one who built the tower at Babel. It is said that he was king of the entire earth and was one of two unbelieving kings. The second king was Nebuchadnezzar. It is also said that the one who argued with Ibrāhīm was Numrūdh ibn Fālikh ibn ‘Ābir ibn Shālikh ibn Arfakhshand ibn Sām. Ibn ‘Aṭīyah related all of that. As-Suhaylī related that he was Numrūdh ibn Kan‘ān ibn Ḥām ibn Nuḥ. He was king over the black people. He was appointed by aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk who was known as al-Azdahāq. His name was Bīwarāsb ibn Andarāst and he was the king of all regions. He is the one who was killed by Afidūn ibn Athfiyān.

Aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk was a tyrant whose kingdom lasted a thousand years. He was the first to crucify people and the first to cut off hands and feet. Nimrod had a son called Kush, or a similar name, and a son called Nimrod the younger. Nimrod the younger ruled for a year and Nimrod the elder ruled for four hundred years, as they say.

occurred. One is that the people went out to a festival they used to observe and Ibrāhīm went to their idols and broke them. When they returned, he said to them, ‘Do you worship something you have carved?’ They asked, ‘Who do you worship?’ He said, ‘I worship my Lord who gives life and causes to die.’ It is also said that Nimrod had complete control of the food stores of his people and, when they wanted to eat, they had to buy food from him. When they went to him, they prostrated to him. Ibrāhīm entered and did not prostrate. He asked him, ‘Why do you not prostrate to me?’ He replied, ‘I prostrate only to my Lord.’ Nimrod demanded, ‘Who is your Lord?’ Ibrāhīm answered, ‘My Lord is He Who gives life and causes to die.’

Zayd ibn Aslam said, ‘This Nimrod had control of all the provisions of his people. When people came, he demanded, “Who is your Lord and God?” “You,” they answered. “Give them provision,” he said. Ibrāhīm came to seek provision and he asked him the same question. Ibrāhīm replied, “My Lord is He who gives life and causes to die.” When he heard this, Nimrod said, “I give life and cause to die.” Then Ibrāhīm asked him the question about the sun and he was dumbfounded. He said, “Do not give him provision.” Ibrāhīm returned to his people with nothing. He passed by a heap of fine sand and said to himself. “If I fill my sacks with this, when I enter the children will be happy until I can see to them.” He did that and when he reached his house, the children were happy and began to play on the sacks. He fell asleep from exhaustion and his wife said, “I will prepare some food for him and he will find it ready when he wakes up.” She opened one of the sacks and found it to be the finest flour and baked it. When he rose, she put it before him. He asked, “Where is this from?” She said, “From the flour you brought.” Ibrāhīm knew that Allah had done that.’

Abū Bakr ibn Abī Shaybah mentioned that Abū Ṣāliḥ said, ‘The Prophet Ibrāhīm went to obtain food and was unable to obtain it. He passed by some red sand and took some of it and returned to his family. They asked, 'What is this?' He answered, 'Red wheat.' They opened it and found that it was red wheat. When any of it was planted, it produced ears that were full of grain from bottom to top.

Ar-Rabi' and others said about this story that, when Nimrod said, 'I give life and cause to die,' he summoned two men. He killed one and released the other. He said, 'I gave life to that one and made that one die.' Then Ibrāhīm countered that with the question about the sun which dumbfounded him. It is related in a hadith that Allah said, 'The Final Hour will not come until I bring the sun from the west so that it is known that I have the power to do that.' Then Nimrod commanded Ibrāhīm to be thrown into the fire. That is what tyrants do. When they are opposed in something and unable to offer proof of their position, they inflict punishment. Allah saved Ibrāhīm from the fire as we will see later.

As-Suddī said, 'When Ibrāhīm emerged from the fire, they brought him to the King. He had not been in his presence before that time. He spoke to him and asked, "Who is your Lord?" He replied, "My Lord is the One who gives life and causes to die." Nimrod said, "I give life and cause to die. I will take four people and put them in a room and will not give them food or water until they are starving. I will bring them out and feed two and they will live and not feed two who will die." Then Ibrāhīm countered with the question about the sun and he was dumbfounded.'

Legists have mentioned about this āyah that, when Ibrāhīm described his Lord with bringing to life and making die, it was a statement that could be taken literally or metaphorically. It should be pointed out that Ibrāhīm meant essential qualities in the first instance while Nimrod took what he said metaphorically and misrepresented it to his people. So Ibrāhīm left the argument and moved to an example which cannot be made metaphorical. 'And the one who was an unbeliever was dumbfounded.' The king could not argue and refute the second example nor could he say, 'I am the one who brings it from the east' because intelligent people would reject that.

This āyah indicates the permissibility of giving an unbeliever the title of 'king' when he has kingdom, might and elevation in this world. It also is an affirmation of the use of evidential argument in establishing the proof of a matter and this is often found in the Sunnah and Qur'an. Allah says: 'Produce your evidence if you speak the truth,' (2:111) and: 'Have you authority to say this?' (10:68), meaning any evidence. Allah also described how Ibrāhīm argued with his people and refuted their worship of idols as we find in Sūrat al-Anbiyā' and elsewhere. He says in the story of Nūh: 'They said, "Nūh, you have argued with us and argued much...' (11:32) until he said, 'I am innocent of the crimes which you commit.' (11:36) Mūsā also argued with Pharaoh as seen in many āyahs.

All of this is instruction by Allah through question and answer and debate in the dīn because that shows the difference between truth and falsehood by the demonstration of the proof of the truth and the invalidity of false evidence. The Prophet ﷺ debated with the People of the Book and called on them to invoke Allah against themselves after the argument as will be dealt with in Āli 'Imrān. Ādam and Mūsā argued and Ādam won the argument. The Companions of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ argued with one another on the Day of the Verandah. They pushed one another, made affirmations and debated until the truth came from its people and allegiance was given to Abū Bakr. They also debated about the people of the Riddah. There are very many instances of that. The words of Allah: 'You are a people arguing about something of which you have knowledge' (3:66) are evidence that arguing about something with knowledge is permitted for those who reflect. Al-Muzanī, the follower of ash-Shāfi'ī, said, 'Among the conditions of debate is that Allah should be intended by it and that what is clear should be accepted from it.' It is said that debating is not sound unless those who are debating are close or equal in respect of their level of knowledge of the dīn, intelligence, understanding and fairness. Otherness it is merely quarrelling and arrogance.

‘Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib recited ‘a lam tar’ with the jussive, but the majority vowel the rā’ and the yā’ is elided in the jussive. ‘An ātāhu-llāhu-l-mulka’ is in the position of the accusative, meaning ‘because Allah had given him’ or ‘for the sake of what Allah had given him.’ Most recite ‘ana uhyī,’ discarding the alif after the nūn of ‘anā’ (I) in the connection, while Nāfi‘ and Ibn Abī Uways keep it because of meeting with the hamzah, as is the case throughout the Qur’an except in 7:188 where it is discarded as is done by the other reciters since that is rare. It only occurs three times in the Qur’an. It acts like that which does not have hamzah after it because of its rareness and so the alif is elided in the connection.

Grammarians said that in the case when the pronoun of the speaker has a hamzah and a nūn, as when you say ‘ana’ or ‘anah’, the alif and the hā’ are to make the vowelling clear in the stop. When the word is connected to something, they are dropped because the word to which it is connected takes the place of the alif. It is rare to say ‘anā fa’altu’ except in poetry. An-Naḥḥās said that the fact that Nāfi‘ kept the alif and recited ‘anā uhyī’ has no logic. Makkī said that the Basrans consider the alif to be redundant and believe that the name is implied by the hamzah and nūn and the alif is added for strengthening. It is said that it is added by the stop to make the vowel of the nūn clear. According to the Kufans, the noun is ‘anā’ in full. Nāfi‘ confirms the alif in the root according to their position, and those who elide it do so to lighten it, and because it is indicated by the fathah (a).

Al-Jawharī said, ‘As for saying ana (I) it is a metonymic noun and is for the first person alone. It only has the fathah (a) invariably to distinguish it from an (that) which is a preposition that puts the verb in the subjunctive case, and the final alif is to make clear the vowelling when there is a stop. If it occurs in the middle of speech it

The word ‘dumbfounded’ (bahita and buhita) is used when someone is stopped and falls silent out of confusion. An-Naḥḥās and others said that. Aṭ-Ṭabarī said that some of the Arabs said that it is bahata. Ibn Jinnī said that Abū Ḥaywah recited ‘bahuta’ which is a dialectical form of buhita. Ibn as-Samayfa‘ recited ‘bahata’ meaning, ‘Ibrāhim stunned the one who disbelieved.’ He said that it is permitted for bahata to be a dialectical variant of bahuta. Abu-I-Ḥasan al-Akhfash related ‘bahita’ like kharīqa and dahisha and said that most of them have bahuta. Ibn ‘Aṭīyyah said that some people interpret the reading ‘bahata’ to mean ‘insulted and ejected’ when he was stopped and had no further device to use.

259 Or the one who passed by a town which had fallen into ruin? He asked, ‘How can Allah restore this to life when it has died?’ Allah caused him to die a hundred years, then brought him back to life. Then He asked, ‘How long have you been here?’ He replied, ‘I have been here a day or part of a day.’ He said, ‘Not so! You have been here a hundred years. Look at your food and drink – it has not gone bad – and look at your donkey so We can make you a Sign for all mankind. Look at the bones – how We raise them up and clothe them in flesh.’ When it had become clear to him, he said, ‘Now I know that Allah has power over all things.’

Or the one who passed by a town which had fallen into ruin?

‘Aw’ (or) is a conjunction which has its normal meaning here. According to al-Kisā’ī and al-Farrā’ it refers back to the ‘What about...?’ in the previous āyah. Al-Mubarrad said that it means: ‘Have you not looked at the one who argued with Ibrāhīm about his Lord? Have you not seen who he is? Like the one who passed by a town...’ The words imply that. Abū Sufyān ibn Ḥusayn recited ‘or’ as ‘a wa’ with a fathah on the wāw as a conjunction to which the interrogative alif is added, and it indicates confirmation. A ‘qaryah’ (town) is called that because people gather (qarā) in it. The verb is used for water collecting in a place.

Sulaymān ibn Buraydah, Nājiyyah ibn Ka‘b, Qatādah, Ibn ‘Abbās, ar-Rabī‘, ‘Ikrimah and aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk said, ‘The one who passed by the town was ‘Uzayr.’ Wahb ibn Munabbih, ‘Abdullāh ibn ‘Ubayd ibn ‘Umayr and ‘Abdullāh ibn Bakr ibn Muḍar said that it was Irmiyā’ (said by some to be Jeremiah), who was a Prophet. Ibn Ishāq said that Irmiyā’ is al-Khiḍr. An-Naqqāsh related that from Wahb ibn Munabbih. Ibn ‘Aṭiyyah said, ‘This is as you see, although one name is the same as the other because al-Khiḍr was a contemporary of Mūsā. The one who passed by the town was one of the clan of Hārūn some time later according to what Wahb ibn Munabbih related.’

If al-Khiḍr is Irmiyā’, it is not improbable since al-Khiḍr has been alive from the time of Mūsā until now according to the sound position on that, which will be talked about in Sūrat al-Kahf. If he died before this story, then the position of Ibn ‘Aṭiyyah is sound. Allah knows best.

An-Naḥḥās and Makkī related from Mujāhid that he was an unnamed man of the tribe of Israel. An-Naqqāsh said that it is said that he was the servant of Lūṭ. As-Suhaylī related that al-Qutaybī has one statement saying that it is Shu‘ayb and the one who restored it to life after it was ruined was Kūshik al-Fārisī. The town is Jerusalem as stated by Wahb ibn Munabbih, Qatādah, ar-Rabī' ibn Anas and others. He said that he came from Egypt and that his food and drink – referred to in the āyah – consisted of green figs, grapes and a pot of wine. It is also said that it was juice and it is said that it was a small amount of water.

It was Nebuchadnezzar who destroyed the town. He was the governor of Iraq for Lohorasp and then Gushtasp, the son of Lohorasp, who was the father of Isfandiyar. An-Naqqāsh related that it is 'the Overturned Cities'. Abū Ṣāliḥ transmitted from Ibn 'Abbās that Nebuchadnezzar attacked the tribe of Israel and captured many of them and took them to Babylon. 'Uzayr ibn Sharkhiyā was one of them. He was one of the scholars of the Israelites. He went out one day for something he needed to Dayr Hizqal on the banks of the Tigris. He stopped under the shade of a tree. He tied his donkey up in the shade of the tree and then went around the town and did not see anyone living there. It was fallen down and deserted. He said, 'How can Allah restore this to life when it has died?'

It is said that it was the town from which thousands fled out of fear of death referred to earlier in 2:243. Ibn Zayd said that. Ibn Zayd said that it was those people who left their homes in thousands in fear of death and Allah told them, 'Die!' A man passed by their decayed bones and stopped to look and said, 'How can Allah restore this to life when it has died?' Allah caused him to die a hundred years. Ibn 'Aṭīyyah, however, says that this position of Ibn Zayd is contrary to the words of the āyah since the āyah mentions a town fallen into ruin with no one in it. So it indicates the town. Its being brought to life was by flourishing and the re-establishment of buildings and houses.

Wahb ibn Munabbih, Qatādah, aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk, ar-Rabī' and 'Ikrimah said that the town was Jerusalem when Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon destroyed it. There is a long account about the history of the tribe of Israel and when Irmīyā' or 'Uzayr stopped at the town which was a great hill in the middle of Jerusalem brought about when Nebuchadnezzar had commanded his army to move the earth to it until he made it like a mountain. Irmīyā' saw that the walls of the houses were collapsed onto their roofs and said, 'How will Allah bring this to life after its death?'

In the expression 'fallen into ruin' (khāwiyatun 'alā 'urūshihā) the word 'urūsh means roofs of houses and anything that is set up for the sake of shade or shelter. Part of the usage of 'arīsh is a trellis as in 16:68. As-Suddī said that the roofs fell in and the walls fell on top of them. Aṭ-Ṭabarī prefers it. Others said that it simply means that the place was uninhabited with the houses still standing and the expression simply means 'empty'. The root of the verb is khalw. 'Empty' can also mean 'collapsed'. Khawā' also describes a stomach empty of food. The verb is used of a woman whose womb becomes empty after giving birth. Khawī describes easy ground. Form II of the verb describes a camel kneeling with its belly off the ground and it also describes a man in prostration.

He asked, 'How can Allah restore this to life when it has died?'

This means: 'by what means and method?' The literal meaning of the expression is about bringing the town back to life by restoring its inhabitants and prosperity, as one uses the expression today for empty cities which are unlikely to be re-inhabited. So it means: 'How will this flourish after it has fallen into ruin?' It is as if this was a question expressing regret when the man who was standing reflected on his city where his family had lived and which he loved. Allah made a greater response than the asker had intended by his question: actually bringing the dead to life. Aṭ-Ṭabarī related that one of them said, 'This statement implies doubt about Allah's power to bring things to life. This is an example he made to himself.' Ibn 'Aṭīyah said that the question does not imply doubt about the power of Allah Almighty to bring the town to life and make it flourish. The doubt comes from being ignorant in another way. It is not correct to interpret the āyah as expressing doubt.

Allah caused him to die a hundred years then brought him back to life.

‘Hundred’ is in the accusative as an adverb. Ām means a year, and one says ‘sinwan ‘uwwam’ for stress. We see this in poetry. It is implied that it is the plural of ‘ā’im although it alone is mentioned because it is not a noun, but rather stress, as al-Jawharī said. An-Naqqāsh said that ‘ām is a verbal noun like ‘awm, which means swimming. A year (‘ām) is called that because it is the amount of time it takes for the sun to ‘swim’ (‘āma) around the celestial sphere. So ‘awm is like sabḥ. Allah says: ‘...each one is swimming (yasbahūna) in a sphere.’ (36:40) Ibn ‘Aṭīyah said, ‘This is the idea behind what an-Naqqāsh said.’ The literal meaning of this āyah is to make someone die by removing their rūḥ from their body.

In the story behind this āyah, it is related that Allah sent a king to refurbish it and renew it so that it was complete by the time the speaker was revived. It is said that seventy years after his death Allah sent a Persian king called Kushk [Cyrus] who refurbished it in thirty years. Ba‘atha is to bring back to life.

Then He asked, ‘How long have you been here?’

There is disagreement about the asker here. It is said that it was Allah Almighty. It is said that the man heard an unseen voice. It is said that it was Jibrīl or a Prophet or a believing man of the people who saw him. The most apparent position is that it was Allah because of the rest of the āyah. Allah knows best.

He replied, ‘I have been here a day or part of a day.’

This is what he thought and so he was not lying when he said it. It is similar to the answer the People of the Cave gave in 18:19 when they said that they had been there for a day or part of a day when in fact they had been there for 309 years. They were not lying, but expressing what they thought to be the case. It is as if they were saying, ‘What we think in our opinion is that we have been here for a day or part of a day.’ That is similar to what the Prophet ﷺ said in the story about Dhu-l-Yadayn in respect of the prayer: ‘I did not shorten and I did not forget.’ Some people have said that it was an actual lie but he was not punished for it. A lie is to report something to be other than what it actually is. That is the same in both knowledge and ignorance. This is clear in respect of fundamental principles. On this basis it is permitted to say that the Prophets are not protected from reporting something to be other than what it actually is when that is not intentional, just as they are not protected from oversight and forgetfulness. This is connected to this āyah, but the first view is sounder.

Ibn Jurayj, Qatādah and ar-Rabī‘ said that Allah made him die in the morning and then raised him up before sunset so that he thought that it was the same day. When he saw the remaining sun, he was afraid that he had lied in saying, ‘a day,’ so he added ‘or part of a day.’ He was told that he had been there a hundred years and he saw how the town was flourishing and its trees and buildings as evidence of that.

Look at your food and drink — it has not gone bad —

It is said that his food and drink consisted of green figs which he had gathered from the trees of the town he passed by. Ibn Mas‘ūd recited ‘hādhā ta‘āmuka wa sharābuka’ (this is your food and drink) Ṭalḥah ibn Muṣarrif and others recite ‘unzur li-ta‘āmika wa-sh-sharābika li-mi‘ati sannah (Look at your food and drink for a hundred years.) Most recite ‘yatasannah’ with the ‘hā’ at the end while the two brothers [Ḥamzah and al-Kisā’ī] elide it. There is no disagreement that one stops at the ‘hā’. Ṭalḥah ibn Muṣarrif also recited ‘lam yassanna’ and ‘wa-nzur’ (with wāw not fā’), assimilating the tā’ into the sīn. According to the recitation of the majority, the hā’ is part of the root and the ḍammah is elided for the jussive. It comes from ‘sannah’ (year), meaning that it has not been altered by the years.

Al-Jawharī says that sannah is the singular of sunūn or sinūn. Two things are said about what it is missing. The first is that it is a wāw and the other is that it is hā' and that its root is sanhah, like jabhah because it is from the expression sanahat and tasannahat used for palm-trees which have lasted for years. A palm-tree that is sannā' bears fruit some years and not other years. It is also called sanhā'. One of the Anṣār said:

It is not a tree that is sanhā' or propped up, but 'ārīyah loans for years (sanīn) of drought.

Asnahtu means 'I stayed with' as does tasannaytu. You hire someone for a year (musānāh and musānahah). The diminutive is sunayyah and sunayhah. An-Naḥḥās said, 'If someone recites "lam yatasanna" he says sunayyah for the diminutive and the alif is elided for the jussive and stops on the hā' and says 'yatasannah', the hā' being for making the vowel clear.'

Al-Mahdawī said, 'It is possible that its root is from sānaytuhu musānah, i.e. "I hired him year by year" or from sānahtu with a hā'. If it is from sānaytu, its root is yatasannā and the alif has been omitted for the jussive. It has a wāw in the root as indicated by sanawāt and the hā' in it is for silence. If it is from sānahtu, then the hā' is the lām of the verb and according to this, the root of sanah is sanhah. According to the first, it is sanawah. It is also said that it is derived from asina, the verb for water becoming brackish, but this would oblige an extra alif in the word.'

Abū 'Amr ash-Shaybānī said that it came from Allah's words: 'fetid (masnūn) black mud'. (15:26) What it means is that it has not changed. Az-Zajjāj said, 'That is not the case because "masnūn" does not mean "changed", but poured out on the surface of the earth.' Mujāhid said that it means 'it has not become foul'. An-Naḥḥās said that the soundest of what is said about this is that it is from sannah, and that it has not been changed by the years. It is possible that it comes from the meaning 'drought' as Allah says: 'We seized Pharaoh's people with years of drought (sinīn)' (7:130) and the words of the Prophet ﷺ, 'O

Allah, impose on them years of drought like those of Yūsuf.’ So it means ‘your food has not been changed by drying up’ or ‘it has not been changed by the passage of years,’ and so has remained fresh.

Wahb ibn Munabbih and others said, ‘Look at how We re-connect its bones and bring it to life bit by bit.’ It is related that Allah brought it to life by re-connecting its bones and then clothing them in flesh until the donkey was completely restored. Then an angel came and breathed the spirit into it and the donkey stood up and brayed. This is what most commentators say. Wahb and aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk also said that it can mean: look at your donkey standing, untouched after a hundred years, and the bones that he looked at were the actual bones after Allah brought its eyes and head to life while the rest of the body was dead. They said that Allah made people’s eyes blind to Irmīyā’ and his donkey for this period of time.

so We can make you a Sign for all mankind.

Al-Farrā’ said that putting the wāw before the word here indicates that it is a precondition for what is after it. It is a sign of resurrection after death. It can also indicate an interpolation. He was still the age he had been when he died and his sons and grandsons were old men. ‘Ikrimah said that he was forty when he died. ‘Alī related that ‘Uzayr’s wife was pregnant when he left and that he was fifty when Allah made him die for a hundred years. Then he was brought back to life and returned to his family after his resurrection still fifty years old. He had a son who was a hundred years old and his son’s son was fifty years old. Ibn ‘Abbās related, ‘When Allah brought ‘Uzayr to life and he mounted his donkey and rode to his home, he did not recognise people nor did they recognise him. He found an old blind woman in his house who was the mother of the household. This woman had been twenty years old when ‘Uzayr left. He asked her, “Is this Uzayr’s house?” She said, “Yes!” and wept and then said, “‘Uzayr left us in such and such a year.” He said, “I am ‘Uzayr.” She stated, “‘Uzayr has been gone for a hundred years.” He replied, “Allah made me die for a hundred years and then brought me to life again.” She said, “‘Uzayr was someone whose supplication for the sick and afflicted was answered. Ask Allah to restore my sight to me.” He prayed to Allah and wiped her eyes with his hand and she was healed where she was, as if she had been released. She said, “I testify that you are ‘Uzayr!” She went to the assembly of the tribe of Israel, which included a son of ‘Uzayr’s, who was one hundred and twenty-eight years old, and his grandsons who were old men. She said, “People! By Allah, this is ‘Uzayr!” His son went to him with the people and said, “My father had a black mole like the crescent moon between his shoulders.” He saw it and knew that it was ‘Uzayr.’

It is said that when he came he found that everyone he had known had died. He was a sign for those of his people who were alive since they had heard about his state and were certain. Ibn ‘Aṭīyyah said, ‘The greatest sign is in him being made to die for this period and then brought to life after that. His entire business is a sign throughout time and there is no need to specify which of the details are correct.’

‘Raise them up’ is read as nunshizuhā by the Kufans and Ibn ‘Āmir and as nunshiruhā by everyone else although Abān related from ‘Āṣim that it is ‘nanshuruhā’ as did Ibn ‘Abbās, al-Ḥasan and Abū Ḥaywah. In either case it means to bring to life. It is known linguistically that Allah brings the dead to life (anshara) and they are revived (nasharū). Allah says: ‘When He wishes, He brings him to life.’ (80:22) It is like a garment being unfolded (nashara). The verb is used for being resurrected after death and the noun is nushūr. Al-A‘shā said:

Until, when people see it, they say,

‘Wonder! The resurrected (nāshir) dead!’

It is as if death rolls up the bones and limbs, and revivification and joining the limbs together is like spreading them out and opening them up (nashara) again. If it is read nashaza it means an elevated place and the verb means to raise. A poet said:

You see the young fox in it.

As if a majestic fortress rose high (nashz).

Makkī says, ‘It means: “Look at the bones and how We raise them up and put them together in order to bring them to life” because nashz means elevating. Part of that is describing a disobedient wife as nushūz because she puts herself above agreeing with her husband. It is also used in the words of the Almighty: ‘When you are told: “Make room (fa-nshuzū) in the gathering,” then make room.’” (58:11) This means: get up and press together. When it is read with rā’, then it means to bring to life. Bones do not come to life on their own until they are connected to one another. The zāyy is more appropriate in this context since it means to join together rather than bring to life. That which is described as being brought back to life is the man rather than the bones on their own. One does say, ‘This bone is alive.’ So it means: ‘Look at the bones and how We raise them from their place on the ground to the body so that it can be brought to life.’ An-Nakha’ī recited ‘nanshuzuhā’ and that is related from Ibn ‘Abbās and Qatādah. Kuswah is clothing that covers a person. The flesh is likened to it. An-Nābighah uses it as a metaphor for Islam:

‘So that I was clothed in a shirt from Islam.’

When it had become clear to him, he said, ‘Now I know that Allah has power over all things.’

It is related that Allah brought some of him back to life and then he saw how Allah brought the rest of his body to life. Qatādah said, ‘He looked at how the bones are connected to one another because the first part of him Allah brought back to life was his head and then he was told to look. At that point he said, ‘I know,’ meaning ‘I know this.’ Aṭ-Ṭabarī said that it means: when it was clear to his own eyes what he denied of Allah’s power before he saw that. Then he said, ‘I know.’ Ibn ‘Aṭīyyah said that this is an error because it demands something not obliged by the words. His explanation is based on an aberrant view and weak probability. This is what I think because there is no confirmation that he denied before that as aṭ-Ṭabarī said. What he said was prompted by reflection, as a believing person might say when he sees something unusual of Allah’s power, ‘There is no god but Allah’ and the like. Abū ‘Alī said that it means: ‘I know this sort of knowledge which I did not know previously.’

We already mentioned this idea from Qatādah. That is what Makkī said: ‘He reported about himself when he witnessed the power of Allah to bring the dead to life and had certainty of that by actually witnessing its occurrence. He affirmed that he truly knew that Allah has power over all things. In other words he is saying, “I now know by eye-witnessing this sort of knowledge which I did not know before.”’ This is based on the reading of ‘a‘lamu’ with the alif disconnected which is the reading of most reciters. Ḥamzah and al-Kisā’ī connect the alif (i‘lam) which has two possible meanings. One is that the angel told him, ‘Know’ and the other is that he put himself in the position of a separate speaker. So it means: ‘When it was clear to him, he said to himself, “Soul, know with this definitive knowledge which you did not know by eye-witnessing.”’ Abū ‘Alī composed something about this understanding:

Bid farewell to Hurayrah. The caravan is leaving.

Your bleary eyes have not closed in the night.

Makkī said, ‘It is unlikely that it is a command from Allah to know because He had demonstrated His power to him and shown him something that is certainly sound and affirms His power. So there is no point in Allah commanding that. He is commanding himself to do that. That is an excellent possibility.’ The mode (ḥarf) of ‘Abdullāh indicates that it is a command from Allah to know, meaning that this knowledge is necessary because of what you have seen and are certain about. His mode has ‘qīla i‘lam’ (It was said, ‘Know...’). That also agrees with the command before it: ‘Look at your food,’ ‘Look at your donkey,’ and ‘look at the bones.’ So the same is true in the case of ‘Know that Allah...’. Ibn ‘Abbās used to recite it in that way and said, ‘Who is better: him or Ibrāhīm, since he was told, “Know that Allah is Almighty, All-Wise”?’ This makes it clear that it is part of the words of Allah to him when he witnessed the bringing of everything back to life.

260 When Ibrāhīm said, ‘My Lord, show me how You bring the dead to life.’ He asked, ‘Do you not then believe?’ He replied, ‘Indeed I do! But so that my heart may be at peace.’ He said, ‘Take four birds and train them to yourself. Then put a part of them on each mountain and call to them; they will come rushing to you. Know that Allah is Almighty, All-Wise.’

When Ibrāhīm said, ‘My Lord, show me how You bring the dead to life.’ He asked, ‘Do you not then believe?’

People disagree about Ibrāhīm’s request and whether it arose out of doubt or not. The majority say that Ibrāhīm did not doubt that Allah could bring the dead to life but simply wanted to see it happen with his own eyes. That is because people have a natural desire for direct proof of what they are told. That is why the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘A report about something is not the same as actually seeing it.’ Ibn ‘Abbās related that and no one else related it. Abū ‘Umar said that. Al-Akhfash said, ‘He did not mean the seeing of the heart. He meant the seeing of the eye.’ Al-Ḥasan, Qatādah, Sa‘īd ibn Jubayr and ar-Rabī‘ said that Ibrāhīm was asking in order to add certainty to his certainty. Ibn ‘Aṭīyah said, ‘Aṭ-Ṭabarī has a chapter in his Tafsīr: “Others said that he asked his Lord for that because he doubted the power of Allah.” He included in this section from Ibn ‘Abbās: “I consider this the most hopeful of āyahs.” It is mentioned that ‘Aṭā’ ibn Abī Rabāḥ said, ‘Something that enters the hearts of ordinary people entered Ibrāhīm’s heart and he said, “My Lord, show me how You bring the dead to life.”’ He mentioned the hadith of Abū Hurayrah in which the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘We are more entitled to doubt than Ibrāhīm.’ Then aṭ-Ṭabarī preferred this view.

The hadith from Abū Hurayrah was transmitted by al-Bukhārī and Muslim in which the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘We are more entitled to doubt than Ibrāhīm. He said, “Lord, show me how You bring the dead to life,” and He asked, “Do you not then believe?” He said, “Yes, but so that my heart will be at rest.” Allah had mercy on Lūṭ. He took refuge in a strong pillar. If I had remained imprisoned for as long as Yūsuf, I would have answered the invitation.’ This is mentioned by aṭ-Ṭabarī, but Ibn ‘Aṭīyah says that his interpretation [about the permissibility of doubt] is rejected.

As for what Ibn ‘Abbās said, ‘I consider this the most hopeful of āyahs,’ that is because it contains boldness (idāl) to Allah Almighty and asking for revivification in this world and there is no suspicion concerning it. It is permitted to say, ‘I consider this the most hopeful of āyahs since Allah asked, “Do you not believe?” which shows that faith is enough and there is no need for delving and investigation.’ ‘Aṭā’s statement can refer to direct witnessing of bringing the dead to life, and the meaning of the hadith is: ‘If he had doubted, then we would have been more entitled to doubt. We do not doubt, and so it is more likely that Ibrāhīm did not doubt either.’

The hadith is, in fact, negating any doubt on the part of Ibrāhīm. It is related that the Prophet ﷺ said about it, ‘That is pure faith.’ It concerns passing thoughts which do not last. Doubt means to hesitate between two matters without preferring one to the other.

The Khalīl was not subject to that. Bringing the dead to life was affirmed when he heard it. Ibrāhīm knew it, as he said, ‘My Lord gives life and causes to die,’ earlier in this sūrah. Doubt is far from someone whose feet are firm in faith, so how much more must that be the case with someone whose rank is that of a Prophet and Friend. It is agreed that Prophets are protected from major wrong actions and minor vile ones by consensus.

If you reflect on the request he made and all the words of the āyah, you will find that they do not imply doubt. It is a question of ‘how’. It is a matter of the manner of the occurrence of a phenomenon which exists and is affirmed by the asker. It is like the questions, ‘How does Zayd know?’, ‘How is cloth woven?’ and other such things. When you say, ‘How is your garment?’ and ‘How is Zayd?’ it is a question about a state. ‘How’ can apply to something which is understood as when you say, ‘Be however you wish.’ It is also like the words of al-Bukhārī, ‘How the beginning of the revelation was’. The ‘how’ in this āyah is asking about the manner of bringing to life. Bringing to life is confirmed. However, we find some of those who deny the existence of something refer to that denial by asking about the state of that thing which the person knows not to be sound, indicating that they find that thing itself not to be sound. That is like when someone claims, ‘I will lift up this mountain!’ and the person who denies him says, ‘How could you possibly lift it up?’ Here the expression is used metaphorically with the aim of denial. It is a disputatious remark and is as if he were saying, ‘Supposing that you can raise it, tell me how you are going to do that!’ Since the words used by Ibrāhīm also involve this metaphorical usage, Allah absolved him of doing that and had Ibrāhīm make the reality clear by asking him, ‘Do you not then believe?’ He replied, ‘Indeed I do.’ So the business was complete and he was shown to be free of any doubt. Then he said that the reason for his question was to have his heart be at peace.

What Ibn ‘Aṭīyah mentioned is conclusive. Doubt of this sort is not permissible for the Prophets. It constitutes disbelief. The Prophets agree about Resurrection. Allah reported that Shayṭān has no way against His Prophets and awliyā’. He says: ‘You have no authority over any of My slaves.’ (15:42) The accursed one said, ‘only Your slaves among them who are sincere.’ If he has no power over them, how could he make them doubt? He was asking about how the parts of the dead are gathered together after they have been separated and how their sinews and skins are reconstituted after they have fallen apart. He wanted to move from the knowledge of certainty to the eye-witnessing of certainty. His words, ‘show me how,’ are asking for direct witnessing of the manner in which it is achieved. Some of the people who deal in meanings say that Ibrāhīm wanted his Lord to show him how He brings the hearts to life, but this is false and rejected because of the following explanation. Al-Māwardī mentioned it. The alif in ‘Do you not (a wa lam) believe’ is not the interrogative alif, but the alif of affirmation.

He replied, ‘Indeed I do! But so that my heart may be at peace.’

‘I make this request to You so that my heart will be tranquil through seeing the difference between what is known by intellectual proof and what is known by direct experience.’ The tranquillity of the heart consists in balance and stillness. The tranquillity of the limbs is known, as in rukū’ when they are still, as the Prophet ﷺ instructed: ‘Then bow until you are still in bowing.’ The tranquillity of the heart occurs when someone’s thoughts have been stilled concerning the thing believed. Reflecting about the manner in which revivification occurs is not forbidden, just as we still reflect on it today when there are lessons to be learned from it. Ibrāhīm wanted to actually see it take place and witness the manner in which it occurs. Aṭ-Ṭabarī said that this means that he wanted to have certainty. The same was related from Sa‘īd ibn Jubayr. It is also related from him that it was about increasing his certainty. Ibrāhīm and Qatādah said that.

Some of them said that it is to further increase faith. Ibn ‘Aṭīyah points out that this is nonsensical since certainty is indivisible. As-Suddī and Ibn Jubayr said that it means: ‘Do you not believe that you are My Khalīl?’ He replied, ‘Yes, but so that my heart may be at peace about it.’ It is said that he prayed to be shown how the dead are brought back to life so that he would know whether Allah would answer His prayer. So Allah said to him, ‘Do you not believe that I answer your prayer?’ He replied, ‘Yes, but so that my heart may be at peace about Your answering my prayer.’

There is disagreement about what moved him to do this. It is said that Allah promised to make him His Khalīl and he wanted a sign of that. As-Sā’ib ibn Yazīd said that. It is said that it was the words of Nimrod, ‘I give life and cause to die,’ which made him ask. Al-Ḥasan said that he saw a riding animal which wild beasts and snakes had eaten and asked the question. It was half on the land and half in the sea. When he saw how it was split up, he wanted to know how it would be gathered back together so that his heart would be at peace by seeing how the parts would be rejoined when he saw how they were separated.

He said, ‘Take four birds and train them to yourself. Then put a part of them on each mountain and call to them; they will come rushing to you.’

It is said that they were a cock, a peacock, a dove and a crow. Ibn Ishāq mentioned that from some scholars. Mujāhid, Ibn Jurayj, ‘Aṭā’ ibn Yasār and Ibn Zayd said that. Ibn ‘Abbās said it was a crane instead of a crow, and elsewhere an eagle in place of the dove.

Ibrāhīm took these birds as he was commanded and then slaughtered them and then cut them into small pieces. He mixed their flesh together with the blood and feathers so that they were all jumbled together and then put parts of that mixture on each mountain. He stood where he could see those pieces while he kept the heads of the birds in his hand. Then he said, ‘Come by Allah’s permission,’ and those parts flew and the blood flew to the blood and feathers to feathers until they were as they had been at first but headless. Then he repeated the call and they ran to him. The verb saʿy is not used when a bird flies except metaphorically. An-Naḥḥās said that. Ibrāhīm pointed at each of them which was without a head. When he pointed with its head, it came close until each bird joined its head and they flew away by Allah’s permission. Az-Zajjāj said that it means: ‘put a piece of each on each mountain.’ Abū Bakr from ‘Āṣim and Abū Ja‘far recited ‘juzu’. Abū Ja‘far recited “juzz” while the rest have ‘juzʿ’. They are different dialects. It means a portion.

The words “ṣurhunna ilayka” (train them to yourself) may mean make them incline to you but are also said to mean ‘cut them up’. Ibn ‘Abbās, Mujaḥid, Abū ‘Abīdah and al-Anbārī said that. Ibn Iṣḥāq said that. Abu-l-Aswad ad-Du‘alī said that its means ‘cutting’ in Syriac. Tawbah ibn al-Ḥumayyir said in a description:

When I tugged the rope, the thongs of the saddle-girth creaked with the ends of sticks, its thongs being strong.

The ropes were close to me when I reached them when I stood, and my rising almost cut them (yaṣūruhā).

Sawr is cutting. Aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk, ‘Ikrimah, and Ibn ‘Abbās in another transmission, said that it means ‘cut’ in Nabatean. It is said that it means ‘to make them incline to you’, i.e. bring them to you and gather them to you. A man who is described as ‘aṣwar’ has his neck bent. The word also means to incline to in the sense of yearning for. A woman is described as ṣawrā’ and the plural is ṣūr, like aswad and sūd. A poet said:

Allah knows that in my turning
To my neighbours on the day of separation, I yearn (ṣūr).

If it means ‘cut’, ‘to’ is connected to ‘take’ and there is no need for implying something elided. If it means ‘incline to’, it is connected to ‘ṣurhunna’ and there is something elided: ‘make them incline to you and then cut them up.’

There are five readings here, two of which are from the seven readings: ‘ṣurhunna’ and ‘ṣirhunna’. Some people recite ‘ṣurrahunna’ as if He were saying, ‘Bind them.’ Connected to that meaning is the purse (surrah) for dinars. Some people recite ‘ṣirrahunna’, meaning ‘make them call out’ from the verb ṣarra for the creaking of a door and the noise of a pen. An-Naqqāsh related it. Ibn Jinnī said that it is a rare reading and that the form ‘yafīlu’ in doubled transitive verbs is rare. Normally the middle letter has a ḍammah. Ibn Jinnī said, ‘As for the reading of ‘Ikrimah with a ḍammah on the ṣād, it is possible for the rā’ to have a ḍammah, fathah or kasrah, but what is proper is to have a ḍammah because of the ḍammah on the hā’ after it. The fifth reading is ‘ṣarrihinna’ which al-Mahdawī and others related from ‘Ikrimah. It means: ‘restrain them’ from ṣarrā, yusarrī. Connected to that meaning is a sheep which is muṣarrāh, whose milk is left to collect in the udder.

Here al-Māwardī interjects an objection. Why should Ibrāhīm be given a response when asking for the Signs of the Next World when that was denied to Mūsā when he asked, ‘Lord, show yourself to me so that I may look at You!’ (7:143)? There are two answers to this. One is that what Mūsā asked for does not correspond with continuing responsibility while what Ibrāhīm asked for is particular and continued responsibility corresponds with it. The second is that the circumstances were different. It may be proper for something to be granted at certain times but denied at other times regarding that for which there is no permission. Ibn ‘Abbās said, ‘Allah commanded Ibrāhīm to do this before he had children and before the Scrolls were sent down to him.’ Allah knows best.

عَلِيمٌ ﴿٢٤٥﴾

261 The metaphor of those who spend their wealth in the Way of Allah is that of a grain which produces seven ears; in every ear there are a hundred grains. Allah gives such multiplied increase to whoever He wills. Allah is All-Encompassing, All-Knowing.

After Allah has given evidence in support of fighting in the Way of Allah, He encourages jihād and confirms that those who do jihād after this evidence, which only a Prophet could have brought them, will have an immense reward for it. It is reported by al-Bustī in his sound Musnad from Ibn ‘Umar, ‘When this āyah was revealed, the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, “Lord, give my community even more,” and then Allah revealed: “Is there anyone who will make Allah a generous loan so that He can multiply it for him many times over?” (2:245) The Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, “Lord, give my community even more than that,” and Allah revealed: “The steadfast will be paid their wages in full without any reckoning” (39:10).”

This āyah stresses the nobility of spending in the Way of Allah and its excellence and encourages people to do that. There is an elision in the Arabic, which implies, ‘The metaphor of the “spending” of those who spend...’ or ‘The metaphor of those who spend their wealth is like a farmer who plants his crop of grain in the earth...’ meaning that it produces seven ears in each of which there is a hundred grains. So He likens the one who gives ṣadaqah to a cultivator and likens the ṣadaqah to grain set aside for sowing, and so Allah gives him for every ṣadaqah of his seven hundred good deeds.

The metaphor makes it clear that a good action is worth seven hundred good deeds. ‘Allah gives such multiplied increase to whomever He wills’ means that it can amount to even more than seven hundred.

So the person who gives ṣadaqah is like a farmer. If he is intelligent in his work and the seed is good and the earth is fertile, the crop will be abundant. The same applies if the one who gives ṣadaqah is righteous and the wealth is good and he spends it in a place where the reward will be great. Some say that seven hundredfold is the maximum possible increase.

It is related that this āyah was revealed about ‘Uthmān ibn ‘Affān and ‘Abd ar-Raḥmān ibn ‘Awf on the occasion when the Messenger of Allah ﷺ encouraged people to give ṣadaqah when he was going on the Tabūk expedition. ‘Abd ar-Raḥmān brought him four thousand and said, ‘Messenger of Allah, I have eight thousand. I have kept four thousand for myself and my dependants and I am lending four thousand to my Lord.’ The Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘May Allah bless you in what you have kept and what you have given.’ ‘Uthmān said, ‘Messenger of Allah, I will kit out all those who have no equipment,’ and this was revealed about them.

It is said that it was revealed about voluntary ṣadaqah. It is also said that it was revealed before the Āyah of Zakat and then abrogated by the Āyah of Zakat. There is no need to claim abrogation because spending in the Way of Allah is recommended at every time. The ways of spending are numerous, and the greatest of them is for jihād to raise high the word of Allah.

The type of grain referred to is not specified. The word used is ḥabbah and can designate all grains that are cultivated and stored as food. Wheat, however, is the most famous of them. Part of that is the words of al-Mutalammis [Jarīr ibn ‘Abd al-Masīḥ]:

I wish that I could always eat the wheat (ḥabb) of Iraq.

The wheat which is eaten in the town is worms.

Ḥabbat al-qālib is one’s beloved or its fruit. Ḥibbah are seeds of plants that are not foodstuffs. We find in the hadith of intercession: ‘They will grow as a seed (ḥibbah) grows in what the flood has carried.’ The plural is hibab. Ḥubbah is love as is hibb, which also means ‘beloved’.

Sunbulah (ear) comes from the verb, asbala, to put forth ears [of grain], and they are released as a curtain is let down (isbāl). It is said that it means that covered grain appears in it as a thing is covered when a curtain is dropped over it. The plural of sunbulah is sanābil. It is said that what is meant are ears of millet which has that number in its ears. However, this is baseless because the ears of millet have many times more than this number as we can see.

Ibn ‘Aṭīyyah said, ‘The ears of wheat have a hundred grains. As for other grains, they have more than that. The example, however, merely uses this number.’ Aṭ-Ṭabarī said about this āyah that it is a hundred grains if that exists. Otherwise, it is an estimation. Aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk said that it means that every ear has a hundred grains. Ibn ‘Aṭīyyah said, ‘What aṭ-Ṭabarī said is more or less the same as aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk said.’ Abū ‘Amr ad-Dānī said that some recite ‘mi’ata’ in the accusative, implying, ‘It produces a hundred grains.’ Ya‘qūb al-Ḥaḍramī said that some recite ‘mi’ata’ in the accusative, implying, ‘It produces a hundred grains,’ just as some recite ‘punishment’ in the accusative in 67:6, meaning ‘We have prepared for those who disbelieve the punishment of Hell.’ Abū ‘Amr, Ḥamzah and al-Kisā’ī recite ‘anbatas-sab’ with the tā’ assimilated into the sīn because they are both letters with soft articulation and sometimes replace one another. The rest have them as distinct because they are two words.

The Qur’an reports that a good action of any type is worth ten like it. This āyah tells us that spending in jihād is worth seven hundred. Scholars disagree about the meanings of ‘Allah gives such multiplied increase to whomever He wills.’ One group say that it is simply a reference to the seven hundred fold mentioned and does not indicate a greater increase than that. Another group of scholars says that it is to inform us that Allah can multiply it more than seven hundred times if He wishes. I consider this to be the soundest because of hadiths which mention that possibility.

Ibn Mājah related from Hārūn ibn ‘Abdullāh al-Ḥammāl from Ibn Abī Fudayk from al-Khalīl ibn ‘Abdullāh from al-Ḥasan from ‘Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib, Abu-d-Dardā’, ‘Abdullāh ibn ‘Amr, Abū Umāmah al-Bāhili, ‘Abdullāh ibn ‘Amr, Jābir ibn ‘Abdullāh and ‘Imrān ibn Ḥuṣayn that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘If someone sends support for the Cause of Allah while he remains in his house, he will have seven hundred dirhams for every dirham. If someone goes on an expedition in the Cause of Allah and spends on it, he will have 700,000 dirhams for every dirham.’ Then he recited this āyah: ‘Allah gives multiplied increase to whomever He wills.’ It is related from Ibn ‘Abbās that the multiplication reaches a million for whomever Allah wishes. Ibn ‘Aṭīyah said, ‘This does not have a verified isnād.’

This āyah contains evidence that agriculture is one of the highest professions adopted by people and is a legitimate way of earning a living. This is why Allah uses it for metaphors. We read in Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘There is no Muslim who plants a seedling or cultivates a crop from which birds, humans or animals eat without that being ṣadaqah for them.’ Hishām ibn ‘Urwah related from his father that ‘Ā’ishah reported that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘Cling to cultivation in the hidden places of the earth.’ At-Tirmidhī transmitted it. The Prophet ﷺ said about palm trees, ‘They are firm in muddy conditions and give food in drought.’ This is praise for them. Agriculture is one of the communal (kifāyah) obligations and so a ruler must compel people to do it. This includes planting trees. ‘Abdullāh ibn ‘Abd al-Malik met Ibn Shihāb az-Zuhrī and said, ‘Direct me to property I can apply myself to.’ Ibn Shihāb said:

I say to ‘Abdullāh on the day I meet him, when the camels are saddled for the east,
 ‘Follow the plants of the earth and leave their owners.
 Perhaps one day you will receive an answer and be provided for.
 You will be given vast recurring wealth

when the waters of the earth gush forth.’

It is related that al-Mu‘taḍid said, ‘I saw ‘Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib in a dream handing me a spade and he said, “Take it. It is the key to the treasures of the earth.”’

الَّذِينَ يُنْفِقُونَ أَمْوَالَهُمْ فِي سَبِيلِ اللَّهِ لَا يَتَّبِعُونَ مَا أَغْنَوْا مِنَّا
وَلَا أَذَىٰ لَهُمْ أَجْرُهُمْ عِنْدَ رَبِّهِمْ وَلَا خَوْفٌ عَلَيْهِمْ وَلَا هُمْ

262 Those who spend their wealth in the Way of Allah, and then do not follow what they have spent by demands for gratitude or insulting words will have their reward with their Lord. They will feel no fear and will know no sorrow.

Those who spend their wealth in the Way of Allah,

This was revealed about ‘Uthmān ibn ‘Affān. ‘Abd ar-Raḥmān ibn Samurah said, ‘Uthmān brought a thousand dinars for the Army of Hardship and put it in the lap of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ. I saw him put his hand in it and turn it about. He said, “It does matter what ‘Uthmān does after today. O Allah, do not forget this day for ‘Uthmān!”’ Abū Sa‘īd al-Khudrī said, ‘I saw the Prophet ﷺ raise his hands to pray for ‘Uthmān, saying, “My Lord, ‘Uthmān! I am pleased with ‘Uthmān, so be pleased with him.”’ After dawn, this āyah was revealed.’

Spending in the Way of Allah in general was mentioned in the previous āyah and then it is made clear in this āyah that judgment about it and reward for it are for the one who does not follow up what he gives with demands for gratitude or insult of any kind. For such an action would invalidate the ṣadaqah as Allah tells us in the next āyah. You must desire the face of Allah and His reward by spending and not hope for any kind of return for it from the one to whom you give it. Allah Almighty says: ‘We do not want any repayment from you or any thanks.’ (76:9) If you desire something in exchange for it from the person you give it to then it is not for the Face of Allah. This is the case when someone follows up his spending with demands and insult. The same is also true when someone has to spend to avert harm since the one on whom he spent will owe him a favour or some similar feeling of indebtedness. He does not desire to please Allah when he does this. Allah only accepts what is given for the sake of Allah and when most of the aim is to seek that which is with Allah. It is as it is related that a desert Arab came to ‘Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb and said:

‘Umar! Charity is rewarded with the Garden.
Clothe my little daughters and their mother!
Be a protection for us against time!
I ask you by Allah to do it!’

‘Umar said, ‘And if I do not do it, what then?’ He replied: ‘Then, Abū Ḥaḥṣ, I will go.’ He said, ‘And if you go, what then?’ He said:

‘You will be questioned about my state on the day when there are gifts,
In a place of standing when one will be questioned about it, and will either go to the Fire or to the Garden.’

‘Umar wept until his beard was wet and then said, ‘Lad, give him this shirt of mine because of that Day, not because of his poem! By Allah, I do not own any other shirt!’

Al-Māwardī said, ‘When the gift is like this, free of seeking recompense or gratitude, and free of seeking indebtedness or publicity, that is more noble for the giver and more pleasant for the one who accepts it. As for someone who gives while seeking recompense for his gift and demanding gratitude and praise, he is someone showing off, seeking reputation. These cases entail censure which negates the generosity. If someone seeks something, he is a trader looking for a profit who does not deserve praise.’ Ibn ‘Abbās said that the āyah: ‘Do not give out of a desire for gain’ (74:6) means: ‘Do not give a gift whereby you seek one better than it.’ Ibn Zayd believed that this āyah was about those who do not go out in jihād, but give while they remain at home. The āyah before it is about those who go out themselves. He said, ‘That is why there is a precondition for these people, but not for the first ones.’ Ibn ‘Aṭīyyah said, ‘This statement is debatable because its arbitrary nature is evident.’

and then do not follow what they have spent by demands for gratitude or insulting words

The expression ‘demands for gratitude’ (mann) means to mention the blessing by enumerating it and rebuking the person by it, as when you say ‘I was good to you’, ‘I restored you’, ‘After all I have done for you’ and other such things. Some say that manna means to speak about what you gave so that the recipient hears about it and to insult him. Mann is one of the great wrong actions. That is confirmed in Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim and elsewhere. Someone who does that is one of the three whom Allah will not look at and whom He will not purify on the Day of Rising, and they will have a painful punishment. An-Nasā’ī related from Ibn ‘Umar that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘There are three who will not enter the Garden: the one who disobeys his parents, a habitual drinker, and someone who demands gratitude for his gift.’ One of the paths of transmission in Muslim has: ‘someone who only gives something in order to receive gratitude for it.’

The expression ‘adhā’ (insulting words) means insulting and complaining and is more general than mann which is mentioned because it frequently occurs. Ibn Zayd said, ‘If you think that your greeting will be onerous for someone on whom you have spent desiring the Face of Allah, then do not greet him.’ A woman asked him, ‘Abu Usāmah, show me a man who will truly go out in the Way of Allah. They only go out for what they can get. I have arrows and a quiver.’ He said, ‘May Allah not bless your arrows and quiver! You have harmed them even before giving to them!’ Our scholars have said that if someone spends in the Way of Allah and does not follow it by demands for gratitude or insulting words such as ‘How strongly you entreat!’, ‘May Allah deliver us from you!’ and the like, Allah has guaranteed him the reward, which is the Garden, removed fear of what is to come from Him after his death, and sorrow for what he missed of this world because he delights in His Hereafter.

They will feel no fear and will know no sorrow.

They will feel no fear for the future after death and no sorrow for what has passed of this world because they will delight in the Next World. This āyah also contains evidence for the excellence of the rich over the poor as will come later, Allah willing.

قَوْلٌ مَّعْرُوفٌ وَمَغْفِرَةٌ خَيْرٌ مِّنْ صَدَقَةٍ يَتْبَعُهَا أذى وَاللَّهُ عَنِ

263 Correct and courteous words accompanied by forgiveness are better than ṣadaqah followed by insulting words. Allah is Rich Beyond Need, All-Forbearing.

Correct and courteous words

It means that correct words are more appropriate as an-Naḥḥās and al-Mahdawī said. An-Naḥḥās said, based on an elided inceptive, that it can mean: ‘That which you are commanded is to use correct and courteous words.’ Words which are described as ‘maʿrūf’ include making supplication, putting people at their ease and giving them hope for what is with Allah. That is better than ṣadaqah which is merely outward with no inward dimension, because correct words will have a reward while outward ṣadaqah may have no reward. The Prophet ﷺ said, ‘A good word is ṣadaqah, and an aspect of correct behaviour is to meet your brother with a cheerful face.’ Muslim transmitted it. One should meet the beggar with a smile and welcome him so that he will be thankful if you give to him and excuse you if you do not. One of the sages said, ‘Meet the one with a need with a smile. Even if you miss his gratitude you will not miss his pardon.’ Ibn Lankak related that Abū Bakr ibn Durayd went to a government official for something he needed and his request was not granted. The official showed some vexation, so he said:

Do not be vexed by someone who makes a request.

It is a good thing to be seen as someone to whom requests are made.

Do not show the face of rejection to a hopeful face.

Your might continues when you are seen as a source of hope.

You meet the noble and show joy.

You meet the blameworthy and your frown is a guide.

Know that soon you will be reported,

So be a report that gives delight.

In the hadith of ‘Umar we find that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘When a beggar asks of you, do not interrupt his request until he finishes. Then turn to him with gravity and leniency, or spend a little, or give a good reply. One who is neither human nor jinn will come to you to see what you do with what Allah has given you.’

Its proof is the hadith about the leper, the person with scabies and the blind man which Muslim and others transmitted. In that account an angel took the form of a leper, a bald man and a blind man to test the individual concerned. Bishr ibn al-Hārith said, ‘I saw ‘Alī in a dream and said, “Amīr al-Mu’minin! Tell me something by which Allah will benefit me!” he answered, “How excellent is the kindness of the Prophets to the poor out of desire for the reward of Allah Almighty, and better still is the poor escaping the rich by putting their trust in what Allah has promised.” I said, “Amīr al-Mu’minin! Tell me more!” He recited:

“You were dead and then became alive, and you soon will be dead again.

Ruin a house in the abode that is transient.

Build a house in the abode that will abide!”

accompanied by forgiveness

This can refer to disregarding the defects and bad state of the needy. This is like the case of the desert Arab who begged from people with eloquent language. Someone asked him, ‘Where are you from?’ He answered, ‘O Allah, forgiveness! It is an evil earning that it is denied because of lineage!’ It is also said that its meaning is that to excuse a beggar when he is insistent, rude and harsh is better than giving him ṣadaqah with demands of gratitude and insults. An-Naqqāsh said something to that effect. An-Naḥḥās said, ‘This is a problem explained by the desert Arab.’

The words ‘better than ṣadaqah’ mean, and Allah knows best, that an action that leads to forgiveness is better than ṣadaqah followed by insulting words. It can be like your words, ‘Allah’s graciousness to you is greater than ṣadaqah by which gratitude is intended.’ So Allah’s forgiveness is better than this sort of ṣadaqah.

Allah is Rich Beyond Need, All-Forbearing.

Allah is Rich beyond need of the ṣadaqah of his slaves. He orders them to do it so that He can reward them for it. An aspect of His Forbearance is that He does not hasten the punishment to the one who insults when he gives ṣadaqah.

يَا أَيُّهَا الَّذِينَ آمَنُوا لَا تُبْطِلُوا صَدَقَاتِكُم بِالْمَنِّ وَالْأَذَىٰ كَالَّذِي
يُعْفِقُ مَالَهُ رِثَاءَ النَّاسِ وَلَا يُؤْمِنُ بِاللَّهِ وَالْيَوْمِ الْآخِرِ فَمَثَلُهُ
كَمِثْلِ صَفْوَانٍ عَلَيْهِ تُرَابٌ فَأَصَابَهُ وَابِلٌ فَتَرَكَهُ صَلْدًا لَا
يَقْدِرُونَ عَلَىٰ شَيْءٍ مِّمَّا كَسَبُوا وَاللَّهُ لَا يَهْدِي الْقَوْمَ الْكَافِرِينَ ﴿٢٦٤﴾

264 You who believe! do not nullify your ṣadaqah by demands for gratitude or insulting words, like him who spends his wealth, showing off to people and not believing in Allah and the Last Day. His likeness is that of a smooth rock coated with soil, which, when heavy rain falls on it, is left stripped bare. They have no power over anything they have earned. Allah does not guide disbelieving people.

You who believe! do not nullify your ṣadaqah by demands for gratitude or insulting words,

This tells us that Allah does not accept ṣadaqah which is marred in this way and that the reward for it is made null and void. What is referred to is ṣadaqah by which gratitude and insults are meant. It is an article of faith that, in general, evil deeds do not invalidate good deeds or cancel them out. Demands for gratitude and insults do not invalidate other ṣadaqah which has been made without them. The majority of scholars say that it is only the ṣadaqah Allah knows has been used to impose gratitude or used as an insult that is not accepted. It is said that Allah appoints an angel over the giver who does not register that. This is good.

The Arabs say of someone who demands gratitude, that he has ‘a black hand’. When he gives without being asked, he has ‘a white hand’. If someone gives after being asked, he has ‘a green hand’. One of the eloquent said, ‘Whoever expects gratitude for charity has lost gratitude. If someone admires his deeds, his reward is lost.’ A poet said:

I borrowed from a friend of mine.

I was slow in repaying him and he was hostile to me.

When he was certain that time was fighting me, he showed regret in his dealing with me.

Someone else said:

You corrupted the good that you gave by seeking thanks.

When a generous person gives, he does not seek thanks.

Abū Bakr al-Warrāq spoke well when he said:

The very best of good at every time and moment is a gift which is free of seeking gratitude.

Ibn Sīrīn heard one man say to another, ‘I did this and that for you!’ He told him, ‘Be quiet! There is no good in charity which is counted.’ The Prophet ﷺ said, ‘Beware of demanding gratitude for charity. It invalidates thankfulness and erases the reward.’ Then he recited this āyah.

Our scholars say that, on the basis of this āyah, Mālik disliked a man giving his obligatory zakāt to his relatives in case he might be praised in return for it or they might feel the need to show gratitude to him and recompense him for it. Then it would not be sincerely for the Face of Allah. He preferred it to be given to non-relatives and also preferred that someone other than the giver should undertake to distribute it, if there is no ruler to do so, to prevent the danger of demands for gratitude or insults, and that of praise, or recompense by service from the recipient. This is not the case with ṣadaqah because, even its reward is nullified, he is safe from any threat and is just like someone who has not done anything. When the obligatory is nullified, he is threatened about something he has failed to do.

like him who spends his wealth, showing off to people and not believing in Allah and the Last Day.

Allah likens someone who demands gratitude and inflicts insults through his ṣadaqah to someone who spends to show off to people, not for the Face of Allah, and to an unbeliever who spends so that people will say that he is generous and praise him for it.

His likeness is that of a smooth rock coated with soil, which, when heavy rain falls on it, is left stripped bare.

Then this person is likened to a smooth rock covered with soil. One would think, to look at it, that it is fertile, good earth but then the rain comes and washes it away and all that is left is bare rock. That is a metaphor for someone who gives in order to show off. His intention of seeking gratitude, insult and showing off will be disclosed in the Next World and the act of ṣadaqah will be null and void, in the same way that the heavy rain exposes the smooth stone.

Ṣafwān is a large smooth stone. It is said that what is meant is that any person who spends to show off is, like an unbeliever, not rewarded because he does not intend the Face of Allah by his act so as to merit the reward, even if he gives multiple times, and so the excellence of the action is voided. It is said that the reward is nullified from the moment he demands gratitude or behaves insultingly. What was before that is written for him and multiplied. Then the insult stops the multiplication because ṣadaqah grows and grows until it is as big as a mountain. When it leaves his hand sincerely in the prescribed manner, it is multiplied, but when gratitude is sought by it or an insult made, it stops there and the multiplication is cut off. The first position, however, is more evident, and Allah knows best.

Ṣafwān is the plural and ṣafwānah is the singular. Al-Akhfash said that. Some have said that ṣafwān is a singular. Al-Kisāʿī said that ṣafwān is a singular and its plural is ṣifwān, ṣufyy or ṣifyy. Al-Mubarrad, however, denied that and said that ṣifyy is the plural of ṣafā. From this comes ṣafwāʾ and ṣafū (stones). Saʿīd ibn al-Musayyab and az-Zuhrī recited it as ṣafawān, which is a dialectical usage. Quṭrub recited ṣifwān. An-Naḥḥās said that ṣafwān and ṣifwān can be either plural or singular, although it is more likely to be singular since Allah uses the singular ḥāʾ in referring to it. It is still permitted to mention the plural, but a thing is only removed from its normal place by a definitive proof. As for what al-Kisāʿī related about the plural, it is not sound based on true investigation, but ṣifwān is the plural of ṣafā which means ṣafwān. This is like waral and wirlān, akh and ikhwān, and karā and kirwān.

Wābil is heavy rain. The verb wabala is used when it rains heavily. The earth which receives it is described as mawbūlah. Corroborating that meaning are Allah's words: 'We seized him with terrible severity (wabīl).' (73:16) A blow or a punishment described as wabīl is severe. Ṣald is smooth stone. Al-Kisāʿī said that the verb is ṣalida. Ṣald is any part of the earth on which no plants grow. It describes the forehead where no hair grows. An-Naqqāsh said that aṣlad means ‘stripped’ in the dialect of Hudhayl.

They have no power

over anything they have earned.

This means that they will not reap the reward of their spending. What they give is simply considered as something they spend for their own needs since it is for other than Allah. Spending is called ‘earning’ because they intend earning by it. It is said that this is a metaphor for the nullifying of the reward of those who show off in their giving and the voiding of the excellence of the giving of those who look for gratitude or who cause harm by it. Al-Māwardī mentioned that.

وَمَثَلُ الَّذِينَ يُنْفِقُونَ أَمْوَالَهُمُ ابْتِغَاءَ مَرْضَاتِ اللَّهِ وَتُبَيْتًا مِّنْ أَنفُسِهِمْ
 يُصِبْهَا وَابِلٌ فَطَلٌّ وَاللَّهُ بِمَا تَعْمَلُونَ بَصِيرٌ ﴿٢٦٥﴾

265 The metaphor of those who spend their wealth, desiring the pleasure of Allah and firmness for themselves, is that of a garden on a hillside. When heavy rain falls on it, it doubles its produce; and if heavy rain does not fall, there is dew. Allah sees what you do.

The metaphor of those who spend their wealth, desiring the pleasure of Allah and firmness for themselves,

Ibtighā’ (desiring) is a causative object and tathbīt (firmness) is conjoined to it. Makkī said that both tathbīt (firmness) and ‘desiring’ are causative objects. Ibn ‘Aṭīyah says that it is not, because spending does not ‘make firm’ and so tathbīt cannot be a causative object and, in fact, ibtighā’ (desiring) is a verbal noun used adverbially. Allah mentions the ṣadaqah of those who gain nothing from their ṣadaqah and forbade the believers to vitiate their ṣadaqah like that in any way. He mentions the spending of the people whose ṣadaqah is pure since it is given in keeping with the commands of the Sharī‘ah.

The word ibtighā‘ means ‘seeking’ and ‘marḍāt’ (pleasure) is the verbal noun from the verb radā, to please. It is said that the word tathbūt means that they confirm where they should give their ṣadaqah. Mujāhid and al-Ḥasan said that. Al-Ḥasan said, ‘When a man wants to give ṣadaqah, he “confirms” it by examining himself. If it is truly for Allah, he should give it. If it is mixed with doubt, he should refrain from doing so.’ It is said that it means to confirm it and be certain about it, as Ibn ‘Abbās said. Ibn ‘Abbās and Qatādah also said that it means examining their own motives. Ash-Sha‘bī, as-Suddī, Qatādah, Ibn Zayd, Abū Ṣāliḥ and others said that it means to make certain, in other words they should look into themselves and confirm that their spending is out of obedience to Allah. These three positions are more correct than that of al-Ḥasan and Mujāhid who both believed that ‘tathbūt’ is a verbal noun not based on another verbal noun. Ibn ‘Aṭīyah said that this is only allowed when mentioning the verbal noun and it is made clear by a prior use of verb as we see elsewhere in the Qur’an as in 71:17 and 73:8. If there is no mention of the verb first, then you cannot use the verbal noun with other than its meaning. Ibn ‘Aṭīyah said, ‘This is the pathway taken in Arabic as far as I know.’ An-Naḥḥās said, ‘If it had been as Mujāhid says, it would be tathabbut from tathabbata. The statement of Qatādah about it being examination is not known, although it can be meant that their selves are firm and examined. This is unlikely.’ The position of ash-Sha‘bī is good: it means making it firm in themselves that they are spending that to obey Allah. One uses the verb thabbata to refer to someone verifying his resolve and strengthening his opinion. So here they are certain of Allah’s promise to make them firm in that. It is also said that it means to

A 'jannah' (garden) is a piece of land with trees which shade it, taken from the linguistic root which means 'to cover and conceal'. The word 'rubwah' (hillside) indicates a slightly elevated place which usually has a thick layer of good earth and is very fertile, which is why it is mentioned. Ibn 'Aṭīyah said, 'Riyād al-Ḥazan is not being referred to here as aṭ-Ṭabarī claims. Rather those are the meadows ascribed to Najd because they are the best meadows of Tihāmah. The plants of Najd are fragrant and are called abrad and araqq. Najd is called Ḥazan (sorrow). Sometimes the air of Tihāmah is only good at night. That is why the desert Arabs say, 'My spouse is like the night of Tihāmah.' As-Suddī said that it is at a rabāwah, and that means the lower ground.' Ibn 'Aṭīyah said, 'This is an undetermined expression because rubwah is derived from rabā, which is to grow.'

What as-Suddī said is of no consequence because the Arabic root r-b-w means 'increase' in Arabic. It is used for asthma (rabw), when the breath is short, and it is also used generally for being short of breath. Al-Farrā' mentions about 'He seized them in an ever-tightening grip (rābiyah)' (69:9) that it means 'increasing'. Arbā is to give more. The verb is also used for growing up among a people.

Al-Khalīl also says that rubwah is an elevated place which Allah singled out because the water does not flood such a place as frequently happens with flash floods in Arab lands. So it is a situation that they like. Ibn 'Abbās said that it is an elevated place through which rivers do not flow because Allah mentioned heavy rain in a manner that indicates that there is no running water there. It does not mean there cannot be running water because elsewhere Allah mentions, 'a mountainside (rabwah) where there was a meadow and a flowing spring.' (23:50) What is known in Arabic is that it is an elevated place, whether or not there is flowing water there.

'Rubwah' (hillside) has five dialectal forms. 'Rubwah' is the qirā'ah of Ibn Kathīr, Ḥamzah, al-Kisā'ī, Nāfi' and Abū 'Amr. 'Āṣim, Ibn 'Āmir and al-Ḥasan have 'rabwah'. 'Ribwah' is the reading of Ibn 'Abbās and Abū Ishāq as-Sabī'ī. 'Rabāwah' is the reading of Abū Ja'far an Abū 'Abd ar-Raḥmān. This form is found in a poem. 'Ribāwah' is the reading of al-Ashhab al-'Aqīlī. Al-Farrā' said that one says rabāwah and ribāwah and all are from rābiyah and the verb is rabā', yarbū.

When heavy rain falls on it, it doubles its produce; and if heavy rain does not fall, there is dew.

'It' is the hillside. Wābil is heavy rain. A poet said:

There are none of the meadows of Ḥazan with green grass on which heavy rain (wābil) falls.

Ukul (produce) is the fruit which is eaten. The same word is used in 14:25. It is also used for anything that is eaten. Uklah is a morsel. The hadith in Muslim describes the reward for every morsel a husband puts in his wife's mouth using the word 'uklah'. Here it is ascribed to the garden to make it specific, like the saddle of a horse or the door of a house.

Nāfi', Ibn Kathīr and Abū 'Amr recite 'uklahā'. That is the case with all that is attributed to something feminine. 'Āṣim, Ibn 'Āmir, Ḥamzah and al-Kisā'ī distinguish it when it is ascribed to something masculine, as in 6:141 (ukuluhu), and when it is not ascribed as in 36:16 (ukulin). Abū 'Āṣim makes that heavy while the other two lighten it [of the middle vowel]. 'Āṣim, Ibn 'Āmir, Ḥamzah and al-Kisā'ī recite it with full pronunciation in all we mentioned. It is also said that ukl and ukul mean the same.

The verb 'double' means that it gives twice the amount of fruit produced by other land. One of the scholars said that means it bears fruit twice in a year. The first view is the more frequently cited one, meaning that it produces in one year what other lands produce in two years.

Mentioning dew continues the praise of the land because dew is enough moisture for it on account of its excellent soil and it still produces double. That is because of the fine nature and good quality of the soil. Al-Mubarrad and others said that it implies that dew is enough for it. Az-Zajjāj says that it is the dew that forms on it. The word for ‘dew’ (tall) can mean drizzle or light rain which is very fine. Ibn ‘Abbās and others said that and it is a well-known meaning for the word. Others, including Mujāhid, said that it means dew here. Ibn ‘Atīyyah says that it is metaphorical. An-Naḥḥās said that linguists say the verbs are wabala and awbala, and ṭalla and atalla. According to aṣ-Ṣiḥāḥ: ‘Tall is the weakest form of rain and the plural of ṭilāl.’ Al-Māwardī said, ‘Crops watered by dew are weaker than those watered by rain and are less plentiful, but even if they are less, they are more cohesive and beneficial.’ Some of them said that there is a change in the normal order and it means: like a garden on a hillside watered by heavy rain, and if heavy rain does not fall on it, then there is dew and it produces its produce twice over, meaning that the leaves of the garden are green and it produces a bumper crop.

The first interpretation is more correct and there is no need for a change in order. So the Almighty likens the growth of the spending of those sincere people whose ṣadaqah Allah causes to grow, in the same way that a foal or young camel grows, like the plants in a garden on such a hillside grow. It is not like smooth stone whose earth is stripped from it so that it remains bare. Muslim and others transmitted from Abū Hurayrah that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘No one gives a rightfully earned date as ṣadaqah without Allah taking it in His right hand and making it grow as one of you would raise a foal or young camel, until it is like a mountain or larger still.’ It is also transmitted in the Muwattā'.

Allah sees what you do.

This is both a promise and a threat. Az-Zuhri recited this with a yā' (they do) as if it means all people or only the hypocrites. In that case, it is a pure threat.

أَبُوذُحْرٍ أَحَدُكُمْ أَنْ تَكُونَ لَهُ جَنَّةٌ مِنْ نَجِيلٍ وَأَعْنَبٍ فَجَرِيهِ مِنْ تَحْتِهَا
الْأَنْهَارُ، فِيهَا مِنْ كُلِّ الثَّمَرَاتِ وَأَصَابَهُ الْكِبَرُ وَلَهُ ذُرِّيَةٌ
الْآيَاتِ لَعَلَّكُمْ تَتَّقُونَ ﴿٢٦٦﴾

266 Would any of you like to have a garden of dates and grapes, with rivers flowing underneath and containing all kinds of fruits, then to be stricken with old age and have children who are weak, and then for a fierce whirlwind containing fire to come and strike it so that it goes up in flames? In this way Allah makes His Signs clear to you, so that hopefully you will reflect.

Would any of you like to have a garden of dates and grapes, with rivers flowing underneath

Aṭ-Ṭabarī related from as-Suddī that this āyah is a metaphor of spending for the sake of showing off to others. It is related from Ibn ‘Abbās: ‘This is an example Allah made of those who show off by their actions which will then be nullified on the Day of Rising when they will be most in need of them. They are like a man who has a garden and children who cannot help him. He becomes old and then a firestorm strikes his garden and burns it up, leaving him absolutely destitute.’ It is related that Ibn Zayd recited: ‘You who believe! do not nullify your ṣadaqah by demands for gratitude or insulting words’ (2:264) and then said, ‘Then Allah made an example of that and said: ‘Would any of you like...’’

Ibn ‘Aṭīyah said, ‘This is clearer than what aṭ-Ṭabarī preferred. This āyah is not another example of spending to show off because of the context in which it occurs. As for the meaning in this context, it is a metaphor of the state of every hypocrite or unbeliever who does an action which he supposes to be good. Then comes the moment of need and he finds it was nothing.’

It is related from Ibn ‘Abbās that it is a metaphor for those who act for the sake of other than Allah, and the hypocrites and unbelievers, as will come, even though we find something else stated in Ṣaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī. Al-Bukhārī transmitted from ‘Ubayd ibn ‘Umayr that one day ‘Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb asked the Companions of the Prophet, quoting this āyah, ‘About what was this āyah related?’ They replied, ‘Allah and His Messenger know best.’ ‘Umar became angry and said. ‘Say: “We know” or “We do not know!”’ Ibn ‘Abbās said, ‘I know something about it, Amīr al-Mu’minīn.’ He said, ‘Nephew, speak and do not undervalue yourself.’ Ibn ‘Abbās said, ‘It is a metaphor about action.’ ‘Umar asked, ‘What action?’ Ibn ‘Abbās replied, ‘The action of a rich man who works in obedience to Allah and then Allah sends a shayṭān to him and he does acts of disobedience until his good actions are burned up.’ One variant has, ‘When his life is over and term is near, he seals it with the actions of the wretched.’ ‘Umar was pleased with that interpretation.

Ibn Abī Mulaykah related this āyah and said, ‘This is a metaphor of a human being who does righteous actions until the end of his life when he needs his actions and then does bad actions.’ Ibn ‘Aṭīyyah said, ‘This is speculative. The āyah can be taken to mean all that its words convey.’ Mujāhid, Qatādah, ar-Rabī‘ and others said the like of that. Palm trees and grapes are mentioned because of their honour and excellence over other trees. Al-Ḥasan recited ‘jannāt’ in the plural.

This means that it does not lack any kind of fruit.

and then for a fierce whirlwind containing fire to come and strike it

Al-Ḥasan says that this means a wind which is intensely cold. Az-

Zajjāj said that it is the strong wind which throws the soil into the sky like pillars, which is called a whirlwind. Al-Jawharī said that a ‘whirlwind’ (Zawba‘ah) is one of the leaders of the jinn which is why that is the name for a whirlwind. It is also said that it is a wind that raises a cloud containing thunder and lightning. Al-Mahdawī said that it is called (i‘ṣār) because it wraps around like a garment is wrung (uṣīra). Ibn ‘Aṭīyah said that this is weak.

I say that it is sound because it is physically witnessed. It rises like a twisting pillar. It is said that the wind is called i‘ṣār because it presses the clouds, and the clouds are pressed (mu‘ṣīrāt) either because they carry [rain], like a young girl who is ready to menstruate but has not yet done so, or because they are pressed by the winds. Ibn Sīdah said that some people say that mu‘ṣīrāt are the winds rather than the clouds. Ibn Zayd said that i‘ṣār is a fierce wind and strong simoom. Ibn ‘Aṭīyah said, ‘That is either in intense heat or intense cold. All of that is from the exhaling of and breathing of Hell as we find in the words of the Prophet ﷺ: “When it is very hot, wait for the prayer until it cools. Intense heat is from the exhaling of Hell,” and “The Fire complained to its Lord...”’

It is related from Ibn ‘Abbās and others that this is a metaphor made by Allah of unbelievers and hypocrites, like a man who plants a garden which has an abundance of fruits and then becomes old and has weak children, boys and girls, and his livelihood and that of his children comes from that garden. Then Allah sends a wind containing fire on the garden which burns it up. He lacks the strength to rework the garden and his sons have no wealth with which to help their father. That is also the case with unbelievers and hypocrites when they come to Allah Almighty on the Day of Rising. They will not have another chance to be revived and go back a second time, just as the man with the garden cannot replant his garden a second time. Nothing can help him at that time of his old age and the weakness of his children.

In this way Allah makes His Signs clear to you, so that hopefully you will reflect.

It means: ‘so that you will refer to My immensity and lordship and not take other than Me as protectors.’ Ibn ‘Abbās said: ‘...so that you might reflect on the vanishing and annihilation of this world and the coming and everlasting nature of the Next World.’

يَا أَيُّهَا الَّذِينَ ءَامَنُوا أَنْفِقُوا مِنْ طَيِّبَاتِ مَا كَسَبْتُمْ وَمِمَّا أَخْرَجْنَا لِكُمِنْ

This is addressed to the entire Community of Muhammad ﷺ. Scholars disagree about what is meant by giving here. ‘Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib, ‘Abīdah as-Salmānī and Ibn Sīrīn said that it refers to the obligatory zakāt. In the āyah Allah forbids people to use bad things to pay it rather than good. Ibn ‘Aṭīyyah stated that the position of al-Barā’ ibn ‘Āzib, al-Ḥasan and Qatādah is that the āyah is about voluntary ṣadaqah. They recommended that people should only give good property. The āyah is general to both ideas but, in the case of zakāt, it is connected to an actual command, and, as the command is mandatory, it means that it is, therefore, forbidden to pay zakāt with bad property. That command is particular to the obligatory duty.

As for voluntary giving, a person can give a little, and so give what is less in value. A dirham is better than a date. The people who believe that it is a recommendation say that the imperative is as suitable for the recommendation as it is for the command. It is as forbidden to give bad quality in voluntary charity as it is in what is obligatory. Allah is more entitled to receive the best. Al-Barā' related that a man hung up a bunch of poor quality dates and the Messenger of Allah ﷺ saw it and said, 'An evil hanging,' and the āyah was revealed. At-Tirmidhī transmitted the full report. The command, according to this, is a recommendation to only give what is good. Most commentators state that 'good things' means things of high quality and which are favoured by people. Ibn Zayd said that it means from what is lawful earning.

Earning can be by physical toil, which is working for a wage, the rulings governing which will be dealt with later, or by trade, which is buying and selling. Inheritance is included in this because, although the heir did not earn it, someone else did. Sahl ibn 'Abdullāh mentioned that Ibn al-Mubārak was asked about a man who wants to earn and intends by his earning to maintain his ties of kinship, do jihād, do good deeds and to engage in the pitfalls of earning for this reason. He said, 'If he has enough livelihood to spare himself from asking people, then leaving this is better because when he seeks the lawful and spends it in a lawful way, he will be asked about it and his earning and his spending. Leaving that is zuhd, for zuhd consists in leaving what is ḥalāl.'

Ibn Khuwayzimandād said, 'According to this āyah, it is permitted for a parent to consume some of their child's earnings. That is because the Prophet ﷺ said, "Your children are part of your good earning. Eat from the property of your children with good cheer."' and some of what the earth produces for you.

This includes plants, mineral wealth and treasure. These three categories are included in this phrase. As for plants, ad-Dāraqutnī related that 'Ā'ishah said, 'The Sunnah of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ is that there is no zakāt on less than five wasqs.' A wasq is sixty ṣā's, so that makes three hundred ṣā's of wheat, barley, dates and raisins.

There is no zakāt on vegetables produced by the earth. Some of the Ḥanafīs argue by the words here that the ruling is general to both a little and a lot of all varieties of what the earth produces and believe, by the literal understanding, that zakāt on vegetables is, therefore, mandatory. This will be fully dealt with in Sūrat al-An‘ām (6).

As for minerals, the Imams related from Abū Hurayrah that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘There is no penalty for a wound inflicted by a dumb beast. There is no penalty for an injury due to a well and no penalty for an injury due to a mine. There is a fifth due on treasure.’ Our scholars say that since the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘A fifth due on treasure,’ that indicates that the ruling for minerals is not the same as that for treasure because the Prophet ﷺ distinguished between minerals and treasure. Allah knows best.

The linguistic root of ‘rikāz’ (buried treasure) is something that is ‘placed’ (irtakaza) in the earth: like gold, silver and gems. That is what most of the fuqahā’ say because they maintain that what is rare of minerals found embedded in the earth obtained without work, effort or toil, that there is a fifth due on it because it is rikāz. It is related from Mālik that the ruling of the rare case when minerals are extracted without work is the same as that when work is required to extract minerals in the form of buried treasure. The first view mentioned is his final position, and the majority of fuqahā’ give that ruling.

‘Abdullāh ibn Sa‘īd ibn Abī Sa‘īd al-Maqburī related from his father from his grandfather that Abū Hurayrah said, ‘The Messenger of Allah ﷺ was asked about rikāz and said, “It is the gold which Allah created in the earth on the day when He created the heavens and the earth.”’ ‘Abdullāh ibn Sa‘īd said that the hadith is matrūk (not acted upon). Ibn Abī Ḥātim mentioned that. It is related by another path from Abū Hurayrah which is not sound and which was mentioned by ad-Dāraquṭnī. There is no disagreement that things buried in the time of Jāhiliyyah are considered as treasure. If it was buried during the time of Islam, it is classified as a find.

There is disagreement about the discovery of buried treasure. Mālik says, ‘Buried treasure that was buried during the Jāhiliyyah and is found in the land of the Arabs or the wilderness in territory owned by the Muslims without fighting belongs to the one who finds it and he owes a fifth on it. What is found in Muslim territory is like a find. What is found in land taken by conquest belongs to the group who conquered it rather than just the one who found it. What is found in lands obtained by treaty belongs to the people of that land rather than people in general. The finder has nothing of it unless he is one of the people of that abode. In that case, it belongs to him rather than them.’ It is also said that it belongs to the people with the treaty. Ismā‘īl said that the ruling of buried treasure is the same as that of booty which is that it is property belonging to an unbeliever that a Muslim has found. Therefore he is in the position of someone who fights and seizes property: so he has four-fifths of it.

Ibn al-Qāsim said, ‘Mālik used to say that there is a fifth due on goods, gems, iron, lead and the like that are found as buried treasure. Then he retracted that and said, “I do not think that there is anything due on it.” His final position expressed to us was that there was a fifth due on it.’ That is sound based on the general meaning of the hadith and it is also the position of most fuqahā’.

Abū Ḥanīfah and Muḥammad said that buried treasure found in a house belongs to the owner of the house rather than the finder and there is a fifth due on it. Abū Yūsuf disagreed with him and said that it belongs to the finder rather than the owner of the house. The position of ath-Thawrī is that when it is found in the wilderness, it all belongs to the finder and there is a fifth due on it. They do not distinguish between land taken by fighting and land obtained by treaty. They also think that the ruling is the same in Arab or other lands. They believe that it is permitted for its finder to keep the fifth for himself if he is needy, and he can also give it to the poor. Some of the people of Madīnah and followers of Mālik do not make a distinction regarding any of that. They said that it is the same whether the buried treasure is found in land taken by fighting or land obtained by treaty, Arab land or abode of war, when no one has ownership and no one claims it: it goes to the finder and a fifth is due on it, based on the general wording of the hadith. That is the view of al-Layth, ‘Abdullāh ibn Nāfi‘, ash-Shāfi‘ī and most scholars.

There is disagreement about ores that are found and then mined. Mālik and his people say that there is nothing due on gold or silver that is mined until it reaches twenty mithqāls of gold or five ūqīyyahs of silver. When it reaches that amount, then zakāt is owed on it. Anything that exceeds that is accounted according to that as long as the mine is producing. When it stops and then there is another lode that produces, zakāt then begins there anew.

They consider buried treasure to be like a crop from which zakāt is taken immediately and is not delayed for a year. Saḥnūn said about a man who has mines that what is found in one mine is not added to another and zakāt is only taken from two hundred dirhams or twenty dinars on each mine. Muḥammad ibn Maslamah said that they are added together and zakāt is paid on the total as is the case with crops. Abū Ḥanīfah and his people said that a mine is like buried treasure. Any gold or silver after the fifth has been paid is considered according to each of them. If someone obtains the amount on which zakāt is obliged, he pays zakāt on it when he still possesses the niṣāb after a full year. This is when he does not already have gold or silver on which zakāt is owed. If he already has that on which zakāt is obliged, then the new gold or silver is added to that and he pays zakāt on it. They believe that that is the case with every profit which is added to the niṣāb in the year in the same category: zakāt is paid based on the year of the principal. That is the view of ath-Thawrī.

Al-Muzanī mentioned that ash-Shāfi‘ī said, ‘My position regarding it is that it is what is produced from mines.’ Al-Muzanī said, ‘What is most appropriate is that the principle is that what mines produce is profit on which zakāt is paid a year after it is produced.’ Al-Layth ibn Sa‘d said, ‘Any gold and silver which mines produce is in the position of profit on which a new year begins.’ That is the view of ash-Shāfi‘ī in what al-Muzanī deduced from his school. That is the position of Dāwūd and his people when a year has passed over it in the sound possession of its owner based on the words of the Prophet ﷺ: ‘If someone obtains property, there is no zakāt on it until he has had it for a year.’ At-Tirmidhī and ad-Dāraquṭnī transmitted it.

They also argue by what ‘Abd ar-Raḥmān ibn An‘am related from Abū Sa‘īd al-Khudrī when the Prophet ﷺ gave some of those whose hearts were to be reconciled some good ore which ‘Alī had sent from Yemen. Ash-Shāfi‘ī said, ‘Those whose hearts are to be reconciled have a right to zakāt. By that it is clear that the custom on mines is the custom of zakāt.’ The argument of Mālik is based on the hadith of Rabī‘ah ibn ‘Abd ar-Raḥmān which states that the Prophet ﷺ granted to Bilāl ibn al-Ḥārith the mines of al-Qabaliyyah which were in a region of al-Fur‘. Up until today those mines only have zakāt taken from them. The isnād of this hadith is broken and the people of hadith do not take something like that as being authoritative, but it was the normative practice which was followed in Madīnah. Ad-Darāwardī related it from Rabī‘ah ibn al-Ḥārith ibn Bilāl al-Muzanī from his father. Al-Bazzar mentioned it. Kathīr ibn ‘Abdullāh ibn ‘Amr ibn ‘Awf related from his father from his grandfather from the Prophet ﷺ that he gave a grant of the mines of al-Qabaliyyah, above and below ground, to Bilāl ibn al-Ḥārith. This is the ruling on what the earth produces. In an-Nahl we will deal with what the sea produces since it is the partner of the earth. In al-Anbiyā’ we will discuss the meaning of the hadith which says: ‘There is no penalty for a wound inflicted by a dumb beast.’

Do not have recourse to bad things when you give, ‘Tayammamū’ means to aim for something. The āyah indicates that earnings can be good or bad. In an-Nasā'ī it is related from Abū Umāmah ibn Sahl ibn Ḥunayf that these words refer to bad quality dates. The Messenger of Allah ﷺ forbade this type of dates being taken in payment of zakāt. Ad-Dāraquṭnī related Abū Umāmah ibn Sahl ibn Ḥunayf that his father said, 'The Messenger of Allah ﷺ commanded that ṣadaqah be given, and a man brought bunches of bad quality dates. The Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, 'Who has brought this?' Normally no one brought anything without it being attributed to him. Then it was revealed: 'Do not have recourse to bad things when you give.' He said, 'The Prophet ﷺ forbade that ju'rūr and ḥubayq (inferior quality dates) be taken in payment of zakāt.' Az-Zuhrī said that they are two types of dates in Madīnah. At-Tirmidhī transmitted it from al-Barā' and said that it is sound.

Aṭ-Ṭabarī and an-Naḥḥās related that 'Abdullāh recited 'ta'ammamū'. It is a dialectical form. Muslim ibn Jundub recited 'tuyammimū'. Ibn Kathīr recited 'ittayammamū' with a double tā'. There are various dialectical forms of the word: 'amamtu' and 'ammamtu', 'yammamtu' and 'tayammamtu'. Abū Amr related that Ibn Mas'ūd recited 'walā tu'ammimū' with a hamzah.

Al-Jurjānī said in Nazm al-Qur'ān that a group of people said that the words end at 'bad things' and then a new sentence begins which describes them: 'you give things you would only take with your eyes tight shut.' It is as if the meaning is to blame and censure people. The pronoun in 'minhu' refers to the bad things. He said that another group say the speech is connected to 'minhu' and so the pronoun refers to 'you have earned'.

This refers to things you would only take in payment from people if you were making things easy for them and forgoing your rights: they are things you dislike and are not pleased with. So when a debt to Allah is involved, do not give what you would not be pleased to take for yourselves. Al-Barā', Ibn 'Abbās and aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk stated that. Al-

Ḥasan said that the meaning is things you would not take, if you found them being sold in the market, unless their price was reduced. Something similar is also related from ‘Alī. Ibn ‘Aṭiyyah said, ‘These two statements are similar inasmuch as they are both about zakāt.’

Ibn al-‘Arabī said, ‘If the āyah had been about obligatory zakāt, Allah would not say, “you would only take”, because bad or defective things are not permitted to be taken in zakāt in any case, not with the eyes shut or by overlooking them. Such things can be taken while lowering the eyes in supererogatory ṣadaqah.’ Al-Barā’ ibn ‘Āzib also said that it means: ‘You would not take it if you had been given it except with your eyes shut,’ meaning that you would be embarrassed before the giver and would accept it from him although you have no need of it and consider it to be of no value.’ Ibn ‘Aṭiyyah said, ‘This is consonant with the āyah being about voluntary charity.’ Ibn Zayd said, ‘You would not take the unlawful unless you shut your eyes to its disliked nature.’

The majority recitation is ‘tughmidū’ from the verb aghmaḍa which is used for when a man affects to be easy about something and overlooks in it and is satisfied to take only part of his due. Part of that is what at-Ṭirimmāḥ said:

People did not wake us for the witr and humility.

They are content with closing their eyes to it.

It is possible that it comes from shutting the eyes (taghmīd) because someone who wants to be patient with something disliked closes his eyes. He said:

How many things will you show me which I disregard (ughanniḍu) even though I am not blind to them!

This is ignoring what is disliked. An-Naqqāsh mentioned this meaning for the āyah and Makkī indicated it. The Arabs say, ‘aghmaḍa-r-rajulu’ when a man ignores something. This sort of derivation is frequent. Az-Zuhrī recited ‘taghmidū’ and also ‘tughammadū’. The first means: ‘you ignore the offer from the seller so that he lowers it for you.’ The second, which is the reading of Qatādah according to what an-Naḥḥās mentioned, means: ‘you take it for less’. Abū ‘Amr ad-Dānī said that the meaning of both readings of az-Zuhrī is that ‘you take it for less.’ Makkī related from al-Ḥasan ‘tughammadū’ and Qatādah also recited ‘tughmadū’. Abū ‘Amr ad-Dānī said that it means ‘unless it is reduced for you.’ An-Naḥḥās related it from Qatādah himself.

Ibn Jinnī said, ‘It means that you find that you have been unclear about the interpretation of the business or your tolerance, and you have proceeded in a manner that is not normally anticipated. This is as you say, “I praised the man,” meaning that you found him to be praised.’

Ibn ‘Aṭīyah said, ‘The majority reading is based on overlooking and lowering the eye because aghmaḍa is in the position of ghammaḍa. So it means that you overlook the interpretation in taking it, either because it is unlawful, as Ibn Zayd says, or because it is a gift or taken for a debt, according to another.’ Al-Mahdawī says that it means: you close your eyes to taking it. Al-Jawharī says that the verb refers to acting in an easy way in buying and selling. It is as if you wanted more than it because of its poor quality or a reduction in its price.

Know that Allah is Rich Beyond Need, Praiseworthy.

Allah tells us about His attribute of absolute wealth, meaning that He has no need of our ṣadaqah. So whoever tries to draw near and seeks a reward should do that with something that has a value and importance. He is advancing something for himself. Allah is Praiseworthy in every state. Az-Zajjāj points out that He does not command people to give ṣadaqah when they are poor, but He tests them. So He is Praiseworthy in that as in all His blessings.

وَفَضْلًا وَاللَّهُ وَاسِعٌ عَلِيمٌ ﴿٣١﴾

268 Shayṭān promises you poverty and commands you to avarice. Allah promises you forgiveness from Him and abundance. Allah is All-Encompassing, All-Knowing.

Shayṭān promises you poverty and commands you to avarice.

The derivation of the word Shayṭān has already been mentioned in the commentary on 2:14. The expression ‘promises you poverty’ here means ‘threatens you with poverty’, making you afraid of it so that you do not spend. This āyah is connected to the one before it. Shayṭān has a way of hindering someone from spending in the Way of Allah. He also commands ‘avarice’ (fahshā), which refers to acts of self-gratification and spending on them. It is said that it means: ‘Do not give ṣadaqah; rather disobey and cut people off.’ ‘Faqr’ (poverty) is also recited as ‘fuqr’ in one dialect. Al-Jawharī said that fuqr is a dialectical usage.

Allah promises you forgiveness from Him and abundance.

In Arabic when the word wa‘ada is used undefined, then it is about good. When it is limited by something, then it can mean to promise good or to threaten evil, as is also the case with bishārah. This āyah contains both meanings. Ibn ‘Abbās said, ‘This āyah contains two things from Allah and two things from Shayṭān. At-Tirmidhī reports from Ibn Mas‘ūd that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘Shayṭān has a touch he uses on the son of Ādam and the angel has a touch. The touch of Shayṭān has the effect of threatening evil and denying the truth. The touch of the angel has the effect of promising good and confirming the truth. Anyone who experiences that should know that it is from Allah. Anyone who experiences other than that should seek refuge with Allah from Shayṭān.’ Then he recited this āyah. He said that it is a sound ḥasan hadith. Outside of the Qur’an, it is permitted to have ‘commands avarice’ without a bā’.

The word ‘forgiveness’ (maghfirah) indicates Allah’s veiling of the wrong actions of His slaves in this world and the Next. ‘Fadl’ (abundance) here means provision in this world and expansion and blessing in the Next. Both are promised by Allah.

An-Naqqāsh mentioned that some people use this āyah to claim that poverty is better than wealth because Shayṭān distances the human being from what is good and does that by alarming them about poverty. Ibn ‘Aṭīyyah said, ‘There is no definitive evidence in the āyah. In fact, this idea is strongly contradicted.’ It is related in the Torah: ‘My servant spends from My provision and I grant him My bounty. My hand is stretched out over every outstretched hand.’ It is confirmed in the Qur’an where He says: ‘Anything you expend will be replaced by Him. He is the best of Providers.’ (34:39) Ibn ‘Abbās mentioned it.

Allah gives from His vast wealth and knows where to bestow it. He knows the Unseen and the visible. They are two of His names which we mentioned in Kūtāb al-Asnā.

كَثِيرًا وَمَا يَتَذَكَّرُ إِلَّا أُولُو الْأَلْبَابِ ﴿٣٤﴾

269 He gives wisdom to whomever He wills and he who has been given wisdom has been given great good. But no one pays heed but people of intelligence.

He gives wisdom to whomever He wills.

Allah gives it to whomever He wishes of His slaves. Scholars disagree about the meaning of the word ‘hikmah’ (wisdom) here. As-Suddī said that it refers to Prophethood. Ibn ‘Abbās said that it means understanding of the Qur’an: its fiqh, abrogations, āyahs of judgment, ambiguous āyahs, unusual expressions, and changes in the normal order of words. Qatādah and Mujāhid also said that it means understanding of the Qur’an. Mujāhid said that it means being correct in word and deed. Ibn Zayd said, ‘Wisdom is understanding the dīn.’ Mālik ibn Anas said, ‘Wisdom is recognition of the dīn of Allah, understanding it, and putting it into practice.’ Ibn al-Qāsim related that he said, ‘Wisdom is reflecting on the commands of Allah and following them.’ He also said, ‘Wisdom is obeying Allah and understanding the dīn and acting on it.’ Ar-Rabī‘ ibn Anas said, ‘Wisdom is humility.’ Ibrāhīm an-Nakha‘ī said, ‘Wisdom is understanding the Qur’an.’ Zayd ibn Aslam also said that. Al-Ḥasan said, ‘Wisdom is scrupulousness.’

Most of these ideas are close in meaning as ḥikmah (wisdom) is a verbal noun which comes from ihkām, which means perfection in word or deed. All the things mentioned above are wisdom. The Book of Allah is wisdom. The Sunnah of His Prophet ﷺ is wisdom. All that is mentioned of excellence is wisdom. The basic meaning of ḥikmah is something which prevents foolishness. It is said that it is knowledge because it prevents foolishness and, by it, one knows how to prevent foolishness, which is every ugly action. The same is true for the Qur’an, intelligence and understanding. Al-Bukharī has the hadith: ‘When Allah desires good for a person, He gives him understanding in the dīn.’ Here He says: ‘He who has been given wisdom has been given much good.’

The fact that Allah repeats the word ‘wisdom’ here rather than using a pronoun the second time is to show concern for it to indicate its honour and excellence as was already explained in 2:59. Abū Muḥammad ad-Dārimī mentioned in his Musnad from Marwān ibn Muḥammad from Rifdah al-Ghassānī that Thābit ibn ‘Ajlān al-Anṣārī said, ‘It was said that Allah desired to punish the people of the earth, but when he heard a teacher teaching wisdom to children, He averted that from them.’ Marwān said that the wisdom was the Qur’an.

Anyone who is given wisdom and the Qur’an has been given the best of what can be given of all the knowledge of the books of the early people and others because He said about those: 'You have only been given a little knowledge.' (17:85) This is called 'great good' because the Qur'an is the all-inclusive Book. One of the sages said, 'Whoever is given knowledge and the Qur'an should value himself properly and not humble himself to the people of this world for the sake of worldly things. What he has been given is better than what the people of this world have been given because Allah called this world "a little good" and called knowledge and the Qur'an "great good".'

Most recite 'he who is given' as 'man yu'ta' in the passive form of the verb. Az-Zuhrī and Ya'qūb recite 'man yu'ti' meaning 'he to whom Allah gives'. Albāb means intelligence. The singular is lubb.

270 Whatever amount you spend or vow you make, Allah knows it. The wrongdoers have no helpers.

Vows were part of the culture of the Arabs and they used to make them a lot. Allah mentions two types of vows: those a man makes voluntarily, and those he makes after obliging himself to do so. This āyah is both a promise and threat, telling us that those with sincere intention will be rewarded. Anyone who spends to show off or for any other reason like inducing gratitude or as an insult is a wrongdoer. His action is worthless and he gains no benefit from it.

The phrase 'knows it' means that Allah takes account of it, according to Mujāhid. The pronoun is singular although it mentions two things. An-Naḥḥās says that it implies: 'Whatever amount you spend, Allah knows it. Whatever vow you make, Allah knows it.' So there is elision. It is possible that what is implied is: 'whatever you spend, Allah knows it' and the hā' (it) refers to mā (what), and 'vow you make' is added to it. Ibn 'Aṭīyah said, 'The pronoun is singular in "knows it" when two things have been mentioned since He means what was mentioned or stated.'

This is good. All that was mentioned is implied, even if it is a lot. The reality of a vow is that you say that it is whatever acts of worship a responsible person has made mandatory for himself which were not mandatory or necessary for him. You say, ‘The man took a vow to do such-and-such’ when he obliges himself to do it. The present tense can be yandhuru or yandhiru. Its rulings will be explained elsewhere, Allah willing.

271 If you make your ṣadaqah public, that is good. But if you conceal it and give it to the poor, that is better for you, and We will erase some of your bad actions from you. Allah is aware of what you do.

Commentators believe that this āyah is about voluntary ṣadaqah because concealment of it is better than making it public. This is the case with all acts of worship: concealment is better in respect of voluntary acts because it precludes showing off. That does not, however, apply to obligatory zakāt. Al-Ḥasan said that making zakāt public is better but that concealing voluntary acts of giving is better because it is closer to what Allah desires with respect to that. Ibn ‘Abbās said, ‘Secret giving when it is voluntary is seventy times better than public giving. In the case of obligatory zakāt, its public payment is better than paying it secretly by up to twenty-five times according to some. It is the same with all obligations and supererogatory actions.’ He said that that is the case in all obligatory and voluntary actions in all matters.

Such a position is not taken on the basis of mere opinion. In Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim, the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘The best prayer a man can perform is the one he does in his house except for the obligatory prayer.’ That is because there is no showing off in the obligatory, while supererogatory prayers are subject to that. An-Nasā'ī reported from 'Uqbah ibn Āmir that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, 'Someone who recites the Qur'an aloud is like the one who gives ṣadaqah publicly. Someone who recites the Qur'an silently is like someone who gives ṣadaqah secretly.' We find in a hadith: 'Secret ṣadaqah extinguishes the wrath of the Lord.'

Ibn al-'Arabī said, 'There is no preference in sound hadith for public zakāt over that given secretly nor for secret zakāt over that given publicly, but there is a firm consensus regarding that. As for voluntary ṣadaqah, the Qur'an clearly states that it is better given secretly than publicly. Our scholars say that this is generally the case. The truth about this matter is that the state of giving ṣadaqah varies according to the circumstances of the giver, the recipient and those who witness it. The public giver has the benefit of demonstrating the Sunnah and the reward for acting as a model for others.'

This refers to someone whose state is strong and intention good and who is safe from showing off. As for someone whose state falls below this, doing it secretly is better for him. As for the recipient, when giving is done secretly, he is kept safe from people's disdain or from the claim that he took what he did not need and failed to be abstinent. Generally speaking, keeping ṣadaqah secret from people is better than making it known to them since they might attack the giver for showing off and the taker for being able to do without it. On the positive side, doing it publicly encourages people to give ṣadaqah. But this is rare today.

Yazīd ibn Abī Ḥabīb said, 'This āyah was revealed about the giving of ṣadaqah to the Jews and Christians. It was as if Allah was commanding that a portion of zakāt should be secret.' Ibn 'Aṭīyah said that this position is rejected, especially by the righteous Salaf. Aṭ-Ṭabarī said that the consensus is that doing what is obligatory is better.

Aṭ-Ṭabarī mentioned that this āyah indicates that it is generally better to conceal zakāt. It is the right of the poor and it is better for the owner of property to distribute it himself. This is one of the two positions of ash-Shāfi‘ī. In his other position, he stated that what is meant by ṣadaqah here is the voluntary ṣadaqah rather than obligatory zakāt. It is more appropriate to perform the obligatory publicly so that there will be no suspicion. That is why it is said, ‘It is better to do the nāfilah prayers alone, but praying in the group removes suspicion about whether someone is fulfilling the obligatory prayer or not.’

Al-Mahdawī said, ‘What is meant by the āyah is both the obligation of zakāt and what is voluntary. Concealment was better in the time of the Prophet ﷺ. Then people’s suspicions arose after that and so scholars recommended making what is obligatory public so that no suspicion would remain.’ Ibn ‘Aṭīyah remarked, ‘This position is contrary to the traditions (āthār). In our time it seems that it is recommended to conceal obligatory zakāt. Those who refuse to do it are numerous and paying it publicly opens a person to the accusation of showing off.’ Ibn Khuwayzimandād said, ‘It is permitted for the āyah to mean both obligatory and voluntary ṣadaqah because He mentioned the hidden and praises it, and the public and praises it, and so it can be directed to both of them.’ An-Naqqāsh said that this āyah was abrogated by Allah’s words: ‘Those who give away their wealth, night and day, secretly and openly.’ (2:274) So, in the āyah public ṣadaqah is praised and then the ruling is given that when it is given secretly it is better. That is why one of the sages said, ‘When you give charity, conceal it. When you are given it, then make it known.’ Di‘bil al-Khuzā‘ī said:

When they take revenge, they make it public.

When they bestow, they conceal that.

Sahl ibn Hārūn said:

When one day you go to a friend to ask of him, he gives you what he owns and apologises.

He conceals his action while Allah makes it known.

When you give what is beautiful, it shows.

Al-‘Abbās ibn ‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib said, ‘A charitable act is only complete when it has three characteristics: hastening it, thinking it small, and concealing it. When you hasten it, you make it more welcome. When you consider it small, you make it great. When you conceal it, you perfect it.’ A poet said:

I consider your charity to be greater when it is concealed and small in your sight.

You forget it as if you had not given it, while it is famous among people.

There are different readings of the phrase ‘that is good’. Abū ‘Amr, Nāfi‘ in the transmission of Warsh, ‘Āṣim in the transmission of Ḥafṣ and Ibn Kathīr recite ‘ni‘immā’, and Abū ‘Amr (again), Nāfi‘ in other than the transmission of Warsh, ‘Āṣim in the transmission of Abū Bakr and al-Mufaḍḍal recite ‘ni‘mā’. Al-A‘mash, Ibn ‘Āmir, Ḥamzah, and al-Kisā’ī recite ‘na‘immā’. Outside of the Qur’an we find: ‘ni‘ma mā’. An-Naḥḥās said that it is connected in the script and so assimilation is necessary.

There are four dialectical forms of ni‘ma. The root is na‘ima, but there is also ni‘ima where the nūn has a kasrah because the ‘ayn’ does, na‘ma (where the root is na‘ima and the kasrah has been elided because of being heavy), and ni‘ma, which is the most eloquent. The root of them is na‘ima. It is used for every praise, and lightened and the kasrah of the ‘ayn’ changed and the ‘ayn’ becomes silent. Two things are implied by ‘fā-ni‘immā hiya’. One is that it is based on the dialectical form ni‘ima, and the other is that is based on the good dialect and the root is ni‘ma and the ‘ayn’ has a kasrah because of two silent letters meeting. What Abū ‘Amr and Nāfi‘ relate about the ‘ayn’ being silent is impossible. It is related that Muḥammad ibn Yazīd said, 'As for a sukūn on the 'ayn and double mīm, no one is able to pronounce it. It tries to combine two silent letters and vowel them which does not happen.' Abū 'Alī said, 'The statements of those who give the 'ayn a sukūn are not proper because it is combining two silent letters, the first of them is not a letter of extension and softness. That is permitted by grammarians when the first letter has extension since the extension replaces the vowel, as in dābbah and dawāl.' Perhaps Abū 'Amr concealed the vowel and sneaks it in as he does in 'bāri'ikum' and 'ya'murukum' and someone listening thought that it was a sukūn because of the subtleness of that to the ear. Abū 'Alī said, 'As for the one who recites 'ni'immā', he brings the word according to its root.' He also said that the mā is in the accusative and 'hiya' explains the implied subject before it is mentioned. It implies: 'Making it public is good,' and 'making public' is singled out for praise even though the mudāf is elided and replaced by the mudāf ilayh.

The following words: 'That is better for you', lead you to the fact that concealing is better. The pronoun in 'that' refers to concealing, not to ṣadaqah. 'If you conceal it' is a precondition which is why the nūn of the verb is omitted. 'Give it' is added to it. Its apodosis is: 'That is better for you'.

The word 'erase' is subject to various readings. Abū 'Āmir, Ibn Kathīr, 'Aṣim in the transmission of Abū Bakr, Qatādah and Ibn Abī Ishāq have nukaffiru (We will erase). Nāfi', Ḥamzah, and al-Kisā'i have nukaffir (We will erase) with a sukūn on the rā'. The same is related from 'Aṣim. Al-Ḥusayn ibn 'Alī al-Ju'fi from al-A'mash has yukaffira (it will erase). Ibn 'Āmir has yukaffiru (it will erase) and Ḥafṣ related that from 'Aṣim. It is also related from al-Ḥasan as it is related from him as 'yukaffir'. Ibn 'Abbās recited 'tukaffir'. 'Ikrimah recited 'tukaffar'. Al-Mahdawī related that Ibn Hurmuz recited 'tukaffir,' and it is related that 'Ikrimah and Sahr ibn Ḥawshab recited 'tukaffira'. The clearest reading is 'yukaffiru', and this is what al-Khalīl and Sibawayh said. An-Nahḥās said that Sibawayh said, 'It is proper with the ḍammah and good because the words after the fā' act normally without the apodosis. The jussive is permitted when it is applied to the meaning because it means: if you conceal it and give it to the poor, that is better for you and Allah will erase bad actions from you. Abū Ḥātim said that al-A'mash recited 'yukaffir' without the preceding wāw. An-Naḥḥās said, 'What Abū Ḥātim related from al-A'mash without the preceding wāw is jussive based on the appositive. It is as if it were in place of the fā'. What is related from 'Āṣim, "yukaffiru" means "Allah will erase".' This is the position of Abū 'Ubayd. Abū Ḥātim says that it means, 'the giving will erase'. The reading of Ibn 'Abbās with a tā' means 'ṣadaqah will erase'.

Generally speaking, the readings with nūn in the first person plural, is the Divine 'We', and those with a tā' in the third person feminine refer to ṣadaqah, except for what is related from 'Ikrimah with a fathah on the fā' where it refers to bad actions. If it is with the yā' of the third person masculine, then it is Allah Who does the erasing and the concealed giving is also that which erases as we mentioned. Makkī mentioned that.

There are two reasons for the verb having a ḍammah at the end. One is that it is the predicate of an implied inceptive and so implies: 'We will erase' or 'it (ṣadaqah) will erase' or 'Allah will erase'. The second is that there is a stop and a new sentence and the conjunctive wāw is not for sharing, but conjoins one sentence to another. We have already mentioned the meaning of the recitation with the sukūn. As for the naṣb (with fathah) 'and nukaffira (We shall erase)', that is weak, and is based on the ellipsis of an (that), which is possible but unlikely. Al-Mahdawī said, 'It resembles the naṣb in the apodosis of the interrogative since the apodosis which the thing necessitates is based on the existence of something else, which is also the case with the interrogative.' The sukūn on the rā' is the purest of these recitations, linguistically speaking, because it notifies us that the erasure is comprised in the recompense, and the fact that it is stipulated if concealment occurs. As for with the dammah, this sense is not in it.

This is contrary to what al-Khalīl and Sibawayh chose. In the words ‘some of your bad actions’ (min sayyi’ātikum) the ‘min’ (some) is partitive. Aṭ-Ṭabarī reports that some have said that it is redundant, but Ibn ‘Aṭīyah says that is a mistake on their part. ‘Allah is aware of what you do’ is both a threat and a promise.

لَيْسَ عَلَيْكَ هُدْيُهُمْ وَلَا كَيْدَ اللَّهِ يَهْدِي مَنْ يَشَاءُ وَمَا

272 You are not responsible for their guidance, but Allah guides whomever He wills. Whatever good you give away is to your own benefit, when you give desiring only the Face of Allah. Whatever good you give away will be repaid to you in full. You will not be wronged.

You are not responsible for their guidance but Allah guides whomever He wills.

These words are connected to the mention of ṣadaqah. It is as if Allah were making it clear that it is permitted to give ṣadaqah to the idolaters. There is a mursal hadith related by Sa‘īd ibn Jubayr where the Prophet ﷺ said that the reason for the revelation of this āyah was that the Muslims used to give ṣadaqah to the poor among the *dhimmi*s. When there were a lot of poor Muslims, the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘Only give ṣadaqah to the people of your own dīn.’ Then this āyah was revealed to make it clear that it is permitted to give ṣadaqah to those who are not part of the dīn of Islam. An-Naqqāsh mentioned that the Prophet ﷺ was given zakāt and a Jew came and said, ‘Give to me.’ The Prophet ﷺ answered, ‘There is no share in the zakāt of the Muslims for you.’ The Jew went away and this āyah was revealed. The Messenger of Allah ﷺ called for him and gave some to him. Then that was abrogated by the āyah of zakāt.

Ibn ‘Abbās said, ‘Some of the Anṣār had relatives in the Jewish tribes of the Banū Qurayzah and the Banu-n-Naḍīr. They used to not give ṣadaqah to them out of the desire that they would become Muslim if they were needy and the āyah was revealed because of them.’

One of the commentators related that Asmā’ bint Abī Bakr wanted to give ṣadaqah to her grandfather, Abū Quḥāfah, and then did not do so because he was an unbeliever, and the āyah was revealed about that. Aṭ-Ṭabarī related that the aim of the Prophet ﷺ in not giving ṣadaqah was so that they would become Muslims and enter into the dīn and for that reason Allah said: ‘You are not responsible for their guidance.’ It is also said that this is not connected to the āyah before it but is totally a new statement and so it is apparently about ṣadaqah and giving it to the unbelievers.

Our scholars say that the ṣadaqah which non-Muslims are permitted according to these traditions is voluntary ṣadaqah. As for zakāt, it is not permitted to give it to an unbeliever since the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘I was commanded to take ṣadaqah (meaning here zakāt) from your rich and give it to your poor.’ Ibn al-Mundhir said, ‘The consensus among all the scholars I learned from is that a dhimmī is not given any of the zakāt.’ Then he mentioned a group who said something different to that. Al-Mahdawī said that this āyah is an allowance for the Muslims to give some of the zakāt to their relatives who are unbelievers. Ibn ‘Aṭīyyah said, ‘This is rejected by consensus, and Allah knows best.’ Abū Ḥanīfah said that zakāt al-fitr can be given to them, but Ibn al-‘Arabī says that this is baseless and weak. Our evidence is that zakāt on livestock and money is an obligatory purification and may not be given to unbelievers. The Prophet ﷺ said, ‘Spare them from having to beg on this day,’ meaning ‘Īd al-Fitr.

We reply that this is the case because the Muslims are busy with the ‘Īd and the ‘Īd prayer, while this is not the case with the idolaters.

It is permitted to give it to non-Muslims if one holds the position that it is a sunnah to do so. It is one of our positions, and it is also the position of Abū Ḥanīfah, as we mentioned. It is adopting the general meaning of the āyah about kindness, feeding people and general ṣadaqah. Ibn ‘Aṭīyyah said, ‘This ruling is conceivable for the Muslims when dealing with the dhimmīs and enslaved ḥarbīs.’

In the Qur’an we read: ‘They give food, despite their love for it, to the poor and orphans and captives.’ (76:8) A captive in the Abode of Islam can only be an idolater. The Almighty says: ‘Allah does not forbid you from being good to those who have not fought you in the dīn or driven you from your homes, or from being just to them.’ (60:8). So the literal meaning of these āyahs allows ṣadaqah to be given to non-Muslims. The Prophet ﷺ, however, excepted zakāt from that, saying, ‘Take ṣadaqah from their rich and give it to their poor,’ and scholars agree on that. So non-Muslims can be given voluntary ṣadaqah if they are needy, and Allah knows best.

Ibn al-‘Arabī said, ‘There is no disagreement that zakāt al-fitr can be given to disobedient Muslims, unless they have abandoned the pillars of Islam: prayer and fasting. Then it may not be given to them until they repent. Zakat is given to other disobedient Muslims because they are included under the general category of “Muslims”.’ We find in Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim that a man gave ṣadaqah to a wealthy man, a thief and a prostitute, and his ṣadaqah was accepted.

but Allah guides whoever He wills.

This refutes the Qadariyyah and groups of the Mu‘tazilites as we have already explained (2:5).

Whatever good you give away is to your own benefit

The word ‘good’ in this āyah refers to wealth because it is accompanied by the words ‘give away’. The context indicates that it is wealth. In other contexts, the word ‘good’ can have other meanings as in 99:7. This negates the statement of ‘Ikrimah that every ‘good’ in the Book of Allah is wealth. It is related that one of the scholars used to give away a lot in charity and he swore that he had not done good to anyone. He was asked about that and said, ‘I did that for myself and he recited, “Whatever good you give away is to your own benefit.” when you give desiring only the Face of Allah.

Then Allah made it clear that the only spending which is accepted is that by which the Face of Allah is sought. It is also said that it is testimony by Allah for the Companions that they sought the Face of Allah when they spent. This is preference and praise of them. According to the first view, it is a precondition for them, and the precondition applies to others in the community. The Messenger of Allah ﷺ said to Sa‘d ibn Abī Waqqās, ‘You do not spend anything by which you desire the Face of Allah without being rewarded for it, even a morsel you place in your wife’s mouth.’ So the reward for spending is given in full to those who spend and none of it is stinted as that stinting would be an injustice to them.

273 It is for the poor who are held back in the Way of Allah, unable to travel in the land. The ignorant consider them rich because of their reticence. You will know them by their mark. They do not ask from people insistently. Whatever good you give away, Allah knows it.

It is for the poor

The words ‘for the poor’ are connected to ‘whatever good you give away’ in the previous āyah. It is said that it implies that spending or ṣadaqah is for the poor alone. As-Suddī, Mujāhid and others said that what is meant by poor in this instance are the poor Muhājirūn of Quraysh and others. Then the āyah is extended so that it is applied to all who are considered poor throughout time. The poor Muhājirūn are singled out because they were those who were poor at that time. They were the People of the Şuffah, who numbered about four hundred men. That was because the poor used to come to the Messenger of Allah ﷺ. They had neither family nor property and so a verandah (suffah) was built for them in the mosque of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ which is why they were called the People of the Şuffah.

Abū Dharr said, ‘I was one of the people of the Şuffah. In the evening, we presented ourselves at the door of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ and he would order each of us to go with a man [as his guest for supper] until there remained ten or less of the people of the Şuffah and the Prophet ﷺ would bring us his supper and we would eat with him. When we finished, the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, “Sleep in the mosque.” At-Tirmidhī transmitted that al-Barā’ ibn ‘Āzib quoted the āyah: ‘Do not have recourse to bad things when you give’ (2:267) and said, ‘It was revealed about us, the Anşār. We owned some palm trees. A man would bring dates from his trees according to whether its fruits were a lot or a little. A man would bring a branch or two of dates and hang them in the mosque. The people of the Şuffah did not have any food, so when one of them was hungry, he would go to the bunch and hit it with his stick and some dates would fall and he would eat. People who did not truly desire to do good would bring branches of poor dates or broken ones and hang them in the mosque. Then Allah Almighty revealed: “O you who believe, spend of the good things...” (2:267). This means: “If one of you had been given the like of what he gave, you would only take it with your eyes closed due to embarrassment.” After that a man would only bring good things.’ This is a sound gharīb ḥasan hadith.

According to our scholars the people in the mosque were impoverished and they were in the mosque out of necessity and ate from şadaqah due to their compelling need. When Allah gave victory to the Muslims, they were relieved from that and went out and then had property of their own.

who are held back in the Way of Allah, unable to travel in the land.

Allah then described the states of those poor Muhājirūn in a manner which obliges compassion for them. These words indicate the fact that they were restricted in their ability to move. Qatādah and Ibn Zayd said that this means they were kept from going about to earn a living due to fear of the enemy. This is why Allah says that they are unable to travel because every direction was full of unbelievers. This was at the beginning of Islam. So their excuse kept them from earning and jihād, and the unbelievers' dislike of them kept them from going out in trade, so they remained poor. It is also said that it means they held themselves back from jihād, but the first interpretation is more likely, and Allah knows best.

The ignorant consider them rich because of their reticence.

This means that they have withdrawn and do not ask, and rely on Allah, so that someone who did not know would suppose them to be rich. This shows that the ascription of poverty can be applied to someone who has clothes of some value and that does not prevent zakāt being given to him. In fact Allah commands it to be given to these people. They were among the Muhājirūn who fought with the Messenger of Allah ﷺ and were not ill or blind. 'Reticence' (ta'afuf) in this context means to refrain from begging and put oneself above it. This is how it is explained by Qatādah and others. There are two readings of 'consider them': 'yaḥsabuhum' and 'yaḥsibuhum'. Abū 'Alī considers 'yaḥsabuhum' to be better fitting but the other reading is also good.

You will know them by their mark.

This is evidence that the distinguishing marks of Islam have a legal bearing in respect of those on whom they appear, so that if we find a corpse in the Abode of Islam who is wearing a Christian belt and is not circumcised, it is not buried in the graveyard of the Muslims.

Connected to that are His words: ‘...you would know them by their mark and know them by their ambivalent speech.’ (47:30) That takes precedence over the normal ruling of most scholars that a dead person is deemed to belong to the dīn of the place where he is found. It also indicates the permissibility of giving zakāt to someone who has fine clothes and adornment. Scholars agree on that. Then they disagree about the amount he may take. Abū Ḥanīfah says that it is the same amount on which zakāt is obliged to be paid, ash-Shāfi‘ī says that it is food for a year, and Mālik says it is forty dirhams. Ash-Shāfi‘ī also said that zakāt should not be given to someone who is earning.

Scholars disagree about what the ‘sīmā’ (mark) referred to is. Mujāhid says that it is humility and humbleness. As-Suddī said that it is the sign of poverty and need which can be seen in their faces. Ibn Zayd said that it is their tattered clothes. Some people, including Makkī, said that it is the mark of prostration, and Ibn ‘Aṭīyyah says that this is better. That is because they were unoccupied and trusted in Allah and had no work except the prayer and so they had the mark of prostration on them.

This mark, which is the mark of prostration, was shared by all the Companions as Allah says at the end of Sūrat al-Faḥ: ‘Their mark is on their faces, the traces of prostration.’ (48:29) So in this respect there can have been no difference between them and others. So the only thing that the ‘mark’ can be is the effect of poverty and need, or an extra large mark of prostration. They were recognised by the sallowness of their faces from praying at night and fasting in the day, and Allah knows best. As for humility, its place is the heart, and rich and poor share in it. All that remains is what we preferred. Allah is the One Who gives success.

They do not ask from people insistently.

The word ‘ilhāf’ (insistently) is a verbal noun derived from liḥāf (blanket). It is called that because it covers all manner of asking in the same way that a blanket covers everything; an insistent beggar is one who begs from everyone and pesters them with his asking. Part of that is what Ibn Aḥmar said:

It continued to surround them with its shivering, and cover them (yalḥafuhunna) with a thick thin blanket.

He describes a male ostrich protecting the eggs with its wings which become like a blanket which is thin in spite of its thickness.

An-Nasā'ī and Muslim reported from Abū Hurayrah that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, 'The very poor man is not the one who is turned away by a date or two, or a bite or two; the very poor man is the one who does not ask. Recite if you like: "They do not ask from people insistently."'

Scholars disagree about the meaning of this and take two positions. Some people, including aṭ-Ṭabarī and az-Zajjāj, say that the meaning is: 'They do not beg at all.' This would mean that they completely refrain from asking. This is the position of the majority of commentators, and refraining from asking is their firm quality. They do not ask people either insistently or not insistently. Other people say that what is meant is the lack of asking insistently, meaning that they ask, but not insistently. This is easy to understand.

In any case the āyah calls attention to the bad state of those who do ask people insistently. The Imams related from Mu'āwiyah ibn Abī Sufyān that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, 'Do not be insistent in asking. By Allah, if any of you may ask me for something and get what he wants from me even though I dislike him doing it, he will not be blessed in what I give him.'

In the Muwattā' we read from Zayd ibn Aslam from 'Aṭā' ibn Yasār that a man of the Banū Asad said, 'My family and I dismounted to rest at Baqī' al-Gharqad. My family said to me, "Go to the Messenger of Allah ﷺ and ask him for something to eat," and they began to mention what they needed. I went to the Messenger of Allah ﷺ and found that a man was asking for something, and the Messenger of Allah ﷺ was saying, “I do not have anything to give you.” The man turned away from him in anger, saying, “By my life! You give to those you wish to give to!” The Messenger of Allah ﷺ remarked, “He is angry with me because I do not have anything to give him. Whoever asks you for something while he has an ūqiyyah or its equivalent has asked insistently.” The man continued, ‘I told myself that a camel we had was worth more than an ūqiyyah. (Mālik explained that an ūqiyyah was forty dirhams.) So I returned without having asked him for anything, and the Messenger of Allah ﷺ sent me barley and raisins later on. He gave us from his share until Allah, the Mighty, the Majestic, gave us relief.’

Ibn ‘Abd al-Barr said, ‘That is how Mālik related it and it is corroborated by Hishām ibn Sa‘d and others. It is a sound hadith. The ruling on a Companion who is not named is not the same as the ruling on others who are not named. Scholars say that is because there is no impairment of them as a rule and integrity is established for them.’ This hadith indicates that it is disliked for anyone who has an ūqiyyah of silver to beg. Anyone who begs when he has that amount of silver, or what is equivalent to it, is considered to be insistent. I do not know of anyone who possesses knowledge of the dīn who does not dislike someone begging when they have this amount of silver or its equivalent in gold according to the literal meaning of this hadith. They are permitted to take what comes to them without asking, provided it is not zakāt. There is disagreement if it is zakāt as will be explained later.

Ibn ‘Abd al-Barr said, ‘One of the best things related from the fuqahā’ regarding begging and dislike of it, and the position of those who possess scrupulousness regarding it, is what al-Athram related from Aḥmad ibn Ḥanbal when he was asked about when begging becomes lawful. He said, “When a person does not have enough for lunch and supper. This is based on the hadith of Sahl ibn al-Ḥanzaliyyah.” Ibn Ḥanbal was then asked, “And if he is compelled to ask?” He replied, “It is permitted if he is in pressing need.” He was asked, “And if he refrains?” He replied, “That is better for him.” Then he added, “I do not think that anyone will die of hunger. Allah will bring him his provision.” Then he mentioned the hadith of Abū Sa‘īd al-Khudrī: “Whoever abstains, Allah will make him abstinent.””

In the hadith of Abū Dharr, the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘Be abstinent.’ Abū Bakr said, ‘I heard him being asked about a man who does not have anything: should he beg or eat carrion? He replied, “Would he eat carrion when there is someone he can ask? This is abhorrent.”’ He said that he heard him being asked whether a man should beg on behalf of another man. He said that he should not, but can make an allusion. It is like what the Prophet ﷺ said when people came barefooted, naked, wearing stripped cloaks. He said, ‘Give ṣadaqah.’ He did not say, ‘Give to them.’ Abū ‘Umar said, ‘The Prophet ﷺ said, “Intercede and you will be rewarded.” That has the general meaning of asking on behalf of someone else.’ Allah knows best.

Abū Bakr said, ‘It was said that a man was mentioned to Aḥmad ibn Ḥanbal and he asked, “Is he in need?” He said, “This is an allusion and there is nothing wrong with it. Asking is to say, ‘Give to him.”’ Then he added, “I do not like a person asking for himself, so what then is the case with him asking for another? I prefer making an allusion here.”’

It is reported by Abū Dāwūd, an-Nasā’ī and others that a Persian asked the Messenger of Allah ﷺ, ‘Should I beg, Messenger of Allah?’ He said, ‘No, but if you must, then ask of the righteous.’ So he permitted asking the people of excellence and righteousness when that is necessary. Ibrāhīm ibn Adham said, ‘Asking for your needs from people is a veil between you and Allah Almighty. Place your need with the One who controls harm and benefit. Take refuge in Allah Almighty and Allah will spare you from others and you will

If something comes to someone without their asking for it, they should accept it and not reject it. It is provision which Allah has brought. Mālik reported from Zayd ibn Aslam from ‘Aṭā’ ibn Yasār that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ sent a gift to ‘Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb and ‘Umar returned it. The Messenger of Allah ﷺ asked, ‘Why did you return it?’ He replied, ‘Messenger of Allah, did you not tell us that it is better for us not to take anything from anyone?’ The Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘That is by asking. Provision which Allah gives you is not the same as asking.’ ‘Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb said, ‘By the One in whose hand my self is, I will not ask anything from anyone, and anything that comes to me without my asking for it, I will accept.’ This is a definitive text.

Muslim transmitted in his Ṣaḥīḥ, an-Nasā’ī in the Sunan, as well as others that Ibn ‘Umar said that he heard ‘Umar say, ‘The Prophet ﷺ gave me a gift and I said, “Give it to someone who is more in need of it than I am.” Once he gave me something and I said, “Give it to someone who is more in need of it than I am.” The Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, “Take any wealth that comes to you without your looking for it or asking it for it. Take it as long as you yourself do not pursue it.” An-Nasā’ī added, ‘Take it and either enrich yourself with it or give it away as ṣadaqah.’ Muslim related from ‘Abdullāh ibn as-Sa’dī al-Mālikī that ‘Umar said, ‘The Messenger of Allah ﷺ said to me, “When you are given something without asking, then eat and give ṣadaqah.”’ This is sound and mursal from Mālik.

Al-Athram said that he heard Abū ‘Abdullāh Aḥmad ibn Ḥanbal being asked about the words of the Prophet ﷺ, ‘what comes to you without you asking or looking for it’ and what ‘looking for it’ mean. He said, ‘It is that you look towards the thing and think in your heart, “Perhaps it will be sent to me.”’ He was asked, ‘Even if one makes no allusion to it?’ ‘Yes,’ he answered, ‘because it is in the heart.’ He was told, ‘This is harsh!’ He answered, ‘Even if it is harsh, it is like that' He was asked, 'And if a man does not normally send me anything but it occurs to my heart, "Perhaps he will send something to me"?' He answered, 'This is looking for something. If it comes to you without you thinking about it and without it occurring to your heart, then it is something in which there is no looking for it.'

Abū 'Umar said, 'Ishrāf (looking for) linguistically is raising one's head towards something that one desires and alluding to obtaining it. What Aḥmad said about the interpretation of ishrāf is a restriction which I find unreasonable because Allah has overlooked for the people of this community things that their selves say to them as long as it is not articulated on the tongue and acted on by a limb. As for thoughts in the heart that involve disobedience to Allah, except for outright unbelief, they are of no consequence, provided, of course, that they are not acted upon. The consensus is that the thoughts of the self are overlooked.'

Insistence in asking and being importunate in it when a person is wealthy is forbidden and not lawful. The Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, 'Anyone who asks people for an increase over what he has is asking for a hot ember. He can either seek to be independent or he is seeking increase.' Abū Hurayrah related it and Muslim transmitted it. Ibn 'Umar reported that the Prophet ﷺ said, 'One of you will continue to beg until he meets Allah without a single piece of flesh on his face.' Muslim also related it.

If the asker is needy, there is no harm in him asking three times, informing people of his state and apologising. But it is best to leave it. If the one asked knows of his need and is able to give him what he asks, he is obliged to give. If he does not know it, he gives to him out of fear that he is speaking the truth and that rejecting him will not be profitable.

Regarding someone who needs something to keep up appearances, such as having a good garment to wear on the Īd and Jumu'ah, Ibn al-‘Arabī said, ‘While I was in the mosque of the Caliph in Baghdad, I heard a man say, “This is your brother who attends Jumu‘ah and he has no other garment with which to support the sunnah of Jumu‘ah.” The following Jumu‘ah I saw him in another garment and was told, “Abu-ṭ-Ṭāhir al-Burnusī gave it to him.”’

الَّذِينَ يُنْفِقُونَ أَمْوَالَهُمْ بِاللَّيْلِ وَالنَّهَارِ سِرًّا وَعَلَانِيَةً فَلَهُمْ أَجْرُهُمْ عِنْدَ رَبِّهِمْ وَلَا خَوْفٌ عَلَيْهِمْ وَلَا هُمْ يَحْزَنُونَ ﴿١٩٤﴾

274 Those who give away their wealth by night and day, secretly and openly, will have their reward with their Lord. They will feel no fear and will know no sorrow.

It is related from Ibn ‘Abbās, Abū Dharr, Abū Umāmah, Abu-d-Dardā’, ‘Abdullāh ibn Bishr al-Ghāfiqī and al-Awzā‘ī that this āyah was revealed about the fodder of horses which are used for jihād in the Way of Allah. In the Ṭabaqāt, Ibn Sa‘d mentioned from Muḥammad ibn Shu‘ayb ibn Shābūr from Sa‘īd ibn Sinān from Yazīd ibn ‘Abdullāh from his father that his grandfather ‘Arīb reported that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ was asked about: ‘Those who give away their wealth by night and day, secretly and openly, will have their reward with their Lord. They will feel no fear and will know no sorrow.’ He said, ‘They are the owners of horses.’ By means of the same isnād, the Messenger of Allah ﷺ is reported as saying, ‘The one who spends on horses is like someone who stretches out his hand with sadaqah without closing it again. Their urine and droppings will be like fragrant musk on the Day of Rising.’

Ibn ‘Abbās also reported that this āyah was revealed about ‘Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib who had four dirhams and gave away one at night, one in the day, and one secretly and one openly. ‘Abd ar-Razzāq mentioned it from ‘Abd al-Wahhāb ibn Mujāhid from his father from Ibn ‘Abbās. Ibn Jurayj said that it was revealed about a man who did that but he did not name ‘Alī or anyone else. Qatādah said that this āyah was revealed about those who spend without being either extravagant or tightfisted. The fā is added in ‘lahum’ because the words have the meaning of an apodosis.

275 Those who practise usury will not rise from the grave except as someone driven mad by Shayṭān’s touch. That is because they say, ‘Trade is the same as usury.’ But Allah has permitted trade and He has forbidden usury. Whoever is given a warning by his Lord and then desists, can keep what he received in the past and his affair is Allah’s concern. But all who return to it will be the Companions of the Fire, remaining in it timelessly, for ever. 276 Allah obliterates usury but makes ṣadaqah grow in value! Allah does not love any persistently ungrateful wrongdoer. 277 Those who believe and do right actions and establish the prayer and pay zakāt, will have their reward with their Lord. They will feel no fear and will know no sorrow. 278 You who believe! be fearful of Allah and forgo any remaining usury if you are believers. 279 If you do not, know that it means war from Allah and His Messenger. But if you sincerely repent you may have your capital, without wronging and without being wronged.

These āyahs contain the ruling on usury and the permissibility of contracts in trade and a threat to those who consider usury lawful and persist in it. Many points emerge from them.

Those who practise usury

The word ‘practise’ (literally ‘eat’) means here ‘take’. That is because they take it with the intention of consuming it. Linguistically ‘ribā’ (usury) means ‘increase’ in general. Part of the usage of the verb is found in the hadith: ‘By Allah, we did not take a morsel but that it grew (rabā) in size.’ This refers to food for whose blessing the Prophet ﷺ prayed. Muslim transmitted it. Then the Sharī‘ah limited this general usage to certain specific practices. Sometimes the word is applied to unlawful earning, as when Allah Almighty says about the Jews: ‘...because of their practising usury when they were forbidden to do it.’ (4:160) What is meant by usury here is not the kind which is unlawful for us. What is meant is unlawful property, as when Allah says: ‘They are people who listen to lies and consume ill-gotten gains’ (5:42), meaning unlawful wealth in the form of bribes and what they consider lawful of the property of non-jews when they say: ‘We are under no obligation where the gentiles are concerned.’ (3:75) So according to this, the prohibition against usury includes all unlawful wealth whatever way it is earned.

The usury known in the Sharī‘ah takes two forms: the usury entailed by delay and the usury entailed by disparity in contracts and foodstuffs as will be explained. The Arabs had a practice whereby they would say to a debtor, ‘Will you settle now or pay more later?’ The debtor could then increase the amount of money he owed, and the creditor would wait for it. This is forbidden by the consensus of the Community. Most prohibited sales are forbidden because of the idea of increase either in money or in benefit to one of the parties incurred by delay and the like. Some forbidden sales do not have increase in them, like selling fruit before it is ripe or selling after the adhān has been called for Jumu‘ah, and the one who does it is said metaphorically to be practising usury.

The Imams relate from Abū Sa‘īd al-Khudrī that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘Gold for gold, silver for silver, wheat for wheat, barley for barley, dates for dates and salt for salt, like for like, hand to hand. Anyone who increases or asks for increase practises usury. The taker and the giver are the same in respect of that.’ In the hadith of ‘Ubādah ibn aṣ-Ṣāmit we find, ‘When the categories are different, sell however you wish when it is hand to hand.’

Abū Dāwūd related from ‘Ubādah ibn aṣ-Ṣāmit that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘Gold for gold – ore and coins – silver for silver – ore and coins – wheat for wheat – mudd for mudd – barley for barley – mudd for mudd – dates for dates – mudd for mudd – and salt for salt – mudd for mudd. Anyone who increases or asks for increase practises usury. There is no harm in selling gold for silver when the amount of silver is more, provided it is hand to hand, and no delay is involved. There is no harm in selling wheat for barley when the amount of barley is more, provided it is hand to hand, and no delay is involved.’

Scholars agree that taking this position is following the Sunnah and that is the position of the majority of the Muslim fuqahā’ except in the case of wheat and barley. Mālik considers them one category and does not permit two of them for one. That is also the position of al-Layth, al-Awzā‘ī, and a large number of the scholars of Madīnah and Syria. Mālik adds sult-barley to them. Al-Layth considers them as one category and Ibn Wahb also holds that view.

The Sunnah is confirmed and there is no position other than it. The Prophet ﷺ said, ‘When these categories are different, sell however you wish when it is hand to hand,’ and he said, ‘Wheat for wheat and barley for barley’ which indicates that they are two different categories, just as wheat differs from dates, and because their attributes differ and they have different names. One does not consider plants which the Shari'ah does not consider. They are different. This is the position of ash-Shāfi'ī, Abū Ḥanīfah, ath-Thawrī and the people who base their position on the hadith.

Mu'āwiyah ibn Abī Sufyān believed that the prohibition related from the Prophet ﷺ was about minted dirhams and dinars, not gold and silver ore for coins nor about things made from gold and silver. It is said that this was his position until an incident occurred to him with 'Ubādah which is transmitted by Muslim and others: 'We went on a sortie when Mu'āwiyah was in command of the people and took a lot of booty. Part of our booty consisted of a silver vessel. Mu'āwiyah ordered a man to sell it against the people's stipends. People argued about that. 'Ubādah ibn aṣ-Ṣāmit heard about it, went along and said, "I heard the Messenger of Allah ﷺ forbid selling gold for gold, silver for silver, wheat for wheat, barley for barley, dates for dates, and salt for salt except like for like, item for item. Anyone who increases or asks for increase practises usury." The people returned what they had been given. Mu'āwiyah heard about that and stood up and said, "What is the matter with men who relate hadiths from the Messenger of Allah ﷺ when we saw him and were his Companions and did not hear it from him!" 'Ubādah ibn aṣ-Ṣāmit stood up and repeated the story. He said, "We will relate what we heard from the Messenger of Allah ﷺ even if Mu'āwiyah dislikes it! – or 'in spite of him'. I do not care. I accompanied him in his army on a dark night." Hammād said this or something similar to it.

Ibn 'Abd al-Barr said, 'It is related that the story concerned Abu-d-Dardā' with Mu'āwiyah. It is possible that that occurred to both of them together but the hadith on the custom is recorded from 'Ubādah. It is what scholars rely on regarding the subject of usury. There is no disagreement that what Mu'āwiyah did is not permitted and it is not denied that Abu-d-Dardā' and 'Ubādah knew something that was unknown to Mu'āwiyah. They were respected men among the fuqahā' of the Companions and two of their great men. Certain things were unknown to Abū Bakr and 'Umar while they were known to lesser men and the same holds true for Mu'āwiyah. It is also possible that his position was that of Ibn 'Abbās who was an ocean of knowledge but did not see anything wrong in two dirhams for one until Abū Sa'īd dissuaded him from it. The incident of Mu'āwiyah and 'Ubādah took place while he was governor for 'Umar. Qabīṣah ibn Dhu'ayb said, "Ubadah objected to something Mu'āwiyah did and said, "I will not live in the same land as you!" and went back to Madīnah. 'Umar asked him, "What has brought you here?" and he told him. He said, "Go back to your place. May Allah make ugly a land which does not contain you and those like you." He wrote to Mu'āwiyah, "You have no authority over him."

The Imams (and the wording is that of ad-Dāraquṭnī) related from 'Alī that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, 'Dinar for dinar and dirham for dirham with no disparity between them. Anyone who needs silver should buy it with gold. If he needs gold, he should buy it with silver, thus and thus.' Scholars say that this indicates the genus of the coins. Silver is both white and black and gold is red and yellow. None of that can be exchanged except like for like, same for same, in every case. This is the position of the majority of the people of knowledge. The transmission from Mālik about minor coins of base metal (fulūs) varies. He at times compared them to dirhams since they are used to pay for things, while at other times he forbade doing that since they are not currency in every land and vary from one land to another.

There is no consideration given to one view which is related from several Mālikīs which some relate from Mālik, that when a merchant is preparing to leave and requires minted dirhams or dinars, he can take his silver or gold bullion to the mint and tell the minter, 'Take this silver or gold of mine and take out the fee for your work and give me minted dinars for my gold or minted dirhams for my silver because I am preparing to leave and I fear I will miss the people I am travelling with,' and that that is permitted due to necessity, and it is something which some people have to do. Ibn al-'Arabī related it in what he took from Mālik about someone other than a merchant and said that Mālik lightened the usual ruling in that case. The form of this transaction is that he sells his silver which weighs a hundred dirhams, adding five extra as the fee for minting, for a hundred. This is pure usury. A transaction which would be permissible would be if he told him, 'Mint this for me,' and then separately gives him the wage for it. When he mints it, he takes the whole amount from him and pays him the wage for doing it.

What Mālik did first is what he did last. Mālik looked at the outcome and on that basis made the judgement for the present circumstances. The rest of the fuqahā' reject it. Ibn al-'Arabī said, 'Mālik's argument concerning it is clear.' Abū 'Umar said, 'This is the same usury which the Messenger of Allah ﷺ forbade when he said, "Anyone who increases or asks for increase practises usury."' Ibn Wahb denied that this was Mālik's position and denied it himself. Al-Abharī claimed that it was out of compassion in seeking trade and so that the market was not missed, and the ruling of usury is only applicable against someone who desires an increase and intends that. Al-Abharī forgets Mālik's basic principle of cutting off the means to wrong (sadd adh-dharā'ī), including his position about someone who sells a garment, which he has no intention of rebuying, on credit and then finds it being sold in the market: he is not permitted to buy it for less than the amount he sold it for, even if he did not intend or desire that originally. Such examples are numerous. If usury only existed in a transaction when someone actually intended it, it would only be made unlawful for the fuqahā' [who would possess the necessary perspicacity to recognize it in the transaction]. 'Umar said, 'No one should trade in our market except someone with fiqh. Otherwise he will practise usury.’ This is clear to anyone who is fair and inspired to right guidance.

Mālik went to great lengths to prevent forbidden increase, and so he considered something merely suspect to be the same as actual usury. He forbade exchanging a dinar and dirham for a dinar and dirham in order to block the means and to cut off suspicion, since they would not be exchanged except with some increase in mind. The reason for prohibiting that is the impossibility of making an equal distribution. It is exchanging gold and silver for gold, and it is evident that the intrinsic disparity in such an exchange is forbidden. Furthermore, he forbade exchanging a dinar of fine gold and a dinar of base gold [for two dinars of medium quality, because it is as if he considered the medium quality dinar] to correspond to the good quality one and considered the poor quality one negligible. This demonstrates the acuteness of his investigation into the matter and indicates that that transmission about paying extra for minting should be rejected and is not sound, and Allah knows best.

Al-Khaṭṭābī said, ‘Bullion is pieces of gold and silver before they are minted.’ ʿAyn (specie) are minted dirhams and dinars. The Messenger of Allah ﷺ forbade selling a mithqāl of gold coins for slightly over a mithqāl of unminted gold bullion, and he forbade a disparity between minted silver and unminted silver. He said, ‘Bullion and coins have the same ruling.’

Scholars agree that dates for dates can only be like for like. They disagree about selling one date for two dates and one grain of wheat for two. Ash-Shāfiʿī, Aḥmad, Ishāq, and ath-Thawrī forbid it. That is analogous to the position of Mālik. It is sound because if there is usury in a lot of something, then a little of it is included in the ruling by analogy. Those who permit that argue that when only one or two dates are consumed, they have no price because they cannot be weighed or measured and therefore disparity is permitted.

Know that the issues concerning this subject are numerous and its secondary rulings widespread. A measure of that can be gained by looking at what each of the scholars consider to be the legal reason (‘illah) behind the prohibition of usury. Abū Ḥanīfah said that the reason is because it is a weighed or measured category. So in his view all that is subject to measurement or weight consists of one category. It is not permitted to sell some of it for the same category with disparity or with delay. So he forbids selling dirt for dirt with disparity because it can be measured, but permits one loaf of bread for two loaves because he does not think it falls under measurement which is its basis and so he removes it from a genus in which usury can exist.

Ash-Shāfi‘ī says that the reason is that it is a category of food. This is his position in his new school. So he does not permit selling flour for bread or bread for bread with disparity or delay, whether the bread is leavened or unleavened. He thinks that it is not permitted to sell one egg for two, one pomegranate for two, or one melon for two melons, either hand to hand or with delay because all of those are consumable foods. In his old school, he said that the reason was that the prohibition was based on its being weighed or measured.

What the Mālikīs say about this matter varies. The best of what is said about it is that foodstuffs which can be stored form a general category, like wheat, barley, dates, and salt for which there is a text, as well as similar items like rice, millet, sorghum, sesame, and legumes like broad beans, lentils, cowpeas, and chickpeas. The same holds for conserved meats, milks, vinegars, oils and fruits like grapes, raisins, and olives. There is disagreement about figs. Honey and sugar are added to them. Usury can occur with all of those things with delay, but disparity is permitted in them by the words of the Prophet ﷺ, ‘When these categories are different, sell however you wish if it is hand to hand.’ There is no usury in respect of fresh fruits which are perishable, like apples, melons, pomegranates, pears, cucumbers, aubergines and other vegetables. Mālik said, ‘It is not permitted to sell eggs for eggs with disparity because they can be stored.’ He permits like for like. Muḥammad ibn ‘Abdullāh ibn ‘Abd al-Ḥakam said, ‘It is permitted to sell one egg for two or more because they are not stored.’ That is the position of al-Awzā‘ī.

Grammarians disagree about the word ‘ribā’ (usury). The Basrans say that its root has a wāw because the dual is ribawān. Sībawayh said that. The Kufans say that it is written with a yā’ and the dual has a yā’ because of the kasrah at the beginning of the word. Az-Zajjāj said, ‘I have not seen an error worse than this or uglier than this! They are not satisfied with just an error in script; they even err in the dual!’ in spite of the fact that they recite: “What you give with usurious intent, aiming to get back a greater amount from people’s wealth, does not become greater (yarbū with wāw) with Allah.” (30:39) Muḥammad ibn Yazīd said that ‘ribā’ is written with a wāw in the muṣṣhaf to distinguish it from zinā. It is more appropriate for ribā to have a wāw because it is from the verb rabā, yarbū.

will not rise (from the grave) except as someone driven mad by Shayṭān’s touch.

‘Lā yaqūmūna’ (they will not rise) here refers to rising from the grave according to Ibn ‘Abbās, Mujāhid, Ibn Jubayr, Qatādah, ar-Rabī’, aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk, as-Suddī, and Ibn Zayd. One of them said, ‘Allah appoints a shayṭān to choke him.’ They all said, ‘He will be raised like a madman to punish him and make him hated by all the people in the Gathering.’ This agreed-upon interpretation is strengthened by the reading of Ibn Mas‘ūd which is: ‘They will not rise on the Day of Rising except as someone rises...’

Ibn ‘Aṭīyyah said, ‘The words of the āyah contain a simile for the state of someone who engages in trade in this world with avarice and greed, comparing him to a madman, because greed and desire affect him to the extent that his limbs become disordered. This is like when you say, “He’s mad!” about someone walking quickly whose movements are addled, either by anxiety or something else.’ The poet al-A‘shā likened the movements of a camel to madness. However, the reading of Ibn Mas‘ūd and the mutually supporting positions of commentators make this interpretation weak.

‘Driven mad’ (yatakhabbatuhu) is Form V of the verb khabaṭa. Allah will make this disorder a sign of practising usury. That is because He enlarges the usury in their bellies and it makes them heavy, so when they rise from their graves they will stand and then fall over. It is said that they will be raised on the Day of Rising with their bellies inflated like pregnant women and whenever they stand, they will fall down and people will walk over them. Some scholars say that that is the sign by which they will be known on the Day of Rising and then punishment comes after that. The image of ‘eating’ is used here for the practice of usury because consumption is the greatest goal of a person in property, and it also indicates greed, which is the severest form of avarice. So one of the consequences of earning takes the place of all earning, and clothing, dwelling, storing and spending on dependants is all included in ‘eating’ (akl), which is here translated as ‘practise’.

This āyah contains evidence against those who deny that epilepsy is from the jinn and claim that it is natural and that Shayṭān does not move inside a person nor touch him. The refutation of this has already been discussed earlier. An-Nasā’ī related that Abu-l-Yasār said, ‘The Messenger of Allah ﷺ used to make the following supplication: “O Allah, I seek refuge with You from falling from a high place, being crushed by a falling building, drowning, and burning. I seek refuge with You from being touched by Shayṭān at the time of death. I seek refuge with you from being killed in Your cause while retreating. I seek refuge with You from dying from a sting.”’ It is related from Muḥammad ibn al-Muthannā from Abū Dāwūd from Hammām from Qatādah from Anas that the Prophet ﷺ used to say, ‘O Allah, I seek refuge with You from madness, leprosy, white leprosy, and evil diseases.’ Mass means madness. One says that a man is ‘touched’ (mussa, alisa, mamsūs and mal’ūs).

That is the form usury will take in the Next World. It is related in the hadith of the Night Journey: ‘I was taken by Jibrīl and passed by some men each of whom had a belly like a great house. They were in the path of the people of Pharaoh. The people of Pharaoh are exposed to the Fire morning and evening. They advance like camels maddened by thirst, trampling on stones and trees, not hearing or understanding. When the people with those bellies are aware of them, they stand up, but their bellies make them fall. When any of them stands up, his belly pulls him over and he falls. They cannot leave and then the people of Pharaoh envelop them, trampling them front and back. That is their punishment in the Interspace between this world and the Next. The people of Pharaoh are saying, “O Allah, let the Final Hour never come!” Allah Almighty says: “On the Day the Hour takes place: ‘Admit Pharaoh’s people to the harshest punishment!’” (40:46) I said, “Jibrīl, who are they?” He answered, “They are those who consumed usury who will only rise as someone driven mad by Shayṭān’s touch.” Mass is insanity.

That is because they say, ‘Trade is the same as usury.’

With all commentators this refers to the unbelievers and they are told to keep that which they received in the past. This is not what is said to a disobedient believer. He should cancel his sale and cancel what he did when he was ignorant of the prohibition. That is why the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘If anyone does an action which is not part of our business, it is rejected.’ The threat implicit in this āyah includes those who are disobedient.

They say that the increase at the end of the term is based on the price at the beginning of the contract. This is because of the way that the Arabs understood usury. When a debt was due, they would tell the debtor, ‘Either you pay it or you increase it,’ i.e. the amount of the debt. Allah says that that is unlawful and refutes them by saying: ‘But Allah has permitted trade and He has forbidden usury.’ It is clear that when the terms ends and someone cannot pay it, he is given a deferral. This usury is what the Prophet ﷺ cancelled when he stated on the Day of ‘Arafah, ‘All usury is cancelled, and the first usury I cancel is our usury, that of ‘Abbās ibn ‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib. It is all cancelled.’ He began with his uncle and singled him out. This is one of the customs which demonstrates justice in a ruler: to impose justice on himself and those close to him, and then on people in general.

But Allah has permitted trade and He has forbidden usury.

This is one of the generally applicable (‘āmm) āyahs in the Qur’an. The definite article before the word ‘trade’ (al-bay’) is to indicate the genus, not to make it definite, since there is no prior mentioned trade to which it can refer. So trade is general, and then the usurious transactions we have mentioned and other things which are mentioned as being forbidden are specified. Such things include wine, carrion, a transaction known as habal al-habalah and other things confirmed in the Sunnah and by the consensus of the Community. This is similar to ‘kill the idolaters’ (10:5) and other literal statements which are necessarily generally applicable but which are then made specific. This is the position of most of the fuqahā’. Some say that this āyah is included in the undefined (mujmal) parts of the Qur’an which, in turn, is further described by what is lawful and unlawful in sales, and so it is not possible to use it to make a sale lawful or unlawful unless that is accompanied by some clarification from the Sunnah of the Prophet ﷺ. It indicates the permissibility of sales in general, not particular transactions. This is the difference between ‘āmm and mujmal. The ‘āmm indicates the permissibility of sales in general when there is no evidence of a specific factor making them prohibited. The mujmal does not indicate the permissibility of the specific unless there is definite evidence of permissibility. The first is sounder, and Allah knows best.

Linguistically ‘bay’’ (trade) is a verbal noun of the verb ‘bā’a’ (to sell), meaning to give goods and take something in return. It stipulates a seller, who is the owner or one who acts on his behalf, and a buyer, who is the one who pays the price, and the goods which are paid for. So the pillars of the sale are four: seller, buyer, price, and thing paid for. Then among the Arabs the reciprocal transaction varies according to those it is connected to. If it is in exchange for ownership, it is called a sale. If it is in exchange for the use of allowing sex, it is called marriage (nikāḥ). If it is in exchange for another use, it is called hire. If it is coin for coin, it is money-changing. If it is a deferred debt, it is an advance (salām). This will be explained in the Āyah of Debt. The ruling on hire will be dealt with in al-Qaṣaṣ. The ruling on dower in marriage will be dealt with in an-Nisā'.

The sale involves a verbal offer and verbal acceptance, however it is expressed. In Arabic, this involves the expression using the past tense, which is actual, and the future tense, which is an allusion. The sale can also be made binding by a commonly understood allusion by which ownership is transferred. This is as when someone says, 'I have sold you these goods for ten dirhams,' and the buyer says, 'I have bought them.' Or the buyer says, 'I have bought it' and the seller says, 'I have sold it to you.' Or the seller says, 'I will sell them to you for ten dirhams,' and the buyer says, 'I will buy them' or 'I have bought them.' The same is true if he says, 'Take this for ten,' or 'You will be blessed with them for ten,' or 'I have handed them over' when both parties intend a sale. All of this is a binding sale. If the seller says, 'I have sold them to you for ten,' and then retracts that before the buyer accepts, he cannot retract until he hears the buyer either accept or reject that because he has obliged that on himself and said it and because the contract is not complete.

If the seller then says, 'I was joking,' what is transmitted about that varies. Sometimes it is said that the sale is binding and one does not pay attention to his statement, and sometimes it is said that one looks at the value of the goods. If the price is similar to its value, then the sale is binding. If there is a great disparity, like selling a slave for a dirham or a house for a dinar, it is known that he did not intend a sale by that and was joking. So it is not binding.

A usurious contract is void and is never permitted since the Imams related from Abū Sa‘īd al-Khudrī: ‘Bilāl brought some Barni dates and the Messenger of Allah ﷺ asked him, “Where are these from?” Bilāl said, “From dates which we consider low quality. I exchanged two ṣā’s of them for a ṣā’ to feed the Prophet ﷺ.” The Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, “Oh! usury itself! Do not do it, but if you want to buy dates, sell them in another sale and then buy them.”’ In one variant, ‘This is usury. Return them. Then sell our dates and buy for us from the price.’ The words ‘return them’ indicate that a usurious contract is void and not valid in any way. That is the position of the majority, except for Abū Ḥanīfah who said, ‘A usurious sale is permitted in as far as it is a sale, but forbidden since it entails usury. If the usury is removed, then the sale is permitted.’ If this had been the case, then the Messenger of Allah ﷺ would not have voided the sale and would have merely commanded that the extra amount be returned and validated the transaction of the ṣā’.

Any sale which is clearly ḥarām is null and void and so the buyer must return the goods themselves. If they have been lost while in his possession, he must return the price paid. This is the case with real estate, goods and animals. Mālik said that what is unclearly unlawful is returned, whether or not it has gone.

Whoever is given a warning by his Lord

Ja‘far aṣ-Ṣādiq said, ‘Allah forbade usury so that people would lend to one another.’ Ibn Mas‘ūd reported that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘A loan is worth twice what ṣadaqah is worth.’ Some people said that Allah forbade it because it destroys wealth and thereby destroys people.

Arqam had done. Ad-Dāraqūṭnī reported from al-‘Āliyyah bint Anfa‘: ‘Umm Muḥibbah and I went to Makkah and we visited ‘A’ishah and greeted her. She asked, “Who are you?” We said, “We are from the people of Kufa.” It was as if she turned away from us and Umm Muḥibbah said to her, “Umm al-Mu‘minīn, I had a slave-girl and I sold her to Zayd ibn Arqam al-Anṣārī for eight hundred dirhams against his stipend. He wanted to sell her and then I bought her for six hundred dirhams cash.” She turned to us and said, “Evil is what you sold and what you bought! Tell Zayd that he has nullified his jihād with the Messenger of Allah ﷺ unless he repents!” She asked her, “What do you think of the transaction if I only take the capital from him?” She recited: “Whoever is given a warning by his Lord and then desists, may keep what he received in the past.” Al-‘Āliyyah was the wife of Abū Ishāq al-Ḥamdānī al-Kūfī as-Sabī‘ī, Umm Yūnus ibn Abī Ishāq.

Mālik relates this hadith in the transmission of Ibn Wahb regarding credit sales. If something leads to falling into the forbidden, then it is forbidden, even if it is outwardly a permissible sale. In this principle, Mālik differed from other fuqahā’ who said, ‘Rulings are based on the outward, not a supposition.’ Our evidence is the position of ‘blocking the means’ (sadd adh-dharā‘i’). If the transaction is safe, we deduce its soundness, as already stated. This hadith is a definitive text. What ‘Ā’ishah said for Zayd was only to deter him, since such things are not a matter of opinion. Nullification of actions can only be known by revelation.

We read in Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim from an-Nu‘mān ibn Bashīr that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ stated, ‘The ḥalāl is clear and the ḥarām is clear. But between the two there are doubtful things about which most people have no knowledge. Whoever exercises caution with regard to what is doubtful, shows prudence in respect of his dīn and his honour. Whoever gets involved in the doubtful things is like a herdsman who grazes his animals near a private preserve (ḥimā). He is bound to enter it. Every king has a private preserve and the private preserve of Allah on His earth are the things that He has made forbidden.’

The legal sense of this, in terms of evidence, is that he forbade doing doubtful things out of the fear of falling into the forbidden and it is that which constitutes the legal principle of ‘blocking the means’ (sadd adh-dharā‘i). The Prophet ﷺ said, ‘One of the major wrong actions is for a man to abuse his parents.’ They said, ‘O Messenger of Allah, is it possible for a man to abuse his parents?’ He replied, ‘He may curse another man’s father who in turn curses his father, and curse his mother and he in turn curses his mother.’ So he made all allusion to cursing parents in general like cursing one’s own parents. The Prophet ﷺ, however, did curse the Jews when they consumed the price they obtained for selling what they were forbidden to eat.

In a letter, Abū Bakr said, ‘There must be no joining together of animals that are kept separately nor separation of animals that are kept together out of the fear of having to pay zakāt on them.’ Ibn ‘Abbās forbade dirhams for dirhams when combining them would lead to an offence. Scholars agree that it is forbidden to combine a sale and a loan, that a little wine is ḥarām, even if it does not intoxicate, that being alone with an unrelated woman is forbidden, even if a man is impotent, that it is forbidden to look at the face of a young woman, and several other things which are known to be definite. It is confirmed that the Sharī‘ah has forbidden them because they constitute the means to forbidden things. So it is more fitting that the potential causes of usury be defended against and the means to it blocked. If someone allows those means, he should allow digging wells and setting up ropes in situations where they might lead to the death of Muslim men and women. No one allows that.

There is also agreement that the ‘mah sale is forbidden, and Allah is the One who grants success. Abū ‘Ubayd al-Ḥarawī explained an ṭmah sale as being ‘a transaction in which someone sells goods to a man for a known price for a known term and then buys them back from him for less than the price for which he sold them.’ He said, ‘If he buys goods from someone else in the presence of the one who seeks the ṭmah for a known price and then takes possession of them and then sells them to the one who seeks the ṭmah for a higher price for a set term, and then the buyer buys them from the first seller for cash for a lower price, this is also ṭmah, but less disliked than the first, and some permit it.’ It is called ṭmah because of the presence of cash for the one with the ṭmah, ʿayn meaning ‘ready money’.

Abū Dāwūd reports that Ibn ‘Umar said, ‘I heard the Messenger of Allah ﷺ say, “When you sell by ṭmah, follow the tails of cattle, are content to be farmers and abandon jihād, then Allah will impose abasement on you which will not be removed from you until you return to your dīn.”’ Abū ‘Abd ar-Raḥmān al-Khurāsānī says that the isnād of this hadith contains someone who is not well-known. Abū ‘Ubayd al-Harawī explained the ṭmah sale and said, ‘It is that you sell some goods to a man for a known price due at a specified term and then you buy them from him for a lesser price than the price for which you sold them.’ He said, ‘If, in the presence of someone who desires an ṭmah, someone buys goods from someone else for a known price and takes possession of them and then sells them to the one who desires an ṭmah for a greater price than that for which he purchased them with a known period of credit, and then the buyer sells them to the first seller for cash less than the price, that too is an ṭmah, but it is less disliked than the first kind. Some people permit it. It is called an ṭmah because of the presence of cash. That is because of the presence of ready money and the buyer. He bought it in order to sell it for ready money which he receives immediately.’

Our scholars say that if someone sells goods for a price on credit and then buys them for the same sort of payment for which he sold them, he must buy them for cash or with a term less than the term for which he sold to them or for a longer term for the same price, or greater or less. These are three possible situations. In the first and second cases, the transaction is permitted if the price paid is the same or greater, but it is not permitted if the price is less, according to ‘Ā’ishah’s hadith. As for the third case, which is to sell them for a longer term, if he buys the goods themselves or more, it is permitted to do that for the same price or less, but not for more. If he buys some of it, it is only permitted for the same price, not more or less. Our scholars have specified seventy-seven points on this topic, but the nub of them is what we have mentioned.

He can keep what he received in the past

This refers to past usury and makes clear that there will be no consequences in this world or the Next. As-Suddī and others said that. This is the judgment of Allah for the unbelievers of Quraysh and Thaḳīf and others who became Muslim who used to deal in usurious transactions before they were Muslim.

and his affair is Allah’s concern.

There are four interpretations of the pronoun ‘his’ here. One is that it is really ‘its’ and refers to usury, meaning the business of usury is subject to Allah’s command in making it unlawful or not. The second is that the pronoun refers to ‘what was in the past’ i.e. it is up to Allah to pardon that and remove its consequences. The third is that the pronoun refers to the usurer, meaning that his affair is up to Allah in making him firm in giving up usury or returning him to indulging in it. An-Naḥḥās preferred this position, saying that it is clear and good, i.e. his business is up to Allah in the future. If He wishes, He makes him firm in standing by the prohibition, and if He wishes, returning him to usurious transactions. The fourth is that the pronoun refers to what is forbidden (i.e. ‘its’ affair), but means to allow him to hope for the best.

But all who return to it

This means that they revert to usury before they die. Sufyān said that. Another said, ‘Whoever reverts and says that trade is like usury has disbelieved.’ Ibn ‘Aṭīyyah said, ‘We believe that the āyah is about the unbelievers, so being forever in the Fire is literal. In respect of the disobedient Muslim, it is metaphorical.’

Allah obliterates usury

In this world: meaning that He removes blessing (barakah) from usury, even if it is a lot. Ibn Mas‘ūd related that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘Even if usury is a lot, its end is little.’ It is said that it means in the Next World. Regarding these words, Ibn ‘Abbās said, ‘Neither ṣadaqah, ḥajj, jihād nor gifts to relatives are accepted from a usurer.’ Mahaqa (obliterating) has the meaning of ‘to decrease and vanish.’ The waning (mahāq) of the moon is derived from the same root.

but makes ṣadaqah grow in value!

This means that He increases it in blessing in this world and makes its reward many times more in the Next World. In Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim: ‘When someone gives ṣadaqah, Allah makes it grow, even if it is only a morsel of food, like one of you would raise his colt or foal until it comes on the Day of Rising the size of Uḥud.’

Allah does not love any persistently ungrateful wrongdoer.

An ungrateful person is also called a wrongdoer for emphasis. It is said that it is to remove any confusion about the word ‘ungrateful’ (kaffār) since the word can be used for a farmer who covers up the grain in the earth. Ibn Fūrak said that.

Those who believe and do right actions and establish the prayer and pay zakāt, will have their reward with their Lord. They will feel no fear and will know no sorrow.

Here Allah singles out the prayer and zakāt, even though they are no more than a component part of righteous deeds, to honour them and highlight their value since they are the best of actions: the prayer with respect to the body and the zakāt with respect to property.

You who believe! be fearful of Allah and forgo any remaining usury

Its outward meaning is that any uncollected usury is void, even if it was contracted before the revelation of the āyah of prohibition. It is said that this āyah was revealed because of Thaḳīf. They made a treaty with the Prophet ﷺ that they would claim the usury which people owed them while the usury they owed others would be cancelled. When the terms of their usury were due, they sent to Makkah to settle them. The debts were against the Banū ‘Abdah, who are the Banū ‘Amr ibn ‘Umayr of Thaḳīf, and the Banū al-Mughīrah of Makhzūm. The Banū Mughīrah said, ‘We will not give you anything. Usury has been abolished.’ They went to ‘Attāb ibn Usayd and he wrote about it to the Messenger of Allah ﷺ and the āyah was revealed. The Messenger of Allah then wrote it to ‘Attāb, and Thaḳīf learned of it and refrained. This is the reason for the revelation of the āyah as was reported by Ibn Ishāq, Ibn Jurayj, as-Suddī and others. It means: place a screen between you and the punishment of Allah by abandoning any outstanding usury.

This is a condition applying to Thaḳīf because it was when they first became Muslim. We can suppose that, if the āyah is about those who affirm belief, it is a metaphorical condition, as you might say to someone who wants to establish himself, ‘If you are a man, then do such-and-such.’ An-Naqqāsh related Muqātil ibn Sulaymān said that the word ‘if’ here means ‘when’. Ibn ‘Aṭīyyah said that this is not known linguistically. Ibn Fūrak said that it is impossible that it means the Prophets before Muḥammad ﷺ. ‘Forgo any remaining ribā if you believe’ in Muḥammad ﷺ since the first command is only of use if you believe. This is rejected by what is reported about the reason for the revelation of the āyah.

If you do not, know that it means war from Allah and His Messenger.

This is a threat to anyone who does not abandon usury. War calls for killing. Ibn ‘Abbās said that on the Day of Rising it will be said to the practiser of usury, ‘Take up your weapons for war.’ Ibn ‘Abbās also said, ‘If someone insists on usury and does not desist, it is a duty for the leader of the Muslims to ask him to repent. If he does not desist, he strikes off his head.’ Qatādah said, ‘Allah threatened the people of usury with killing and made them lawful for killing wherever they are found.’ It is said that the meaning is: ‘If you do not desist, you are at war with Allah and His Messenger,’ meaning you are their enemies. Ibn Khuwayzimandād said, ‘If the people of a land think usury to be lawful, they are apostates and the ruling regarding them is the same as that of the people of apostasy, and it is permitted for the ruler to fight them. Do you not see that Allah Almighty has announced that when He says: “...know that it means war from Allah and His Messenger”?’ Abū Bakr recited it from ‘Āṣim as ‘ādhinū’, meaning ‘inform others’.

Ibn Bukayr narrated, ‘A man came to Mālik ibn Anas and said, “Abū ‘Abdullāh, I saw a drunkard, who was a chronic drinker, who was trying to catch the moon. I said, ‘My wife is divorced if there is anything worse than wine which enters a man’s belly.’” He said, “Go away while I investigate your problem.” He came back to him the following day and he said the same thing. He came back the day after that and Mālik told him, ‘Your wife is divorced. I have examined the Book of Allah and the Sunnah of His Prophet ﷺ and I did not see anything worse than usury because Allah has proclaimed war on account of it.’”

This āyah indicates that practising usury and making use of it is one of the major wrong actions. There is no disagreement about that as we will make clear. It is related that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘A time will come upon people when there will not be anyone left who does not consume usury, and even one who does not consume it will be touched by its dust.’” Ad-Dāraqūṭnī related that ‘Abdullāh ibn al-Ḥanzalah reported that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘A dirham of usury is worse in the sight of Allah than thirty-six wrongful acts of fornication.’ It is related that he said ﷺ, ‘Usury has ninety-nine gates, the least of which is like a man having sex with his mother.’

Ibn Mas‘ūd said, ‘Those who take usury, pay it, its witnesses and scribes if they know of it, are cursed on the tongue of Muḥammad ﷺ.’ Al-Bukhārī related that Abū Juḥayfah said, ‘The Messenger of Allah ﷺ forbade the price of blood, the price of dogs, and the earnings of prostitutes, and cursed those who consume usury and those who pay it, the tattooer and women who are tattooed.’ In Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim, Abū Hurayrah reported, ‘Avoid the seven deadly wrong actions.’ Usury was one of them. In Abū Dāwūd from Ibn Mas‘ūd we find: ‘The Messenger of Allah ﷺ cursed those who take usury, those who pay it, its scribes and its witnesses.’

But if you sincerely repent, you may have your capital, without wronging and without being wronged.

Abū Dāwūd related that the father of Sulaymān ibn ‘Amr said, ‘I heard the Messenger of Allah ﷺ say in the Farewell Hajj, “Every usurious transaction of the Jāhiliyyah is cancelled. You have your capital, not wronging or being wronged.”’ So when there is repentance, Allah returns to usurers their capital and tells them not to wrong others by taking any more usury and that they will not ‘be wronged’ by their capital being retained causing them to lose it. It is possible that ‘not being wronged’ refers to procrastination because the procrastination of the wealthy is wrongdoing. The meaning is that the capital debt is settled straight away while any usury is removed. This is the sunnah of righteousness, and is the closest thing to righteousness. Do you not see that when the Prophet ﷺ indicated to Ka‘b ibn Mālik to reduce the debt of Ibn Abī Ḥadrad by half, to which Ka‘b agreed, the Messenger of Allah ﷺ told the other, ‘Get up and pay it.’ Scholars agree that the command referred to settling the debt. Reconciliation will be dealt with in an-Nīsā’, Allah willing.

But if you sincerely repent you may have your capital, usury. Some scholars use this as evidence that anything that happens to the sale goods before they are received, which would oblige the prohibition of the contract, invalidates the contract, as when a Muslim buys game and then the buyer or seller assumes iḥrām before it is collected: the sale is forbidden because something has occurred which forbids the sale. Allah has invalidated what has not been collected because something has occurred which makes it forbidden before it has been collected. If it has already been collected before that happens, the sale is not affected. This is the school of Abū Ḥanīfah and the position of the Shāfi'īs. It is used as evidence that the destruction of the goods before they are collected, and while they are still in the possession of the seller, obliges the cancellation of the contract, although, according to Aḥmad ibn Ḥanbal, some early scholars disagreed with this position.

This is to stress the invalidation of any usurious increase that is still outstanding, but permits receiving the capital in which there is no

This is in keeping with the position of those who say that a basic contract in which there is usury is permitted but then becomes invalidated by the ruling of Islam before it can be collected. As for those who forbid the usurious contract at its source, these words are not sound. That is because usury is forbidden in all religions, and what was done in the Jāhiliyyah was the custom of the idolaters, and the usury they took is the same as what they had gained by usurpation and looting, and so what they did is not considered.

According to this, it is not correct to call witnesses to any contract involving usury. The laws of the Prophets before us forbid usury, and this is well known and mentioned in the Book of Allah, as He relates about the Jews: 'because of their practising usury when they were forbidden to do it.' (4:161) Allah mentions in the story of Shu'ayb that his people rejected that and said: 'Do your prayers instruct you that we should abandon what our fathers worshipped or stop doing what we want to with our wealth?' (11:87) So it is not valid to use testimony as evidence (i.e. for the validity of such contracts).

Some of the scrupulous who go to excess believe that when lawful property is mixed with the unlawful in such a way that it cannot really be separated, and then someone removes the unlawful amount mixed with it, what remains is not lawful or good, because the lawful might have been removed and the unlawful left. Ibn al-‘Arabī said, ‘This is excess in the dīn. With respect to things that cannot be easily differentiated, what is desired is the value, not the thing itself. If it is destroyed, then its equivalent replaces it. Mixing is tantamount to destruction as the individual item cannot be differentiated.’ Allah knows best.

Our scholars say that the way to repent of unlawful property in one’s possession, if it is usury, is to return it to the person from whom it was taken and to seek him out if he is not present. If you despair of finding him, then you should give that amount away as ṣadaqah. If you took something through injustice, you should follow the same procedure in dealing with the one you wronged. If the matter is unclear to you, and you do not know how much is lawful and how much is unlawful, you should examine the amount and return an amount sufficient to preclude any doubt that any of the unlawful remains in your possession. You should return that to those you know you wronged and from whom you took usury. If you despair of finding them, you must give ṣadaqah on their behalf. If your wrongs take up all you have and you know that you are obliged to pay what you can never do because it is so great, then your repentance is to give all of your possessions either to the poor or for the best interests of the Muslims so that there only remains in your possession the minimum clothing necessary for the prayer and covering your private parts and food for the day.

In the eyes of most scholars there is a difference between this and someone who is bankrupt, because the one who is bankrupt did not take people’s property through transgression. They are the ones who go to him and so he is left with what will cover him in his normal dress. Abū ‘Ubayd and others, however, think that the ruling is the same and a bankrupt is only left with what will be enough for the prayer and to cover his private parts. Whenever he obtains anything, it is taken from him and he only keeps what we mentioned until he and those who know his state know that he has settled what he owes.

This āyah is a threat from Allah about usury, and a similar threat about sharecropping (mukhābarah) is reported from the Prophet ﷺ. Abū Dāwūd reported from Yahyā ibn Ma‘īn from Abū Rajā’ from Ibn Khaytham from Abu-z-Zubayr that Jarīr ibn ‘Abdullah said, ‘Allah and His Messenger announce war against someone who does not abandon mukhābarah.’ This is evidence for the prohibition of sharecropping, which is working land for a half, third or quarter of its produce. It is also called muzāra‘ah. All the Mālikīs, ash-Shāfi‘ī, Abū Ḥanīfah and their followers and Dāwūd agree that it is not permitted to rent land for a third, a fourth, or part of its produce because that is unknown, although ash-Shāfi‘ī and his people and Abū Ḥanīfah say that it is permitted to rent land for food when what it produces is known, as it is known that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘As for something known and guaranteed, there is no harm in it.’ Muslim transmitted it. That is the position of Muḥammad ibn ‘Abd al-Ḥakam, while Mālik and his adherents forbid it.

That is also based on what Muslim related that Rāfi‘ ibn Khadīj said: ‘In the time of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ we used to let out the land for cultivation and we would rent it in return for a third, a fourth and a specified amount of food. One day one of my uncles came to us and said, “The Messenger of Allah ﷺ has forbidden us something which used to contain benefit for us, but obeying Allah and His Messenger is more beneficial for us. He forbade us to rent out the land for cultivation in return for a third, a fourth and a specified amount of food. He commanded the owner of the land to cultivate it or give it for cultivation.”’ He disliked renting it and the like of that.

It is agreed that it is not permitted to rent land in exchange for any type of food or drink because that would be tantamount to selling food for food on credit. Therefore renting land for any of what it produces is forbidden, even if that is not normally eaten or drunk, except in the case of wood, reeds and firewood, as they fall under the category of muzābanah in their view. This is recorded from Mālik and his adherents. Ibn Saḥnūn mentioned from al-Mughīrah ibn ‘Abd ar-Raḥmān al-Makhzūmī al-Madanī that ‘There is no harm in renting land for food which is not produced from it.’ It is also related from al-Mughīrah that it is not permitted, as the rest of the Mālikīs say.

Ibn Ḥabīb mentioned that Ibn Kinānah used to say, ‘Land may not be rented for anything connected to any plants that it produces. There is nothing wrong in renting it for something else, whether it is something that it is eaten or not, and whether or not it is produced from it.’ Yaḥyā ibn Yaḥyā stated that. He said that it is one of the positions of Mālik. He said that Ibn Nāfi‘ said, ‘There is nothing wrong in renting land for anything, food or anything else, whether or not it is produced from it, except for wheat and similar grains. That is the muḥāqalah that is forbidden.’

Mālik said in the Muwattā’: ‘As for a man who gives his uncultivated land for a third or a fourth of what comes out of it, that is an uncertain transaction because crops may be scant on one occasion and plentiful at another time. The crops may perish completely and the owner of the land will have abandoned a set rent which it would have been good for him to rent the land for. He takes an uncertain amount and does not know whether or not it will be satisfactory. It is like a man having someone travel for him for a set amount and then saying, “Shall I give you a tenth of the profit of the journey as your wage?” This is not lawful and must not be done.’ Mālik said, ‘A man must not hire out himself or his land or his ship or his animal unless it is for a known set amount.’ That is also the position of ash-Shāfi‘ī and Abū Ḥanīfah and his people.

Aḥmad ibn Ḥanbal, al-Layth, ath-Thawrī, al-Awzā‘ī, al-Ḥasan ibn Ḥayy, Abū Yūsuf and Muḥammad said that there is nothing wrong in giving a man land in exchange for a part of what it produces, like a third or a fourth. That is the position of Ibn ‘Umar and Ṭāwus. In their argument, they cited the story of Khaybar and the fact that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ employed its people for half of what the land produced and [half] of the fruit. Aḥmad said, ‘The hadith of Rāfi‘ ibn Khadij about forbidding renting fields has confused wording and is not sound. It is more fitting to take the story of Khaybar which is a sound hadith.’

One group of the Ṭābi‘ūn and those after them allow giving a man a ship or a mount, as land is given, in exchange for a share of what Allah gives the person when working with it. They consider that the basis in that is the qirāḍ which is agreed about. It will be dealt with later in al-Muzzammil (73:20), Allah willing. Ash-Shāfi‘ī said about the position of Ibn ‘Umar, ‘We used to practise sharecropping (mukhābarah) and did not see any harm in that until Rāfi‘ ibn Khadij informed us that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ had forbidden it.’ It means that they used to rent land in exchange for part of what is produced. He said that that was abrogated by the sunnah of Khaybar.

Part of what verifies the position of ash-Shāfi‘ī that it was abrogated is what the imams related from Jābir. Ad-Dāraquṭnī reports it as: ‘The Prophet ﷺ forbade muḥāqalah, muzābanah, mukhābarah and selling fruits before their condition is known.’ Abū Dāwūd related that Zayd ibn Thābit said, ‘The Messenger of Allah ﷺ forbade the mukhābarah and I asked, “What is the mukhābarah?” He answered, “That you take land in exchange for a half, third or fourth [of what it produces].”’

Most recite ‘mā baqiya’ with the yā’ vowelised. Al-Ḥasan gives it a sukūn. This is frequently seen in poetry. [OMITTED] The reason is that the yā’ is like the alif and just as the vowel does not reach the alif, that is also the case with the yā'. Al-Ḥasan recite 'mā baqā with alif which is the dialect of Ṭayy' who use jarāh for jārīyah and nāṣāh for nāṣīyah.

Abu-s-Sammāl among the reciters recites 'min ar-ribū'. Abu-l-Faṭḥ 'Uthmān ibn Jinnī said, 'This variant is aberrant for two reasons. One is leaving the kasrah for the ḍammah, and the other is having the wāw after ḍammah at the end of the word.' Al-Mahdawī said that the reason is that it intensifies the alif and takes it towards the wāw which the alif replaces. It should not be taken in other than this way since there is no noun with a silent wāw at the end preceded by a ḍammah. Al-Kisā'ī and Ḥamzah use imālah in ribā because of the place of the kasrah on the rā'. The rest make it emphatic by the fathah on the bā'.

Abū Bakr from 'Āṣim and Ḥamzah recite 'fādhinū', meaning 'announce to others' and the object is elided. The rest recite 'fādhānū,' meaning 'have notice'. It is like 'I have a knowledge (innī 'alā 'ilm). Abū 'Ubayd related it from al-Aṣma'ī. Linguists related that it is said, 'adhintu bihi idhnan,' 'I know it.' Ibn 'Abbās and other commentators say that it means: 'be certain of war from Allah Almighty,' and it has the meaning of authorisation. Abū 'Alī and others preferred the reading with maddah. He said, 'because when they are commanded to inform others who do not cease doing that, they have to know it themselves.' He said that their informing them contains their own knowledge while their knowledge does not entail informing others. Aṭ-Ṭabarī preferred the reading without maddah because it is specific to them. According to the reading with maddah, they were commanded to inform others.

All the reciters recite 'lā tuẓlimūna' and 'walā tuẓlamūna'. Al-Mufaḍḍal related from 'Āṣim 'lā tuẓlamūna walā tuẓlimūna' which is a reversal. Abū 'Alī said, 'The majority reading is preferred because it is in harmony with 'if you repent' in the two verbs depending on the subject.

280 If someone is in difficult circumstances, there should be a deferral until things are easier. But making a free gift of it would be better for you if you only knew.

If someone is in difficult circumstances,

After Allah has decreed that usurers should receive their capital back from those to whom they lent it, He decrees that the one experiencing hardship should be granted a delay until a time when things are easier for him. The reason for the revelation of this āyah is that when Thaḳīf asked for the property which was owed to them, the Banu-l-Mughīrah complained of hardship and said, ‘We have nothing,’ and asked for a delay until the time when their fruits would be ready for harvesting. Then this āyah was revealed.

The words of this āyah as well as Allah’s words: ‘If you repent you may have your capital’ (2:279) indicate that it is affirmed that someone owed a debt can ask for it from the debtor and is permitted to take property without his consent. This indicates that when a debtor refuses to settle the debt when he is able to do so, he is a wrongdoer. Allah Almighty says: ‘you may have your capital’ and so enabled people to seek their capital when it is not impossible for their debtor to pay it.

Al-Mahdawī and some scholars said. ‘This āyah abrogates what was done in the Jāhiliyyah by way of selling people as slaves who were unable to pay their debts.’ Makkī related that the Prophet ﷺ also instructed people to follow that practice at the beginning of Islam. Ibn ‘Aṭīyyah said, ‘If it is really confirmed that the Prophet ﷺ did that, then it was abrogated.’ Aṭ-Ṭaḥāwī said, ‘A free man would be sold for a debt at the beginning of Islam, if he did not have enough property to settle his debts, until Allah abrogated that practice by His words: ‘If someone is in difficult circumstances, there should be a deferral until things are easier.” Their evidence is a hadith related by ad-Dāraquṭnī from Muslim ibn Khālīd az-Zanjī from Zayd ibn Aslam from Ibn al-Baylamānī that Surrāq said, ‘I owed a man some money – or a debt – and he took me to the Messenger of Allah ﷺ and I did not have any money and so he bought me from him – or I was bought for him.’ Al-Bazzār transmitted it with this isnād. Muslim ibn Khālīd az-Zanjī and ‘Abd ar-Raḥmān ibn al-Baylamānī are not used as authoritative.

These words are general to all people. Anyone who is in difficulty is given a deferral. This is the position of Abu Hurayrah, al-Ḥasan and most of the fuqahā’. An-Naḥḥās said, ‘The best of what is said on this āyah is the position of ‘Aṭā’, aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk and ar-Rabī‘ ibn Khaytham. They said that the deferral applies to everyone who is in difficulty both in respect of usury and in respect of all other debts. This combines all the positions because it can be an abrogation revealed about usury and then become another more general ruling.’ Ibn ‘Abbās and Shurayḥ said that it is specific to usury and there is no deferral in other debts and dealings. A debtor must pay people what he owes or be imprisoned until he pays it. That is the position of Ibrāhīm [an-Nakha‘ī]. Their evidence is: ‘Allah commands you to return to their owners the things you hold on trust.’ (4:58) Ibn ‘Aṭīyyah said, ‘This position applies when there is no pressing poverty. If there is poverty, the ruling is that a deferral should be imposed.’

If someone has a lot of debts and his creditors ask for their money, the judge can divest him of all his property and leave him with just his bare needs. Ibn Nāfi‘ related from Mālik that he is only left with what will conceal his private parts. The well-known position is that a debtor is left his normal clothing without excess and his cloak is not removed if he normally wears it, and the clothing of his wife is left. There is disagreement about selling his books if he is a scholar. He is not left a house or servant or Friday clothes unless they are inexpensive and, in such a case, it is forbidden to imprison him. The basis for that is: 'If someone is in difficult circumstances, there should be a deferral until things are easier.'

The Imams related that Abū Sa'īd al-Khudrī said, 'A man experienced loss in the time of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ in respect of the produce which he sold and his debts mounted up. The Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, "Give ṣadaqah to him." The people gave him ṣadaqah but that did not amount to enough to settle his debt. So the Messenger of Allah ﷺ told his creditors, "Take what you find and you may only have that." In Abū Dāwūd we find: 'The Messenger of Allah ﷺ did not allow creditors more than the seizure of a debtor's property.' This is a definitive text. The Messenger of Allah ﷺ did not order debtors to be imprisoned or kept in confinement. According to Shurayḥ, the man concerned was Mu'ādh ibn Jabal. This differs from the position of Abū Ḥanīfah who said that he is kept in close confinement if there is a possibility that he might have money. He is not forced to work as we mentioned. Success is by Allah.

A bankrupt person should be imprisoned, according to Malik, ash-Shāfi'ī, Abū Ḥanīfah and others, until it becomes clear that he has no property. Mālik says that he should not be imprisoned if it is not suspected that he has hidden property and it is clear that he does not have anything. He should not be imprisoned if his difficulties are evident as we mentioned. If the property of a bankrupt man is collected, and then destroyed before it reaches its owner and can be sold, the bankrupt man is liable and the debt remains. If the qāḍī sells the property and keeps the price, and then the money is lost before the creditors get possession of it, they are responsible and the bankrupt man is free of further liability. Muḥammad ibn 'Abd al-Ḥakam, however, says that the debtor is always liable until the money reaches the creditors.

'Difficulties' ('usrah) refer to constricted circumstances due to lack of money. The name of the Army of Hardship (Jaysh al-'Usrah) is taken from it. Nazīrah means a deferral. Maysarah is a verbal noun meaning 'ease'. The copy of the Qur'an of Ubayy ibn Ka'b has 'dhā 'usratin' which would mean: 'If the person who is the object of the demand is in hardship'. Al-A'mash recited 'mu'siran'. Abū 'Amr ad-Dānī said that Aḥmad ibn Mūsā said that that is how it is in the copy of the Qur'an of Ubayy ibn Ka'b. An-Naḥḥās, Makkī and an-Naqqāsh said, 'According to this, the words of the āyah apply especially to the people who practice usury. If it is recited with "dhū", it is general to all of those who owe a debt.' Al-Mahdawī said that 'Uthmān's copy of the Qur'an had 'fa-in', but al-Mu'tamir related that 'Uthmān's copy had 'wa-in' with 'dhā', which an-Naḥḥās mentioned.

Most recite 'deferral' as 'nazīrah' while Mujāhid, Abū Rajā' and al-Ḥasan recited 'nazrah', which is a dialect of Tamīm. They say 'karm' for 'karam' and 'kabd' for 'kabid'. Nāfi' alone reads 'until things are easier' as maysurah while the others read it as maysarah. An-Naḥḥās related from Mujāhid and 'Aṭā' 'nāzīrhu' as a command and 'maysurihū'. Abū Ḥātim said that the reading of nāzīratun is not permitted. Rather it is in an-Naml (27:35) because the woman said it about herself, from the verb nazara, meaning she is waiting. Here in al-Baqarah, it is about deferral in respect of a debt, as we also see in 15:36. Abū Ishāq az-Zajjāj permits that and says that it is a verbal noun as seen with other verbs throughout the Qur'an.

But making a free gift of it would be better for you if you only knew.

Here Allah recommends that ṣadaqah be given to a person faced with difficulties and makes that better than granting a deferral. As-Suddī, Ibn Zayd and aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk said that. Aṭ-Ṭabarī and others said that the meaning of the āyah is, 'That you make it a free gift to both rich and poor is better for you.' The sound position is the first one. There is nothing about the rich in the āyah.

Aṭ-Ṭaḥāwī mentioned that Buraydah ibn al-Khaṣīb reported that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, 'If someone grants time to a person in difficulties, he is considered to have given ṣadaqah on every day [of the deferral].’ He said, ‘It is ṣadaqah for every day until the debt is due. When he defers it after it is due, he is considered to have given the same amount in ṣadaqah for every day.’ Muslim reported that Abū Mas‘ūd narrated that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘A man among those before you underwent the reckoning and no good at all was found for him except that, being a wealthy man, he used to do business with people and used to order his employees to make allowances for anyone in difficulties. So Allah, the Mighty and Exalted, said, “We have more right to do that than you,” and he was pardoned.’

It is related from Abū Qatādah that he looked for a debtor of his who was trying to hide and found him. The man said, ‘I am in difficulties.’ ‘By Allah?’ Abu Qatadah asked. ‘By Allah.’ he said. Abū Qatādah said, ‘I heard the Messenger of Allah ﷺ say, “Whoever wants Allah to save him from the calamity of the Day of Rising should give more time to someone in financial difficulties or absolve him.”’ We find in a long hadith that Abu-l-Yasār Ka‘b ibn ‘Amr heard the Messenger of Allah ﷺ say, ‘If someone gives more time to someone in difficulties or reduces the amount he owes, Allah will shade him in His shade.’ There are many hadiths which encourage doing that. The hadith reported by Abū Qatādah indicates that if the creditor knows that the debtor is in difficulty, or even suspects it, it is forbidden for him to demand payment from him, even if that has not been proven before a judge. A delay is granted to the one in difficulty until a time when he is in better circumstances. Reducing it is to cancel responsibility for the debt. Both ideas are included in the example of Abu-l-Yasār with his debtor when he said, ‘Pay it if you find the means to do so. Otherwise you are free.’

281 Be fearful of a Day when you will be returned to Allah. Then every self will be paid in full for what it earned. They will not be wronged.

It is said that this āyah was revealed nine days before the death of the Prophet ﷺ and that nothing else was revealed after it. Ibn Jurayj said that. Ibn Jubayr and Muqātil said it was seven days before his death. Three days is also mentioned. It is related that it was three hours before his death, and the Prophet ﷺ ordered, ‘Put it between the āyahs of usury and the āyah of the debt.’ Makkī reported that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘Jibrīl came to me and said put it after āyah 280.’

It is related from Ubayy ibn Ka‘b, Ibn ‘Abbās and Qatādah that the last āyah to be revealed was: ‘A Messenger has come to you from yourselves.’ (9:128). The first position is more commonly reported, sounder and better known. It is related that Ibn ‘Abbās said, ‘The last āyah to be revealed was: “Be fearful of a Day when you will be returned to Allah. Then every self will be paid in full for what it earned. They will not be wronged.” Jibrīl told the Prophet. “Muḥammad! Put it at the end of āyah: 280 of al-Baqarah.” Abū Bakr al-Anbārī mentioned in Kitāb ar-Radd that the position of Ibn ‘Umar was that this was the last āyah to be revealed and the Prophet ﷺ lived twenty-one days after it. This will be dealt with in 110:1.

The āyah is a warning to all people and a command encouraging every human being. ‘Day’ is in the accusative as the object, not as an adverb, and ‘when you will be returned to Allah’ describes it. Abū ‘Amr recited ‘returned’ as ‘tarji‘ūna’ ‘you will return’, also see in 88:25, which reflects the reading of Ubayy (taṣīrūna) instead of ‘turja‘ūna’ as in 8:62 and 18:36 which the rest have and which reflects the meaning of ‘Abdullāh (turaddūna). Al-Ḥasan recited ‘yurja‘ūna’ which means ‘all people will be returned’. Ibn Jinnī said, ‘It is as if Allah is showing kindness to the believers by directly addressing them when He mentions the return, since that is what awakens the hearts. He makes a grammatical change to the third person, which is also out of kindness to them.’

The majority of scholars say that the day referred to is the Day of Rising and Reckoning, while some people say that it is the day a person dies. Ibn ‘Atīyyah said that the first is sounder because of the context.

There is an implied elision: ‘you will be returned to the judgment and decision of Allah.’ ‘They’ here means ‘all people’. This āyah conveys to us that reward or punishment is connected to actions and so it refutes the Jabriyyah, as we already mentioned.

282 You who believe! when you take on a debt for a specified period, write it down. A writer should write it down between you justly. No writer refuse to write; as Allah has taught him, so he should write. The one incurring the debt should dictate and should be fearful of Allah his Lord and not reduce it in any way. If the person incurring the debt is incompetent or weak or unable to dictate, then his guardian should dictate for him justly. Two men among you should act as witnesses. But if there are not two men, then a man and two women with whom you are satisfied as witnesses; then if one of them is confused, the other can remind her. Witnesses should not refuse when they are called upon. Do not think it too trivial to write down, whether small or large, with the date that it falls due. Doing that is more just in Allah's sight and more helpful when bearing witness and more likely to eliminate any doubt – unless it is an immediate transaction hand to hand, taken and given without delay. There is nothing wrong in your not writing that down. Call witnesses when you trade. Neither writer nor witness should be put under pressure. If you do that, it is deviancy on your part. Be fearful of Allah and Allah will give you knowledge. Allah has knowledge of all things.

You who believe! when you take on a debt

Sa'īd ibn al-Musayyab said, 'I heard that the closest āyah in time in relation to the Āyat al-Kursī was the āyah of the Debt.' Ibn 'Abbās said, 'This āyah was revealed specifically about the salam sale,' meaning the fact that the people of Madīnah used the salam sale was the reason for the revelation of the āyah. Then it applied to all those with mutual debt obligations. Ibn Khuwayzimandād said that the āyah contains thirty rulings. Some of our scholars use it as evidence for the permission to put a term on loans according to what Mālik said, since there is no difference between a loan and any other contract which involves debts. The Shāfi'īs disagree with that and say that the āyah does contain permission for delay on all debts. The command is for there to be witnesses if the debt has a set term. Then there is other evidence for the permissibility or prohibition of deferment with respect to debts.

The word ‘dayn’ (debt) is stress, and it is the correct term for any transaction in which one person is owed cash and the other is granted a delay. The word ‘ayn’ in Arabic refers to what is immediate and dayn refers to what is absent. A poet says:

She promised us nabīdh for two dirhams.

Immediate wine is not a debt.

Another said:

The fates take me wherever they wish,
wherever they desire to put me in the grave,
Or they kindle wood and fire.

That death is then cash and not a debt.

Allah made this clear by saying ‘for a specified period’.

Ibn al-Mundhir said that this indicates that a salam sale without a known term is not permitted. The Sunnah of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ indicates something similar to the Book of Allah. It is confirmed that when the Messenger of Allah ﷺ came to Madīnah they used to give advances against fruit for two or three years ahead. The Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘Whoever gives an advance on dates, should give an advance for a known measure and known weight for a known term.’ Ibn ‘Abbas related it and al-Bukhārī, Muslim and others transmitted it.

Ibn ‘Umar said, ‘The people of the Jāhiliyyah used to sell meat to one another for the ḥabal al-ḥabalah (the offspring of a pregnant camel).’ The Messenger of Allah ﷺ forbade them to do that. All scholars agree that the permitted salam sale is when a man gives an advance to his companion of known defined food with a known measure for a known term in known dinars or dirhams and the transaction is made before they leave the place. Our scholars say that the date set for when a salam becomes due can be the harvest, cutting of the fruit, or the festivals of Nayrūz or Mihrajān [New Year or the autumn equinox] since that is a particular time.

Our scholars define the salam sale as being a known sale on credit for goods which are defined for ready money or what has the same ruling for a known term. It must be known and anything unknown must be avoided. For instance, in Madīnah at the time the Prophet ﷺ came to them they used to give credit and make a loan on the basis of the expected fruits of the date-palms, and the Prophet ﷺ forbade them to do that because of the uncertainty inherent in it, since the trees might not produce anything.

‘Defined’ means in general, not in detail, as the sale can be for dates, garments or fish while their category or specific description is not mentioned. ‘Ready money’ is specified to avoid a debt in exchange for a debt. ‘What has the same ruling’ is to exclude two or three days in which it is permitted to delay the capital of the salam. We believe that it is permitted to delay it for that amount with or without the precondition of its proximity, but it is not permitted to stipulate that. Ash-Shāfi‘ī and al-Kūfī do not permit a delay in the capital of the salam after the time of the contract and separation. They thought that that was like money-changing. Our evidence is that the two areas are different because of their particular description. Money-changing has a narrow remit but many preconditions which differs from the salam. There are more doubtful elements in transactions. Allah knows best. ‘A known term’ avoids the immediate salam which is not permitted according to the well-known position. Making the term known avoids having an unknown term which is what they used to do in the Jāhiliyyah.

Salaf and salam have the same meaning and they are both found in hadiths, however the term salaf can be used for a loan (qard). It is agreed that the salam is one of the permissible business transactions, except for the Prophet’s prohibition of selling what you do not have. There is an allowance in the salam, because when the salam is a known sale which is a debt, it is the sale of something absent which is required by necessity on the part of each of those involved in the transaction. If the owner of the capital needs to buy fruit and the one with the fruit needs the price before they are clear in order to spend it on them, it becomes evident that the salam sale is a necessary benefit. Fuqahā' call it 'the sale of the needy'. If it was permitted immediately, this wisdom would be invalidated and the benefit removed and the exception about selling what is not in your possession would be pointless. Allah knows best.

There are nine preconditions of the salam which are both agreed upon and disputed. Six concern the object of the salam and three concern the capital. The object of the salam is that it is a debt which is owed, it is described, it is a specific amount, it is due in the future, the time when it is due is known and that it will exist when that time arrives. The three which concern the capital which are agreed upon is that it is known category, amount and cash. These are agreed upon with the exception of cash.

Ibn al-ʿArabī said, 'As for the first condition, that it is a debt which is owed, there is no lack of clarity that what is meant is that it is something for which one is liable because it is a debt transaction. If it had not been for that, the person concerned would not have entered a debt and people would not have been directed to it in profit and kindness.' People agree on this position although Mālik said that a person is only permitted a salam on something specific with two conditions: one is that it is in a secure town and the other that it has begun to be taken, like milk from a sheep and fresh dates from a palm tree. He is the only one who stated that.

These two questions are sound in evidence because a specific article is forbidden in a salam out of fear of muzābanah and uncertainty so that it will not be difficult in the place. When that place is safe, and it is usually not difficult for it to exist in that place, then it is permitted, since there is no certainty of the guarantee of ends in legal questions. There must be the possibility of a small risk.

That is frequently seen in secondary issues in the books of legal issues.

As for a salam in respect of milk and fresh dates which have started to be taken, it is a Madinan question about which the people of Madīnah agreed. It is based on the principle of public welfare because a person needs to take milk and dates on a daily basis and it is hard to take them every day anew because the cash may not be present and the prices fluctuate. Those who own palm trees and milk need cash because they have goods that are not exchanged. Then when both parties share in the need, there is an allowance for them to engage in this transaction, based on it being analogous with āriyahs and other basic needs and benefits.

The second condition is that it is described, and that is agreed upon as is the third condition. How it is measured can be in one of three ways: volume, weight or number. That is based on custom, either what is known by the people or what is known in the Sharī‘ah.

There is disagreement about the fourth condition, which is that it is due in the future. Ash-Shāfi‘ī said that an immediate salam is permitted. Most scholars forbid it. Ibn al-‘Arabī said, ‘The Mālikīs are unsettled about the length of the term, even referring it to a day, so that some of our scholars actually say that an immediate salam is permitted. What is sound is that there must be a term because sales are one of two sorts: immediate, which is the basis, or deferred. If it is immediate and there is no salam in it, then it is selling what is not in your possession. There must be a term so every contract has its description and preconditions and so that the rulings of the Sharī‘ah are in their proper places and definitions. According to our scholars, its definition varies according to its market. Allah says: ‘a specified period’ and the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘a known term.’ That requires no discussion.

That which our scholars permit in respect of the immediate salam is about things that have different prices in different towns. So a salam between them is permitted in one, two or three days. If it is in the same town, then that is not the case because the price will be the same. Allah knows best.

The fifth condition is that it be a known term and there is disagreement in the community about that. Since Allah and His Prophet ﷺ have described that. Only Mālik among all the fuqahā' of the cities permits selling until harvest and cutting because he saw that it was known. This was already discussed in 2:189.

The sixth condition is that it exists in the place. There is no disagreement in the community about that either. If the object of the sale ceases to exist in the place where the term is by something coming from Allah, then all scholars say that the sale is void.

It is not a precondition of the salam that the one who takes is the owner of the goods. There was some disagreement about this among the Salaf based on what al-Bukhārī related that Muḥammad ibn al-Mujālid said, “‘Abdullāh ibn Shaddād and Abū Burdah sent me to ‘Abdullāh ibn Abī Awfā and told me, “Ask him whether in the time of the Prophet ﷺ, the Companions of the Prophet used to make advance payment for wheat.” ‘Abdullāh said, “We used to make advance payments to the peasants of the people of Syria for wheat, barley, and oil for a specified measure and for a specified time.” I asked, “To the person who possessed the crop?” He answered, “We did not ask about that.” Then they sent me to ‘Abd ar-Raḥmān ibn Abzā and I asked him. He answered, “The Companions of the Prophet ﷺ used to make advance payments in the time of the Prophet ﷺ and we did not ask them whether they had the crops or not.””

Abū Ḥanīfah stipulated the existence of the object of the salam from the time of the contract to the time of the end of the term set, fearing that it would be demanded and not be present and that would amount to risk. The other fuqahā' differed from him and said that what one considers is its existence at the end of the term. The Kufans and ath-Thawrī stipulated that the place of taking possession be mentioned in respect of things that have to be transported with effort. They said that the salam is unsound if the place of taking possession is not mentioned. Al-Awzā'ī said that it is disliked. We believe that if it is not mentioned, then the contract is not unsound, and the place of taking possession is specified. Aḥmad, Ishāq and a group of the people of hadith said that, based on the hadith of Ibn 'Abbās in which he did not mention the place where the salam was taken. If that had been one of the preconditions, then the Prophet ﷺ would have made it clear as he made the measure, weight and term clear. That is like what Ibn Abī Awfā said.

Abū Dāwūd related from Sa'd (aṭ-Ṭā'ī) from 'Aṭīyyah ibn Sa'd from Abū Sa'īd al-Khudrī that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, 'If someone pays in advance, he must not transfer what he has paid for to someone else before he receives it.' Abū Muḥammad 'Abd al-Ḥaqq ibn 'Aṭīyyah said, 'He is al-'Awfī, and no one considers his hadiths as authoritative, even if esteemed people related from him.' Mālik said, 'The business with us is that if someone buys food for a known price to be delivered at a stated date, and, when the date comes, the buyer does not find that the seller has what will satisfy what he paid for, then it is revoked. He should only take from him gold or silver or the exact price that he paid him. He should not buy anything from him for that price until he has taken that from him. That is because if he were to take other than the price which he paid or exchanged it for goods other than the food that he purchased from him, then it is selling food before it is received in full.' Mālik said, 'The Prophet ﷺ forbade selling food before it was received in full.'

'Write down the amount and the term.' It is said that Allah commands writing, but what is meant is writing and witnessing, because writing without witnesses does not constitute proper evidence. It is said that He commands us to write so that we will not forget. Abū Dāwūd aṭ-Ṭayālīsī reports in his Sunan that Ibn ‘Abbās said that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said about the words of Allah: ‘when you take on a debt..’: ‘The first disavowal of Ādam occurred in this manner. When Allah showed him his descendants, he saw a radiant man, shining with light, and asked, “O Lord, who is this?” The answer was, “This is your descendant, Dāwūd.” He asked, “O Lord, how long will he live?” “Sixty years,” was the reply. He said, “O Lord, increase his life!” “No,” He replied, “unless you give him some of your life span.” He asked, “What is my life span?” “A thousand years,” He replied He said, “I have given him forty years.” So Allah wrote it for him and the angels testified to it. When the angels came to him as he was dying, he said, “I still have forty years!” They replied, “You gave them to your descendant Dāwūd.” “I did not give anyone anything!” he said. So Allah produced the document and the angels testified to it.’ One version has: ‘Dāwūd lived a hundred years and Ādam’s life was a thousand years.’ At-Tirmidhī transmitted it. Allah’s words: ‘write it down’ are a clear indication that its entire description is recorded in a manner that will remove any dispute between those involved for the judge who gives a ruling when the case is presented to him. Allah knows best.

Some people believe that writing accounts is obligatory for owners and obliged by this āyah, be it a sale or a loan, so that there will be no forgetfulness or disavowal. Aṭ-Ṭabarī prefers that. Ibn Jurayj said, ‘The one who borrows should write it down and the one who lends should act as witness.’ Ash-Sha‘bī said, ‘They used to think that Allah’s words: ‘If you leave things on trust with one another’ (2:283) were abrogated by the command to write.’ Something similar is related by Ibn Jurayj. Ibn Zayd also said that and he reported it from Abū Sa‘īd al-Khudrī. Ar-Rabī‘ believed that this was obligatory by these words and then the ruling was lightened by His words: ‘If you leave things on trust with one another.’ Most say that the command to write is a recommendation to preserve property and remove uncertainty. If the debtor is trustworthy, writing the debt down does not harm him. If he is other than that, writing will put his debt in order and satisfy the need of the one with the right. One of them said, 'If you testify, it is decisive. If you trust, there is free disposal.' Ibn 'Aṭīyah said, 'This is a sound view and there is no abrogation with respect to this because Allah recommended writing in what a man gives and leaves. His recommendation is to promote people's caution.

A writer should write it down between you justly.

'Aṭā' and others said that it is obligatory for a scribe to write, when he is the only available scribe. Ash-Sha'bī said that. So when he is the only available scribe, he is obliged to write it down. As-Suddī said that it is obligatory when he is unoccupied. The lām is elided from the first and kept in the second because the second is absent and the first is addressed to the person, and so it is kept.

The word 'justly' means 'with trust and fairness'. He should not write more or less than the amount. The words 'between you' are used because both sides are involved. That is because the one owed the debt is likely to be suspected in writing down the debt he is owed and the same suspicion exists in the case of the debtor. Therefore, Allah prescribed a scribe from other than those involved who should write justly and should not be moved by favouritism for either party. It is said that when people transact with one another, so that one is not isolated from another, and some write down debts and some do not, Allah commanded that the writer should write it down justly.

The bā' connected to 'justly' is connected to 'write', not to 'writer' because what is obliged is that he write the document justly, not that he is just in himself. A child, a slave and someone in care can write it down when they understand it. In the case of those appointed as scribes, it is not permitted for guardians to abandon them except for reputable witnesses with whom they are pleased. Mālik said that, based on this āyah, documents should only be written down by people who are known for being fair and trustworthy. According to this view, the bā' is connected to 'writer'.

No writer should refuse to write.

The scribe is forbidden to refuse when called upon to fulfil his function. People disagree about a scribe's obligation to write or witness's to bear witness. Aṭ-Ṭabarī and ar-Rabī' said that it is obligatory for a scribe to write when he is ordered to do so. Al-Ḥasan said, 'It is obligatory for him in a situation in which it is not possible to obtain another scribe. In that case the person with the debt would be harmed if the scribe refused. When that is the case, it is obligatory for him. If it is possible to obtain another scribe who is able to do it, then he does not have to. As-Suddī said, 'It is obligatory for him when he is free to do it.'

Al-Mahdawī said that ar-Rabī' and aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk that 'refuse' is abrogated by Allah's words: 'Neither writer nor witness should be put under pressure.' This position is based on the opinion of those who think that writing was obligatory for anyone chosen by the two people involved in the transaction. A scribe was not permitted to refuse until that understanding was abrogated by the words: 'Neither writer nor witness should be put under pressure.' This is unlikely. It is not confirmed that it was ever obligatory on anyone whom the people in the transaction wanted, whoever that was. If the writing had been an obligation, it would not be valid to be paid for it, because being paid for performing obligatory actions is invalid, and there is no disagreement among scholars that it is permitted to receive a wage for writing out documents.

as Allah has taught him, he should write.

The kāf in 'kamā' is connected to 'write' meaning 'write as Allah has taught him.' It is possible that it is connected to idea in 'refuse', meaning 'As Allah has blessed with knowing how to write, he should not refuse and should be gracious in the same way that Allah has been gracious to him.'

The one incurring the debt should dictate

The one taking on the debt acknowledges his liability verbally so that it is known what he owes. The verb in Arabic for ‘dictate’ is amalla and amlā. These are two dialectical forms. Amalla is the dialect of the people of the Hijaz and the Banū Asad while Tamīm have amlā. Both are found in the Qur’an. The witnessing of the debt is because of the affirmation made by the one incurring it. Allah commanded the scribe to have fear of Allah and not reduce the amount owed. Bakhs is reduction. This is also found in His words: ‘It is not lawful for them to conceal what Allah has created in their wombs.’ (2:228)

If the person incurring the debt is incompetent or weak

Some people say that this means young, but that is an error. An adult can also be an incompetent. The word ‘weak’ here implies an adult without intelligence.

or unable to dictate,

Allah puts people who incur debts into four categories: an independent person who can dictate for himself and three others who cannot dictate. They are always in existence. Their rights are also taken care of in matters other than business dealings, such as inheritance when it is divided up, as well as other things. They are the incompetent, the weak and those unable to dictate. An incompetent (safīh) is someone with deficient sense regarding property, and it is not proper for him to give or take for himself. He is like the safīh garment, which is one that is lightly woven. Someone with a vile tongue is called a fool (safīh) because foul language almost only occurs in ignorant people and people of defective intellect. Arabs sometimes use the word safīh for feebleness of the intellect and sometimes for weakness of the body. A poet says:

We fear that our understanding will be deficient (tasfaha) and the time will be unknown for the sensible.

Dhu-r-Rummah said:

They walk as they are shaken (tasaffahat) by winds,
Their tops shaken by the movement of the winds.

It is said that duf is physical weakness and daf is mental weakness. It is also said that they are two dialectical forms with the same meaning. The first view is sounder. It is based on what Abū Dāwūd related from Anas ibn Mālīk that a man in the time of the Prophet ﷺ used to trade and he had some weakness (daf) in his intellect. His family went to the Prophet of Allah ﷺ and said, ‘Prophet of Allah, stop so-and-so from trading. He trades and there is some weakness in his mind.’ So the Prophet ﷺ summoned him and forbade him to sell. He said, ‘Messenger of Allah, I cannot bear going for any time without trading.’ The Messenger of Allah ﷺ said. ‘If you will not stop trading, then say, “This for that, and no cheating.”’ Abū ‘Īsā Muḥammad ibn ‘Īsā as-Sulamī at-Tirmidhī transmitted it from Anas and said it is ṣaḥīḥ. He mentioned weakness in his intellect. Al-Bukhārī transmitted it with the words: ‘When you buy something, say, “No cheating” and you have the option to return any goods you buy for three days.’”

This man was Ḥabbān ibn Munqidh al-Anṣārī, the father of Yaḥyā and Wāsi‘. It is also said that it was Munqidh, the grandfather of Yaḥyā and Wāsi‘, the Shaykh of Mālīk and father of Ḥabbān. He reached the age of 130. In one of his expeditions with the Prophet ﷺ, he received a head wound which muddled his intellect and speech. Ad-Dāraquṭnī related that Ḥabbān ibn Munqidh was a weak man and also blind. He suffered a head wound and the Messenger of Allah ﷺ gave him an option of three days in respect of his purchases. He found it hard to speak and the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said to him, ‘Buy and say, “No cheating.”’ He could be heard saying, ‘No cheating. No cheating.’ He transmitted it from Ibn ‘Amr.

Scholars disagree about someone who is cheated in their dealings

due to lack of experience and lack of intelligence and whether they should be debarred from trading based on this āyah and on the hadith. Aḥmad and Ishāq said that they should be debarred, while others said that they should not be. Both positions are found in the School. What is sound is the first position based on this āyah and the words in the hadith, ‘Prophet of Allah, stop so-and-so from trading’ when he did not debar because he said, ‘Messenger of Allah, I cannot bear going for any time without trading.’ So he allowed him to buy and made it specific to him because someone who is cheated in sales should be debarred, especially if his mind is disordered.

Part of what indicates that it is a particular ruling is what Muḥammad ibn Ishāq related from Muḥammad ibn Yaḥyā ibn Ḥabbān who said, ‘He was my grandfather, Munqidh ibn ‘Amr. He suffered a head wound and his language was broken and his mind disordered. He would not stop trading and continued to be cheated. He went to the Messenger of Allah ﷺ and mentioned that to him and he said, “When you buy, say, ‘No cheating.’ Then you have the option of retraction for three days for the goods you buy. If you are pleased, keep them. If you are angry, return them to their owner.”’ He lived a very long life to the age of 130. He was alive in the time of ‘Uthmān ibn ‘Affān when the people spread out and were numerous. He would buy goods in the market and return them when he was badly cheated. They would criticise him, saying, “You bought them!” He would reply, “I have the option. If I am satisfied, I keep them and if I am angry, I return them. The Messenger of Allah ﷺ granted me an option of three days.” He would return the goods to their owner on the following day or the day after and would be told, “By Allah, I do not accept them. You took my goods and gave me dirhams.” His answer was, “The Messenger of Allah ﷺ gave me an option of three days.” One of the Companions of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ would pass by and say to the merchant, “Bother you! He spoke the truth! The Messenger of Allah ﷺ gave him an option for three days!”” Ad-Dāraquṭnī transmitted it and Abū ‘Umar mentioned it in al-Isti‘āb. He said that al-Bukhārī mentioned it in his History from ‘Ayyāsh ibn al-Walīd from ‘Abd al-A‘lā from Ibn Ishāq.

The ‘weak’ are those who have some defect in their mind and so cannot dictate, either because of a stammer, muteness or ignorance of the language. Their guardian is their father or a trustee. Those who cannot dictate are children and their guardian is their trustee or father. If someone is ill, he has an agent. As for the dumb, they can be one of the weak or, more appropriately, one who cannot dictate. These are distinct categories that will be dealt with in an-Nīsā’.

At-Ṭabarī believed that the pronoun ‘him’ refers to the ‘right’, (meaning the guardian entitled to the right) and has an isnād to that effect from ar-Rabī‘ and Ibn ‘Abbās. It is also said that it refers to the one who owes the debt, which is correct, and what is reported from Ibn ‘Abbās is not sound. How could it be considered evidence if the one responsible for dictating the debt owed by an incompetent is the one owed the money! This is something which is not part of the Sharī‘ah unless the reason that the person is unable to dictate is that illness or great age make his words incomprehensible or he is mute. In such a case the one owed the debt can dictate while the one who is unable to do so listens and when it is finished, affirms it. But this is not what the āyah is about. This is only valid for someone who cannot dictate due to illness.

When Allah says: ‘the one incurring the debt should dictate,’ that indicates that he is trusted in what he says. That demands accepting the statement of the one who left a pledge along with his oath when there is a disagreement between him and the broker about the amount of the debt when the pledge exists. This is when the pledger says, ‘I pledged fifty’ and the broker claims that it is a hundred. One takes the statement of the pledger when the pledge exists. That is the school of most of the fuqahā’: Sufyān ath-Thawrī, ash-Shāfi‘ī, Aḥmad, Ishāq and the People of Opinion. Ibn al-Mundhir preferred it because the broker claims the extra. The Prophet ﷺ said, ‘The claimant provides evidence and the one against whom the claim is made takes an oath.’ Mālik said, ‘One takes the word of the broker about the value of the pledge and he is not believed about more than that.’ It is as if he thought that pledge and his oath is a witness on behalf of the broker, but Allah’s words: ‘the one incurring the debt should dictate,’ refute him. The one incurring the debt is the pledger. This question will be dealt with.

If someone says that Allah Almighty has put the pledge in place of witnesses and writing when testimony indicates the truthfulness of what is testified to between him and the value of the pledge and, when it reaches its value, there is no document about the increase, then the answer to him is that it does not indicate that its value must be that of the debt. The pledge for a thing can be more or less than its value. The broker is believed when he swears an oath to the value of the debt up to the point where it is equal to the value of the pledge. The custom is not like that. It may be that the debt is less than the pledge. That is common, and so there is no point to this position.

If it is confirmed that what is meant by the ‘guardian’ here is a faqīh, then the text indicates that the affirmation of the faqīh regarding the matter is accepted when he takes an oath because when he dictated it, he carried out the instruction.

The dealings of a debarred incompetent without the permission of his guardian are null and void by consensus and do not ever effect anything. There is disagreement about the dealings of an incompetent who is not debarred. That will be dealt with in Sūrat an-Nisā’.

Two men among you should act as witnesses.

They are called upon to act as witnesses. People disagree about whether this is obligatory or merely recommended. The sound position is that it is recommended as will be explained. Allah regulates testimony by His wisdom in financial and physical matters and other ḥudūd and makes two witnesses necessary in each case except where fornication is concerned as will be explained in Sūrat an-Nisā'. The linguistic form of 'witness' or 'shahīd' is an intensive form and that indicates that he may be called on to testify several times. This is also an indication of integrity. Allah knows best.

The word 'men' (rijāl) excludes unbelievers, children and women. The expression could include slaves but Mujāhid said that it means free men, which Qāḍī Abū Ishāq prefers. Scholars disagree about the testimony of slaves. Shurayḥ, 'Uthmān al-Battī, Aḥmad, Ishāq and Abū Thawr said that a slave's testimony is allowed when he possesses integrity. They rely on the meaning of the āyah. Mālik, Abū Ḥanīfah, ash-Shāfi'ī and most scholars say that a slave's testimony is not permitted and they rely in that on the defect inherent in slavery. Ash-Sha'bī and an-Nakha'ī allow it in minor matters. The sound position is that of the majority because Allah says: 'You who believe! when you take on a debt...' and the address continues to 'two men among you'. So the apparent meaning of the address is that it is dealing with those who contract debts and slaves do not have that capacity without their masters' permission.

If they say that the specificity of the beginning of the āyah does not prevent it from being general at the end, they are told that it is specific by His words: 'Witnesses should not refuse when they are called upon...' as will be explained. The words 'your men' also indicate that people who are blind can act as witnesses when they have definite knowledge about what they are testifying to, as is related from Ibn 'Abbās: "The Messenger of Allah ﷺ was asked about testimony and said, "You can see this sun. So testify when you have the equivalent certainty about the matter or do not testify." This indicates that a witness should actually see what he testifies to, and that testimony on the basis of logical deduction, which might be wrong, is not permitted. For instance, a blind man is permitted to have intercourse with his wife when he recognises her voice because it is permitted to engage in intercourse on the basis of the probability that it is lawful. If a woman is brought to him and he is told, 'This is your wife,' and he does not recognise her, he is permitted to have intercourse with her. He can accept a gift which comes to him by the statement of a messenger and he can testify to what he has been told.

If, however, someone informs him from Zayd about a confirmation, sale, slander or usurpation, he is not permitted to testify to what he was told because testimony requires certainty. It is permitted in other things to accept probability. That is why ash-Shāfi'ī, Ibn Abī Laylā and Abū Yūsuf said that if he knew of that before he went blind, then he is permitted to testify after he has become blind. The blindness may intervene between that to which he witnessed, as is the case with absence or death. This is the position of all of those scholars. That which prevents the testimony of a blind person in what he could have seen is of no consequence. His testimony is valid in respect of what is confirmed by extensive reports as when he reports about a ruling of the Messenger ﷺ which has multiple transmissions. Some scholars accept the testimony of a blind person on the basis of hearing the voice because he thought that deduction by that rises to the level of certainty. The similarity in voices is like the similarity of forms and colours. This is weak since it would require a sighted person to rely on the voice.

The position of Malik regarding the testimony of the blind on the basis of hearing a voice is that it is permitted in divorce and other things when he recognises the voice. Ibn al-Qāsim said, 'I asked Mālik, "A man hears his neighbour through a wall without seeing him and hears him divorce his wife. Can he testify to it if he recognises his voice?"' Mālik answered, "His testimony is allowed.'" That position was also related from 'Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib, al-Qāsim ibn Muḥammad, Shurayḥ al-Kindī, ash-Sha'bī, 'Aṭā' ibn Abī Rabāḥ,

But if there are not two men, then a man and two women

This means that if the claimant does not bring two men, then a man and two women suffice. This is the position of the majority. There is some elision and it means: ‘then a man and two women should take their place.’ Outside of the Qur’an, it might be in the accusative, namely ‘call on a man and two women to testify.’ Some say that the testimony of women is only permissible when there are no other men at all. Ibn ‘Aṭīyah said that this is weak and does not accord with the words of the āyah. The clear position is that of the majority, which is that if the person with the debt neglects to call two men, or does that intentionally for some reason, he calls a man and two women instead. In this āyah Allah has permitted the testimony of two women with a man when there are other men available. Allah does not mention this anywhere else. According to the majority, this is particular to property matters and on condition that there is a man with them. It is for property rather than other matters because Allah gives many means for confirming the ownership of property since there are many means of obtaining it and property is frequently subject to dispute. Sometimes confirmation is by writing, sometimes by witnessing, sometimes by pledges and sometimes by guarantee, and the testimony of women with men is part of that.

No intelligent person should suppose that Allah’s words ‘when you take on a debt’ include the debt of the dower with severance or the settlement of blood money owed for deliberate killing. Those cases are not about testimony to a debt, but testimony to other things. Scholars do permit the testimony of women alone regarding things which only they can know, as is also the case with the testimony of children, when it is necessary, about injuries. However, scholars also disagree about the testimony of children in such cases. Mālik allowed it as long as the children have not separated and do not disagree. The testimony of less than two of them is not permitted in the case of a child for an adult or an adult for a child. ‘Abdullāh ibn az-Zubayr gave judgment regarding injuries in such cases, and Mālik said, ‘It is the agreed practice here.’ Ash-Shāfi‘ī, Abū Ḥanīfah and the Ḥanafīs did not permit it because they are not ‘men’ nor ‘those with whom you are satisfied’ nor ‘two upright men from among yourselves’. (65:2) These qualities are not found in a child.

Since Allah made the testimony of two women equal to that of one man, their ruling must be the same as his ruling. As we and ash-Shāfi‘ī require that oaths are witnessed, it is obligatory for an oath to be witnessed by two men because this equivalence is undefined. Abū Ḥanīfah and his people disagree about this, and do not think that an oath needs a witness. They said, ‘Allah Almighty places oaths in various categories and numbers them. He does not mention the need for a witness in any of them. Therefore it is not permitted to make a judgment contingent on that because it is a category additional to those Allah has specified. This is an addition to the text and it is abrogation.’ Among those who take this position are ath-Thawrī, al-Awzā‘ī, ‘Aṭā’, al-Ḥakam ibn ‘Uyaynah and a group.

Some of them said that judging by an oath with a witness is abrogated by the Qur’an. ‘Aṭā’ claimed that the first to give judgment based on it was ‘Abd al-Malik ibn Marwān. Al-Ḥakam said, ‘Judging by an oath and a witness is an innovation, and the first to judge in this way was Mu‘āwiyah.’ All of this is an error and supposition and does not help in the face of the truth. Those who deny and are ignorant are not like those who affirm and know. Allah’s words: ‘Two men among you should act as witnesses...’ do not refute the Messenger of Allah ﷺ giving judgment with an oath and a witness, nor that it is not used to obtain rights, nor that it is only obliged by what Allah mentions and nothing else. If that were the case, it would be nullified by the refusal of the defendant to swear if the plaintiff swears. If that is the case, then the consensus is that he would be entitled to the money, and that is not what the Book of

Mālik said, ‘Part of the argument of those who say that is that he is told, “Do you think that if a man claimed that another man owed him money, the defendant would not swear that he did not owe it?” If he swears that, then the right will be nullified for him. If he refuses to swear and the one who demanded the debt swears that his right is true and confirms that his companion owes him that, this is something in which no one disagrees about in any land. So on what basis does he claim this and where does he find it in the Book of Allah? Whoever affirms, affirms by an oath with a witness.’

Our scholars said that, in view of the fame and soundness of the hadiths, the wonder is that they have said that those who act on it are innovating and revoke their ruling and disparage their opinion. This is also in spite of the fact that it was the practice of the four Caliphs, Ubayy ibn Ka‘b, Mu‘āwiyah, Shurayḥ, and ‘Umar ibn ‘Abd al-‘Azīz. He wrote to his governors to do that: Iyās ibn Mu‘āwiyah, Abū Salamah ibn ‘Abd ar-Raḥmān, Abu-z-Zinād and Rabī‘ah. That is why Mālik said, ‘The past practice of the Sunnah is enough for that. Do you see that these men cancelled their rulings and judged them to be innovators? This is indeed grave negligence and an incorrect reflection. The imams related from Ibn ‘Abbās that the Prophet ﷺ gave judgment based on an oath with a witness.’ ‘Amr ibn Dīnār said it is particular to property.

Sayf ibn Sulaymān related it from Qays ibn Sa‘d ibn Dīnār from Ibn ‘Abbās. Abū ‘Umar said that this is the soundest isnād of this hadith. No one attacks its isnād and there is no disagreement among the people who know the hadith that its men are trustworthy. Yahyā al-Qaṭṭān said, ‘Sayf ibn Sulaymān is confirmed. I do not know of anyone with a better memory than him.’ An-Nasā’ī said, ‘This is an excellent isnād. Sayf is trustworthy and Qays is trustworthy.’ Muslim transmitted this hadith of Ibn ‘Abbās. Abū Bakr al-Bazzār said, ‘Sayf ibn Sulaymān and Qays ibn Sa‘d are trustworthy. Those after have no need of mentioning them because of their fame for trustworthiness and integrity.’

None of the Companions objected to an oath with a witness. Rather it is transmitted from them that it was their position. That was also the position of most of the people of knowledge in Madīnah. There is disagreement about it reported from ‘Urwah ibn az-Zubayr and Ibn Shihāb. Ma‘mar said, ‘I asked az-Zuhrī about an oath with a witness and he said, “This is something which people have innovated. There must be two witnesses.”’ It is related from him that he was the first to give judgment based on a witness and oath. That is what was stated by Mālik and his people, ash-Shāfi‘ī and his followers, Aḥmad, Ishāq, Abū ‘Ubayd, Abū Thawr, Dāwūd ibn ‘Alī, and a group of the people of tradition. I believe that it is not permitted to oppose it because of the multiple reports about it from the Prophet ﷺ and the normative practice of the people of Madīnah generation after generation.

Mālik said, ‘Judgment is given on the basis of an oath with a witness in all lands.’ In his Muwattā’ he does not justify a question by other than it. There is no disagreement reported from him about giving a ruling based on an oath with a witness. The same is true about all of his companions in Madīnah, Egypt and elsewhere. The Mālikīs in all lands know of only this in their School with the exception of those of us in Andalusia. Yaḥyā ibn Yaḥyā claimed that he did not see al-Layth giving a fatwa by it nor believing in it. Yaḥyā differed from Mālik in that as well as differing from the Sunnah and the normative practice in the Abode of Hijrah.

The oath with a witness is an additional ruling articulated on the tongue of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ, in the same way that he forbade being married to a woman while also being married to her paternal or maternal aunt, even though Allah says: ‘Apart from that He has made all other women lawful for you’ (4:24) and like his forbidding eating the flesh of domestic donkeys and all beasts of prey with fangs although Allah says: ‘Say: “I do not find...”’ (6:145). It is also like wiping over leather socks when the Qur’an states that one washes or wipes feet. There are many examples of this. If it were permitted to say that the Qur’an abrogates the ruling of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ about an oath with a witness, it would be permitted to say that the words of the Qur’an: ‘Allah has permitted trade and He has forbidden usury’ (2:274) and ‘only by means of mutually agreed trade’ (4:29) abrogate the muzābanah, a sale involving risk, selling what has not yet been created, and other forbidden sales. No one is allowed to do this because the Sunnah clarifies the Book.

If it is said that what comes in the hadith is a judgment about something specific and is not universal, we say that those are words that undermine this principle. So it is as if one is saying that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ made it obligatory to rule by an oath with a witness. What supports this interpretation is what Abū Dāwūd related from Ibn ‘Abbās: ‘The Messenger of Allah ﷺ gave judgment based on a witness and an oath in respect of rights.’ Through analogy and investigation, we find that an oath is stronger than two women because they have no way to be part of the li‘ān process while the oath is a part of it. When the Sunnah is sound, it is mandatory to take it and the Sunnah does not require corroboration because whoever opposes it is overcome by it. Success is by Allah.

When it is confirmed that a ruling is given on the basis of an oath with a witness, Qāḍī Abū Muḥammad ‘Abd al-Wahhāb said, ‘That is about property rather than physical rights based on the consensus about that among all who say that a ruling is given on the basis of an oath with a witness,’ He added, ‘That is because property rights are less important than physical rights. This is indicated by the fact that women’s testimony is accepted in them.’ The position of Mālik varies about deliberate wounding and whether retaliation for it can be obliged by a witness and an oath. There are two transmissions from him. One is that it obliges choosing between retaliation and blood money, and the other is that it does not oblige anything because that is a physical right. He said that that is what is sound. Mālik stated in the Muwattā', 'This procedure pertains to property cases in particular.' Amr ibn Dīnār said that. Al-Māzirī said, 'There is no dispute that it is accepted in matters which purely concern property. There is no disagreement that it does not occur in what is simple marriage and divorce.'

If the testimony is about something which is not property, but which will lead to property, like testifying to a will and marriage after death, so that by its affirmation one only seeks property, there is disagreement about accepting it. Those who consider the property accept it and those who consider the circumstances do not accept it. Al-Mahdawi says that the testimony of women in cases involving ḥudūd is not permitted according to the position of most of the fuqahā' and most preclude it in marriage and divorce as well. That is the position of Mālik, ash-Shāfi'ī and others. They may testify about property but not about other things and so they do not testify against the testimony of others, even if there is a man with them. Judgment is, however, given on the basis of the testimony of two of them in all matters in which only women are present, like childbirth, the first cry of a newborn and the like. All of this is the school of Mālik, although there is some disagreement within it.

with whom you are satisfied as witnesses

This describes both the man and the two women. Ibn Bukayr and others said that this is addressed to judges. Ibn 'Aṭīyah said, 'This is not a good interpretation. The āyah is addressed to all people, but someone confused by the context might think it referred to judges alone. This usage is frequent in the Book of Allah. Although the address is directed to some in particular, it is in fact universal.'

These words indicate that there are witnesses who are not considered to be satisfactory. Those are people who are not considered to be of sufficient integrity. That is, of course, in addition to being Muslim. This is the position of the majority. Abū Ḥanīfah said, ‘Every Muslim who displays Islam and is free of impiety is considered to have integrity, even if his state is unknown.’ Shurayḥ, ‘Uthmān al-Battī and Abū Thawr said that they are the Muslims of integrity, even if they are slaves.

So they make the ruling universal and that obliges accepting the testimony of a bedouin against a townspeople when he is someone with whom they are satisfied and who possesses integrity. Ash-Shāfi‘ī and those with him accept that, since he is one of our men and the people of our dīn. The fact that he is from the desert is like him being from another country. Undefined terms in the Qur’an indicate the acceptance of the testimony of men of integrity and that Bedouin and townspeople are the same in that respect. Allah says: ‘...with whom you are satisfied as witnesses’ and ‘...call two upright men from among yourselves as witnesses.’ (65:2) Therefore ‘from among yourselves’ is addressed to the Muslims as a whole.

This demands absolutely that the meaning of integrity is necessarily additional to Islam because the attribute is additional to what is primarily described. The same is true of ‘with whom you are satisfied.’ This differs from what Abū Ḥanīfah said. It is not known whether one is satisfied with someone unless his state is reported. Therefore it necessarily follows that outward Islam is not, by itself, sufficient. Aḥmad ibn Ḥanbal and Mālik, as transmitted by Ibn Wahb from him, believed that Bedouin should not testify against townspeople based on the hadith of Abū Hurayrah in which the Prophet ﷺ said: ‘It is not permitted for a Bedouin to testify against a townspeople.’ What is sound is that his testimony is permitted when he has integrity and people are satisfied with him, as will be dealt with in an-Nisā’ and at-Tawbah. The hadith of Abū Hurayrah does not distinguish between a townspeople who is resident or one who is travelling. When he is travelling, then there is no disagreement that his testimony is accepted.

Our scholars say that integrity entails uprightness in religious matters, which includes avoiding major wrong actions and maintaining noble character and abandoning minor wrong actions, and being clearly trustworthy and not gullible. It is said that it is having a clear conscience and upright behaviour in the judgment of the one who assesses him. These ideas are similar.

Since giving testimony is a really important matter and has a lofty rank, entailing, as it does, the acceptance of the statement of one person over that of another, Allah Almighty stipulated for it the need for integrity and being considered satisfactory. Whoever judges that a witness possesses singular qualities and virtues, making him superior to others, stipulates that that prerogative accords him being singled out for giving testimony and the validity of judgment made on the evidence entailed by his testimony. This is the clearest proof of the permissibility of ijtihād and deduction based on indications and signs which our scholars believe contain hidden meanings and rulings. This will be further discussed in Sūrat Yūsuf, Allah willing. It indicates entrusting the matter to the ijtihād of judges. Sometimes a judge might discern lack of attention or doubt in the witness and therefore reject his testimony.

Abū Ḥanīfah says that outward affirmation of Islam is sufficient for someone to qualify as a witness in matters involving property but not in cases involving the ḥudūd. This is wrong and misses the point because property is one of people's rights. So, as Ibn al-'Arabī said, someone's outward Islam is not sufficient. Since Allah stipulated being satisfactory and possessing integrity in incurring debts as we have explained, it is more proper that He also stipulated that with respect to marriage, differing from Abū Ḥanīfah who says that a marriage may be contracted even if the witnesses are impious. So he denies to marriage the safeguards demanded in the case of property when they are even more necessary in the case of marriage because of its connection to lawfulness, sanctity, the ḥadd and lineage.

The position of Abū Ḥanīfah with regard to this matter is very weak indeed since Allah stipulated being satisfactory and possessing integrity and that cannot be known merely from the fact that someone is Muslim. It is known by investigating his circumstances so that one is not deceived by him merely saying, 'I am a Muslim.' It may well be the case that he has inside him that which would cause his testimony to be rejected. It like Allah's words: 'Among the people there is someone whose words about the life of this world excite your admiration and he calls Allah to witness what is in his heart ... Allah does not love corruption.' (2:204-205) He also says: 'When you see them, their outward form appeals to you.' (63:4) then if one of them is confused, the other can remind her.

Abū 'Ubayd says that the expression 'is confused' (dalla lit. strays) here means 'forgets'. Straying from testimony happens by forgetting part of it and remembering another part so that a person is confused about it. That is not the case when someone forgets it all. They are not called 'confused'. Ḥamzah recites 'in' whose apodosis is in 'fā' connected to 'tudhakkiru'. If it is read as 'an', it is the object and the regent in it is elided. The reading of the community of 'tudhakkira' is added to the verb with a fathah. Ibn Kathīr and Abū 'Amr have 'tudhkira' which means: one woman can make another equivalent to a male in witnessing since the testimony of a woman is half that of man. When both of them testify, as a whole they become like the testimony of a male. Sufyān ibn 'Uyaynah and Abū 'Amr ibn al-'Alā' said that. That is unlikely because the only thing opposite to ḍalāl when it means 'forgetfulness' is 'reminding' and that is found in the majority reading which is Form II, meaning to call attention when she forgets.

Witnesses should not refuse when they are called upon.

Al-Ḥasan says that this phrase deals with two issues. You should not refuse when you are asked to be a witness and you should not refuse to attest to the thing you are asked to bear witness to. Ibn ‘Abbās said that. Qatādah, ar-Rabī’ and Ibn ‘Abbās said it means that people should not refuse to convey what they witnessed and confirm it in writing. Mujāhid said, ‘This means when you are called to give testimony and are in possession of the evidence.’ An-Naqqāsh reports that this is how the Prophet ﷺ explained the āyah. Mujāhid said, ‘When you are first called to testify, if you wish, then go, and if you do not wish, do not.’ Abū Miljāz, ‘Atā’, Ibrāhīm, Ibn Jubayr, as-Suddī, Ibn Zayd and others all said that.

According to this, it is not obliged for witnesses to attend when summoned to witness two people who made a contract, but they must attend in the case of two people who contracted a debt if they were present at the transaction. When they were witnesses to the original contract and are asked to affirm their testimony to the document, they must do so. This is the situation which is referred to in this āyah. What is involved is the confirmation of testimony already given. If the testimony is confirmed, then they are called upon to reconfirm it in the presence of the judge. So the being ‘called upon’ refers to attending the court.

Ibn ‘Atīyyah said, ‘The āyah, as al-Ḥasan said, combines two recommended matters. The Muslims are encouraged to help their brothers. When there are many witnesses and there is confidence that the person will not be deprived of his right, then it is merely recommended for the one summoned, and he can fail to attend for any excuse whatsoever. If he fails to attend without any excuse, there is no wrong action or reward for him. If it is necessary and there is the slightest risk that someone will be deprived of his right, the recommendation is strengthened to the point that is close to an obligation. If a witness knows that someone will be completely deprived of his right by his failing to testify, then it is obligatory for him to testify, especially if he is summoned to do so. This is even more emphatic because it is a yoke on his neck and a trust which he must fulfil.

This āyah provides evidence that it is permitted for a ruler to provide witnesses for people and to pay them from the treasury and for them to have no other work except attending to the preservation of people's rights. Otherwise those rights might be lost and rendered null and void. Then the meaning would imply: 'Witnesses should not refuse to testify when people demand what they are entitled to.' Allah knows best. If it is said that this refers to testifying in exchange for a wage, we reply that it is simple testimony from people who have their needs fulfilled by the treasury. That is like paying judges and guardians and for all the acts of public welfare which help the Muslims. This is part of it, and Allah knows best. The Almighty says: 'Those who collect it' (9:60), giving a share of the zakāt to those who collect it.

This also indicates that a witness is someone who comes before a judge. This is the basis of the Sharī'ah and is acted on in every age and is understood by every nation. When this is confirmed, then a slave is outside of the bulk of witnesses, which is made specific by the words, 'your men', because a slave cannot necessarily respond and it may not be possible for him to come, because he is not independent and only acts with the permission of someone else. Therefore, he falls below the level of giving testimony just as he also cannot reach the degree of being a guardian. He similarly is not required to attend Jumu'ah, go on jihād and perform ḥajj as will be explained.

Our scholars say that this applies when one is summoned to give testimony. As for the case when he acts as a witness for a man who does not know about him and who will benefit from it, some people say that it is recommended because Allah says: 'Witnesses should not refuse when they are called upon.' So Allah obliges the duty to be carried out when one is called upon, and if he is not called upon, it is still recommended since the Prophet ﷺ said, 'The best witness is the one who brings his testimony before he is asked for it.' The imams related it. What is sound is that doing it is an obligation, even if he is not asked, as long as there is fear that someone's right will be lost or ignored, or it is about a divorce or an emancipation against someone who continues to enjoy his wife or employ that slave, and other such things. A person who is a witness to any of that must confirm that testimony, and his testimony is not dependent on him being asked so that the right is lost. That is why the Almighty says: '...they should carry out the witnessing for Allah' (65:2) and '...only those who bore witness to the truth and have full knowledge.' (43:86) We also have the sound hadith in which the Prophet ﷺ said, 'Help your brother, wronging or wronged.' It is incumbent to help him by giving testimony to make him ashamed to deny what he owes.

There is no ambiguity about the fact that if someone is obliged to give testimony regarding one of the matters we have mentioned and then does not testify, it impairs the witness and testimony. There is no distinction between the rights of Allah and the rights of human beings. This is the position of Ibn al-Qāsim and others. Some of them believe that if that testimony is about a human right, it only invalidates that particular testimony and it is not valid for him to give it afterwards. The first is the sound position because that which obliges its invalidation is his impiety in not performing what he was obliged to do without having any excuse for not doing it. Impiety (fisq) removes the qualification to be a witness in general. This is clearer.

There is no contradiction between the words of the Prophet ﷺ, 'The best witness is the one who brings his testimony before being asked for it' and his words in the hadith of 'Imrān ibn Ḥuṣayn, 'The best of you is my generation, then the one after them, and then the one after them.' 'Imrān ibn Ḥuṣayn said, 'I do not know whether he said "then the one after them" two or three times.' The hadith continues: 'Then after them there will come a people who give testimony when they are not asked to, who are treacherous and not trustworthy, who make vows but do not fulfil them, and plumpness will appear among them.’ They transmitted both hadiths as sound.

This hadith can be taken in three ways. One is that it means a false witness who testifies to what he was not asked to testify to, meaning that he was not bound to do it. Abū Bakr ibn Abī Shaybah mentioned that ‘Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb gave an address at al-Jabiya and said, ‘The Messenger of Allah ﷺ stood among you as I am standing among you and said, “People! Have fear of Allah in respect of my Companions, then those who follow them, and then those who follow them. Then lies and false testimony will spread.”’ The second is that it means that greed impels him to perform his testimony, which is why he hastens to testify before he is asked. This is a rejected testimony. It indicates that the witness is overcome by passion. The third is what Ibrāhīm an-Nakhaī said. He related various paths of transmission of this hadith: ‘When we were boys, they used to forbid us to make contracts and act as witnesses.’

Do not think it too trivial to write down, whether small or large, with the date that it falls due.

The verb sa’ama means to become weary of doing something. Al-Akhfash said that and that it is as a poet said:

I was weary of the burdens of life.

Whoever lives for eighty years is weary, and I do not care!

This is in order to avert the danger of tedium which may come about through the constant repetition of contracting debts as it is feared that people may become bored with writing them down. One of them may say, ‘This is so little that it does not need to be written down’, so it is stressed for both small and large amounts. Our scholars said that it excludes what is about a qirāt or the like since it is insignificant and a person does not affirm or deny it.

Doing that is more just in Allah’s sight

This means writing down both small and large transactions with witnesses. ‘Aqwam’ (more just) here means ‘more correct and more likely to protect the rights of those concerned'. It is also more likely to remove doubts and uncertainty.

and more helpful when bearing witness

This is evidence that if a witness sees the contractual document but does not remember giving the testimony, he should not confirm it since there is some doubt about it. He should only testify to what he is sure about and may say, for instance, 'This is my handwriting, but I do not remember writing it.' Ibn al-Mundhir said, 'Most trustworthy scholars forbid a witness to testify to his writing when he does not remember giving the testimony.' Malik found evidence for the permissibility of doing that in Allah's words: 'We can do no more than to testify to what we know.' (12:81). Some scholars say that since Allah ascribed writing to justice, he can testify to his handwriting, even if he does not remember writing it. Ibn al-Mubāarak mentioned from Ma'mar from Ibn Ṭāwus from his father about a man who testified to a testimony that he had forgotten. He said, 'There is nothing wrong in him testifying if he finds his mark or his handwriting on the document.' Ibn al-Mubāarak said, 'I find this very good.' There are also reports from the Messenger of Allah ﷺ that he gave judgment about more than one matter by evidence and testimony. What is reported from the Messengers before him indicate the soundness of this position. Allah knows best. This will be further explained in al-Aḥqāf, Allah willing.

unless it is an immediate transaction hand to hand,

This means that it takes place on the spot. 'Āṣim alone recites 'tijāratān' in the accusative as the predicate of kāna. The noun is elided and so it implies: 'Unless the transaction is a cash transaction'. That is how Makkī and Abū 'Alī al-Fārisī assessed it. That is because Allah knew that it would be difficult for them. Therefore, He stated that it can be left and removed anything wrong in doing that in respect of every cash transaction. That is in respect of small things like food and the like, not when it is something great taken and given without delay.

The transaction is achieved by each party taking their goods or cash and separating. When it is a question of land or buildings or a lot of animals, so that the conclusion of the contract is not subject to the two parties separating, then it is recommended that it be written down because a change in circumstances might occur in that instance. When the exchange is clearly made and they part, each with his goods, it is very unusual for there to be a dispute unless it is for concealed reasons. The Sharī‘ah recommends this procedure as being in people’s best interests in the case of credit sales whether the goods are absent or not, by means of writing, testimony and pledge. Ash-Shāfi‘ī says: ‘There are three forms of sale: selling with a document and witnesses, selling with a pledge, and selling on trust.’ When Ibn ‘Umar sold for cash, he called for witnesses and when he sold on credit, he wrote it down.

Call witnesses when you trade.

Aṭ-Ṭabarī says that this means that you should call witnesses to both small and large transactions. People disagree about whether that is obligatory or recommended. Abū Mūsā al-Ash‘arī, Ibn ‘Umar, aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk, Sa‘īd ibn al-Musayyab, Jābir ibn Zayd, Mujāhid, Dāwūd ibn ‘Alī and his son Abū Bakr say that it is obligatory. One of the strongest in respect of that position was ‘Aṭā’. He said, ‘I call witnesses when I sell and buy for a dirham, or half a dirham, or a third or less. Allah says: “Call witnesses when you trade.”’ Ibrāhīm said, ‘I call witnesses when I sell and buy, even for a bunch of onions.’ One of those who believed it to be obligatory and preferred that was aṭ-Ṭabarī. He said, ‘It is not lawful for a Muslim to buy and sell without calling witnesses. Otherwise he opposes the Book of Allah. If it is on credit, he must write it down and have witnesses if a scribe is at hand.’

Ash-Sha‘bī and al-Ḥasan believe that the āyah is just recommendation and guidance and not a definite injunction. That is reported to be the position of Mālīk, ash-Shāfi‘ī, and the People of Opinion. Ibn al-‘Arabī claimed that this is the position of all and he said that it is sound. No one related that it is mandatory except aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk. He said, ‘The Prophet ﷺ bought a slave and wrote: “In the Name of Allah. The All-Merciful, Most Merciful. This is what Muḥammad, Messenger of Allah, has purchased from al-‘Addā’ ibn Khālīd, a sale from one Muslim to another, with no hidden defect, no taint and no wickedness (ghā’ilah) [i.e. in the slave sold.]”’ He also bought without witnesses and left his armour in pawn to a Jew without witnesses being present. If having witnesses had been mandatory, it would have been obligatory when leaving a pledge out of fear of dispute.

We mentioned the view of it being obligatory from other than aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk, namely the hadīth of al-‘Addā’ in ad-Dāraquṭnī and Abū Dāwūd. He became Muslim after the Conquest of Makkah and Ḥunayn. He is the one who said, ‘In the battle of Ḥunayn, we fought the Messenger of Allah ﷺ and Allah did not give us victory or help us.’ Then he became Muslim and was a good Muslim. Abū ‘Umar mentioned him and mentioned this hadīth. He said at the end of it, ‘Al-Aṣmā‘ī said, “I asked Sa‘īd ibn Abī ‘Arūbah about wickedness (ghā’ilah) and he said, ‘Running away, stealing and fornication.’ I asked him about badness (khibthah) and he said, ‘Selling those who have a treaty with the Muslims.’”’

Imam Abū Muḥammad ibn ‘Aṭīyyah said, ‘The obligation in respect of that is undecided and the details are very difficult indeed. When it is something frequent, it may be that the merchant wants to seek friendship by not having witnesses or it may be the custom in some lands. He may be shy about a scholar or important esteemed man and so does not ask him to ask as a witness. All of that is part of trust, so the command to have witnesses remains a recommendation since it contains benefit in most cases as long as there is no excuse to prevent it.’

Al-Mahdawī, an-Naḥḥās and Makkī report that some people say that Allah’s words: ‘Call witnesses when you trade’ were abrogated by: ‘If you leave things on trust with one another.’ (2:283) An-Naḥḥās reported from Abū Sa‘īd al-Khudrī that the second āyah abrogated the one before it. An-Naḥḥās said that this is the position of al-Ḥasan, al-Ḥakam, and ‘Abd ar-Raḥmān ibn Zayd. Aṭ-Ṭabarī disagrees, saying that is illogical, and says that the second āyah refers to someone who cannot find a scribe. Allah says: ‘If you are on a journey and cannot find a writer, something can be left as a security. If you leave things on trust with one another...’ It means if he does not ask him for a deposit. He said that if were possible for this to abrogate the first, then Allah’s words: ‘If you are ill or on a journey, or any of you have come from the lavatory’ (4:43) could abrogate His words: ‘You who believe, when you get up for the prayer.’ (5:6) Similarly, it would be possible for Allah’s words: ‘Anyone who cannot find the means should fast two consecutive months’ (4:92) to abrogate His words: ‘free a believing slave.’ (4:92)

One scholar said that it is not clear that the phrase: ‘If you leave things on trust with one another’ (2:293) was revealed later than the beginning of the āyah which contains the command to have witnesses. Rather it was revealed at the same time. It is not permitted for the abrogating and abrogated to come together at the same time. He said that it is related that when it was said to Ibn ‘Abbās, ‘The Āyah of Debt was abrogated,’ he said, ‘No, by Allah, the Āyah of Debt is one of judgment and there is no abrogation in it.’ He said, ‘Witnessing was instituted to bring about peace of mind. That is as Allah made different methods to secure debts. They include writing, pledges and witnesses. There is no disagreement among the people of the cities that the pledge is prescribed as a recommendation, not an obligation. It is known from that that the same must be true of witnesses. People continue to trade, resident and on journeys, on land and sea, on the flat and on mountains, without witnesses while people know that and do not object to it. If witnesses had been obligatory, they would have objected to the one who abandoned it.’

All of this is good deduction. Better than it is what comes from the clear Sunnah about not having witnesses. It is in what ad-Dāraquṭnī transmitted, namely that Ṭāriq ibn ‘Abdullāh al-Muḥāribī said, ‘We came in a group from Rabadhah and south of Rabadhah and camped near Maḍīnah. We had a woman in a sedan with us. While we were sitting down, a man wearing two white garments came to us and greeted us. We returned the greeting. He asked, “From where have you people come?” We answered, “From Rabadhah and south of Rabadhah.” We had a red camel with us and he asked, “Will you sell me this camel of yours?” “Yes,” we answered. “For how much?” he asked. We told him for a certain number of ṣāʿs of dates. He did not ask us to reduce it at all, but said, “I have taken it.” Then he took the camel’s head and entered Maḍīnah and was hidden from us. We criticised one another and said, “You gave your camel to someone you do not know!” The woman said, “Do not blame one another. I saw the face of a man who would not deceive you. I have not seen a man with a face more like the full moon than his.” In the evening, a man came to us and said, “Peace be upon you. I am the messenger of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ to you. He commands you to eat from this until you are full and to measure until you have full measure.” We ate until we were full and took full measure.’ Az-Zuhrī mentioned the hadith from ‘Umārah ibn Khuzaymah from his uncle, who was one of the Companions of the Prophet, that the Prophet ﷺ bought a horse from a Bedouin. We find in it: ‘The bedouin began to say, “Bring a witness who will testify that I sold it to you!” Khuzaymah ibn Thābit said, “I testify that you sold it.” The Prophet ﷺ turned to Khuzaymah and said, “On what basis do you bear witness?” He answered, “By affirming that you speak the truth, Messenger of Allah!’ The Messenger of Allah ﷺ made Khuzaymah’s testimony equal to the testimony of two men.’ An-Nasā’ī and other transmitted it.

Neither writer nor witness should be put under pressure.

One meaning of this is that a scribe should not write anything other than what has been dictated to him nor should the witness add to his testimony nor decrease it. Al-Ḥasan, Qatādah, Ṭāwus, Ibn Zayd and others said that. It is related from Ibn ‘Abbās, Mujāhid and ‘Aṭā’ that the āyah means that the scribe should not be prevented from writing nor the witness from testifying.

Mujāhid, aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk, Ṭāwus, and as-Suddī said – and the same thing is also related from Ibn ‘Abbās – that the āyah means that the witness should not be summoned to testify or the scribe to write when they are busy and they should not be made to come when they have an excuse nor should they be abused. They should not be told, ‘You have disobeyed Allah’s command!’ or similar things so as to put them under pressure. Allah forbade this because, if it was applied, it would distract them from their dīn and livelihood. The form of the verb ‘yudārru’ which involves two people demands these ideas.

If you do that, it is deviancy on your part,

If someone testifies to what is not the truth or changes things when writing it down, he is called a deviant. This is even more appropriate in the case of someone who asks a witness to testify when is busy.

If you do put them under pressure it is disobedience to Allah, as Sufyān ath-Thawrī said. The scribe and witness disobey by adding or decreasing. That is a type of prevarication which harms property and people and invalidates their rights. Forcing the witness or scribe when they are busy is also disobedience and incorrect behaviour since it is disobeying Allah’s command. ‘Your part’ implies that deviancy will occur from you.

Be fearful of Allah and Allah will give you knowledge.

This is a promise from Allah that He will teach those who fear Him, meaning that He will put a light in their hearts by which they will understand what comes to them. He may put discrimination in their hearts, so that they will be able to distinguish between truth and falsehood. Allah says, ‘O you who believe, if you fear Allah, he will give you discrimination.’ (8:29) Allah knows best.

بَعْضُكُمْ بَعْضًا فَلْيُؤَدِّ الَّذِي أُؤْتِيَ مِنْ أَمْنَتِهِ، وَاتَّقِ اللَّهَ رَبَّهُ، وَلَا
تَكْتُمُوا الشَّهَادَةَ وَمَنْ يَكْتُمْهَا فَإِنَّهُ آسَأَ قَلْبُهُ، وَاللَّهُ بِمَا تَعْمَلُونَ
عَلِيمٌ ﴿٢٩﴾

283 If you are on a journey and cannot find a writer, something can be left as a security. If you leave things on trust with one another the one who is trusted must deliver up his trust and be fearful of Allah his Lord. Do not conceal testimony. If someone does conceal it, his heart commits a crime. Allah knows what you do.

If you are on a journey and cannot find a writer,

After Allah has mentioned the recommendation to testify and write for the benefit of preserving property and the dīn, He follows that by mentioning the excuses which may prevent people from writing and enjoins them to leave a pledge in such cases. He clarifies what constitutes a valid excuse by mentioning a journey, which is the usual reason, especially since there were a lot of expeditions at that time. But included in that are all valid excuses. There are often times when a person is resident and cannot make use of a scribe, as occurs when people are at work or during the night. Another instance is when there is fear for the loss of what the debtor owes and the lender seeks a pledge from him for that reason. The Prophet ﷺ left his armour in pledge with a Jew whom he asked for an advance of barley. He said, ‘Muhammad wants to take away my property.’ The Prophet ﷺ said, ‘He lies. I am the one who is trustworthy on earth and trustworthy in heaven. If you trust me, I will pay. Take my armour to him.’ He died with his armour still in pledge.

Most scholars say that a pledge should be left when travelling, going by the text of the Revelation. It is confirmed while a person is resident by the sunnah of the Messenger ﷺ. This is sound. We already explained its permissibility when resident from the idea in the āyah since excuses arise when someone is a resident. Excuses arise when one is resident and its prohibition while a person is a resident is only related by Mujāhid, aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk and Dāwūd who hold to the āyah. There is no argument in that because even though the wording is that of a precondition, what is meant is most circumstances. The fact that in the āyah the pledge is on a journey does not prevent it being used in other cases. As we stated, we find in the two Ṣaḥīḥ collections and elsewhere from ‘Ā’ishah that the Prophet ﷺ purchased food from a Jew on credit and left his iron armour as a pledge. An-Nasā’ī transmitted that Ibn ‘Abbās said, ‘The Messenger of Allah ﷺ died while his armour was in pledge with a Jew for thirty *ṣā’*s of barley for his family.’

Most recite ‘writer (kātib)’, meaning a man who can write, while Ibn ‘Abbās, Mujāhid, aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk, ‘Ikrimah, and Abu-l-‘Āliyah recited ‘kitāb’ (writing). Abū Bakr al-Anbārī said, ‘Mujāhid explained it as meaning, ‘If you do not find ink,’ meaning with the scribes. Ibn ‘Abbās related ‘kuttāb (scribes)’. An-Naḥḥās said that it is an aberrant reading, and the common people do not have it. Rarely is something outside of the common recitation other than attacked. The context of the words indicates ‘writer’. Before this Allah said: ‘A writer should write it down between you justly.’ Kuttāb demands a plural, but Ibn ‘Aṭīyah said that ‘kuttāb’ is good because every occurrence has a writer and so the plural is used, even if there are not ‘writers’ present. An-Naḥḥās and Makkī said that it is the plural of kātib. Al-Mahdawī related that Abū ‘l-‘Āliyah recited ‘kutub’, the plural of ‘kitāb’ (book) since there are different occurrences. Makkī said that it means ‘when inkwell, pen and paper are not available.’ The lack of a writer is also the lack of the implement. It also demands the lack of writing. So both readings are good except from the aspect of the written word.

Instead of rihān (security), Abū ‘Amr and Ibn Kathīr recite ‘ruhun’, and ‘ruhn’ is also related from him. Aṭ-Ṭabarī said that some people take ruhun to be the plural of rihān. Az-Zajjāj related that from al-Farrā’. Al-Mahdawī said that ‘security’ is an inceptive whose predicate is elided. It means: ‘something left as security is sufficient for that.’ An-Naḥḥās said that ‘Āṣim ibn Abi-n-Nujūd recited ‘ruhn’ and that is related from the people of Makkah. Rihān is like baghl and bighlān and kabsh and kibāsh. Ruhun is the plural of rihān like kutub and kitāb. It is also said that it is the plural of ‘rahn’ like saqf and suquf, ḥalq and ḥuluq, and the like. The second ḍammah in ruhn has been elided because it is heavy. [BIT MORE OMITTED]

The meaning of ‘leaving a security’ is that an item be kept by the lender as a guarantee against what is owed so that the amount can be paid in full from selling the security or renting it out, if the debt cannot be collected from the debtor. That is how scholars define it. The root of the verb (rahana) means ‘to remain or last’. Ibn Sayyidah says that rahana means to make something last. It is as a poet says:

Bread and meat make them last.

The pot of coffee is poured.

Al-Jawharī said that rahana means to make to make last. Arhana is used to make food and drink last. That which is rāhin continues and is fixed. Rāhin also describes a thin camel and thin people. He said:

Do you see my body is lean and has become emaciated (rahan)?

The glory of men is not in plumpness.

Ibn ‘Aṭīyah said that rahn is the security which is deposited. One of them said that the verb arhana is used for that. Abū ‘Alī said that arhana means to pay an excessive price either in a loan or a sale. Abū

Zayd also said that it is to buy for an excessive price. He says about a she-camel:

An ‘Īdiyyah camel for excessive (urhinat) dinars.

‘Īd is a sub-tribe of Mahrah and their camels are described as noble.

Az-Zajjāj said that one says about a security (rahn), rahanat and arhanat. Ibn al-A‘rābī and al-Akhfash said that. ‘Abdullāh ibn Himā as-Salūlī said:

When I feared their talons,

I was saved and gave them your property as security (arhantuhum).

Tha‘lab said that all transmitters say that it can be rahantu, except for al-Aṣma‘ī who related arhantu as adding a future verb to a past verb. He said that it is like their words, ‘I stood and slapped his face.’ It is a good position because it is the wāw of the ḥāl in the sentence and so ‘slap’ is a ḥāl modifying the first verb and it means ‘I stood, slapping his face.’ [OMISSION]

Ibn as-Sikkīt said that the verb means to make an advance. A murtahūn is someone who takes a pledge (rahn). The thing is called marhūn. The dual is rahīnah. Rāhana is to make a wager (murāhanah) with someone, and ‘arhantu bihi waladī’ means ‘I made my children a stake for it.’ Rahīnah is the single of rahā’in. All of that comes from al-Jawharī.

Ibn ‘Aṭīyyah said that there is no disagreement about its use in loans and sales, and then the verbal noun is used for the object.

Abū ‘Alī said that since the word means to be fixed and constant, the pledge is void according to the fuqahā’ the moment it goes from the possession of the one who takes it to the one who pledged it. This is what we believe. If the pledge is taken from the possession of the one who accepted it and returned to the pledger by the choice of the one who has taken it on pledge, the pledge then becomes invalid.

Abū Ḥanīfah says that, although he adds that if it is returned to his keeping, it is not invalid. Ash-Shāfi'ī also says that it is not invalidated. Our proof is that He says, 'taken'. When it leaves the possession of the one who took it, then that term cannot be applied to it and it is not sound to base a ruling on it. This is clear.

If the pledge is verbal and not actually taken, no ruling applies since the āyah says 'taken'. Ash-Shāfi'ī says that Allah only gives a ruling to a pledge which is 'taken'. Without that, there is no ruling. This is very literal. The Mālikīs say that the pledge is binding by the contract and the pledger must hand over the pledge to the keeping of the person who takes it by the words of the Almighty: 'Fulfil your contracts.' (5:1, 17:34). This is a contract. The Prophet ﷺ said, 'The believers abide by their conditions,' and this is a condition. We believe that taking possession of the pledge is a precondition for its being operative.

The word 'taken' (maqḅūdah) implies that the person accepting the pledge or his agent must clearly take it. They disagree about a third party with integrity taking it and whether that effects it or not. Mālik and all his people and most other scholars say that the taking by any just person constitutes 'taking', while Ibn Abī Laylā, Qatādah, al-Ḥakam, and 'Aṭā' said that it does not, and that it is only 'taken' when it is actually in the possession of the person accepting the pledge. They see it as an act of worship. The position of the majority is sounder because, if a just person takes it, it is still taken. If the pledge is in the possession of a just person who took it and he loses it, the pledgee is not liable since there is nothing in his possession for which he is liable.

Our scholars have said that the literal and non-specific nature of the word 'taken' demands that it is permitted to have a pledge for shared property. This differs from Abū Ḥanīfah and his people who do not permit a pledge for a third of a house, or half of a slave or a sword. Then they said that if a man owes something to two men, in which they are partners, it is permitted to give them land as a pledge for that when they both take it. Ibn al-Mundhir said, ‘This permits a pledge for shared property because each of them is pledged half of a house.’ Ibn al-Mundhir further says, ‘A pledge of something jointly owned is permitted, just as it is permitted to sell it.’

Our scholars have said that it is permitted to leave a pledge of liability because it is ‘taken’. Others forbid this. An example of that is two men who do business together and one owes a debt to the other and his pledge is his debt which he owes. Ibn Khuwayzimandād said, ‘It is permitted to use as a pledge any goods which can be sold. This is why we permitted a pledge of liability because it is permitted to sell it and because it is property for which there is a receipt. It is analogous to available merchandise.’ Those who forbid that say that it is forbidden because it cannot be properly taken and being taken is a precondition for the pledge to be binding because the right must be received in full at the place, and it must be able to be paid in full financially and that that is not conceivable with a debt.

Al-Bukhārī related from Abū Hurayrah that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘A mount may be ridden when it is a pledge because of its upkeep. Its milk may be drunk when it is a pledge because of its upkeep. Someone who rides it or milks it must pay for its upkeep.’ Abū Dāwūd transmitted it with a different word for ‘drink’. Al-Khaṭṭābī said, ‘These are unclear words and it is not clear who is the one riding and milking and whether it is the pledger or the pledgee or the just purpose who has the pledge in his possession.’

The explanation of that is found in two hadiths, and it is because of them that scholars disagree about it. Ad-Dāraquṭnī related from Abū Hurayrah that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘When a riding animal is a pledge, then the pledgee must fodder it and may drink the milk. The one who drinks it is responsible for its upkeep.’ This is transmitted from Aḥmad ibn ‘Alī ibn al-‘Alā’ from Ziyād ibn Ayyūb from Hushaym from Zakariyyā from ash-Sha‘bī from Abū Hurayrah. It is the position of Aḥmad and Iṣḥāq that the pledgee can use the pledge for milk and riding according to the cost of its upkeep. Abū Thawr said, ‘If it is the pledger that pays for its upkeep, then the pledgee cannot use it. If the pledger does not pay its upkeep and it remains in the possession of the pledgee and he pays for its upkeep, then he can ride it and he may also make use of a [pledged] slave.’ Al-Awzā‘ī and al-Layth said that.

The second hadith was also transmitted by ad-Dāraquṭnī, but there are things said about its isnād. It is related from Ismā‘īl ibn ‘Ayyāsh from Ibn Abī Dhi‘b from az-Zuhrī from al-Maḡburī from Abū Hurayrah that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘The pledge does not become forfeit. He has its gain and bears its loss.’ That is the position of ash-Shāfi‘ī, ash-Sha‘bī and Ibn Sīrīn, and it is the position of Mālik and his people. Ash-Shāfi‘ī said, ‘The pledger makes use of the pledge and must pay for its upkeep. The pledgee does not use any of the pledge except for preserving the security.’ Al-Khaṭṭābī said, ‘That is the soundest and most fitting position as evidenced by the words of the Prophet ﷺ.’

Aṭ-Ṭaḥāwī said, ‘That was at a time when ribā was still permitted, when it was not forbidden to have an interest-bearing loan or an unequal exchange of goods. Ribā was forbidden after that.’ The community agree that it is not permitted for the pledger to have sex with his slave-girl who has been given as a pledge nor may he use her as a servant. Ash-Sha‘bī said that he may not use any of the pledge. Ash-Sha‘bī transmitted this hadith but gave a fatwa which differed from it! That is not permitted for him until it is abrogated. Ibn ‘Abd al-Barr said that there is a consensus that the pledger can milk and ride the pledge. If the pledgee milks the pledge, it is either with or without the permission of the pledger. If it is without his permission, we find in a hadith that Ibn ‘Umar related from the Prophet ﷺ: ‘No one should milk an animal without permission.’

This refutes him and demands that it be abrogated. If it is with permission, then it is one of the fundamental principles agreed upon about forbidding what is unknown and risky, selling what is not in your possession and selling what has not yet been created. That also refutes him. That was before the revelation of the prohibition of ribā. Allah knows best.

Ibn Khuwayzimandād said, ‘There are two situations that can arise when a pledgee stipulates the use of the pledge. If it is part of a loan, then it is not permitted. If it is part of a sale or hire, then it is permitted because he becomes someone who sells the merchandise for the price that was mentioned as well as the use of the pledge for a known period. So it is like a sale and hire. In the case of a loan, it would turn it into an interest-bearing loan. That is because the loan is a good action. If there is a benefit from it, then it becomes an increase and that is ribā.’

It is not permitted to take a pledge as forfeit. That is when the pledgee stipulates that he has a right to it if there is no payment at the end of the term. This was part of the action of the Jāhiliyyah. The Prophet ﷺ declared it void when he said, ‘The pledge does not become forfeit.’ ‘A pledge being forfeit’ is when it is in the possession of the pledgee when it is not redeemed.

Zuhayr said:

She separated herself with a pledge which was not redeemed

On the day of farewell, and so the pledge became forfeit.

Ad-Dāraquṭnī related from Sufyān ibn ‘Uyaynah from Ziyād ibn Sa‘d from az-Zuhrī from Sa‘īd ibn al-Musayyab from Abū Hurayrah that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘The pledge does not become forfeit. He has its gain and bears its loss.’ Ziyād ibn Sa‘d is one of the trustworthy keepers. This is a good isnād. Mālik transmitted from Ibn Shihāb in a mursal transmission from Sa‘īd ibn al-Musayyab that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘A pledge does not become forfeit.’

Abū ‘Umar said, ‘As far as I know, that is how it is related by all of those who relate the Muwatta’ from Mālik except for Ma’n ibn ‘Īsā.’

He connected its transmission, and Ma’n is trustworthy, although I fear that the error in it is from ‘Alī ibn ‘Abd al-Ḥamīd al-Ghaḍārī from Mujāhid ibn Mūsā from Ma’n ibn ‘Īsā. In it he added from ‘Abdullāh ‘Amrūs from al-Abharī with his isnād, ‘He has its gain and bears its loss.’ Transmitters disagree about this addition. Ibn Abī Laylā, Ma‘mar and others removed it.

Ibn Wahb related it and said, ‘Yūnus said that Ibn Shihāb said, “Sa‘id ibn al-Musayyab used to say, “The pledge belongs to the one who pledged it. He has its gain and bears its loss.”” Ibn Shihāb reported that this is part of what Sa‘id ibn al-Musayyab said, not what the Prophet ﷺ said. However, Ma‘mar did mention it marfū‘ from Ibn Shihāb. Ma‘mar is the firmest of those who relate from Ibn Shihāb. ‘Alī corroborated it marfū‘ from Yaḥyā ibn Abī Unaysah, who is not strong. The basis of this hadith with the people of knowledge of transmission is that it mursal. Although it is connected by various paths, they find fault in them. Furthermore, no one makes this hadith marfū‘, but they disagree about its interpretation and meaning.

Ad-Dāraquṭnī also related it marfū‘ from Ismā‘īl ibn ‘Ayyāsh from Ibn Abī Dh’ib from az-Zuhrī from Sa‘id from Abū Hurayrah. Abū ‘Umar said that Ismā‘īl did not hear it from Ibn Abī Dh’ib, but rather heard it from ‘Abbād ibn Kathīr from Ibn Abī Dh’ib. We consider ‘Abbād to be weak and he is not used as an authority. We also believe that the hadiths of Ismā‘īl are not accepted when they are reported from people other than those of his land. When he relates from Syrians, his hadiths are in order. When he relates from Madinans and others, there are many errors and much confusion in his hadiths.

Growth in the pledge is part of it when it is not distinct, like clarified butter, or progeny, like infants of animals, and fruit. This includes palm shoots and other sorts of produce, fruits, milk and wool. They are not included as part of the pledge unless that is stipulated. The difference is that infants follow mothers in zakāt, but that is not the case with wool, milk and the fruit of trees because they do not follow their sources in zakāt and do not have the same form or the same idea. They have their own ruling which is not the same ruling as their source. This is not the case with infants and progeny. Allah knows best what is correct regarding that.

It is permitted for someone whose debts encompass all his property to leave a pledge, as long as he has not been declared bankrupt. The pledgee is more entitled to the pledge than the other creditors. Mālik and a group of people stated that. Something different is also related from Mālik which was stated by ‘Abd al-‘Azīz ibn Abī Salamah: it is that the rest of the creditors are included with him in that. That is of no consequence because the transactions of someone who has not been debarred are sound in all circumstances, whether buying or selling. The creditors dealt with him in buying and selling and deciding. The position of Mālik does not differ in this area. The same is true of the pledge, and Allah knows best.

If you leave things on trust with one another the one who is trusted must deliver up his trust

This is an order from Allah to hand over what was left in trust and not to procrastinate. The command here is mandatory and is connected to the consensus that it is mandatory to pay debts. The judge can confirm that and creditors can compel him to pay it. Furthermore there are sound hadiths which make another person’s property unlawful to him. The word for ‘amānah’ (leave on trust) is a verbal noun meaning something for which one is responsible. ‘His’ refers to the one who owes the debt [and left the pledge].

and be fearful of Allah his Lord.

He must not conceal anything that rightfully belongs to someone else.

Do not conceal testimony.

This forbids a witness from causing harm by hiding the fact of his testimony. The prohibition is mandatory and a threat accompanies it. The prohibition applies to when the witness fears that the right will be lost. Ibn ‘Abbās said, ‘A witness must testify when he is called upon to testify and report when he is asked to report.’ If there are several witnesses, it is a farḍ kifāyah that they testify. When two have satisfied it, the obligation falls from the rest of them. If they do not do it, then it is incumbent on the remaining witness to go and do it so that there is affirmation. This is known when he is called upon to do it when he says, ‘Ensure my right by conveying the testimony you have.’ Then it becomes incumbent on him to do it.

If someone does conceal it, his heart commits a crime.

The heart is mentioned since concealment is an action and the heart is that piece of flesh by whose soundness the entire body is sound, as the Prophet ﷺ said. One part of it designates the whole of it. This was mentioned at the beginning of the sūrah. Aṭ-Ṭabarī said, ‘When a witness resolves not to convey his testimony and abandons performing it with the tongue, then he commits a sin in both ways.’ ‘His heart commits a crime’ is metaphorical. It stresses the real nature of what occurs and indicates the threat. That is part of eloquence and fine use of language in expressing the meaning. It is said that the crime of the heart is the reason for its transformation. When Allah transforms the heart, He makes the person a hypocrite and seals it. We seek refuge from Allah. This was already mentioned at the beginning of the sūrah.

Know that Allah’s commands concerning testimony and writing are intended to rectify discord and to avoid disputes which might lead to conflict, thereby preventing Shayṭān from enticing people to deny others their rights and exceed what the Sharī‘ah has defined for them, or not to confine themselves to the amount they are owed. It is for this reason that the Sharī‘ah forbids unknown sales which would lead to disagreement and conflict and bring about mutual rancour and separation. One aspect of this is Allah's prohibition of gambling and games of chance and drinking wine. Allah says: 'Shayṭān wants to stir up enmity and hatred between you by means of wine and gambling.' (5:91) Whoever is guided by Allah in respect of His commands and restraints, obtains the good of this world and the dīn. Allah Almighty says: 'But if they had done what they were urged to do, it would have been better for them.' (4:66)

Al-Bukhārī related from Abū Hurayrah that the Prophet ﷺ said, 'If someone takes something from another intending to repay it, Allah will repay it for him, and if someone takes it intending to destroy it, Allah will destroy him.' An-Nasā'ī reported that Maymūnah, the wife of the Prophet ﷺ, used to have a lot of debts, and she was asked, 'Umm al-Mu'minīn, do you incur debts when you have nothing with which to pay them?' She replied, 'I heard the Messenger of Allah ﷺ say, "If anyone takes on a debt intending to pay it, Allah will help him with it."'

Aṭ-Ṭahāwī, Abū Ja'far aṭ-Ṭabarī and al-Ḥārith ibn Abī Usāmah in his Musnad reported from 'Uqbah ibn 'Aṃir that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, 'Do not frighten people when they are secure.' They asked 'Messenger of Allah, how can that happen?' 'By debts,' he replied.

Al-Bukhārī reported from Anas that the Prophet ﷺ said in a supplication, 'O Allah, I seek refuge with You from worry, sorrow, incapacity, laziness, cowardice, miserliness, heavy debts and the oppression of men.' Scholars say that heavy debts are those which the debtor can find no way to pay. The word for 'heavy' is taken from the Arabic expressions 'ḥiml muḍli', an overburdening load, and 'dābah muḍli', an animal unable to bear its load. The author of al-'Ayn said that.

The Prophet ﷺ said, 'A debt is the disgrace of the dīn.' It is related that he said, 'Debts are worry by night and abasement by day.' Our scholars say that debts are disgrace and abasement because they preoccupy the heart and mind, and one is always concerned about paying them. There is abasement to the creditor when he meets him and he continues to endure the burden of the creditor's favour to him by delaying paying it to the end of its term. He may promise to pay and then put it off, or the creditor may abuse him because of it and he will lie, or he may give him an oath and then break it, and other such things. This is why the Prophet ﷺ sought refuge from it. It was said to the Messenger of Allah, 'How often you seek refuge from debts!' He said, 'When a man is in debt, he will speak and lie and promise and break his promise.' Furthermore, sometimes someone may die without paying the debt and then be left in pledge for it, for the Prophet ﷺ said, 'The soul of the believer is pledged in the grave for his debts until they are paid.' All of these things are disgrace in the dīn which removes its beauty and perfection. Allah knows best.

When Allah commands people to write down debts, to bear witness and to take pledges, that constitutes a clear text about preserving property and making it grow, refuting ignorant false Sufis and the riffraff who follow them who do not agree with that. They abandon all their wealth and do not leave enough for themselves and their families. Then, when they and their families are in need, they either turn to the generosity of brothers or friends, or take from the wealthy and unjust. This is blameworthy and forbidden. Abu-l-Faraj al-Jawzī said, 'I do not wonder at those who practise asceticism when they are lacking in knowledge. I do wonder at how people who have knowledge and intellect encourage this and command it when it is contrary to the Sharī'ah and logic.' Al-Muḥāsibī talked a lot about this and Abū Ḥāmid al-Ghazālī praised it as well. I think al-Muḥāsibī has more of an excuse than Abū Ḥāmid because Abū Ḥāmid had more fiqh, although his entry into taṣawwuf obliged him to support what he had entered into.

Al-Muḥāsibī said, ‘I heard that when ‘Abd ar-Raḥmān ibn ‘Awf died, some of the Companions of Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, “We fear for ‘Abd ar-Raḥmān because of what he left.” Ka‘b said. “Glory be to Allah! What do you fear for ‘Abd ar-Raḥmān? He earned well, spent well and left well.” That reached Abū Dharr who went out angrily after Ka‘b. He picked up the jawbone of a camel and then went to look for Ka‘b. Ka‘b was told, “Abū Dharr is looking for you.” So he ran to ‘Uthmān asking him for his help and telling him the story. Abū Dharr tracked down Ka‘b until he came to ‘Uthmān’s house. When he entered, Ka‘b got up and sat down behind ‘Uthmān, fleeing from Abū Dharr. Abū Dharr said to him, “Son of a Jewish woman, do you claim that there is no harm in what ‘Abd ar-Raḥmān left! The Messenger of Allah ﷺ went out one day and said, “The ones with the most will be the ones with the least on the Day of Rising except for those who say such-and-such.”’ Al-Muḥāsibī said, ‘In spite of his excellence, ‘Abd ar-Raḥmān will still be made to stand in the courtyard on the Day of Rising because of his lawful earnings which he used for the sake of abstinence and acts of charity, and so he will be prevented from hastening to the Garden with the poor and will be have to crawl in behind them.’

Al-Ghazālī mentioned this and supported it by the hadith of Tha‘labah who was given money and then refused to pay zakāt. He said, ‘If anyone examines the states of the Prophets and awliyā’ and their statements, he will not doubt that the absence of wealth is better than its existence, even if it is directed towards good ends, since the least of the consequences of wealth is that attending to it distracts the himmah (aspiration) from remembrance of Allah. So a murīd must leave his property so that he only has what he needs and not have a dirham to which his heart turns so that he is veiled from Allah.’

Al-Jawzī said, ‘All of this is contrary to the Sharī‘ah and intelligence, and is poor understanding of what is desired in respect of property.

Allah honoured and esteemed it and commanded it to be preserved since He made it the support of the human being and that which is the support of the noble human being is also noble. The Almighty says: “Do not hand over to the simple-minded any property of theirs for which Allah has made you responsible.” (4:5). He forbade property to be surrendered to someone without good sense and says: “If you perceive that they have sound judgment hand over their property to them.” (4:6) The Prophet ﷺ forbade squandering property and told Sa’d, “It is better to leave rich heirs than to leave them poor, begging from other people,” and he said, “Nothing helped me like the property of Abū Bakr.” He told ‘Amr ibn al-‘Āṣ, “The best of property is the good property of a righteous man.” He prayed for Anas, “O Allah, make his property and children plentiful and bless him in it.” Ka‘b said, “One thing I repent of is that I divested myself of my property as sadaqah for Allah and His Messenger.” He said, “Keep part of your property for yourself. That will be better for you.”

Al-Jawzī continued, “These hadiths are found in the sound collections and are contrary to what false Sufis believe about a lot of wealth being a veil and a punishment and that having it is contrary to reliance on Allah. It cannot be denied that its temptation is something to be feared, that a lot of people avoid it out of fear of that, that amassing it properly rarely occurs, that the safety of the heart from temptation by it is rare and that it is unusual for a heart to be busy with it while still remembering the Next World. This is why its temptation is feared. As for earning property, when someone confines himself to what will suffice him of what is lawful, that is necessary. As for someone who intends to amass it and have a lot of the lawful, one looks to his intention. If his intention is to boast, that is evil. If he intends a modest income for himself and his family, to save up for changes of fortune and bad times, and intends to expand things for his brothers, enrich the poor and do righteous actions, his intention will be rewarded, and his amassing it with this intention is better than many acts of obedience.

‘The intention of many of the Companions was to amass sound wealth for good ends and so they encouraged it and asked for more. When the Prophet ﷺ gave az-Zubayr a land grant, he summoned his horse and ran his horse until it stopped, and then threw his whip and he said, “Give him up to where his whip lands.” Sa‘īd ibn ‘Ubādah said in his supplication, “O Allah, give me expansion.” The brothers of Yūsuf said, “We can get an extra load.” (12:65) Shu‘ayb said to Mūsā, “If you complete ten, then that is up to you.” (28:27) When Ayyūb was healed and golden locusts began to fall on him, he began to collect them in his garment and collected a lot, he was asked, “Are you not full?” He said, “Lord, does a poor man have his fill of Your bounty?”

‘This is something embedded in human nature. The words of al-Muḥāsibī are erroneous and indicate lack of knowledge. What he mentioned about Ka‘b and Abū Dharr is impossible and forged by the ignorant. Its lack of soundness is concealed because of their attachment to the People [i.e. Sufis]. Its isnād is not firm. The truth of the matter is that Abū Dharr died in 25 AH and ‘Abd ar-Raḥmān ibn ‘Awf died in 32 AH so he lived seven years after Abū Dharr. The actual words of the account indicate that it is forged. How could the Companions say, “We fear for ‘Abd ar-Raḥmān?” Is there not a consensus that it is permitted to amass lawful wealth, so what is the sense of fearing for someone because of something which is allowed? Would the Sharī‘ah permit something and then punish someone for it? This is poor understanding.

Companions amassed wealth and left it and no one objected to that. As for the words “‘Abd ar-Raḥmān will crawl on the Day of Rising,” this is proof that the transmitter does not know the hadith. I seek refuge with Allah from ‘Abd ar-Raḥmān crawling on the Day of Rising! Do you think that one of the ten promised the Garden, one of the people present at the Battle of Badr, and one of the people of the Shūrā, would have to crawl?

‘Then it was ‘Umārah ibn Zādhān who related the hadith and al-Bukhārī said that his hadiths are shaky. Aḥmad said that he reported many denounced hadiths from Anas. Abū Ḥātim ar-Rāzī said that he is not authoritative. Ad-Dāraqūṭnī said that he is weak.

‘The statement, “It is better to abandon lawful wealth than to amass it” is not true. When the intention is sound, then amassing it is better without any disagreement among the scholars. Sa‘īd ibn al-Musayyab said, “There is no good in one who does not seek wealth with which to pay his debts and protect his reputation. If he dies, he leaves inheritance for those after him.” He himself left four hundred dinars. Sufyān left two hundred. He used to say. “Wealth in this time is an armour.” The Salaf continued to praise wealth and collect it for recommended things and to help the poor. Some people shun it since they prefer to devote themselves to worship. They have strong aspiration and are content with only a little. If someone says this, then this small amount is better for him than approaching the business, but he is close to the level of sin.’

Part of what indicates that preserving property and caring for it is correct is that one can fight for it and over it. The Prophet ﷺ said, ‘If someone is killed in defence of his property, he is a martyr.’ This will be mentioned further in Sūrat al-Mā‘idah, Allah willing.

284 Everything in the heavens and everything in the earth belongs to Allah. Whether you divulge what is in yourselves or keep it hidden, Allah will still call you to account for it. He forgives whomever He wills and He punishes whomever He wills. Allah has power over all things.

Whether you divulge what is in yourselves or keep it hidden, Allah will still call you to account for it.

People disagree about this statement and there are five different positions about it:

– One group say that it is abrogated. Ibn ‘Abbās, Ibn Mas‘ūd, ‘Ā’ishah, Abū Hurayrah, ash-Sha‘bī, ‘Aṭā’, Muḥammad ibn Sīrīn, Muḥammad ibn Ka‘b, Mūsā ibn ‘Ubaydah and a group of Companions and Tābi‘ūn said that. This degree of accountability remained until Allah revealed: ‘Allah does not impose on any self any more than it can bear.’ (2:286) We find in Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim that Ibn ‘Abbās said, ‘When the āyah was revealed: “Whether you divulge what is in yourselves or keep it hidden, Allah will still call you to account for it,” something of [fear of that] entered their hearts that had never entered them before. The Prophet ﷺ said, “Say: ‘We hear and obey and submit.’” So Allah cast faith into their hearts and then Allah Almighty revealed: “Allah does not impose on any self any more than it can bear. For it, is what it has earned, and against it is what it has merited. Our Lord, do not take us to task if we forget or make a mistake!” and He said, “I have done it.” “Our Lord, do not place on us a load like the one You place on those before us!” and He said, “I have done it.” “Our Lord, do not place on us a load we have not the strength to bear! And pardon us, and forgive us and have mercy on us. You are our Master, so help us against the people of the believers.” (2:286) He said, ‘I have done it.’ One variant has: ‘When they did that, Allah abrogated it for them and then revealed: “Allah does not impose on any self any more than it can bear.”’

– Ibn ‘Abbās, ‘Ikrimah, ash-Sha‘bī and Mujāhid said that it is an āyah of judgment specifically about the testimony referred to earlier, which it is forbidden to conceal and for which the person will be called to account. Allah informs us in this āyah that a person will be called to account for what he conceals inside himself.

– The āyah is about doubt and certainty which comes to the heart. Mujāhid said that.

– It is a general ruling and not abrogated. Allah will call His creatures to account for their actions and for things they did not do, which were settled in themselves and which they concealed, desired and intended. He will forgive the believers and punish the people of disbelief and hypocrisy for that. Aṭ-Ṭabarī mentioned this position, and related something similar from Ibn ‘Abbās. It is related from ‘Alī ibn Abī Ṭalḥah that Ibn ‘Abbās said, ‘It was not abrogated. But when Allah gathers the creatures, He will say, “I will tell you what you concealed in yourselves.” He will tell the believers and then forgive them. As for the people of doubt and uncertainty, He will tell them of the denial they concealed. That is what He means when He says: “He forgives whomever He wills and He punishes whomever He wills,” and the meaning of His words: “He will take you to task for the intention your hearts have made” (2:225) referring to doubt and hypocrisy.’

Aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk said, ‘On the Day of Rising Allah will tell each person what he was concealing so that he knows that he does not have to fear on account of it.’ In a report we read, ‘Allah Almighty will say on the Day of Rising: “This is the Day on which secrets are revealed and consciences probed. My scribes only record your actions which appear on your limbs and tongues. I know what they do not know and know what they do not report or write down. I will inform you of that and reckon you for it and then I will forgive whoever I wish and punish whomever I wish.” So He will forgive the believers and punish the unbelievers.’

This is the soundest position on this matter. It is indicated by the hadith in which the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘Allah will pardon My Community for what their selves suggest to them when they do not articulate that nor act on it.’ We say that this refers to the judgments of this world, like divorce, emancipation and sales whose rulings are not binding as long as they are not spoken. That which it mentioned in the āyah is what is between the servant and Allah in the Next World.

– Al-Hasan said that the āyah is one whose ruling is not abrogated. Aṭ-Ṭabarī mentioned that other scholars said things similar to what has been quoted from Ibn ‘Abbās, although they added that the punishment, repaying people for what occurs within their selves and is accompanied by thought, is manifested through the misfortunes that befall them in this world, its pains and all the things which are disliked in it. Something similar to this is reported in a chain of transmission from ‘Ā’ishah. That is the fifth view. Aṭ-Ṭabarī preferred that it is a judgment whose ruling is not abrogated. Ibn ‘Aṭā’ said, ‘This [that it is not abrogated] is correct. Allah’s words: “Whether you divulge what is in yourselves or keep it hidden...”’ refer to things which are within your capacity and ability accompanied by conviction and thought, since the words of the āyah include thoughts which worried the Companions and the Prophet ﷺ and so Allah explained to them what He meant by revealing another āyah and stipulated that the ruling is that a person is only obliged to do what he is capable of doing. It is not possible to repel thoughts. They predominate and they are not part of what people are held accountable for. This explanation gave them relief and alleviated their anxiety.’

The rest of the āyah is one of judgment and is not abrogated. One thing which refutes the claim of abrogation is that the āyah is a report, not an order or instruction, and abrogation does not occur in respect of reports. If someone believes that there is abrogation, it can only be in the ruling which was connected to the Companions when they were alarmed by the āyah. That was that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘Say, “We hear and obey.”’ That conveys the command to be firm in this and cling to Allah and see the kindness of Allah in His forgiveness. If this is the case, the ruling can be abrogated and the āyah is similar to Allah’s words: ‘If there are twenty of you who are steadfast, they will overcome two hundred.’ (8:65) This is also in the form of a report, but the meaning demands: ‘Hold to this, be firm on it and steadfast accordingly.’ Then it was abrogated after that. As far as I know, the consensus of the people is that this āyah about jihād was abrogated by a hundred being required to be firm against two hundred. Ibn ‘Aṭīyah said that this āyah in al-Baqarah is the most similar thing to it. It is said that there is allusion and specification in the words and that the words imply: Allah will call you to account for that if He wishes. According to this, there is no abrogation.

An-Naḥḥās said, ‘Part of the best of what is said about this āyah, and most similar to the literal meaning, is what Ibn ‘Abbās said: it is universal and undefined. Then one adds the hadith of Ibn ‘Umar about intimate conversation which al-Bukhārī, Muslim and others transmitted. In Muslim’s variant, he said, “I heard the Messenger of Allah ﷺ say, ‘On the Day of Rising, the believer will draw near to his Almighty Lord until He puts His veil over him and will have to admit to his wrong actions. He will say, ‘Do you admit to this?’ He will reply, ‘O Lord, I admit to them.’ Allah will say, ‘I concealed them for you in the world and today I forgive you for them.’ He will be given the page containing his good deeds. There will be an announcement about unbelievers and hypocrites in front of people: ‘These people lied about Allah.’”’

It is said that the āyah was revealed about those who took the unbelievers as friends rather than the believers. It means: ‘O believers, if you make known or conceal what is in yourselves about taking the unbelievers as protectors and friends, Allah will take you to account for it.’ Al-Wāqidi and Muqātil said that. For evidence of this, they recite Allah’s words in Āl ‘Imrān: ‘Say: “Whether you conceal what is in your breasts or make it known [in taking the unbelievers as friends], Allah knows it.” (3:29) It is also indicated by the āyah before it: ‘The believers should not take unbelievers as friends rather than believers.’ (2:28)

This is unlikely because the context of the āyah does not demand it. It will be explained in Āl ‘Imrān, Allah willing. Sufyān ibn ‘Uyaynah said, ‘I heard that the Prophets used to bring this āyah to their people.’

He forgives whomever He wills and He punishes whomever He wills.

Ibn Kathīr, Nāfi‘. Abū ‘Amr, Ḥamzah and al-Kisā‘ī recited in the apocopate form, yaghfir – yu‘adhhib, while Ibn ‘Āmir and ‘Āṣim read it yaghfiru – yu‘adhhibu. It is related that Ibn ‘Abbās, al-A‘raj, Abul-‘Āliyah, and ‘Āṣim al-Jahdarī recited them as yaghfira – yu‘adhhiba, implying an elided ‘an’. The truth is that it is added to the meaning as is seen in 2:285. Adding to the word is better because of the resemblance.

An-Naḥḥās said that it is related from Ṭalḥah ibn Muṣarrif without the fā’ before ‘He forgives’ as an appositive. Ibn ‘Aṭīyah said that it is recited that way by al-Ju‘fī and Khallād. It is related that it is like that in the copy of the Qur’an of Ibn Mas‘ūd. Ibn Jinnī said that it is an appositive for ‘call you to account’ and it explains the calling to account. [ILLUSTRATIVE POEM OMITTED] An-Naḥḥās said that it is better than the jussive.

285 The Messenger believes in what has been sent down to him from his Lord, and so do the believers. Each one believes in Allah and His angels and His Books and His Messengers. We do not differentiate between any of His Messengers. They say, ‘We hear and we obey. Forgive us, our Lord! You are our journey’s end.’ 286 Allah does not impose on any self any more than it can bear. For it is what it has earned; against it, what it has merited. Our Lord, do not take us to task if we forget or make a mistake! Our Lord, do not place on us a load like the one You placed on those before us! Our Lord, do not place on us a load we have not the strength to bear! And pardon us; and forgive us; and have mercy on us. You are our Master, so help us against the people of the unbelievers.

The Messenger believes in what has been sent down to him from his Lord.

It is related from al-Ḥasan, Mujāhid and aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk that this āyah is about the Night Journey (al-Miʿrāj). The same tafsīr is transmitted from Ibn ‘Abbās. Some of them say that the entire Qur’an was brought down to Muḥammad ﷺ by Jibrīl except for this one āyah. One of them said, ‘It is what he heard during the Miʿrāj.’ Others say that it was not about the Miʿrāj because the Night Journey occurred in Makkah while this entire sūrah is Madinan.

As for those who say that this āyah is about the Night Journey, they say, ‘When the Prophet ﷺ ascended and reached a high place in the heavens, Jibrīl accompanied him until he reached the Lote Tree of the Furthest Limit. Then Jibrīl said to him, “I cannot go beyond this place. No one except you has been commanded to go beyond it.” So the Prophet ﷺ went beyond the Lote Tree until he reached what Allah wished. Jibrīl had indicated that the Prophet ﷺ should greet his Lord and so he said. “Greetings are for Allah and prayers and good words.” Allah said, “Peace be upon you, O Prophet and the mercy of Allah and His blessings.” The Prophet ﷺ desired that his Community should have a share of the greeting and so he said. “Peace be upon us and on the righteous slaves of Allah.” Jibrīl and all the people of the heavens said, “I bear witness that there is no god except Allah alone without partner and I bear witness that Muḥammad is His slave and Messenger,” and then Allah Almighty said: “The Messenger believes...”, meaning that he is thankful and that the Messenger affirms “what has been sent down to him from his Lord.” The Prophet ﷺ wanted his Community to share in the honour and said, “And so do the believers. Each one believes in Allah and His angels and His Books and His Messengers. We do not differentiate between any of His Messengers.” This means that they say, ‘We believe in all the Messengers and do not disbelieve in any of them and do not differentiate between any of them as the Jews and Christians did.’

So his Lord said to him, ‘How do they accept the āyahs We have revealed?’ That is inherent in His words: ‘Whether you divulge what is in yourselves.’ The Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘They say, “We hear and obey. Forgive us, our Lord! You are our journey’s end.”’ That means the source to which they will return. Then Allah said: ‘Allah does not impose on any self any more than it can bear,’ i.e. more than it is capable of. ‘For it, what it has earned’ of good and ‘against it what it has merited’ of evil. At that point Jibrīl said, ‘Ask and it will be given to you.’ So the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘Our Lord, do not take us to task if we forget’ and do something in ignorance ‘or make a mistake’ in what we do deliberately. It is said that we do things both forgetfully and in error. Jibrīl said, ‘If you are granted that, then error and forgetfulness will be removed from your community. Ask for something else. He said ﷺ, ‘Our Lord, do not place on us a load like the one You placed on those before us!’ That was when good things were made unlawful for them because of their wrongdoing. When they sinned at night, they found it written on their doors. Fifty prayers were imposed on them and then Allah lightened it for this community and reduced it after fifty prayers were imposed. Then he said ﷺ, ‘Our Lord, do not place on us a load we have not the strength to bear!’ He was saying, ‘Do not burden us with actions which we will not be able to do and so incur punishment.’ It is said that it means: ‘What is hard for us.’ That is because if they had been commanded to perform fifty prayers, they would have been able to do that, but it would have been very difficult for them and they would not have been able to persevere in it. ‘And pardon us’ and spare us from being transmogrified ‘and forgive us’ and do not let us be swallowed up by the earth ‘and have mercy on us’ and do not bombard us. ‘You are our Master’ and Protector and Preserver, ‘so help us against the people of the unbelievers.’ His supplication was answered.

In defining the extent of Allah’s help, the Prophet ﷺ reported, ‘I was helped by terror going before me for the distance of a month.’ It is said that when those going on a military expedition leave their houses with a sincere intention and beat the drums, terror and awe falls into the hearts of the unbelievers the distance of a month away, whether they know that they have set out or not. When the Prophet ﷺ returned from his Night Journey, Allah revealed these āyahs so that he could inform his Community of these things.

There is another aspect to the interpretation of this āyah. Az-Zajjāj said, ‘In this sūrah, after Allah has mentioned the obligation of the prayer and zakāt and clarified the principles of hajj, the ruling of menstruation, divorce, ilā’, the stories of the Prophets and clarified the ruling on usury, He mentions His own worth by saying: “Everything in the heavens and everything in the earth belongs to Allah.” Then He mentions that all this is affirmed by the Prophet ﷺ and the believers: “The Messenger believes in what has been sent down to him from his Lord.” This means that the Messenger affirms all of these things which were mentioned as do all of the believers who affirm Allah, His angels, His Books and His Messengers.’

It is said that the reason for its revelation was the āyah before it. When the former āyah was revealed to the Prophet ﷺ, it was hard on the Companions of the Messenger of Allah, so they went to the Messenger of Allah ﷺ and then knelt and said, ‘Messenger of Allah, we have been given as obligations actions we can do: prayer, fasting, jihād and ṣadaqah, but in this āyah Allah has revealed something that it is impossible for us to do.’ The Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘Do you mean to say what the people of the two Books before you said: “We hear and we disobey”? Say: “We hear and we obey. Forgive us, our Lord! You are our journey’s end.”’ When the people recited it, their tongues were humbled and then Allah revealed this āyah: ‘The Messenger believes in what has been sent down to him from his Lord...’ When they said that, Allah abrogated the āyah and revealed: ‘Allah does not impose on any self any more than it can bear. For it, is what it has earned, and against it, is what it has merited. Our Lord, do not take us to task if we forget or make a mistake!’ He said, ‘Yes.’ ‘Our Lord, do not place on us a load like the one You placed on those before us!’ He said, ‘Yes.’ ‘Our Lord, do not place on us a load we have not the strength to bear!’ He said, ‘Yes.’ ‘And pardon us, and forgive us, and have mercy on us. You are our Master, so help us against the people of the unbelievers.’ He said, ‘Yes.’ Muslim transmitted this from Abū Hurayyah.

Our scholars said that the fact that the first variant has ‘I have done it’ while this one has ‘Yes’ indicates the hadith was transmitted by its meaning. When the matter was confirmed by their saying ‘We hear and obey,’ Allah praised them in this āyah and removed from them the hardship they experienced about thoughts which occur to them. This favour is the fruit of obedience and devotion to Allah. What happened to the tribe of Israel was the opposite of that. They were censured and made to endure the hardships of abasement, wretchedness and exile because they said, ‘We hear and we disobey.’ Such is the result of disobedience and recalcitrance towards Allah. We seek refuge with Allah from His vengeance by His grace and generosity!

The Prophet ﷺ was told, ‘The house of Thābit ibn Qays is adorned with lamps every night.’ He replied, ‘Perhaps he is reciting Sūrat al-Baqarah.’ Thābit was told about this and said, ‘I recite: “The Messenger believes...” from Sūrat al-Baqarah.’ It was revealed when the Companions of the Prophet were experiencing hardship because Allah threatened to call them to account for what their selves concealed. They complained about that to the Prophet ﷺ and he said, ‘Perhaps you say, “We hear and we disobey” as the tribe of Israel said?’ They said, ‘We hear and we obey!’ and so Allah revealed this āyah to him. The Prophet ﷺ said, ‘They should believe.’

‘Believe’ means to affirm, as has already been mentioned. That which was sent down is the Qur’an. The reading of Ibn Mas‘ūd has the word ‘believe’ after ‘believers’: ‘and the believers believe...’ Nāfi‘, Ibn Kathīr, ‘Āṣim in the transmission of Abū Bakr and Ibn ‘Āmir recite ‘kutubihī’ (books) in the plural and recite ‘kitābihī’ in the singular in at-Taḥrīm. Here and in at-Taḥrīm Abū ‘Amr recites ‘kutubihī’ in the plural. Ḥamzah and al-Kisā’ī recite ‘kitābihī’ in the singular in both places. If it is in the plural, it means all Books. If it is in the singular, it is the verbal noun which includes all that is written which is sent down from Allah. If it is recited in the singular, it can mean all Books and kitāb is a generic noun. So both readings are the same. Allah says: ‘Then Allah sent out Prophets bringing good news and giving warning, and with them He sent down the Book (kitāb).’ (2:213)

Most recite ‘Messengers’ as ‘rusulihī’ as well as ‘rusulinā’, ‘rusulikūm’ and ‘rusuluka’, except for Abū ‘Amr from whom ‘ruslihi’ is related. He relates ‘ruslinā’, ‘ruslikūm’ but both ‘rusuluka’ and ‘rusluka’. Abū ‘Alī said that if someone recites ‘rusulikūm’, it is the root of the word. If it is rusl, then it is as a lightning occurs in singular words like unq and tunb, and then it is more proper in the plural which is heavier. Makkī said something to that effect.

Most people recite ‘differentiate’ with the nūn of the first person plural. It means: ‘They say, “We do not differentiate.”’ So ‘they say’ is elided. This usage is seen in other āyahs like 13:23 and 3:191. Sa‘īd ibn Jubayr, Yaḥyā ibn Ya‘mur, Abū Zur‘ah ibn ‘Amr ibn Jarīr and Ya‘qūb recited it in the third person with yā’. This refers back to ‘each’ (kull). Hārūn said that the mode (ḥarf) of Ibn Mas‘ūd has ‘yufarriqūna’.

‘One’ (aḥad) is in the singular rather than the plural because ‘aḥad’ can be used of both the singular and the plural as we see elsewhere, as in 69:47. It is an adjective of one, while the plural is meant. The Prophet ﷺ said, ‘Booty was not made to anyone (aḥad),’ meaning to any of the rulers but you. Ru‘bah said:

The affairs of people become your dīn.

They do not fear anyone (aḥad) but you.

This āyah shows that the believers are not like the Jews and Christians who believe in some of the revelation and reject some of it.

They say, ‘We hear and we obey.’

This suggests some elision such as ‘We hear as those who accept hear.’ It is said that ‘hear’ means ‘accept’ as in the prayer when it is said, ‘Allah hears whoever praises Him,’ and so there is no elision. This entails praise of the speaker. Obedience is acceptance of the command.

Forgive us, our Lord!

The word ‘ghufrān’ (forgive) is a verbal noun and the object of it is implied, so what is literally ‘Your forgiveness’ means ‘grant us Your forgiveness,’ as az-Zajjāj said. Others say that it means, ‘We ask (or I ask) for Your forgiveness.’

You are our journey’s end.’

This is an affirmation of the Resurrection and the fact that we will stand before Allah. It is related that when this āyah was revealed, Jibrīl told the Prophet ﷺ, ‘Allah has allowed praise of you and your community. Ask and you will be given,’ and the following āyah was what he asked.

Allah does not impose on any self any more than it can bear.

Imposition implies a command to do something which is difficult and entails hardship. Al-Jawharī related that. The word ‘wus’ (bear) denotes capacity and effort. This is a definite report and it is a declaration from Allah that, from the moment of the revelation of the āyah, He has not imposed on His slaves any kind of worship, demanded of the hearts or the limbs, which is not within the capacity of the one on whom it is imposed. Through this āyah, anxiety was removed from the Muslims with regard to the matter concerning their thoughts. There is something related from Abū Hurayrah which conveys the meaning of this āyah. He said, ‘I would not wish to be anyone whose mother bore him except for Ja‘far ibn Abī Ṭālib. I followed him one day when I was hungry. When he reached his house, all he found in it was a churn for butter in which only a few traces remained. He broke it up between us and we began licking what was on it. He said:

“Allah does not impose on any self more than it can bear, and a hand can only be generous with what it has.”

People disagree about whether it is permissible for a ruling about worldly matters to be imposed on someone when it is not within his capacity to carry it out. They do, however, agree that there is no imposition in the dīn which is beyond a person’s capacity. This āyah informs us that such an imposition does not occur in the Sharī‘ah. Abu-l-Ḥasan al-Ash‘arī and a group of mutakallimūn say that it is logically permissible for someone to be charged with doing something he is not capable of doing, and that does not detract at all from the tenets of belief (‘aqīdah) in the Sharī‘ah. That sort of command can be meant to be a punishment for the person on whom it is imposed, as when someone who made images is ordered to create a barley-seed on the Day of Judgment. Those who say that it is permitted disagree about whether it occurred in respect of the Message of Muḥammad ﷺ or not.

One group say that such an imposition occurred in the case of Abū Lahab, because he was obliged to believe in all of the Shari‘ah and yet part of the revelation was that he would never believe because the judgment on him was that his hands would be ruined and he would burn in the Fire. It was announced that he would not believe and so he was charged with believing something which he could not believe. Another group says that such an imposition does not occur at all and report that there is a consensus on that. They say the words: ‘He will bum in a Flaming Fire’ (111:3) mean ‘He will be brought to it.’ Ibn ‘Aṭīyah related that.

The word ‘yukallifu’ (impose) is a transitive verb with two objects one of which is elided so that ‘worship’ or ‘something’ is implied. By Allah’s kindness and blessing to us, even though He imposed on us what is hard and difficult – such as odds of one against ten and hijrah, which entails leaving one’s homeland and separation from family, homeland and traditions – Allah did not impose on us burdensome hardships or painful matters, such as those He imposed on those before us which involved killing themselves and cutting out the patch soiled by urine on clothes and skins. Rather He made things easy for us and reduced the burden and the chains which He had placed on those before us. To Allah belongs praise, grace, favour and blessing.

For it is what it has earned; against it, what it has merited.

The words refer to good actions and bad actions, according to as-Suddī. The majority of scholars do not disagree with that. Ibn ‘Aṭīyah stated that. It is similar to Allah’s words: ‘No bearer of a burden can bear the burden of another’ (6:164) and ‘What each self earns is for itself alone.’ (6:164) Thoughts and their like are not part of what a human being earns. The expression for good actions is in the words ‘for it’ since a person rejoices in earning them and adds them to his property. Bad actions are ‘against it’ since they are weights and burdens and hard to bear, as one says, ‘I have (lit. for me) property,’ and ‘There is a debt against me.’ The root kasaba, which has the basic meaning of acquisition, is repeated and the meaning differs according to the form the word takes [kasabat = earned, iktasabat = merited]. Ibn ‘Atiyyah said, ‘It is clear to me regarding this that good actions are part of what is acquired without being a burden since their acquirer is following the path of Allah’s command and His Sharī‘ah. Evil deeds are acquired since their acquirer burdens himself through them by rending the veil which Allah has forbidden. So the āyah utilises both usages.’

This āyah indicates that it is valid to call people’s actions ‘acquisitions’. People do not create them. If one were to say that a person created his actions, that is simply metaphorical. Al-Mahdawī and others said that it is said that this āyah means that no one is taken to task for the actions of another. Ibn ‘Atiyyah said, ‘This is sound in itself, but it is not an aspect of this āyah.’

At-Ṭabarī said that the āyah is evidence that someone who kills someone else by crushing, choking or drowning is personally responsible in respect of retaliation or blood money as opposed to someone whose blood money is the responsibility of their clan (āqilah). That differs from the literal words of the āyah. It indicates that the fact that there is no retaliation against a father does not demand that it is also cancelled for someone who is jointly responsible. It indicates the obligation of the ḥadd against the ‘āqilah when they enable someone who is insane. Qāḍī Abū Bakr ibn al-‘Arabī said, ‘Our scholars mentioned that this āyah is about retaliation being mandatory against the partner of a father, differing from Abū Ḥanīfah, and against someone who shares in accidental homicide, differing from ash-Shāfi‘ī and Abū Ḥanīfah, because each of them has merited killing. They said that joint participation by someone on whom retaliation is not obliged is not an argument for averting what is averted by doubt.’

Our Lord, do not take us to task if we forget or make a mistake!

This āyah means: ‘Pardon our wrong actions if we forget and make a mistake or simply forget or simply make a mistake,’ as the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘Error and forgetfulness have been removed from my Community and from what they are forced to do,’ i.e. its being a wrong action in those cases. There is no disagreement that the wrong action is cancelled out. There is disagreement about the rulings connected to that action. Does that cancellation of the action mean that the action has no legal consequences or does it still entail all its legal consequences? There is disagreement about that, and the sound position is that it varies according to the circumstances. It is agreed that some consequences are not cancelled, like penalties, blood money and obligatory prayers, and others are agreed to be cancelled, like retaliation and speaking words which can be considered to be disbelief. There is disagreement about a third category, like eating out of forgetfulness in Ramadan or breaking an oath out of forgetfulness.

Our Lord, do not place on us a load we have not the strength to bear!

This ‘load’ is a weighty burden. Mālik and ar-Rabi‘ say that the word ‘īsr’ (load) denotes a difficult, onerous thing. Sa‘īd ibn Jubayr said that it refers to stringent commands and what was hard for the tribe of Israel regarding urine and the like. Aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk said, ‘They endured hard things.’ This is similar to what the others said. An-Nābighah said:

You who protected the side of the mountain from the descent of their riders, bearing the burden (īsr) for them after they recognised it.

‘Aṭā’ said that it refers to being turned into pigs and monkeys. Ibn

Zayd also said that. He also said that it means wrong actions for which there is no repentance or expiation.

The word linguistically means ‘charge or undertaking’, as when Allah says: ‘Do you agree and undertake my charge (iṣṭī) on that condition?’ (3:81) Another form of the word means constriction, wrong action and burdensomeness. The word iṣār denotes a short rope which is used to bind loads and the like. The verb means ‘to confine.’ According to al-Jawharī, place of confinement is called a ma’ṣūr.

Ibn Khuwayzimandād said, ‘It is possible to infer from the literal meaning of this āyah that it refers to the burden which opponents claim that every act of worship entails. That resembles the words of Allah: “He has not placed any constraint on you in the dīn,” (22:78) and the words of the Prophet ﷺ: “The dīn is ease, so make things easy. Do not make things difficult.” O Allah, be hard on those who are hard on the Community of Muḥammad ﷺ! Aṭ-Ṭabarī said something similar and said that it is used as an argument for lack of injury and constriction.

Qatādah said that Allah’s words: ‘Our Lord, do not place on us a load we have not the strength to bear,’ mean, ‘Do not make things hard for us as You made them hard for those before us.’ Aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk said, ‘Do not impose on us actions which we cannot do.’ Ibn Zayd said the same. Ibn Jurayj said, ‘Do not turn us into apes or pigs.’ Sallām ibn Shābūr said, “‘What we do not have the strength to bear’ refers to lust.’ An-Naqqāsh related it from Mujāhid and ‘Aṭā’. It is related that Abu-d-Dardā’ used to say in his supplication, ‘I seek refuge with You from lust against which one cannot resist.’ As-Suddī said, ‘It is the strengthening of the shackles which were on the tribe of Israel.’

And pardon us; and forgive us; and have mercy on us. You are our Master, so help us against the people of the unbelievers.

‘And pardon us’ for our wrong actions. One pardons a wrong action by overlooking it and not punishing for it. ‘And forgive us’, meaning conceal our wrong actions. Ghafr is covering and concealing. ‘Have mercy on us' means 'Bestow Your mercy on us.' 'You are our Master' means 'You are our Protector and Helper.' This is instructing people on how best to make supplication.

It is related that when Mu'ādh ibn Jabal finished reciting this sūrah, he said, 'Āmīn.' Ibn 'Aṭīyah said, 'It is thought that he related that from the Prophet ﷺ. If that is the case, it is completion. If it is based on analogy with the Sūrah of Praise (the Fātiḥah) since that is a supplication and this is a supplication, that is good. 'Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib said, "I do not think anyone with intelligence, who has found Islam, will sleep until he has recited both of them."

Muslim related this idea from Abū Mas'ūd al-Anṣārī who said that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, 'If someone recites these two āyahs at the end of al-Baqarah in the night, they will spare him,' meaning from rising at night to pray.

It is also related from Ibn 'Umar that he heard the Prophet ﷺ say, 'Allah revealed to me two āyahs from the treasures of the Garden. He sealed Sūrat al-Baqarah with them. The All-Merciful wrote them with His hand a thousand years before He created creation. If someone reads them after 'Ishā' twice, they will spare him from rising at night to pray: "The Messenger believes..." to the end of the sūrah.' It is said that they spare him the evil of Shayṭān so that he does not have any power over him.

Abū 'Amr ad-Dānī related from Ḥudhayfah ibn al-Yamān that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, 'Allah Almighty wrote a Book a thousand years before He created the heavens and the earth. He sent down from it these three āyahs which conclude al-Baqarah. If someone recites them in his house, Shayṭān will not approach his house for three nights.' It is related that the Prophet ﷺ said, 'I was given these āyahs at the end of Sūrat al-Baqarah from the treasure under the Throne. No Prophet before me was given them.' This is sound.

3. SŪRAH ĀL ‘IMRĀN

THE FAMILY OF ‘IMRĀN 1 – 95

﴿ اَللّٰهُ لَا اِلٰهَ اِلَّا هُوَ الْحَيُّ الْقَيُّوْمُ ﴾

1 Alif Lām Mīm. 2. Allah, there is no god but Him, the Living, the Self-Sustaining.

There is a consensus that this sūrah is Madinan. An-Naqqāsh related that its name in the Torah was ‘Taybah’ [‘Good’]. Al-Ḥasan, ‘Amr ibn ‘Ubayd, ‘Āṣim ibn Abī an-Nujūd, and Abū Ja‘far ar-Ru‘āsī recited it with a break between Mīm and Allāh and so one stops at Mīm, just as they also stop at the names of the numbers even if they are connected. Al-Akhfash Sa‘īd said that it is permitted to read it with a kasrah on the mīm since two silent letters meet, but az-Zajjāj says that this is a mistake and the Arabs do not do that because it is heavy. An-Naḥḥās says that the first reading is the common one and the early grammarians discussed it. Sībawayh believed that Mīm has a fathah because of the meeting of two silent letters. They preferred for it to have a fathah so that one does not join a kasrah, a yā’, and the kasrah before it.

Al-Kisā’ī said when the letters of the alphabet meet, the connective alif is elided and takes on the vowel of the alif in the following word and so you say, ‘Alif Lām Mīma-llāh’, ‘Alif Lām Mīmu-dhkur’ and ‘Alif Lām Mīmi-qtarabat.’ Al-Farrā’ said that the root is ‘Alif Lām Mīm. Allāh’ as ar-Ru‘āsī said. The vowel of the hamzah is put on the mīm. ‘Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb recited ‘al-Ḥayyu-l-Qayyām’. Khārijah said that the copy of the Qur’an of ‘Abdullāh has ‘al-Ḥayyu-l-Qayyum’.

What scholars said about the letters themselves at the beginning of the sūrahs was already discussed in al-Baqarah. As ‘Allah, there is no god but Him, the Living, the Self-Sustaining’ is an independent sentence, all the views about the letters are possible.

An-Nasā'ī related that 'Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb prayed the 'Ishā' prayer, beginning with Āl 'Imrān and recited a hundred āyahs in the first rak'ah and a hundred in the second. Our scholars say that one should not recite an entire sūrah in two rak'ahs, but it is allowed if someone does so. In al-Majmū'ah, Mālik said that there is no harm in it and it is not a significant matter. The sound position is that it is allowed. The Prophet ﷺ recited al-A'rāf in Maghrib and divided it between the two rak'ahs. An-Nasā'ī transmitted that. Abū Muḥammad 'Abd al-Ḥaqq said that it is sound.

There are various reports about the excellence of this sūrah. One report states that it is protection against snakes and a treasure for the destitute, and that it will argue in the Next World on behalf of the one who recites it. If someone recites the end of it in the night, it will be recorded as if he has prayed the entire night. Other things are said as well. Abū Muḥammad ad-Dārimī mentioned in his Musnad from Abū 'Ubayd al-Qāsim ibn Salām from 'Ubaydullāh al-Ashja'ī from Mis'ar from Jābir, before what happened to him had happened, from ash-Sha'bī that 'Abdullāh said, 'Āl 'Imrān is an excellent treasure for someone destitute when he stands in prayer reciting it in the last part of the night.' Muḥammad ibn Sa'īd related from 'Abd as-Salām from al-Jurayrī that Abu-s-Salīl said, 'A man was the target of a blood vendetta and took refuge in the wadi of Majannah, a wadi which no one went into without being bitten by a snake. There were two monks at the edge of the wadi. In the evening, one of them said to his companion, "By Allah, the man is destroyed!" So he began to recite Sūrah Āl 'Imrān. They remarked: "He recites Sūrat Taybah. Perhaps he will be saved." He was safe in the morning.'

It is reported that Makhūl said, 'If someone recites Sūrah Āl 'Imrān on Friday, the angels pray for him until nightfall.' 'Uthmān ibn 'Affān said, 'If anyone recites the end of Sūrah Āl 'Imrān in the night, it will be written for him that he prayed for the whole night.' Ibn

Lahī'ah is in its path of transmission. Muslim transmitted from an-Nawwās ibn Sam'ān al-Kilābī: 'I heard the Prophet ﷺ say, "The Qur'an will be brought on the Day of Rising along with the people who acted by it, preceded by Sūrat al-Baqarah and Āl 'Imrān." The Messenger of Allah ﷺ made three metaphors for these surahs which I have not forgotten: they were like two dark clouds or like canopies with light in them or like two flocks of birds in rows, interceding for the one who recited them.' It is also transmitted that Abū Umāmah said, 'I heard the Messenger of Allah ﷺ say, "Recite the Qur'an. It will come on the Day of Rising to intercede for people who recite it. Recite the two brilliant ones: al-Baqarah and Āl 'Imrān. They will come on the Day of Rising like two clouds or two canopies, or like two flocks of birds in ranks, interceding for the one who recited them. Recite Sūrah al-Baqarah. Using it is a blessing and leaving it is regret, and the sorcerers cannot breach it.'" Mu'āwiyah said, 'I heard that "batalah" are sorcerers.'

There are three statements about why al-Baqarah and Āl 'Imrān are called 'the two brilliant ones' (zahrāwayn). The first is because they are two lights, derived from the essence of the brilliance of flowers. They guide the one who recites them by their brilliant lights, i.e. their meanings. The second is because their recitation will bring great light on the Day of Rising. The third is that they are called that because they are partners in containing the Greatest Name of Allah, as Abū Dāwūd and others mentioned from Asmā' bint Yazīd, who reported that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, 'The Greatest Name of Allah is found in these two āyahs: "Your God is one God. There is no god but Him, the All-Merciful, Most Merciful," (2:163) and that which is in Āl 'Imrān is "Allah, there is no god but Him, the Living, the Self-Sustaining."' Ibn Mājah transmitted it.

Clouds (ghamām) are clouds which are piled up and give shade to one's head. That shade is also called zullah. It means that the person who recites them is in the shade of the reward for them, in the same way that it is said, ‘A man is in the shade of his ṣadaqah.’ ‘Interceding’ in the hadith means that Allah will create angels who will intercede for them to receive the reward for reciting them, as we find in the hadith: ‘If someone recites ‘Allah bears witness that there is no god but Him...’ (3:18), Allah will create seventy angels who will ask forgiveness for him until the Day of Rising.’ ‘With light in them’ [in the hadith] is sharq, which calls attention to the light because when he ﷺ said ‘two dark clouds’, it might be imagined to refer to darkness. He ﷺ negated that by mentioning the light in them. Their being ‘dark’ means that they are dense and so come between those under them and the heat of the sun and its intense rays. Allah knows best.

The reason for the revelation of the beginning of sūrah was the arrival of the delegation from Najrān according to Muḥammad ibn Ishāq. The Christians of Najrān came to the Messenger of Allah ﷺ in Madina in a delegation of sixty riders, including fourteen of their nobles. Among the fourteen were three who were in charge of their affair: the ‘Āqib – the leader of the people and the one who decided their policy – whose name was ‘Abd al-Masīḥ; the Sayyid – the administrator of their affairs and the one who saw to their transport and arrangements – whose name as al-Ayham; and Abū Ḥārithah ibn ‘Alqamah of Banū Bakr ibn Wā’il – their bishop and scholar. They went to the Messenger of Allah ﷺ after the ‘Aṣr’ prayer. They were wearing silken shawls, cloaks and mantles. The Companions said, ‘We have not seen any delegation with such beauty and majesty.’ The time of their prayer came and they stood in the mosque of the Prophet ﷺ and prayed to the east. The Prophet ﷺ said, ‘Let them be.’ They stayed for some days debating with the Messenger of Allah ﷺ about ‘Īsā’, claiming that he was the son of God and other atrocious, confused statements. The Messenger of Allah ﷺ answered them with cutting arguments but they did not see. The first eighty āyahs or so of this sūrah were revealed about them, up to the point when the Prophet ﷺ invited them to perform the mutual curse. The full story can be found in Ibn Ishāq and elsewhere.

 مِنْ قَبْلِ هُدًى لِّلنَّاسِ وَأَنزَلَ الْفُرْقَانَ إِنَّ الَّذِينَ كَفَرُوا بِآيَاتِ اللَّهِ لَهُمْ عَذَابٌ

3 He has sent down the Book to you with truth, confirming what was there before it. And He sent down the Torah and the Gospel, 4 previously, as guidance for mankind, and He has sent down the Furqān. Those who reject Allah’s Signs will have a terrible punishment. Allah is Almighty, Exactor of Revenge.

The Book is the Qur’an. ‘Truth’ is said to mean speaking the truth or the overpowering argument. The Qur’an was sent down in instalments, bit by bit, which is why Allah uses the form ‘tanzīl’ (form II), denoting that it occurred time after time. The Torah and Gospel were sent down in one go which is why the form ‘anzala’ (form IV) of the verb is used. The bā’ that is connected to ‘truth’ is adverbial, modifying ‘Book’ and is connected to something elided, meaning ‘bringing the truth’. It is not connected to ‘send down’.

‘What was there before it’ means Revealed Books. Torah means ‘light’. It is derived from striking (warā or wariya) a flint-stone and its root is ‘tawraya’, on the measure of taf’alah or taf’ilah. Al-Khalīl said that its root is faw’alah and the root is warayah and the first wāw has become a tā’. This happens in other Arabic words. It is also said that it is derived from tarwiyah, which is alluding to one thing and concealing something else. Most of the Torah consists of allusions and indications rather than explicit clarification, as an historical account. The majority take the first view, as the Almighty says: ‘We gave to Musā and Hārūn the Furqān and a shining Light and a Reminder for those who are godfearing.’ (21:48) He means the Torah.

The root of Injil (Gospel) is the form ijʿīl derived from najl, the plural of which is anājīl. The root of the Torah is based on concealing (tawāri) and the Injil is a source of knowledge and wisdom. The word nājilān is used for parents, since they are a person's root. Najala is used for extracting something and so knowledge and wisdom can be extracted from the Injil. Najl is used for a child and descendants since they are brought forth as is said:

To the clan whose ancestor did not bequeath blame to their children. All are stations and they have progeny (najl).

Najl is also used for water which oozes out of the ground. It is used for swampland and it there is the opening (nijāl) from which water oozes. So it is called Injil because by it Allah brings forth that which teaches the truth. Najlā' also describes a wide opening in a spring and a spear thrust that makes a wide wound. It is said:

Often a blow with a sharp sword
Is between being open and wide (najlā').

So the Injil is called that because it is a source of expansion and light for them. Tanājala means fighting together and so the people fight about the Injil from which it takes its name. Shamir related that one of them said that Injil is a term describing every book full of comprehensive writing. It is said that the verb najala means to act and make. It is said that it is from a Syriac word, evangelion, as ath-Tha'labī said.

Al-Jawharī said, 'The Injil is the Scripture of 'Īsā. The word can be masculine or feminine. If it is feminine, it means 'page' and if it is masculine, it means the Book.' Others have said that the Qur'an is also called an 'Injil' as we find in the story of Mūsā who said, 'O Lord, I see in the Tablets that there are people with "Gospels" (anājīl) in their hearts. Make them my community!' Allah Almighty told him, 'That is the community of Aḥmad.' The word 'Gospels' (anājīl) therefore meant the Qur'an.

Al-Ḥasan recited ‘al-Anjīl’ but the rest have Injīl. There are two dialectical forms. It is possible that it is named that because of the manner in which the Arabs arabicise foreign nouns.

‘Previously’ means before the Qur’an. Ibn Fūrak says that ‘guidance for mankind’ implies godfearing people as indicated by ‘guidance for the godfearing’ (2:3). So the general term is, in fact, specific. ‘Furqān’ here is the Qur’an.

إِنَّ اللَّهَ لَا يَخْفَىٰ عَلَيْهِ شَيْءٌ فِي الْأَرْضِ وَلَا فِي السَّمَاءِ ﴿٥﴾

5 Allah – Him from Whom nothing is hidden, either on earth or in heaven.

This is a report about Allah’s knowledge of all things in detail, and examples of this are numerous in the Qur’an. He knows what was, what is and will be, and what is not. How could ‘Īsā be divine or a son of God when many things were hidden from him?

هُوَ الَّذِي يُصَوِّرُكُمْ فِي الْأَرْحَامِ كَيْفَ يَشَاءُ لَا إِلَهَ إِلَّا هُوَ الْعَزِيزُ
الْحَكِيمُ ﴿٦﴾

6 It is He who forms you in the womb however He wills. There is no god but Him, the Almighty, the All-Wise.

It is He who forms you in the womb however He wills.

Here Allah reports about the forming of the human being in the womb. The root of the word for womb (riḥm) is mercy (raḥmah) because it is part of mutual mercy between people. Form (sūrah) is derived from ṣāra, which is going to something to which one inclines. So a form inclines to a shape or likeness.

This āyah exalts Allah and contains a refutation of the Christians of Najrān and that ‘Īsā was one of those who create form. This cannot be denied by anyone with intelligence. The Almighty indicates the explanation of formation in the womb in Sūrat al-Ḥajj and Sūrat al-Mu’minūn. The Prophet ﷺ explained it in the hadith of Ibn Mas‘ūd as will be explained, Allah willing. It also refutes the scientists who claim that natural development is an autonomous process. This refutation of them was discussed previously in the commentary on the Āyah of Tahwīd. In his Musnad, Muḥammad ibn Sanjar reports the following hadith: ‘Allah Almighty creates the bones and cartilage of the foetus from the sperm of the man and its fat and flesh and from the liquid of the woman.’ This is evidence that the child is a combination of the sperm of the man and the liquid of the mother, as we read explicitly stated in the following āyah: ‘O mankind, We created you from a male and female.’ (49:13)

We find in Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim from Thawbān that a Jew came to the Prophet ﷺ and said, ‘I came to ask you about something which none of the people of the earth know except a Prophet or a couple of men.’ He asked, ‘Will it help you if I tell you?’ He answered, ‘I will listen with my ears.’ He asked him about the genesis of children and the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘The emission of the man is white and that of the woman is yellow. When they combine and the sperm of the man dominates that of the woman, it is a male by Allah’s permission, and if the liquid of the woman dominates that of the man it is female with Allah’s permission.’ More of this will be dealt with in Sūrat ash-Shurā, Allah willing.

‘However He wills’ means the child may be beautiful or ugly, black or white, tall or short, happy or wretched, sound or defective, and so forth, to the point of wretchedness and happiness. It is reported that reciters gathered around Ibrāhīm ibn Adham to listen to the hadiths which he had. He told them, ‘I am distracted from you by four things and so I am not free to transmit hadiths.’ He was asked, ‘What are they?’ He answered, ‘One is that I reflect on the day of the covenant when Allah said, “Those are in the Garden and I do not care, and those are in the Fire and I do not care.” I do not know which of the two groups I will be among on that day. The second is that when I was formed in the womb, the angel entrusted with the wombs said, “O Lord, wretched or happy?” and I do not know what the answer that was given. The third is that when the Angel of Death takes my soul, he will ask, “O Lord, with disbelief or faith?” and I do not know what the answer will be. The fourth is that Allah says: “Keep yourselves apart today, you evildoers.” (36:59) and I do not know in which of the two groups I will be in.’

There is no god but Him, the Almighty, the All-Wise.

There is no creator or fashioner but Him. That indicates His Oneness; so how can ‘Īsā be a creator when he is created? ‘The Almighty’ is the One who cannot be overcome and ‘the All-Wise’ possesses wisdom or is perfect in what He does. This applies to formation.

هُوَ الَّذِي أَنْزَلَ عَلَيْكَ الْكِتَابَ مِنْهُ آيَاتٌ مُحْكَمَاتٌ هُنَّ أُمُّ الْكِتَابِ وَأُخَرٌ
 مُنْتَشِهَاتٌ فَأَمَّا الَّذِينَ فِي قُلُوبِهِمْ زَيْغٌ فَيَتَّبِعُونَ مَا تَشَابَهَ مِنْهُ ابْتِغَاءَ الْفِتْنَةِ

7 It is He who sent down the Book to you from Him: āyahs containing clear judgments – they are the core of the Book – and others which are open to interpretation. Those with deviation in their hearts follow what is open to interpretation in it, desiring conflict, seeking its inner meaning. No one knows its inner meaning but Allah. Those firmly rooted in knowledge say, ‘We believe in it. All of it is from our Lord.’ But only people of intelligence pay heed.

It is He who sent down the Book to you from Him:

Muslim transmitted that ‘Ā’ishah said, ‘The Prophet ﷺ recited, “It is He who sent down the Book to you from Him...(to the end of the āyah).” Then the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, “When you see those who follow what is open to interpretation in it, they are the ones whom Allah has named, so beware of them.”’ Abū Ghālib said, ‘I was walking with Abū Umāmah while he was riding his donkey. When we reached the road to the mosque of Damascus, there were some heads set up. He asked, “Whose heads are these?” The reply was, “Those are the leaders of the Khārijites who were brought from Iraq.” Abū Umāmah said, “The dogs of the Fire! The dogs of the Fire! The dogs of the Fire! The worst to be killed under heaven! Bliss to those who killed them and those they killed!” He repeated that three times and then wept. I asked, “Why are you weeping, Abū Umāmah?” He replied, “Out of compassion for them. They were among the people of Islam and then they left it.” Then he recited, “Do not be like those who split up and differed after the Clear Signs came to them.” (3:105) I asked, “Abū Umāmah, are they them?” “Yes,” he replied. I asked, “Is that something you say from your opinion or something you heard from the Messenger of Allah ﷺ?” He replied, “Then I would indeed be bold! I would indeed be bold! Rather I heard it from the Messenger of Allah ﷺ more than once, twice, three times, four times, five times, six times, or seven times.” He put his fingers in his ears. “Otherwise we are deaf!” He said that three times and then he said, “I heard the Messenger of Allah ﷺ say, ‘The tribe of Israel split up into seventy-one sects, one of which will be in the Garden and the rest in the Fire, and this Community will have one more than them. One will be in the Garden and the rest in the Fire.’” āyahs containing clear judgments – they are the core of the Book – and others which are open to interpretation.

Scholars disagree about the muhkamāt and the mutashābihāt verses. There are numerous positions regarding this point. The position taken by Jābir ibn ‘Abdullāh and followed by ash-Sha‘bī, Sufyān ath-Thawrī and others is that the muhkamāt are those āyahs of the Qur’an whose interpretation is known and whose meaning and explanation is understood, while there is no way to the knowledge of the mutashābihāt verses and knowledge of them is the sole prerogative of Allah rather than His creation. That is things like the time of the Final Hour, the emergence of Ya‘jūj and Ma‘jūj, the Dajjāl and ‘Īsā and the letters at the beginnings of the *sūrah*s.

This is the best that I have heard about the mutashābihāt. It was already mentioned at the beginning of Sūrat al-Baqarah that ar-Rabī‘ ibn Khaytham said, ‘Allah Almighty revealed this Qur’an and He kept the knowledge of whatever He wishes for Himself...’ Abū ‘Uthmān said that muḥkam is the Fātihah of the Book and no prayer is allowed without it. Muḥammad ibn al-Faḍl said that it is Sūrat al-Iklās because there is only tawḥīd in it.

It is said that the whole Qur’an is muḥkam since Allah says: ‘A Book whose verses are perfectly constructed’ (11:1) and it is said that it is all mutashābih since He says: ‘a mutashābih Book.’ (39:23) This statement has nothing to do with the meaning of this āyah. The first āyah refers to the construction and order and that it is truly from Allah. The meaning of the second is that its parts resemble one another and confirm one another. That is not what is meant here. In this āyah the word mutashābih means containing probability and that whose meaning is ambivalent, as when the Jews said, ‘Cows are all much the same for us.’ (2:70) It is possible that it means different species of cows.

What is meant by muḥkam is the opposite of this. It is that in which there is no ambiguity and that which can only have one meaning. It is also said that the mutashābih can have several meanings. When the possibilities are restricted to one meaning and the rest are invalid, then it is muḥkam. The muḥkam is always a fundamental from which there are branches, and the mutashābih is a branch. Ibn ‘Abbās said, ‘The muḥkamāt are exemplified in the words of Allah in Sūrat al-An‘ām: “Say: ‘Come and I will recite to you what your Lord has made unlawful for you’...” (6:151-153) and in Al-Isrā’: “Your Lord has decreed: that you should worship none but Him, and that you should show kindness to your parents...” (17:23)’ Ibn ‘Aṭīyah remarked, ‘This is what I consider to be examples of the muḥkamāt.’

Ibn ‘Abbās also said, ‘The muḥkamāt verses are those which abrogate, state the ḥarām, the obligations, and what is believed and what is acted upon. The mutashābihāt are those which are abrogated and which are advanced and deferred, examples, oaths, and what is believed but not acted upon.’ Ibn Mas‘ūd and others said that the muḥkamāt are abrogating and mutashābihāt are abrogated. That was stated by Qatādah, ar-Rabī‘ and aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk. Muḥammad ibn Ja‘far ibn az-Zubayr said, ‘The muḥkamāt are those which contain the decisive argument of the Lord, the protection of His slaves, and refute opponents and falsehood. They cannot be altered nor twisted from their place. The mutashābihāt can be diverted, twisted and interpreted. Allah tests the slaves through them.’ Mujāhid and Ibn Ishāq said that. Ibn ‘Aṭīyah said, ‘This is the best statement about this āyah.’

An-Naḥḥās said, ‘The best that is said about this is that the muḥkamāt are self-evident and do not require reference to anything else, such as: “And no one is comparable to Him” (112:4) and “But I am Ever-Forgiving to anyone who turns in repentance.” (20:82) The mutashābihāt are āyahs like: “Truly Allah forgives all wrong actions” (39:53), which refers to His words: “I am Ever-Forgiving to anyone who turns in repentance” (20:82) and “Allah does not forgive partners being attributed to Him.” (4:48).’ What an-Naḥḥās said clarifies what Ibn ‘Aṭīyah preferred.

Linguistically, muḥkam is a passive participle from aḥkama. Iḥkām is exactitude. There is no doubt about that whose meaning is clear and in which there is no uncertainty or vacillation. That is due to the clarity of its individual words and perfect structure which otherwise might result in ambiguity. Allah knows best.

Ibn Khuwayzimandād said, ‘There are various aspects to the mutashābih. That to which a ruling is connected and on which scholars disagree is which āyah abrogates the other. An example of this is found in the words of ‘Alī and Ibn ‘Abbās about a pregnant woman whose husband dies: they said that she observes the shorter of the two terms. ‘Umar, Zayd ibn Thābit, Ibn Mas‘ūd and others said that it ends when she gives birth. They said, “The Lesser Sūrah of Women (65:4) abrogated the period of four months and ten days.” Ibn ‘Abbās and ‘Ali said that it did not. That was like their disagreement about a bequest to an heir and whether or not it was abrogated. That is when there is a conflict between two āyahs about which of them is advanced when abrogation is not known and its preconditions are not met. An example of that is: “Apart from that He has made all other women lawful for you.” (4:24) That would include combining it with slaves, while the words of Allah: “Not marrying two sisters at the same time except for what took place in the past” (4:23) forbid it. The same principle applies when there is an apparent conflict between hadiths or analogies. That is considered to be mutashābih. Not part of mutashābih, however, is reciting an āyah with two readings. Reciting both is like acting by all that they entail as in 5:6.’

We find in al-Bukhārī that Sa‘īd ibn Jubayr said, ‘A man said to Ibn ‘Abbās, “I find things in the Qur’an which seem contradictory to me.” He asked, “What are they?” He said: ““That Day there will be no family ties between them and they will not be able to question one another’ (23:101) and ‘They will confront each other, questioning one another.’ (37:27) ‘They will not be able to hide a single circumstance from Allah’ (4:42) and ‘They say, “By Allah, our Lord, We were not idolaters.”’ (6:23) and in this āyah they are hiding something. In an-Nāzi‘āt: ‘He built heaven ... After that He smoothed out the earth.’ (79: 27-30). So Allah mentions the creation of the heaven before the earth. Then He says, ‘Do you reject Him who created the earth in two days ... Then He turned to heaven.’ (41:9-11) Here He mentions the creation of the earth before heaven. And He says: ‘Allah is Ever-Forgiving, Most Merciful’ (4:100), ‘Allah is Almighty, All-Wise’ (4:158) and ‘Allah is All-Hearing, All-Seeing.’ (4:134) and He uses the past tense.”

blast. Then there will be the second blast and all those who are in the heavens and the earth will swoon except for whomever Allah wishes. There will be no ties between them then and they will not be able to question one another. Then there will be another blast and they will begin to question one another. As for the words: 'We were not idolaters' and 'They will not be able to hide a single circumstance from Allah,' Allah will forgive the people of sincerity for their wrong actions and the idolaters will say, 'Let us say, "We were not idolaters."' So Allah will seal their mouths and their limbs will say what they did. Then it will be known that not a single circumstance will be hidden from Allah. Then those who rejected will wish that they had been Muslims. Allah created the earth in two days and then turned to heaven and arranged it into seven heavens in two days. Then He smoothed out the earth and brought forth water and plants from it and created in it mountains, trees and hills and what is between them in another two days. That is His words, 'After that He smoothed out the earth.' So He created the earth and what is in it in four days and the heaven in two days. His words: 'Allah is Ever-Forgiving, Most Merciful' mean Himself. He was, and continues to be, like that. Allah did not intend anything except that He did exactly what He desired. Woe to you! The Qur'an is not contradictory! It is all from Allah.'"

Those with deviation in their hearts

In the phrase 'those with deviation in their hearts' the word zaygh means inclination, as when the sun inclines or the eyes incline. It is used for when someone deviates by abandoning the goal they were aiming for, as when Allah says: 'So when they deviated, Allah made their hearts deviate (azāgha).' (61:5) This āyah embraces every group: unbelievers, zindīqs, the ignorant and those involved in innovation. At the time it was revealed, it was specifically referring to the Christians of Najrān. Qatādah said about this, 'If this is not the Ḥarūriyyah and other Khārijites, I do not know who it is.' This interpretation is reported from Abū Umāmah which is marfū‘. It is enough for you.

follow what is open to interpretation in it, desiring conflict, seeking its inner meaning.

Our shaykh, Abu-l-‘Abbās, said, ‘Those who follow the mutashābihāt follow them and collect them, seeking to create doubt about the Qur’an and to misguide the common people, as was done by the zindīqs and Qarmatians who attacked the Qur’an, or seeking to believe in the literal sense of the mutashābihāt, as was done by the anthropomorphists who took literally those words in the Qur’an and Sunnah that are apparently anthropomorphist, to such an extent that they actually believed that the Creator had a physical body and form, a face, eye, hand, side, foot and finger. Allah is exalted above any such ascription! Or they follow it and begin to interpret it and explain its meanings, or do what Ṣabīgh did when he asked ‘Umar a lot of questions. So there are four categories of people listed here.

There is no doubt about the disbelief of the first group, and Allah judged that they should be killed without being asked to repent.

The sound position about the second group is that they are unbelievers since there is no difference between them and those who worship idols and forms. They are asked to repent. If they do not repent, they are killed as is done with apostates.

In the case of the third group, there is disagreement about the permissibility of doing that in accordance with the disagreement about the permissibility of interpreting such āyahs. It is known that the position of the early generations was not to undertake interpretation (ta’wīl) while at the same time they absolutely stated that the literal meaning was impossible. They said, ‘Leave it as it has come.’ Some believed that interpretation was possible and could be applied to a sound meaning linguistically without making that definitive in any way.

The judgment regarding the fourth group is to strongly discipline them, as was done by ‘Umar to Ṣabīgh. Abū Bakr al-Anbārī said,

‘The imāms of the early generations used to punish those who asked about the explanation of the obscure letters in the Qur’an because, if the one who asked meant by his question to perpetuate innovation and cause sedition, then he deserves reproach and a strong punishment. If it this was not his aim, he merits rebuke for committing a wrong action since at the time it provided atheistic hypocrites with a means to achieve their desire to weaken the Muslims through doubt and misguidance by diverting the Qur’an from the paths of revelation and true interpretation.’

Referring to that is what Qāḍī Ismā‘īl ibn Iṣḥāq reported from Sulaymān ibn Ḥarb ibn Zayd from Yazīd ibn Ḥāzim from Sulaymān ibn Yasār that Ṣabīgh ibn ‘Isl came to Madīnah and began to ask about the mutashābih parts of the Qur’an and other things. ‘Umar heard about that and sent for him. He was brought and ‘Umar had prepared for him some palm branches. When he got there, ‘Umar asked, ‘Who are you?’ He replied, ‘I am the slave of Allah, Ṣabīgh.’ ‘Umar said, ‘And I am the slave of Allah, ‘Umar.’ Then he went to him and hit his head with a branch and split it, and he continued to beat him until the blood ran down his face. He said, ‘Enough, Amīr al-Mu’minīn! By Allah, what I found in my head has gone!’ There are various transmissions about how he was disciplined and that will be mentioned in Sūrat adh-Dhāriyāt. Then Allah inspired him to repent and cast that into his heart and he repented.

The meaning of ‘seeking conflict’ is to seek out and convey the unclear and uncertain matters to the believers so that they become disunited and people turn to deviation. Az-Zajjāj said that ‘seeking its inner meaning’ means to seek the explanation of people’s resurrection and revivification, and Allah informs us that the interpretation of that and its time are only known by Him. The evidence for that is the words of the Almighty: ‘What are they waiting for but its fulfilment (ta’wīlahu)? The Day its fulfilment occurs (i.e. the Day when they see the resurrection, gathering and punishment they were promised), those who forgot it before will say, “The Messengers of our Lord came with the Truth.” (7:53) It means: ‘We have been shown the true interpretation of what the Messengers told us’ He said, ‘So the reciter stops at the words of Allah: “No one knows its inner meaning but Allah,” in other words no one knows about the Resurrection but Allah alone.’

No one knows its inner meaning but Allah.

It is said that a group of Jews, including Ḥuyayy ibn Aḥṭab, came to the Messenger of Allah ﷺ and said, ‘We heard that “Alif-Lām-Mīm” has been revealed to you. If you are speaking the truth, the domain of your kingdom will last seventy-one years because in the reckoning of the letters, alif is 1, lām is 30 and mīm is 40.’ Then: ‘No one knows its inner meaning but Allah’ was revealed. Ta’wīl can mean explanation and it can mean what something refers back to. It is derived from the verb āla, meaning ‘to refer back to’. Some fuqahā’ define ta’wīl as the production of a probable meaning of a literal expression when there is other evidence to support that departure from its normal meaning. Tafsīr is the explanation of the expression itself and ta’wīl is to explain the meaning. An example of this is ‘rayb’ in 2:2. The tafsīr is that it means ‘doubt’ and its ta’wīl is that it means ‘no doubt in the believers’ or ‘it is true in itself and does not admit of any doubt. “Doubt” describes the doubter.’

Those firmly rooted in knowledge

Scholars disagree about this and whether it is a new sentence or connected to what is before it, in which case the wāw is connective. Most say that it is a new sentence. This is what Ibn ‘Umar, Ibn ‘Abbās, ‘Ā’ishah, ‘Urwah ibn az-Zubayr, ‘Umar ibn ‘Abd al-‘Azīz and others said. It is the position of al-Kisā’ī, al-Akhfash, al-Farrā’, Abū ‘Ubayd and others. Abū Nuḥayk al-Asadī said, ‘They used to connect this āyah to what is before it, but it is separate. The knowledge of those firmly rooted in knowledge only reaches their words, ‘We believe in it. All of it is from our Lord.’ ‘Umar ibn ‘Abd al-‘Azīz said something similar. Aṭ-Ṭabarī related the like of it from Yūnus ibn Ashhab from Mālik ibn Anas. According to this, ‘they say’ is the predicate of ‘those firmly rooted’.

Al-Khattābī said, ‘Allah has divided the āyahs of His Book one is commanded to believe in and affirm into two parts: muḥkam and mutashābih. He reported that the mutashābihāt of the Book are those whose interpretation Allah alone knows; no one else knows their interpretation. Then Allah praised those who are firmly rooted in knowledge since they say, “We believe in it.” If it had not been for the soundness of their faith, they would not deserve praise.’ The position of most scholars is to have a full stop in this āyah after Allah’s words: ‘except Allah.’ That is related from Ibn Mas‘ūd, Ubayy ibn Ka‘b, Ibn ‘Abbās and ‘Ā’ishah. It is related that Mujāhid said that the words ‘those firmly rooted in knowledge’ are connected to what is before it and mean that they too know it.

One of the linguists used this as evidence and said that the meaning is: ‘Those firmly rooted in knowledge know it, saying, “We believe.”’ making ‘they say’ an adverb. Most linguistic scholars, however, deny that and think that it is unlikely because the Arabs do not elide both the verb and the object, and do not use an adverb in the form of a ḥāl without the verb. If that had been permitted, it would be permitted to say, ‘Abdullāh riding,’ meaning ‘Abdullāh came riding.’ That is permitted when the verb is mentioned and is used adverbially. What most scholars say – confirmed by the schools of the grammarians – is more appropriate than the isolated statement of Mujāhid. It is also not permitted for Allah to negate something in respect of His creation and then affirm it for Himself and then be a partner in that. Do you not see that Allah says: ‘Say: “No one in the heavens and the earth knows the Unseen except Allah”’ (2:65), ‘He alone will reveal it at its proper time’ (7:187) and ‘All things are passing except His Face’ (28:88). All of this is part of what only Allah knows and no one else shares it with Him. That is like His words: ‘No one knows its inner meaning except Allah.’ If the wāw connected to ‘firmly rooted' had been for the order, there would be no point in the words: 'All of it is from our Lord.' Allah knows best.

What al-Khaṭṭābī said about not taking the view of Mujāhid – that 'firmly rooted' is added to the name of Allah and they are included in knowledge of the mutashābihāt – is related from Ibn 'Abbās. In Mujāhid's view in addition to their knowledge of it, they say, 'We believe in it.' Ar-Rabī', Muḥammad ibn Ja'far ibn az-Zubayr, al-Qāsim ibn Muḥammad and others also said that. According to that 'say' is an adverb. [POEM TO ILLUSTRATE} Those who take this view argue that Allah praised them for being firm in knowledge, so how could He praise them for being ignorant? Ibn 'Abbās said, 'I am one of those who know its interpretation.' Mujāhid recited this āyah and also said, 'I am one of those who know its interpretation.' The Imam of the Ḥaramayn, Abu-l-Mu'ālī, related that from him.

Some scholars, however, refer this back to the first statement and say, 'It implies that what is meant by stopping at "except Allah" means that no one knows the interpretation of the mutashābihāt except Allah, while those firmly rooted in knowledge know some of it and say, "We believe in it. All is from our Lord" by the proofs which are set up in the verses which are muḥkam, and those who refer to them are made firm. When they know the interpretation of some of them but not others, they say, "We believe in it. All of it is from our Lord, and our knowledge does not encompass the hidden things in His sound Sharī'ah. Its knowledge is with Allah.'" If someone says, 'Some explanation is obscure even for those "firmly rooted", so that Ibn 'Abbās said, "I do not know what is meant by al-awwāh or ghislīn,"' the answer is 'This is not necessary because Ibn 'Abbās learned it after that and explained it.' The answer is more definitive than that. That is because Allah did not say that everyone 'firmly rooted' must have this knowledge. If one person does not know it, another can teach him.

Ibn Fūrak preferred that the 'firmly rooted' know the interpretation and are firm in that. The Prophet ﷺ said to Ibn ‘Abbās, ‘O Allah, give him understanding in the dīn and teach him interpretation (ta’wīl),’ i.e. ‘teach him the meanings of Your Book.’ If you look at it in this way, the stop could be after ‘firmly rooted in knowledge.’ Shaykh Abu-l-‘Abbās Aḥmad ibn ‘Umar said, ‘This is sound. Calling them “firmly rooted” demands that they know more than the muḥkam which is known equally by all of those who understand the words of the Arabs. In what way would they be “firmly rooted” if they only knew what everyone knows?’

There are different categories of mutashābihāt. Some are definitively only known by Allah, such as the matter of the rūḥ and the Last Hour, and no one is given knowledge of these things, not Ibn ‘Abbās or anyone else. As for those which can have several senses linguistically and different forms in Arabic, their correct interpretation can be known and one can remove incorrect interpretations, such as Allah’s words about ‘Īsā being, ‘a spirit from Him,’ (4:181) and similar things. No one should be called ‘firmly rooted’ unless they know a lot of this type of interpretation according to what they are enabled to discover. As for those who say that the mutashābih things are abrogated, on that basis it is correct to include the ‘firmly rooted’ in the knowledge of interpretation, but it is not valid to consider the mutashābihāt to be only of this category.

Rusūkh is firmness in a thing. That which is firm is described as ‘rāsikh’. Its root in physical bodies is the firm rootedness of mountains and trees in the earth. A poet said:

Love was firm in my heart for Laylā.

Its signs refuse to alter.

In the same way, faith can be firmly rooted in the heart. The verb is rasakha, yarsakhu. Some said that a pool is firm (rasakha) when its water settles. Ibn Fāris related that. It is a word which has opposite meanings. Rasakha, raṣakha, raṣuna and rasaba are all confirmed. The Prophet ﷺ was asked about those ‘firmly rooted in knowledge’ and said that it is: ‘...whoever fulfils his oath, speaks the truth and whose heart is straight.’ If it is asked how there can be something mutashābih in the Qur’an when Allah says: ‘We have sent down the Reminder to you so that you can make clear to mankind what has been sent down to them’ (16:44) and how it can be that He did not make all of it clear, the answer is that there is wisdom in that – and Allah knows best – in displaying the superiority of scholars. If all of it had been clear, their superiority in relation to one another would not appear. That is how it is done when someone makes a classification: he makes some of it clear and some of it unclear, and a place is left for experience because when the existence of something is of no importance, its radiance is little. Allah knows best.

All of it is from our Lord.’

This refers to the Book of Allah, and all its parts, both those that are clear and those that are open to interpretation.

But only people of intelligence pay heed and say this and believe and stop where it stops and do not follow the mutashābihāt. Lubb is intelligence and the lubb of anything is its core which is why it is used to denote the intellect. ‘Ūlū’ is the plural of dhū.

رَبَّنَا لَا تُخِزْ قُلُوبَنَا بَعْدَ إِذْ هَدَيْتَنَا وَهَبْ لَنَا مِنْ لَدُنْكَ رَحْمَةً إِنَّكَ أَنْتَ

‘Our Lord, do not make our hearts swerve aside’

Something is elided and ‘they say’ is implied here. This is talking about about those firmly rooted in knowledge. It is possible that it means: ‘Say, “O Muḥammad.”’ It is said that the swerving of the heart is towards corruption and inclination away from the dīn. Do they fear that, when they have been guided, Allah will turn them to corruption? The answer is that they asked, after Allah had guided them, for Him not to test them by actions which would be burdensome for them which they would be unable to do like those referred to in His words: 'If We had directed them kill themselves or leave their homes.' (4:64) Ibn Kaysān said, 'They asked not to swerve lest Allah would make their hearts swerve as in His words: "So when they deviated, Allah made their hearts deviate" (61:5), in other words, "Make us firm in the guidance You have granted to us. Otherwise we might swerve and deserve our hearts to swerve."

It is said that this is separate from what came before it. That is because after Allah mentioned the people who swerve, He taught His slaves to call on Him so that they would not be among the censured party who are mentioned: the people who do swerve. We find in the Muwattā' that Abū 'Abdullāh aṣ-Ṣanābiḥī is reported to have said, 'I arrived in Madīnah during the caliphate of Abū Bakr aṣ-Ṣiddiq and I prayed maghrib behind him. He recited the Umm al-Qur'ān and two of the shorter *sūrah*s from the Mufaṣṣal in the first two *rak'ah*s. Then he stood up in the third and I drew so near to him that my clothes were almost touching his clothes. I heard him reciting the Umm al-Qur'ān and this āyah: "Our Lord, do not make our hearts swerve aside after You have guided us, and give us mercy from You. You are Ever-Giving." Scholars say that his recitation of this āyah was a kind of qunūt and supplication since that was at the time of the Riddah. Qunūt is permitted in maghrib according to a group of people of knowledge, and it is also permitted in every prayer when a terrible matter comes upon the Muslims which alarms them and because of which they fear for themselves.

At-Tirmidhī related that Shahr ibn Ḥawshab said, 'I asked Umm Salamah, "Umm al-Mu'minīn, what was the most frequent supplication used by the Messenger of Allah ﷺ when he was with you?" She replied, "His most frequent supplication was, 'O Overtuner of hearts, make my heart firm in your dīn.' I said, 'Messenger of Allah, the supplication you use the most is "O Overtuner of hearts, make my heart firm in your dīn!"' He said, 'Umm Salamah, there is no human being whose heart is not between two of Allah's fingers. If He wishes, He makes him go straight, and, if he wishes, He makes him swerve.'" Mu'ādh recited, "Our Lord, do not make our hearts swerve aside after You have guided us." He said that it is a ḥasan hadith. This is evidence against the Mu'tazilites who say that Allah does not misguide His slaves. If there had not been swerving away from Him, it would not be permitted ask Him for what is not possible in respect of Him to be repelled. Abū Wāqid and al-Jarrāḥ recited 'tazīgh' with the action attributed to the hearts. This is desire for Allah. Both readings mean that swerving is created by Allah and He makes them swerve.

And give us mercy from You.

This means 'directly from You and Your presence,' as a favour from You, not on account of anything that has come from us or any action of ours. This involves submission and casting off. There are four dialectical forms of 'ladun': ladun, which is the most eloquent; ladu; laduni, and ladna. Some false Sufis and esoteric zindīqs grab on to this āyah and others like it and say: 'You see, knowledge is what Allah gives direct without any need for acquisition or studying of books. Pages are but a veil.' This is refuted as will be explained elsewhere. The āyah means: 'Give us a blessing which issues from Your mercy' because mercy is one of the attributes of the Essence and so a direct gift of it is inconceivable. The verb for give is wahaba, yahabu. The root is yahibu. It is an error if someone says that the root is yawhaba.

It means: ‘You are the Resurrector and Reviver of them after they have been dispersed.’ It is affirmation of the resurrection on the Day of Rising. Az-Zajjāj said, ‘This is the interpretation which the ‘firmly rooted’ know and affirm. Those who follow what is open to interpretation about the business of the resurrection disagree about it to the point that they end up denying it.’ ‘Rayb’ is doubt and was discussed in Sūrat al-Baqarah. Mi‘ād is the form mif‘āl from wa‘d.

10 As for those who disbelieve, their wealth and children will not help them against Allah in any way. They are fuel for the Fire,

The meaning is clear: neither their wealth nor children will avail them against Allah’s punishment in any way. As-Sulamī recited ‘yughnā’ (rather than ‘tughnā’) because of the sentence structure indicating something coming between the noun and the verb. Al-Ḥasan recited ‘yughnī’ in order to make it lighter. The ‘min’ means ‘in the face of’ (‘inda) according to Abū ‘Ubaydah.

They are fuel for the Fire.

‘Waqūd’ (fuel) is a name for firewood. This was already mentioned in Sūrat al-Baqarah. Al-Ḥasan, Mujāhid and Ṭalḥah ibn Muṣarrif read it as wuqūd which is a verbal noun, meaning ‘fuel for the burning of the Fire’. In Arabic, wāw can have the vowel ḍammah. Wuqūd is the verbal noun for the burning of a fire from the verb waqada.

Ibn al-Mubārak transmitted from the hadith of al-‘Abbās ibn ‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘This dīn will be victorious until the seas are crossed and you plunge into the sea on horses in the way of Allah Almighty. Then there will come some people who recite the Qur’an and when they recite it, they will say,

“Who knows the most recitation among us? Which of us has the most knowledge?” He turned to his Companions and asked, “Do you think that there is any good in those people?” “No,” they answered. He said, “Those are from you and they are from this community, and they are fuel for the Fire.”

11 as was the case with the people of Pharaoh and those before them. They denied Our Signs so Allah seized them for their wrong actions. Allah is fierce in retribution.

Da'b designates ‘custom, habit and business.’ The verb da'aba yad'abu means to exert oneself and toil, and Form IV means to pursue a journey with energy. It is used for making a camel travel hard. Dā'ibān means night and day. Abū Ḥātim said, ‘I heard Ya‘qūb say, “ka-da'ab” with a fathah on the hamzah. He asked me, a young boy at that time, “On what basis is it permitted to say ‘ka-da'ab’?” I told him, “I think that it comes from the verb da'iba, yad'abu, da'b.” He accepted that from me and was surprised at my ability in spite of my youth. I do not know whether it is said or not.’ An-Naḥḥās said that this is an error and that one never says ‘da'iba’, but rather ‘da'aba’. That is what the grammarians have said, including al-Farrā’ who related it in Kitāb al-Maṣādir. Da'abah is also permitted because it contains a throat letter. There is disagreement about the kāf. It is said that it is in the nominative, implying, ‘Their custom is like that of the people of Pharaoh,’ meaning that ‘what the unbelievers are doing to you is like what the people of Pharaoh did to Mūsā.’ Al-Farrā’ said that the meaning is: ‘The Arabs have disbelieved like the people of Pharaoh disbelieved.’

An-Naḥḥās said that ‘like’ cannot be connected to ‘disbelieve’ because ‘disbelieve’ is in the connective. It is said that it is connected to ‘seized them’, in other words, ‘Allah seized them like He seized the people of Pharaoh.’ It is also said that it is connected to the phrase ‘their wealth and children will not help them’, meaning that wealth will not help them like wealth and children did not help the people of Pharaoh. This is a rebuttal directed at those who failed to go out to perform jihād, claiming that they were distracted by wealth and family. It can also refer to them being fuel for the Fire and the similarity lies in burning.

This idea is supported by the āyah: ‘A most evil torment engulfed Pharaoh’s people – the Fire, morning and night, to which they are exposed; and on the Day the Hour takes place: “Admit Pharaoh’s people to the harshest punishment!”’ (40:45-46) The first position is the most likely and more than one scholar has said that. Ibn ‘Arafah said that the expression ‘...the case with the people of Pharaoh’ means ‘the custom of the people of Pharaoh’. He said, ‘Those unbelievers made a habit of abandoning and harassing the Prophet ﷺ just as the habit of the people of Pharaoh was to harass the Prophets.’ Al-Azharī said that it means that. The words in al-Anfāl: ‘Such was the case with Pharaoh’s people’ (8:52), mean what happened to the people of Pharaoh. It means that they will be repaid with killing and capture in the same way that the people of Pharaoh were repaid with drowning and destruction.

‘Our Signs’ can refer to the āyahs recited in the Qur’an or the signs which are set up in creation as evidence of His Oneness.

This refers to the Jews. Muḥammad ibn Ishāq said, ‘When the Messenger of Allah ﷺ defeated Quraysh at Badr and came back to Madīnah, he gathered the Jews and said, “Company of Jews! Be warned by Allah of what happened to Quraysh at Badr before the same thing as befell them befalls you. You know that I am a sent Prophet. You will find that in your Book and in Allah’s covenant with you.” They said, “Muḥammad, do not be deluded by the fact that you killed some foolish people who have no knowledge of war and grasped your opportunity to defeat them! By Allah, if you fight us, you will find out that we are the true people!” Then Allah revealed this.’

Another variant reads it with yā’ instead of tā’, meaning ‘They (Quraysh) will be overwhelmed.’ ‘You will be crowded into Hell’ means in the Next World. This is transmitted from ‘Ikrimah and Sa’id ibn Jubayr from Ibn ‘Abbās. In Abū Ṣāliḥ’s variant from him is that it was revealed when the Jews were happy with what happened in the Battle of Uḥud. This coincides with the reading of Nāfi’ who has a yā’ referring to Quraysh in both verbs: ‘They will be overwhelmed and crowded.’

What an evil resting-place!

This means Hell, taking the āyah literally. Mujāhid said, ‘It means: “what you have prepared for yourselves is evil,”’ as if the meaning was ‘Evil are your actions which have led you to Hell.’

قَدْ كَانَ لَكُمْ آيَةٌ فِي فِئَتَيْنِ الْبَاتِكَا فِتْنَةٌ تَنْزِيلُ فِي سَبِيلِ اللَّهِ وَالْغُرَى كَافِرَةٌ

13 There was a sign for you in the two parties which met face to face, one party fighting in the Way of Allah and the other unbelievers. You saw them as twice their number with your own eyes. Allah reinforces with His help whoever He wills. There is instruction in that for people of insight.

There was a sign for you in the two parties

The reason that the verb is kāna and not kānat is that ‘sign’ (āyah) is not a true feminine. It is said that it refers to the clarification, in other words ‘you have clarification,’ indicating the meaning rather than the actual words. It is like the words of Imru’ al-Qays:

White, beautiful, tender,

Like the shoot of a bean-tree breaking out with leaves.

He did not use the feminine form of ‘breaking out’ because it refers to the stalk. Al-Farrā’ said that it is masculine because of the adjective. When the adjective comes between the noun and the verb, then the verb is masculine. This usage was mentioned in al-Baqarah (2:180).

The two parties referred to are the Muslims and the idolaters at the Battle of Badr. Most recite ‘fi’atun’ in the nominative, meaning one of the parties. Al-Ḥasan and Mujāhid recite it in the genitive and ‘the other’ is an appositive. Ibn Abī ‘Ablah recite both in the accusative, and Ahmad ibn Yaḥyā said that it is permitted as an adverbial ḥāl, meaning the two different parties meet: one believing and one disbelieving.

A group of people is called a fi’ah (party) because one returns (yufā’) to it in times of difficulty. Az-Zajjāj that said fi’ah is a group, taken from ‘fa’w’, which means to cleave the head with the sword. The verb is used for cleaving through a person. There is no disagreement that this refers to the two groups in the Battle of Badr, but there is disagreement about who is addressed here. It is said that it might be the believers that are addressed and it might be the unbelievers. It is also possible that it is the Jews of Madīnah who are being addressed. Each view has those who espouse it. If it is addressed to the believers, it is meant to strengthen their souls and encourage them to advance against twice their number as indeed happened.

You saw them as twice their number with your own eyes.

Abū ‘Alī said that the seeing here is actually seeing with the eyes. Makkī and al-Mahdawī said that it what the eye sees. Nāfi‘ reads it with a tā’ as ‘You saw them’ while the rest read it with a yā’: ‘They saw them.’ The majority believe that the subject in ‘you see them’ is the believers and ‘them’ refers to the unbelievers. Abū ‘Amr disliked reciting it with tā’ and said, ‘If it had been like that, it would have been twice their number.’ An-Naḥḥās said, ‘That is not necessary, but it can be twice the number of your companions.’ Makkī said that ‘you saw’ is addressed to the Muslims and ‘them’ refers to the idolaters. This would mean that it would have to be ‘twice your number’ and that is not permitted because it differs from the script, but the words can move from the second person to the third person as in other places in the Qur’an like 10:22 and 30:39 in which Allah returns to the third person. So the ‘them’ can refer to the idolaters, i.e. ‘O believers, you see the idolaters as twice their number.’ This is an unlikely meaning because Allah would not make the idolaters multiply in the eyes of the Muslims. Rather He tells us that He reduces their number in the eyes of the believers, and so the meaning would be: ‘O believers, you saw the idolaters as twice your number when they were three times your number.’ So Allah lessened them in the eyes of the Muslims and showed them to be only twice their number to strengthen their spirits. They knew that a hundred of them would overcome two hundred of the unbelievers. He lessened the number of the Muslims in the eyes of the idolaters so that they would be bold and the judgment of Allah would be carried out on them.

It is possible that the pronoun ‘their’ refers to the Muslims, in other words you, the Muslims, saw yourselves as twice your number. Allah did that to strengthen their spirits in the encounter. The first view is more likely. That is indicated by the words of Allah: ‘Remember when Allah showed you them in your dream as only a few’ (8:43) and ‘Remember when Allah made you see them as few when you met them.’ (8:44) It is related that Ibn Mas‘ūd said, ‘I asked a man beside me, “Do you see seventy?” He said, “I think that there are a hundred.” When we took captives, they told us that they were a thousand.’

Aṭ-Ṭabarī reported that some people said, ‘Allah made the number of believers increase in the eyes of the unbelievers so that they were twice their size.’ Aṭ-Ṭabarī thought this weak. Ibn ‘Aṭīyah said, ‘That is rejected for several reasons. Rather Allah made the idolaters seem less in the eyes of the believers as was stated.’ According to this interpretation, ‘You saw’ refers to the unbelievers, i.e. ‘You, O unbelievers, saw the Muslims as twice their number.’ Al-Farrā’ said that it means: ‘You saw them as twice your number when they were three times your number.’ This is unlikely and not known linguistically. Az-Zajjāj says that it is an error because we understand the ‘like’ of a thing to be the same size as it and ‘twice’ to be two times as many.

Ibn Kaysān said, ‘Al-Farrā’ explains it in the following manner: ‘It is as when you say when you have a slave, “He needs another one like him.” You need him and one like him and you say, “I need two like him.” So you need three. The meaning is different to what you say and to the language. So in this case al-Farrā’ is saying that the number of the idolaters was three times that of the Muslims in the Battle of Badr. He imagined that it was not permitted for them to see them except as the same number as them. This is highly unlikely and meaningless. Allah made them see them as other than their actual number for two reasons. One is that their best interests lay in that because the hearts of the believers were strengthened by it. The other is that it was a Sign for the Prophet ﷺ. The Battle of Badr will be mentioned later, Allah willing.

If it is recited with yā’, Ibn Kaysān said that ‘them’ refers to ‘the unbelievers’ and ‘their number’ refers to ‘the party fighting in the Way of Allah’ as indicated by the context. That is confirmed by the words: ‘Allah reinforces with His help whomever He wills.’ This, as we said, would mean that the idolaters were three times the number of the Muslims and appeared as only twice their number in their eyes. He said that the seeing refers to the Jews. Makkī said that the seeing refers to the party fighting in the Way of Allah and the group seen were the unbelievers. This means that the party fighting in the Way of Allah saw the unbelievers as twice the number of the believers while the unbelievers were actually three times their number, but Allah made them appear as less to them and ‘you’ is addressed to the Jews. Ibn ‘Abbās and Ṭalḥah recited ‘yurawnahum’ and as-Sulamī has it with a tā’ and dammah in the passive.

14 To mankind the love of worldly appetites is painted in glowing colours: women and children, and heaped-up mounds of gold and silver, and grazing horses with fine markings, and livestock and fertile farmland. All that is merely the enjoyment of the life of this world. The best homecoming is in the presence of Allah.

To mankind the love of worldly appetites is painted in glowing colours:

‘Painted in glowing colours’ means ‘adorned’, and people disagree about who is the adorer is. One group say that it is Allah who adorns, and that is the apparent meaning of what ‘Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb said, and which al-Bukhārī mentioned. We read in the Revelation: ‘We made everything on the earth an adornment for it.’ (18:7) When ‘Umar said, ‘Now, O Lord, when You have adorned it for us!’ there was revealed: ‘Say, “Shall I tell you of something better than that?”’ (3:15)

Another group said, ‘The adorer is Shayṭān.’ This is the apparent position of al-Ḥasan. He said, ‘Who then makes it seem attractive? No one is stronger in censure of it than its Creator.’ So the adornment of Allah is by bringing into existence and preparation for use and producing natures disposed to these things. The adornment of Shayṭān is by whispering, deceit and making it seem good to them to take in an improper way. This āyah, according to both views, is a warning for all people. That contains rebuke for the contemporaries of Muḥammad ﷺ: the Jews and others.

Most recite ‘zuyyina’ in the passive tense with ‘love’ in the nominative. Aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk and Mujāhid recited ‘zayyana’ with ‘love’ in the accusative. The vowel on ‘appetites’ is different when it is a noun or an adjective. Shahawāt is the plural of shahwah. A man who is shahwān is greedy for something. Something which is shahīy is desirable. Following appetites is ruin and obeying them is destruction. We find in Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim that the Prophet ﷺ said: ‘The Garden is surrounded by disliked things and the Fire is surrounded by appetites.’ Anas related it from the Prophet ﷺ. The point of this illustration is that the Garden is only obtained by crossing the deserts of disliked things and putting up with them. One is only saved from the Fire by abandoning one’s appetites and weaning the self from them. It is related that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘The Path of the Garden is sorrow on a hill and the Path of the Fire is easy on the flat.’ It means that the Path to the Garden is difficult to travel since it goes by the tops of the hills and the Path to the Fire is easy without hardness and exposure.

He begins with women because men’s lower selves often look longingly at them. They are the snares of shayṭān and temptation for men. The Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘I have not left after me any trial greater for men than women.’ Al-Buḥkārī and Muslim transmitted it. The trial of women is greater than all other things.

It is said that there are two kinds of trial in women and only one in children. As for the two in women, one is that it can lead to severing of kinship because the woman may order her husband to cut himself off from his mother and sisters. The second is the trial of amassing both lawful and unlawful property. As for children, the single trial is amassing wealth for them. ‘Abdullāh ibn Mas‘ūd reported that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘Do not put your women in upper rooms nor teach them writing.’ The Messenger of Allah ﷺ cautioned them in this way because to put them in upper rooms is to be on the look out for men and there is no protection or concealment for them in that because they are close to men and constitute a trial and temptation for them, and because they are created from men, and so they desire men. Man has lust created in him and she is the focus of it. Therefore, neither of them is safe from the other. The comment about teaching writing is on account of temptation. The Prophet ﷺ is reported by Abū Hurayrah as saying, ‘You should have a woman with religion. May your hands be dusty.’ Muslim transmitted it from Abū Hurayrah. We find in the Sunan of Ibn Mājah that Ibn ‘Umar reported that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘Do not marry women for their beauty. Their beauty might ruin you. Do not marry them for their wealth. Their wealth might make you oppress them. Marry them for their dīn. A black slavegirl with religion would be better for you even if she has a split nose.’

Banūn is the plural of ibn (son). Allah reported that Nūḥ said, ‘My son is part of my family.’ The diminutive is bunayy as Luqmān said. It is reported that the Prophet ﷺ asked al-Ash‘ath ibn Qays. ‘Do you have any children by Ḥamzah’s daughter?’ He answered, ‘Yes, and I wish that had a bowl of food which I could give her from those that remain of the Banū Jabalah.’ The Prophet ﷺ said, ‘If you say that, they are the fruit of the hearts and delight of the eyes. They are also a source of cowardice, miserliness and sorrow.’

and heaped-up mounds of gold and silver

Qanātīr is the plural of qinṭār. It is a large heap of money as Allah says: ‘...and have given your original wife a large amount.’ (4:20) It is said that it is the name of a measure, like riṭl and rub‘. It is also used when something reaches that weight, meaning that it is equal to it. The verb is used for a man who has a lot of wealth such that it reaches that level. Az-Zajjāj said, ‘Qinṭār is derived from the verb meaning to make something firm. A bridge is called qanṭarah because it is firmly made. So it is as if the qinṭār were a contract of property.’ Ṭarafah said:

Like the bridge of the Romans, her lord swears that she will be surrounded until it is strengthened with bricks.

Scholars disagree about exactly how much it is and there are several positions regarding it. Ubayy ibn Ka‘b related that Prophet ﷺ said, ‘A qinṭār is 1200 ūqīyyahs.’ Mu‘ādh ibn Jabal, ‘Abdullāh ibn ‘Amr, Abū Hurayrah and a group of scholars said that, and Ibn ‘Aṭīyyah said that it is the soundest position, but the qinṭār varies in different lands according to the size of the ūqīyyah. It is said to be 12,000 ūqīyyahs. In his sound Musnad, al-Buṣṭī transmitted from Abū Hurayrah that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘A qinṭār is 12,000 ūqīyyahs. It is better than what is between heaven and the earth.’ Abū Hurayrah also took that view. We find in the Musnad of Abū Muḥammad ad-Dārimī that Abū Sa‘īd al-Khudrī said, ‘Whoever recites ten āyahs in the night will be written among those who remember. Whoever recites a hundred āyahs will be written among the obedient. Whoever recites from five hundred to a thousand āyahs will have the reward of a qinṭār in the morning.’ He was asked, ‘What is the qinṭār?’ and he replied, ‘Enough gold to fill a bull’s hide.’ It is mawqūf. Abū Naḍrah al-‘Abdī said that.

It is said to be derived from Syriac. An-Naqqāsh said that al-Kalbī said that it is Greek. Ibn ‘Abbās, aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk and al-Ḥasan said that it is 1200 mithqāls of silver. Al-Ḥasan says that that is marfū‘. Ibn ‘Abbās also said that it is 12,000 dirhams of silver and 1000 dinars of gold, which is the blood money for a Muslim man. That is reported from al-Ḥasan and aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk. Sa‘īd ibn al-Musayyab said that it is 80,000. Qatādah said it is 100 riṭls of gold or 80,000 dirhams of silver. Abū Ḥamzah ath-Thumālī said that the qinṭār in North Africa and Andalusia is 80,000 mithqāls of gold or silver. As-Suddī said that it is 4000 mithqāls. Mujāhid said that is 70,000 mithqāls. That is related from Ibn ‘Umar. Makkī related one view that a qinṭār is forty ūqiyyahs of gold or silver. Ibn Sīdah said that in al-Muḥkam. He said, ‘The qinṭār is a thousand mithqāls.’ Ar-Rabī‘ ibn Anas said, ‘A qinṭār is a lot of wealth piled up.’ This was known among the Arabs. Part of it is the above-mentioned āyah: ‘...and have given your original wife a large amount.’ (4:20) Part of that is the hadith: ‘Ṣafwān ibn Umayyah had a qinṭār in the Jāhiliyyah as did his father.’ This refers to his wealth. Al-Ḥakam said that it is what is between heaven and earth.

‘Heaped up’: there is disagreement about the meaning of muqanṭarah. Aṭ-Ṭabarī and others said that it means multiplied, as if a qinṭār is 3 and muqanṭarah is 9. It is related that al-Farrā’ said that it is the plural of the plural and so it is 9. As-Suddī said that it means minted (i.e. dirhams and dinars.) Makkī says that it means ‘complete’. Al-Harawī said that the form is a verbal usage. One of them said that qanṭarah is used for a bridge because the density of its structure. Ibn Kaysān and al-Farrā’ said that it is not less than nine qinṭārs. It is said that it indicates the presence of ready and available wealth. We find in the Ṣaḥīḥ of al-Bustī from ‘Abdullāh ibn ‘Umar that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘Anyone who prays at night with ten āyahs will not be written among the heedless. Anyone who prays at night with a hundred will be written among the obedient. Anyone who prays at night with a thousand will be written among the muqanṭirīn.’

‘Gold and silver’: dhahab (gold) is a feminine noun. Its plurals are dhihāb and dhuḥūb. Dhahaba describes someone taking a good direction (madhhab). Dhahab is also a measure used in Yemen. The verb dhahiba describes a man who sees a gold mine and is astonished (dhahiba). Fiddah (silver) is well known and its plural is fidād. ‘Dhahab’ is derived from dhahāb (departure) and silver (fidḍah) from infadḍa, which means ‘to be scattered’. The derivation makes one aware of the fact that they will disappear and are not firm as we see in the world.

How excellent is what one of them said about this:

‘The Fire’ is the last thing that the dinar says.

‘Worry’ is the end of the dirham.

Even if he is wary, between them a man has his heart tormented by the Fire and worry.

grazing horses with fine markings,

The word for horses is khayl. Ibn Kaysan said that he was told by Abū ‘Ubaydah that the singular is khā’il. A horse is called that because it is proud (ikhtāla) in its gait. Others said that it is a collective noun without a singular and one horse is ‘faras’. We find in a hadith from ‘Alī that the Prophet ﷺ said: ‘Allah created the horse from the wind which is why it flies without wings.’ Wahb ibn Munabbih said, ‘He created it from the south wind.’ Wahb said, ‘There is no glorification, takbīr or shahādah said by the owner of a horse but that it hears it and answers with the like of it.’ More mention of horses will come in Sūrat al-Anfāl. It is reported in a tradition, ‘Allah showed Ādam all the animals and he was told, “Choose one of them.” He chose the horse. He was told, “You have chosen your might.”’ This is the source of the name khayl. They are also called khayl because they are marked with might. If anyone rides one, he is exalted by Allah’s gift to him and by it is arrogant (ikhtāla) towards the enemies of Allah. A horse is called ‘faras’ because covers (iftarasa) the distance of the air like a lion and captures it. It crosses the distance with its hooves as if it swallowed it up. It is called an Arabian horse because it was brought after Ādam to Ismā‘īl as a reward for raising the foundations of the House. Ismā‘īl was an Arab. It was a gift from Allah to him and so the horse was called ‘Arabian’.

The Prophet ﷺ said, ‘Shayṭān will not enter a house with a noble horse in it.’ A horse is called ‘noble’ when it is free of defects. Abū Qatādah said that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘The best of horses are black ones with white blazes and a white spot on the nose, then black ones with white blazes and white legs, except on an offside one. If it is not black, then a bay one with these markings.’ At-Tirmidhī transmitted it from Abū Qatādah. It is reported in the Musnad of ad-Dārimī that a man said, ‘Messenger of Allah, I want to buy a horse. What sort should I buy?’ He answered ﷺ, ‘Buy a black one with a white spot on the nose and white legs, except on an offside one, or a bay with these markings. You will get booty and be safe.’ An-Nasā’ī reported from Anas: ‘There was nothing which the Messenger of Allah ﷺ loved more, after women, than horses.’ The imams related from Abū Hurayrah that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘There are three kinds of horses: those which are a reward for a man, those which are a protection for a man and those which contain a burden for a man.’ It is so famous that it need not be mentioned. The rulings concerning horses will be mentioned adequately in al-Anfāl and an-Nahl.

‘With fine markings’ (musawwamah) means grazing in the meadows and pasture according to Sa’īd ibn Jubayr. One uses sāma to mean camels and sheep grazing where they like. The verb from which the noun is taken means to release animals to graze and so they are called ‘musawwamah’. We find in the Sunan of Ibn Mājah that ‘Alī said, ‘The Messenger of Allah ﷺ forbade letting animals graze (sawm) before sunrise and to slaughter animals with milk.’ ‘Sawm’ means grazing here. Allah says: ‘...among which you graze (tusīmūna) your herds.’ (16:10) Al-Akḥṭal said:

Someone like Ibn Baz‘ah or another like him, more fitting for is the son of the camel herder.

Sawām are any grazing animals. It is also said that it means made ready for jihād. Ibn Zayd said that.

Mujāhid said that it means ‘marked and beautiful.’ ‘Ikrimah said,

‘They are marked by beauty,’ and an-Naḥḥās preferred that, taking it from the words ‘a handsome (wasīm) man’. Ibn ‘Abbās said that it means marked with colours, (like blazes) on their faces. It then comes from sīmā which is a sign. This is what al-Kisā’ī and Abu ‘Ubaydah said. All of this is allowed by the term: they are freely grazing, ready for war and marked so that they are recognised from other horses when grazing. Abū Zayd said that the basis for that is putting a piece of wool or a marker to distinguish them from other horses which are grazing. The linguist Ibn Fāris said in al-Mujmal that they are released with riders on them. Al-Mu‘arrij said that it means branded. Al-Mubarrad said that they are known in the lands. Ibn Kaysān said that it means piebald. All of the ideas are similar in respect of demarcation.

An‘ām it is used for camels and all grazing animals according to Ibn Kaysān whereas na‘am is only for camels. Al-Farrā’ said that the word is masculine rather than feminine while al-Harawī says that it can be either. An‘ām are livestock: camels, cattle, sheep and goats. Na‘am are just camels. Ibn Mājah reports from ‘Urwa al-Bāriqī: ‘Camels are might for their people, sheep are blessing and good is tied up in the forelocks of horses until the Day of Rising.’ Ibn ‘Umar reports that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘Sheep are among the animals of the Garden.’ Abū Hurayrah said: ‘The Messenger of Allah ﷺ instructed the rich to have sheep and the poor to have chickens.’ He said that when the rich have chickens Allah gives permission for the destruction of the cities. Umm Hāni’ reported that the Prophet ﷺ said to her, ‘Keep sheep. There is blessing in them.’ He transmitted it from Abū Bakr ibn Abī Shaybah from Wakī’ from Hisham ibn ‘Urwah from his father from Umm Hāni’ with a sound isnād.

Harth is a word used for all land that is tilled. It is a verbal noun used for designation. Ḥaratha is the verb used when someone ploughs the land for farming. Ḥirāthah is used for the cultivation of grains, gardens and other types of agriculture. Using it the hadith states: ‘Cultivate for this world as if you were going to live forever.’ We find in a hadith from ‘Abdullāh: ‘Cultivate this Qur’an,’ i.e. study it thoroughly, and Ibn al-A‘rabī said that ḥarṭh is studying in depth. Another hadith states: ‘The truest of names is al-Ḥārith’, because the one who cultivates earns. Iḥtirāth means to acquire wealth. Miḥrāth is kindling for a fire and ḥarāth is the thread of the bow-string. Aḥratha is to make a camel lean. We find in the hadith of Mu‘āwiyah: ‘What did your watering camels do?’ The answer was, ‘We made them lean on the Day of Badr.’ Abū ‘Ubayd said that it means ‘we made them lean’.

We find in Ṣaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī that Abū Umāmah al-Bāhili said that he saw a ploughshare and some agricultural implements and remarked, ‘I heard the Messenger of Allah ﷺ say, “Whenever this enters a house abasement enters it.”’ It is said that abasement is what adheres to those involved agricultural labour on account of the duties due on the land which are demanded by rulers. Al-Muhallab said, ‘The meaning of this hadith, and Allah knows best, is to encourage elevated circumstances and seeking one’s provision from the noblest of crafts. That is because the Messenger of Allah ﷺ feared that his community would become preoccupied with farming and abandon riding horses and doing jihād in the Way of Allah because they were too occupied with agriculture, and then those nations who ride horses and live off what they bring them would conquer them. Therefore, he encouraged people to gain their livelihood from jihād rather than gravitating to cultivation of the earth and humble occupations. Do you not see that ‘Umar said, ‘Imitate the people of Ma‘d (who were energetic) and wear coarse clothing. Cut off stirrups and leap onto horses. Then the camel-herders will not defeat you.’ He commanded them to keep horses and train their bodies by leaping onto them. We find in the two Ṣaḥīḥ collections from Anas ibn Mālik, however, that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘If any Muslim plants a plant or sows a crop and a bird, person or animal eat from it, it is ṣadaqah for him.’

Scholars say that Allah mentioned four types of wealth, and each type of wealth is the source of wealth for a certain group of people. Gold and silver enrich merchants. Fine horses are the wealth of kings. Flocks are the wealth of the people of the desert, and farmland is the wealth of the people of estates. So the trial of each group lies in the category by which he enriches himself. Women and children apply to all of them.

All that is merely the enjoyment of the life of this world.

This means that what they enjoy in it will vanish and not remain. Consequently one should be abstinent in this world and desire the Next World. Ibn Mājah and others reported from Ibn ‘Umar that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘This world is enjoyment, and the best of its enjoyment is a righteous woman.’ We find in a hadith: ‘Make do with little of this world and Allah will love you,’ referring to enjoying rank and wealth beyond what is absolutely necessary. The Prophet ﷺ said, ‘The son of Ādam only has a right to these three things: a house in which to live, a garment with which to clothe his nakedness, and plain bread and water.’ At-Tirmidhī transmitted it from al-Miqdām ibn Ma’dikarīb. Sahl ibn ‘Abdullāh was asked, ‘What makes it easy for a person to leave this world and all appetites?’ He replied, ‘His busying himself with that he is commanded to do.’

The best homecoming is in the presence of Allah.

Ma’āb is a place of return from the verb āba, ya’ūbu. A poet said:

Everyone absent returns

but the one absent through death does not return.

The root of māb is ma’wab and the vowel of the wāw has been changed into a hamzah and the alif has replaced the wāw as in the word maqāl. The entire āyah is meant to show the smallness and insignificance of this world and to encourage hope for a good return to Allah in the Next World.

فَلْ أَوْتِبْشَكُم بِخَيْرٍ مِّنْ ذَٰلِكُمْ لِلَّذِينَ اتَّقَوْا عِندَ رَبِّهِمْ جَنَّاتٌ
تَجْرِي مِنْ تَحْتِهَا الْأَنْهَارُ خَالِدِينَ فِيهَا وَأَرْوَاحٌ مُّطَهَّرَةٌ وَرِضْوَانٌ
مِّنَ اللَّهِ وَاللَّهُ بَصِيرٌ بِالْعِبَادِ ﴿١٥﴾

15 Say, ‘Shall I tell you of something better than that?’

The godfearing will have Gardens with their Lord, with rivers flowing under them, remaining in them timelessly, for ever, and purified wives, and the Pleasure of Allah.

Allah sees His slaves:

The question ends at ‘that’. ‘The godfearing’ is an advanced predicate and ‘Gardens’ is in the nominative by the inceptive. It is said that it ends at ‘with their Lord’ and ‘Gardens’ is in the nominative by an implied inceptive. It implies: ‘those are Gardens.’ By this interpretation ‘Gardens’ can be in the genitive instead of ‘better’. That is not permitted in the first interpretation.

Ibn ‘Atīyah said, ‘This āyah and the one before it are like the words of the Prophet ﷺ: “A woman can be married for four reasons: her wealth, her lineage, her beauty, and her religion. Seek the one with religion. May your hands be in the dust!” Muslim and others transmitted it. “Seek the one with religion” is an illustration of this āyah. Allah mentioned this āyah as solace for lack of this world and to strengthen the souls in abandoning it.’ The meaning of the words in this āyah were already discussed in al-Baqarah.

Ridwān (pleasure) is a verbal noun derived from riḍā. That is because when the people of the Garden enter it, Allah will say to them, ‘Do you want me to give you more?’ and they will answer, ‘Our Lord, what is better than this?’ He will say, ‘My pleasure so that I will never be angry with you again.’ Muslim transmitted it.

الَّذِينَ يَقُولُونَ رَبَّنَا آتِنَا أَمْنًا فَأَعْفِرْ لَنَا ذُنُوبَنَا وَوَقِّصْنَا عَذَابَ
النَّارِ ﴿١٦﴾ الصَّالِحِينَ وَالصَّادِقِينَ وَالْقَانِتِينَ وَالْمُنْفِقِينَ
وَالْمُسْتَغْفِرِينَ بِالْأَسْحَارِ ﴿١٧﴾

16 those who say, ‘Our Lord, we believe, so forgive us our wrong actions and safeguard us from the punishment of the Fire.’ 17 The steadfast, the truthful, the obedient, the givers, and those who seek forgiveness before dawn.

‘Those’ is an appositive for the prior ‘godfearing’. It can be in the nominative, meaning, ‘they are those,’ or in the accusative for praise. ‘Our Lord’ means ‘O Our Lord’. ‘We believe’ is ‘We assent and confirm’. Then there is a prayer for forgiveness,

The ‘steadfast’ are those who refrain from disobedience and their lower appetites. It is also said that it refers to being steadfast in acts of obedience. The ‘truthful’ are those who are true in both word and deed. The ‘qānitīn’ are the obedient. The ‘givers’ are those who spend in the Way of Allah. This was discussed in full in Sūrat al-Baqarah.

In this āyah Allah Almighty explains the states of the godfearing who are promised the Garden. There is disagreement about the meaning of ‘those who seek forgiveness before dawn.’ Anas ibn Mālik said that they are those who ask for forgiveness. Qatādah said that they are simply those who pray at that time. There is no contradiction here. Both groups both pray and ask for forgiveness. Dawn is singled out for mention because it is a time when the prayer is most likely to be accepted and a time when it is answered. The Messenger of Allah ﷺ said in the explanation of the words of the Almighty reporting from Ya‘qūb to his sons: ‘I will ask my Lord for forgiveness for you’ (12:98), that he delayed that until dawn. At-Tirmidhī transmitted it.

The Prophet ﷺ asked Jibrīl, ‘Which part of the night is best for being heard?’ He replied, ‘I do not know, but the Throne trembles at dawn.’ ‘Dawn’ is either saḥar or sahr. Az-Zajjāj said, ‘Saḥar is the time when the night retreats until the second dawn rises.’ Ibn Zayd said that it is the last sixth of last night.

The soundest of what is related by the Imāms is from Abū Hurayrah that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘Allah descends to the lowest heaven every night when the first third of the night has passed and says, “I am the King. I am the King. Who is there who calls on Me so that I can answer him? Who is there who asks me so that I can give to him? Who is there who asks My forgiveness so that I can forgive him?” That continues until dawn rises.’ (Muslim) There is disagreement about its interpretation. The best of what is said on it is what has come in an-Nasā’ī from Abū Hurayrah and Abū Sa’īd: ‘The Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, “Allah waits until the end of the first half of the night and then commands a caller who says, ‘Is there a caller who can be answered? Is there someone who asks for forgiveness so that he can be forgiven?’”’ Abū Muḥammad ‘Abd al-Ḥaqq says that it is sound and removes any ambiguity and clarifies any possibility. There is something elided after ‘first half of the night’ which is ‘an angel descends’. Success is by Allah. We dealt with this in Kitāb al-Asnā.

Additional point: Asking forgiveness is recommended and Allah praises those who ask forgiveness in this āyah and others, as in: ‘They would seek forgiveness before dawn.’ (51:18) Anas ibn Mālik said, ‘We were instructed to ask forgiveness seventy times at dawn.’ Sufyān ath-Thawrī said, ‘I have heard that in the first part of the night a caller calls for the obedient to stand, and they stand and pray until dawn. At dawn there is a call: “Where are those who ask for forgiveness?” and so those people ask for forgiveness. Other people rise and pray and join them. When dawn has entered, there is another call: “Will the heedless not rise?” and they rise from their beds like the dead are brought out of their graves.’

It is related that Anas said that he heard the Prophet ﷺ say, ‘Allah said, “I intended to punish the people of the earth and when I looked at those making My houses flourish, those who love one another for My sake, those who pray tahajjud at night and those who ask for forgiveness at dawn, I averted the punishment from them.” Makhūl said, ‘When there are fifteen men in a community asking forgiveness of Allah every day twenty-five times, Allah will not seize that community with a general punishment.’ Abū Nu‘aym mentioned that in al-Hilyah. Nāfi‘ said, ‘Ibn ‘Umar used to pray at night. He would ask, “Nāfi‘, is it dawn yet?” “No,” I would answer. He would continue to pray and then ask that question. When I said, “Yes,” he would sit asking for forgiveness.’ Ibrāhīm ibn Hāṭib related that his father said, ‘I heard a man in the corner of the mosque at dawn say, “O Lord! You commanded me and I obeyed. This is dawn, so forgive me.” I looked and it was Ibn Mas‘ūd.’

All the reports indicate that asking forgiveness should be done with the tongue and presence of the heart, and it does not mean, as Ibn Zayd said, those who pray the Ṣubḥ prayer in the group. Allah knows best. Luqmān said to his son, ‘My son, do not let the cock be cleverer than you, calling at dawn while you are still asleep.’

The preferred form of asking forgiveness is reported by al-Bukhārī via Shaddād ibn Aws from the Prophet ﷺ: ‘The best way to ask forgiveness is to say, “O Allah, You are my Lord. There is no god but You. You created me and I am Your slave. I comply with Your covenant and Your promise as much as I can. I seek refuge with you from the evil of what I have done. I acknowledge my sin, so forgive me. No one can forgive sins but You alone.”’ He continued, ‘Anyone who says this during the day having confidence in it and dies on that day before evening will be among the people of the Garden. Anyone who says it during the night having confidence in it and dies before morning will be among the people of the Garden.’ It is only in his Collection.

Abū Muḥammad ‘Abd al-Ghanī ibn Sa‘īd related from Ibn Lahī‘ah from Abū Ṣakhr from Abū Mu‘āwiyah from Sa‘īd ibn Jubayr from aṣ-Ṣahbā’ al-Bakrī from ‘Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ took ‘Alī’s hand and said, ‘Shall I teach you some words which, if you say them and your sins are as many as the tracks of ants, or the tracks of tiny ants, Allah will forgive you for them and you will be completely forgiven. They are: “O Allah, there is no god but You. Glory be to You. I have done evil and wronged myself, so forgive me. None can forgive wrong actions but You alone.”’

شَهِدَ اللَّهُ أَنَّهُ لَا إِلَهَ إِلَّا هُوَ وَالْمَلَائِكَةُ وَأُولُو الْعِلْمِ قَائِمًا
بِالْقِسْطِ لَا إِلَهَ إِلَّا هُوَ الْعَزِيزُ الْحَكِيمُ ﴿٥٠﴾

18 Allah bears witness that there is no god but Him, as do the angels and the people of knowledge, upholding justice. There is no god but Him, the Almighty, the All-Wise.

Sa‘īd ibn Jubayr said, ‘There were three hundred and sixty idols around the Ka‘bah, and when this āyah was revealed, they fell down in prostration.’ Al-Kalbī said, ‘When the Messenger of Allah ﷺ appeared in Madīnah, two of the rabbis of Syria travelled to him and when they saw Madīnah, one of them said to the other, “This city closely resembles the description of the city of the Prophet who will come at the end of time!” When they went to the Prophet ﷺ, they recognised him by his description and asked him, “Are you Muḥammad?” “Yes,” he replied. “You are Aḥmad?” they asked, and he said, “Yes.” They said, “We ask you about the clear testimony. If you tell it to us, we will believe in you and affirm you.” The Messenger of Allah ﷺ said to them, “Ask me.” They said, “Tell us the greatest testimony in the Book of Allah.” So Allah Almighty revealed to His Prophet ﷺ, “Allah bears witness that there is no god but Him, as do the angels and the people of knowledge, upholding justice,” and the two men became Muslim and affirmed the Messenger of Allah ﷺ.’

It is said that ‘the people of knowledge’ means the Prophets. Ibn Kaysān said, ‘It is the Muhājirūn and Anṣār.’ Muqātil said, ‘It is the believers of the People of the Book,’ and as-Suddī and al-Kalbī said that it is all believers. That is most likely because it is general.

This āyah is evidence of the excellence of knowledge and the nobility and excellence of scholars. If anyone had been nobler than scholars, Allah would have connected them to His name and the name of his angels, as He did scholars. He said to His Prophet ﷺ about the excellence of knowledge: Say: “Lord, increase me in knowledge.” (20:114) If there had been anything nobler than knowledge, then Allah would have commanded His Prophet ﷺ to ask for increase in it. The Prophet ﷺ said, ‘Scholars are the heirs of the Prophets,’ and ‘Scholars are the trustees of Allah over His creation.’ This honour for scholars is immense and their place in the dīn is important.

Hāfiẓ Abū Muḥammad ‘Abd al-Ghanī transmitted from Barakah ibn Nashīṭ, who is ‘Ankal ibn Ḥakārik, while the commentary is that of Barakah ibn Nashīṭ who was a ḥāfiẓ, from ‘Umar ibn al-Mu’ammil from Muḥammad ibn Abi-l-Khaṣīb from ‘Ankal from Muḥammad ibn Ishāq from Sharīk from Abū Ishāq from al-Barā’ that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘The people of knowledge are the heirs of the Prophets. The people of the heavens love them and the fish in the sea ask for their forgiveness from the time they die up until the Day of Rising.’ There is also a hadith about this from Abu-d-Dardā’ that Abū Dāwūd transmitted.

Ghālib al-Qaṭṭān reported, ‘I came to Kufa to trade and camped near al-A‘mash and I used to go and visit him. On the night when I wanted to go to Basra he was standing doing tahajjud reciting this āyah: “Allah bears witness that there is no god but Him...(to) Islam.” (3:18-19) Al-A‘mash said, “I testify to what Allah testified and I entrust to Allah this shahādah, and it is in Allah’s custody for me. The dīn with Allah is Islam.” He repeated that several times. I went to him and said good-bye and then said, “I heard you recite this āyah. What have you heard about it? I have been with you for a year and you did not convey it to me.” He said, “By Allah, I will tell it to you in a year’s time.” I got up and wrote that day on his door. When a year had passed, I said, “Abū Muḥammad, the year has passed.” He said, “Abū Wā’il reported to me from ‘Abdullāh ibn Mas‘ūd that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘The one who has it will be brought on the Day of Rising and Allah will say, “My slave entrusted it to me and I am more entitled to fulfil it. Admit My slave to the Garden.”’””

Abu-l-Faraj al-Jawzī said that Ghālib is Ghālib ibn Khaṭṭāf al-Qaṭṭān. He related this hadith from al-A‘mash and it is mu‘dal (perplexing). Ibn ‘Adī said that it is weak. Aḥmad ibn Ḥanbal said that Ghālib ibn Khaṭṭāf al-Qaṭṭān is very trustworthy. Ibn Ma‘īn said that he is trustworthy and Abū Ḥātim is righteous and truthful. You have enough proof of his integrity and trustworthiness in the fact that both al-Bukhārī and Muslim transmit from him in their books.

A hadith is reported from Anas in which the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘If someone recites: “Allah bears witness that there is no god but Him, as do the angels and the people of knowledge, upholding justice. There is no god but Him, the Almighty, the All-Wise” when he goes to sleep, Allah will create 70,000 angels asking forgiveness for him until the Day of Rising.’ It is said that whoever affirms this testimony firmly in his heart has established justice. It is related that Sa‘īd ibn Jubayr said, ‘There were three hundred and sixty idols around the Ka‘bah. Each sub-tribe of the Arabs had one or two idols. When this āyah was revealed, the idols fell in prostration to Allah.’

Allah bears witness that there is no god but Him, ‘Allah bears witness’ means ‘explains and informs.’ Someone testifies before a judge when he makes it clear and informs about someone who owes something and who is owed it. Az-Zajjāj said, ‘The witness is the one who informs about the thing and makes it clear.

So Allah directs us to His Oneness by what He created and made clear.’ Abū ‘Ubaydah said that it means, ‘Allah decides,’ i.e. informs. Ibn ‘Aṭīyah, however, says that this is rejected for various reasons.

Al-Kisā’ī recited ‘annahu’ and later ‘anna’d-dīn’. Al-Mubarrad said, ‘What it implied is: “The dīn with Allah is Islam which is that there is no god but Allah.”’ A bā’ which would normally be in the sentence (bi-anna) is elided. Islam explains the meaning of tawhīd. According to al-Kisā’ī, Ibn ‘Abbās recited ‘innahu, anna’d-dīn’, implying ‘Allah bears witness that the dīn in the sight of Allah is Islam.’ Then he begins a new sentence. Abū ‘l-Muhallab, a reciter, recited ‘shuhadā’a lillāh’ in the accusative for the ḥāl, but ‘shuhadā’u’ is also reported from him. Shu’bah related from ‘Āṣim from Zirr that Ubayy related that the Prophet ﷺ used to recite, ‘The dīn with Allah is the Ḥanīfiyyah, not Judaism, Christianity or Magianism.’ Abū Bakr al-Anbārī said, ‘It is evident to anyone with discrimination that these words spoken by the Prophet ﷺ are explanation and some of those who transmitted the hadith included it in the Qur’an.’

‘Upholding’ is in the accusative for the ḥāl which reinforces His Name in ‘Allah bears witness’ or ‘but Him’. Al-Farrā’ said that it is in the accusative for the break and so it is like the root, al-qā’im. When the alif-lām is cut off, then it is in the accusative. The reading of ‘Abdullah has ‘al-qā’imu bi’l-qist’ as an adjective. Qist is justice.

‘There is no god but Him’ is repeated because the first is in the position of a claim and testimony and the second is in the position of a ruling. Ja’far aṣ-Ṣādiq said, ‘The first is a description and tawhīd and the second is the notice and information, i.e. “Say: ‘There is no god but Allah, the Almighty, the All-Wise.’”’

إِنَّ الَّذِينَ عِنْدَ اللَّهِ لَإِيسَاءٌ لِّمَنْ يُكْفِرُ بِهٖمْ وَمَنْ يَكْفُرْ يَأْتِ اللَّهَ فَإِنَّ اللَّهَ سَرِيعُ
الْحِسَابِ ﴿٥٠﴾

19 The dīn with Allah is Islam. Those given the Book only differed after knowledge had come to them, envying one another. As for those who reject Allah's Signs, Allah is swift at reckoning.

The dīn with Allah is Islam.

In this āyah 'dīn' means obedience and religion (millah). Islam means faith and acts of obedience. Abu-l-ʿĀliyah said that and most mutakallimūn believe that. The basis for the different names for faith (īmān) and Islam is based on the hadith of Jibrīl. They can be used as synonyms, and so each of them is used for the other as we see in the hadith about the delegation of ʿAbd al-Qays in which he ﷺ commanded them to believe in Allah alone. He asked, 'Do you know what faith is?' They answered, 'Allah and His Messenger know best.' He said, 'It is to testify that there is no god but Allah and that Muḥammad is the Messenger of Allah, perform the prayer, pay zakāt, fast Ramadān and to pay a fifth of booty.' It is the same when he ﷺ says, 'There are about seventy branches of faith: the least of which is to remove something harmful from the road and the highest of which is the words: "There is no god but Allah."' At-Tirmidhī transmitted it. Muslim added, 'Modesty is a branch of faith.' They also blend together, so that one is used and the other is meant, just as this āyah includes affirmation and actions, and as the Prophet ﷺ said, 'Faith is affirmation with the heart, expression on the tongue and implementation of the pillars.' Ibn Mājah transmitted it. It has already been mentioned. What is true is the first statement where the basic facts and the Sharʿah are concerned. Anything further than that is just elaboration and Allah knows best.

Those given the Book only differed after knowledge had come to them.

Allah reports about the disagreement of the People of the Book and that it occurred when they already had knowledge of the truth and that it was due to envy and seeking this world. Ibn ʿUmar and others said that. There is change in the normal linguistic order here.

Al-Akhfash said that means: those who were given the Book only differed out of envy of one another after knowledge had come to them.

Muḥammad ibn Ja‘far ibn az-Zubayr said, ‘It is the Christians who are being referred to in this āyah. It is to rebuke the Christians of Najrān.’ Ar-Rabi‘ ibn Anas said, ‘What is meant are the Jews.’ The expression ‘those given the Book’ includes both Jews and Christians. They only differed about the Prophethood of Muḥammad ﷺ ‘after knowledge had come to them,’ meaning the clarification of his description and Prophethood in their Books. It is also said that it means: ‘those who were given the Gospel only differed about ‘Īsā, and split into sects, after the knowledge had reached them that Allah is one and ‘Īsā is the slave of Allah and His Messenger.’

فَإِنْ حَاجُّوكَ فَقُلْ أَسْلَمْتُ وَتَجَمَّيْتُ بِهِ وَمَنْ إِيْتَبَعَنِي ۖ وَقُلْ لِلَّذِينَ أُوتُوا الْكِتَابَ
وَالْأُمِّيِّينَ ۖ أَسْلَمْتُ فَإِنْ أَسْلَمُوا فَقَدِ اهْتَدَوْا وَإِنْ تَوَلَّوْا فَإِنَّمَا عَلَيْكَ
الْبَلْغُ وَاللَّهُ بِصَيْرُ الْعِبَادِ ۝

20 If they argue with you, say, ‘I have submitted myself completely to Allah, and so have all who follow me.’ Say to those given the Book and those who have no Book, ‘Have you become Muslim?’ If they become Muslim, they have been guided. If they turn away, you are only responsible for transmission. Allah sees His slaves.

If they argue with you, say, ‘I have submitted myself (lit. my face) completely to Allah’

This means: ‘If they argue using false statements and errors, then base yourself on what you are duty bound to believe and convey, and Allah will help you.’ ‘My face’ means ‘myself’ as in the hadith, ‘I (literally “my face”) have prostrated to the One who created me and formed me.’ It is said that here ‘face’ means intention. This was already discussed in full in al-Baqarah. The first is more likely. ‘Face’ is used to designate the entire Essence since it is the noblest part of the person and the focus of the senses. A poet said:

I have submitted myself (‘my face’) to the One to Whom the clouds bearing rain submit.

Proficient mutakallimūn say that His words ‘the Face of your Lord will remain’ (55:27) mean the Essence. It is said that it is action by which His pleasure (face) is intended.

In ‘who follow me’ the ‘who’ is in the position of the nominative, added to the ‘I’ in ‘I have submitted’, meaning ‘those who follow me have submitted’. It is possible that it is added to the nominative pronoun without stressing the gap between them. Nāfi‘, Abū ‘Amr and Ya‘qūb keep the yā’ in ‘follow me’ as in the root. The rest elide it, following the written Qur’an where it is written without a yā’.

Say to those given the Book and those who have no Book, ‘Have you become Muslim?’

“Those given the Book” means the Jews and Christians and “those who have no Book” means those who have no Scripture, in other words the Arab idolaters. ‘Have you become Muslim?’ is a question which needs affirmation and also implies a command, meaning, ‘Become Muslim.’ Aṭ-Ṭabarī and others said that. Az-Zajjāj says that it is a threat, and this is good because the meaning then is: ‘Have you become Muslim or not?’ The expression is then used in the past tense to stress the report about them being guided. It is said that the words ‘you are only responsible for transmission’ were abrogated by jihād. Ibn ‘Aṭīyah said that this requires having knowledge of the history of its revelation. As for the apparent meaning of the revelation of these āyahs about the delegation of Najrān, the meaning is: ‘You must convey what has been revealed to you about fighting and other things.’

21 As for those who reject Allah's Signs, and kill the Prophets without any right to do so, and kill those who command justice, give them news of a painful punishment. 22 They are the ones whose actions come to nothing in this world or the Next World. They will have no helpers.

As for those who reject Allah's Signs and kill the Prophets

Abu-l-'Abbās al-Mubarrad said, 'Some of the tribe of Israel had Prophets come to them and call them to Allah, but they killed them. Some believers came afterwards and commanded them to submit and they killed them too. It was about them that this āyah was revealed.' So Ma'qil ibn Abī Miskīn said, 'The Prophets used to come to the tribe of Israel without a Book and they killed them. Some people who followed them stood and commanded justice and were killed.' Ibn Mas'ūd reported that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, 'Evil are people who kill other people who command to justice. Evil are people who do not command the right and forbid the wrong. Evil are people among whom a believer has to dissemble.' Abū 'Ubaydah ibn al-Jarrāh reported that the Prophet ﷺ said, 'The tribe of Israel killed forty-three Prophets at the beginning of the day in one hour; one hundred and twelve of the worshippers of the tribe of Israel rose and commanded the right and forbade the wrong and they killed them all at the end of the day. They are mentioned in this āyah.' Al-Mahdawī and others mentioned this. Shu'bah related from Abū Ishāq from Abū 'Ubaydah that 'Abdullāh said, 'The tribe of Israel used to kill seventy Prophets on a single day and then set up their vegetable market at the end of the day. If someone says that those who were being warned about this did not actually kill a Prophet, the answer is that they agreed with those who did the killing and so they were in the same position as them. They also sought the Prophet ﷺ and his Companions and wanted to kill them. Allah says about them: “When those who disbelieve were plotting against you to imprison you or kill you.” (8:30)’

This āyah indicates that commanding the right and forbidding the wrong was mandatory for past nations. It is the lesson of the Message and the caliphal task of Prophethood. Al-Ḥasan reported that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘Whoever commands the right or forbids the wrong is Allah’s caliph on His earth and the caliph of His Messenger and the caliph of his Book.’ Durrah bint Abī Lahab said, ‘A man came to the Prophet ﷺ when he was on the minbar and asked, “Who is the best of people, Messenger of Allah?” He replied, “The one who commands the right and forbids the wrong, has the most fear of Allah, and maintains his ties of kinship.”’

We read in the Revelation: ‘The men and women of the hypocrites are as bad as one another. They command what is wrong and forbid what is right.’ (9:67) Then Allah says: ‘The men and women of the believers are friends of one another. They command what is right and forbid what is wrong.’ (9:71) Allah made the fact of commanding the right and forbidding the wrong the measure of the difference between the believers and the hypocrites. This indicates that the most specific of the believer’s qualities is commanding the right and forbidding the wrong, and their summit is calling to Islam and fighting for it. Commanding the right is not suitable for everyone. The ruler undertakes it since he establishes the ḥudūd and he punishes according to his opinion and imprisons, exiles or banishes. In every town he sets up a strong righteous man with knowledge and trustworthiness and commands him to see that the ḥudūd are carried out, but without excess. Allah says: ‘...those who, if We establish them firmly on the earth, will establish the prayer and pay zakāt, and command the right and forbid the wrong.’ (22:41)

The people of the Sunnah say that it is not a precondition for the one who forbids the wrong to be upright, as opposed to innovators who say, ‘Only the upright can do it.’ This is discarded because justice is only found in a few people while commanding the right and forbidding the wrong is general to all people. If they counter with the words of Allah: ‘Do you order people to devoutness and forget yourselves?’ (2:44) and: ‘It is abhorrent to Allah that you should say what you do not do’ (61:3) and the like, they are told, ‘Censure here is about committing what is forbidden, not forbidding the wrong. There is no doubt that the prohibition is uglier when it comes from someone who does what is prohibited than from someone who does not do it.’ That is why he will go around in Hell like a donkey around a millstone as we explained in al-Baqarah (2:44).

The Muslims agree about what Ibn ‘Abd al-Barr mentioned: that when there is something wrong, it is an obligation on everyone who is able to do it to change it. If changing it is only a matter of censure which does not lead to harm that should not prevent them from changing it. If someone cannot change it physically, then they should do so with their tongue. If they cannot do that, then with their heart if they can do no more than that. If someone objects with their heart, they have done what they must do if they cannot do more than that.

The hadiths from the Prophet ﷺ very often stress commanding the right and forbidding the wrong, but that is limited to one’s ability. Al-Ḥasan said, ‘If someone speaks to a believer, he hopes for a good result. If he speaks to someone ignorant, it is to teach him. If someone draws his sword or whip and says, “Fear me! Fear me!” then you should have nothing to do with him.’ Ibn Mas‘ūd said, ‘It is enough for a man, when he sees something objectionable which he cannot change, that Allah knows that he dislikes it in his heart.’ Ibn Lahī‘ah related from al-A‘raj from Abū Hurayrah that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘It is not lawful for a believer to humble himself.’ They asked, ‘Messenger of Allah, what is humbling oneself?’ He replied, ‘Exposing himself to affliction which he cannot bear.’ Ibn Mājah transmitted this from ‘Alī ibn Zayd ibn Jid‘ān from al-Ḥasan ibn Jundub from Ḥudhayfah from the Prophet ﷺ. Something can be said about both transmissions.

It is related that one of the Companions said, ‘When a man sees something wrong which he cannot do anything about, he should say three times, “O Allah, this is wrong.” Then he has done what he must.’ Ibn al-‘Arabī claimed that if someone hopes to remove a wrong but fears that if he does that he will be beaten or killed, most scholars say that he is permitted to embark on that in the face of that uncertainty. If he does not hope to remove it, then what is the point? Then he added, ‘What I believe is that if someone is sincere in his intention, he should embark on doing it without caring about the consequences.’ This differs from the consensus which Abū ‘Umar mentioned. This āyah indicates that it is permitted to command the good and forbid the wrong even if one fears being killed. The Almighty says: ‘Command what is right and forbid what is wrong and be steadfast in the face of all that happens to you.’ (31:17) This alludes to being harmed.

The Imāms relate that Abū Sa‘īd al-Khudrī said, ‘I heard the Messenger of Allah ﷺ say, “Whoever of you sees something wrong should change it with his hand; if he cannot, then with his tongue; if he cannot, then with his heart, and that is the weakest form of belief.”’

Scholars say that changing with the hand is for the rulers, with the tongue for the scholars and with the heart for the weak, i.e. common people. If the wrong can be removed with the tongue by forbidding it, then one should do that. If the only way to achieve it is through punishment and killing, it should be done. If it can be removed without killing, then it is not permissible to kill. This is taken from the words of the Almighty: ‘Fight the attackers until they revert to Allah’s command.' (49:9) That is the basis for what scholars say about when a person defends himself against someone who attacks their person, or property, or the person and property of someone else: someone may do that and nothing can be held against him. If Zayd sees 'Umar trying to take Bakr's property, he must defend it if the owner is unable to do so or is not happy about it. It is said that the people of any town containing the following four individuals are protected from affliction: a just ruler who does not wrong, a scholar who is on the path of guidance, shaykhs who command the right and forbid the wrong and encourage seeking knowledge and the Qur'an, and women who are covered and do not display themselves in the way they used to in the Jāhiliyyah.

Anas ibn Mālik said, 'The Messenger of Allah ﷺ was asked, "When will we abandon commanding the right and forbidding the wrong?" He replied, "When there appears among you what appeared among earlier communities." We asked, "Messenger of Allah, what appeared among the nations before us?" He replied, "When power is in the hands of your young people, lewdness in your great people, and knowledge in your base people." Zayd said that this means that knowledge is with the impious. Ibn Mājah transmitted it. More about this will come in al-Mā'idah, Allah willing. The meaning of the expression 'come to nothing' was mentioned in al-Baqarah.

 اللَّهُ لِيَحْكُمَ بَيْنَهُمْ ثُمَّ يَتَوَلَّى فِرْقًا مِّنْهُمْ وَهُمْ مُّعْرِضُونَ ﴿١٣١﴾

23 Do you not see those who have been given a portion of the Book being invited to let Allah's Book be the judge between them? But then a group of them turn away.

Ibn 'Abbās said, 'This āyah was revealed because the Messenger of Allah ﷺ entered the Jewish study house where there was a group of Jews and called them to Allah. Nu‘aym ibn ‘Umar and al-Ḥārith ibn Zayd asked him, “What religion are you following, Muhammad?” The Prophet ﷺ replied, “I follow the religion of Ibrāhīm.” They said, “Ibrāhīm was a Jew.” The Prophet ﷺ said, “Bring the Torah. It is between us and you.” They refused and this āyah was revealed.’

An-Naqqāsh mentioned that it was revealed because a group of Jews denied the Prophethood of Muḥammad ﷺ. The Prophet ﷺ told them, ‘Bring the Torah. There is a description of me in it.’ They refused. Most recite ‘judge’ as ‘yaḥkuma’ while Abū Ja‘far Yazīd ibn al-Qa‘qā‘ recited ‘yuhkama’. The first reading is better because of what is in 45:29.

This āyah contains proof of the obligation of someone summoned to present his case before the judge because he has been called to the Book of Allah. If he does not do it, he opposes what is specifically incumbent on him in terms of restraining people by discipline. This occurs with us in Andalusia and the Maghrib, but not in Egypt. This ruling is explained in Sūrat an-Nūr: ‘When they are summoned to Allah and His Messenger so that he can judge between them, a group of them immediately turn away ... No, it is simply that they are wrongdoers.’ (24:48-50)

Az-Zahrāwī reported from al-Ḥasan that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘If someone’s opponent calls him to a Muslim judge and he does not respond, he is a wrongdoer with no right.’ Ibn al-‘Arabī said that this hadith is false but the words ‘he is a wrongdoer’ are sound but the words ‘with no right’ are not sound. It is possible that it means he is based on something that is not right. Ibn Khuwayzimandād al-Mālikī said, ‘It is mandatory for everyone who is summoned to the assembly of the judge to respond as long as he does not know the judge to be impious or known to have enmity towards the claimant or defendant.’

It contains evidence that the laws of the Sharī‘ahs that came before us are binding on us except for what we know to be abrogated, and it is mandatory for us to judge by the laws of the Prophets before us as will be clarified. We do not read the Torah or act on what is in it because it is not in the possession of those who are trustworthy regarding it and because they have changed it. If we know that something in it has not been altered or changed, then it would be permitted for us to recite it. It is related that ‘Umar said to Ka‘b, ‘If you know that it is the Torah which was revealed to Mūsā ibn ‘Imrān, I will recite it.’ He knew what had not been changed in it and that is why he called them to judge by it. It is said that the āyah was revealed about that and Allah knows best.

ذَٰلِكَ بِأَنَّهُمْ قَالُوا لَنْ نَمَسَّ النَّارَ إِلَّا أَيَّامًا مَّعْدُودَاتٍ وَعَظَّمُوا فِي
دِينِهِمْ مَا كَانُوا يَفْتَرُونَ ﴿٢٤﴾

24 That is because they say, ‘The Fire will only touch us for a number of days.’ Their inventions have deluded them in their dīn.

This indicates their turning away, turning their backs and being deluded in what they said, as in their words, ‘We are Allah’s children and His loved ones.’ (5:18) The meaning of the expression ‘a number of days’ was discussed in al-Baqarah.

لَا يُظْلَمُونَ ﴿٢٥﴾

25 But how will it be when We gather them all together for a Day about which there is no doubt? Every self will be paid in full for what it earned. They will not be wronged.

This is addressed to the Prophet ﷺ and his community by way of restraint and wonder: ‘How will they be, or what will they do, when they are gathered on the Day of Rising and the falseness of those lies they told in this world is unmasked and they are repaid for what they earned by their disbelief, audacity and wrongdoing?’ The lām connected to ‘Day’ means ‘on (a Day)’ according to al-Kisā’ī. The Basrans say that it means ‘for the reckoning of a Day’. Aṭ-Ṭabarī said: ‘for what will happen on a Day.’

قُلْ اَللّٰهُمَّ مَلِكُ الْمَلِكِ تُوْتِي الْمَلِكَ مِنْ تَشَاءَ وَتَنْزِيحُ الْمَلِكِ عَنِ تَشَاءَ
وَتُعْزُزُ مَنْ تَشَاءُ وَتُذَلُّ مَنْ تَشَاءُ بِيَدِكَ الْخَيْرُ اِنَّكَ عَلٰى كُلِّ شَيْءٍ قَدِيْرٌ ﴿٣٧﴾

26 Say, ‘O Allah! Master of the Kingdom! You give sovereignty to whomever You will You take sovereignty from whomever You will. You exalt whomever You will You abase whomever You will. All good is in Your hands. You have power over all things.

‘Alī reported that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘When Allah wanted to reveal the Fātihah of the Book, the Āyat al-Kursī, and “Say, ‘O Allah! Master of the Kingdom ...’ to ‘... without any reckoning’,” they were suspended from the Throne and there was no veil between them and Allah. They said, “Our Lord, do not send us down to the abode of wrongdoing and to those who disobey You.” Allah said, “By My Sight and My Majesty, no one will recite you after every prayer, but that I will make him dwell in the Preserve of Sanctity for doing that and look at him with My hidden Eye seventy times day and grant seventy of his needs every day, the least of which is forgiveness, and give him refuge from every enemy and help him, and nothing but death keeps him from entering the Garden.”

Mu‘ādh ibn Jabal said, ‘One day I was prevented from being with the Prophet ﷺ and did not pray Jumu‘ah with him. He asked, “Mu‘ādh! What kept you from the Jumu‘ah prayer?” I answered, “Messenger of Allah, I owe the Jew, Yuḥannā ibn Bārā, an ūqiyyah of gold and he is waiting for me at my door. I feared he would keep me from you.” He said, “Mu‘ādh, do you want Allah to settle your debt for you?” “Yes,” I replied. He said, “Say every day: ‘Say, “O Allah! Master of the Kingdom ...to... without any reckoning” (3:27), You are the All-Merciful and Most Merciful to this world and the Next. You give of them to whomever You wish and deny them to whomever You wish. Settle My debt for me!” Even if you owe the like of this world in gold, Allah will settle it for you.”

Ḥāfīz Abū Nu‘aym transmitted that ‘Aṭā’ al-Khurasānī reported that Mu‘ādh ibn Jabal said, ‘The Messenger of Allah ﷺ taught me some āyahs of the Qur’an – or words – which are such that there is no Muslim on the earth who uses them for supplication when he is distressed by debt, but that Allah will settle it for him and alleviate his worry. I reckon that he mentioned it from the Prophet ﷺ.’ It is a gharīb hadith of ‘Aṭā’ who has it mursal from Mu‘ādh.

Ibn ‘Abbās and Anas ibn Mālik said, ‘When the Messenger of Allah ﷺ conquered Makkah and promised his community the kingdoms of Persia and Byzantium, the hypocrites and Jews said, “Unlikely! Unlikely! How can Muḥammad lay claim to Persia and Byzantium! They are too mighty and unassailable for that! Are not Makkah and Madīnah enough for Muḥammad so that now he desires the kingdoms of Persia and Byzantium?” Then Allah revealed this āyah.’

It is said that it was revealed to refute the falsehood of the Christians of Najrān when they said that ‘Īsā was God. That is because it is evident to every person with a sound nature that ‘Īsā did not possess any of these qualities. Ibn Ishāq said, and Allah knows best, that this āyah is about their obstinacy and disbelief and that ‘Īsā was given Signs from Allah as proof of his Prophethood that took the form of bringing the dead to life and other things while Allah alone is the One who does these things as He says: You give sovereignty to whomever You will. You take sovereignty from whomever You will. You exalt whomever You will. You abase whomever You will,’ and You merge the night into the day. You merge the day into the night. You bring the living from the dead. You bring out the dead from the living. You provide for whomever You will without any reckoning.’ If ‘Īsā had been God, he would have done that and that would have been considered a sign.

Say, ‘O Allah! Master of the Kingdom!

Grammarians disagree about ‘Allahumma’ while they agree that the hā' has a ḍammah, the mīm is double with a fathah and that it is vocative. It is also found with a single mīm as we see in a poem of al-A'shā. Al-Khalīl, Sībawayh and all the Basrans say that the root is: 'Yā 'llāhu' and when the verb is used without the vocative particle 'yā', they replace it with this doubled mīm. These two mīms replace the two letters yā-alif. The ḍammah on the hā' is the ḍammah of the noun which is in the singular vocative. Al-Farrā' and the Kufans believe that the root is 'Yā 'llāhu ummanā bi-khayr' (O Allah, lead us in good) and there is elision and the two words mixed together. The ḍammah on the hā' is the ḍammah of 'ummanā' and when the hamzah is elided, then the voweling moves. An-Naḥḥās says that according to the Basrans this is a grave error and that the best position on that is what al-Khalīl and Sībawayh said. Az-Zajjāj said, 'It is impossible to omit the ḍammah, which indicates the singular vocative, and the ḍammah of 'umm' to be put onto the name of Allah. This is denial of the name of Allah Almighty.' Ibn 'Aṭīyah said, 'This is an error on the part of az-Zajjāj. He claimed that he had never heard, "Yā Allāhu umm"' and that the Arabs do not say, "Ya-llahumma."'

The Kufans say that the vocative particle is added to 'Allahumma' as 'Yā Allahumma' and quote poems illustrating that. [Poetry] They state that if the mīm had replaced the vocative particle, they would not be together. Az-Zajjāj said, 'This is aberrant and it is not known who said it. One does not abandon what is in the Book of Allah and all the collection of the Arabs.' [POETRY] The Kufans said that a single mīm is added to some words, but not a double mīm.

Some grammarians say that what the Kufans said is an error because if it had been as they said, it would be necessary to only say 'Allahumma' alone because there is a supplication with it, but you say, 'Allahumma-r-Razzāq'. If it had been as they claim, then the two would have been separated.

An-Naḍr ibn Shumayl said, 'Whoever says, "Allahumma" has called on Allah with all His Names.' Al-Ḥasan said, "'Allahumma" is a comprehensive supplication.’

Qatādah said, ‘I heard that the Prophet ﷺ asked Allah to give his community the kingdom of Persia and Allah revealed this āyah.’ Muqātil said, ‘The Prophet ﷺ asked Allah to give him the kingdoms of Persia and Byzantium as part of his community and Allah taught him to make this supplication.’

‘Master’ is a second vocative according to Sībawayh. It is like Allah’s words: ‘Say: “O Allah, Originator of the heavens and the earth.”’ (39:46) He says that it cannot describe ‘Allahumma,’ but Muḥammad ibn Yazīd and Ibrāhīm ibn as-Sarī az-Zajjāj disagreed and said that in syntax it is an adjective of the name of Allah and the same is true of 39:46.

The word ‘mulk’ here means Prophethood according to Mujāhid. It is said it means victory, and it is said that it means wealth and slaves. Az-Zajjāj said that it refers to the master of people and what they own. It is said that it means the Master of this world and the Next. It is also said that sovereignty means faith and Islam, meaning, ‘You give it to whomever You wish.’ The same is true of what follows as there is some natural elision in the words. [Poetry] Az-Zajjāj says that it means that Allah does whatever He wishes with people.

You exalt whomever You will. You abase whomever You will.

‘Exalt’ means to make high, overcoming and conquering as in the phrase: ‘He got the better of me (‘azzanī) with his words.’ (38:23) ‘Abase’ is to cause to be overcome, overpowered and conquered. Ṭarafah said:

A man slow in noble affairs, quick in what is unseemly, humiliated in the gathering of the men, an outcast.

All good is in Your hands.

This means that all good and evil is in Your hands, and there is some elision in the words. It is said that ‘good’ is singled out because it is what people supplicate for and desire. An-Naqqāsh said that it means victory and booty.

The people of indications said that Abū Jahl was very wealthy but was cast into the well at Badr. The poor – Ṣuhayb, Bilāl and Khabbāb – had no wealth; their wealth was faith. ‘Say: “O Allah! Master of the Kingdom! You give sovereignty to whomever You will.”’ The Messenger was an orphan in the care of Abū Ṭālib in the beginning and then he later called to the bodies thrown into the pit: ‘O ‘Utbah! O Shaybah! “You exalt whomever You will and You abase whomever You will.”’ He was referring to Ṣuhayb and Bilāl. ‘Do not believe that We denied you in this world because We hate you.’

You have power over all things.

His blessing is universal and He gives blessing to whomever He wishes.

تُوجِبُ اللَّيْلَ فِي النَّهَارِ وَتُوجِبُ النَّهَارَ فِي اللَّيْلِ وَتُخْرِجُ الْحَيَّ مِنَ الْمَيِّتِ وَتُخْرِجُ
 الْمَيِّتَ مِنَ الْحَيِّ وَتَرْزُقُ مَنْ نَشَاءُ بِغَيْرِ حِسَابٍ ﴿٥١﴾

27 You merge the night into the day. You merge the day into the night. You bring out the living from the dead. You bring out the dead from the living. You provide for whoever You will without any reckoning.’

Ibn ‘Abbās, Mujāhid, al-Ḥasan, Qatāda and as-Suddī said that ‘merging the day into the night...’ means ‘We put the decrease of one into the lengthening of the other and so if the night has fifteen hours, which is longer, the day has nine hours, which is shorter.’ ‘Merge the day into the night’ is the same. That is what al-Kalbī said, and it is related from Ibn Mas‘ūd. It is also possible that the words simply mean that the night and day follow one another. One goes and then the other comes.

Commentators disagree about the meaning of ‘You bring out the living from the dead.’ Al-Ḥasan said that it means: ‘bring the believer out from the unbeliever and the unbeliever from the believer.’ Something similar is related from Salmān al-Fārisī. Ma‘mar related from az-Zuhrī that the Prophet ﷺ went to his wives and found a woman of beautiful appearance there. He asked, ‘Who is this?’ They answered, ‘One of your aunts.’ He asked, ‘Who is she?’ They replied, ‘Khālīdah bint al-Aswad ibn ‘Abd Yaghūth.’ The Prophet ﷺ said, ‘Glory be to the One who brings the living from the dead!’ She was a righteous woman and her father was an unbeliever.

What is meant by this is the death of the heart of the unbeliever and life of the heart of the believer, and so life and death are used metaphorically. Some scholars believe that life and death here are real. ‘Ikrimah said, ‘It is the emergence of the live chick from the egg which is dead, and the emergence of the egg, which is dead, from the live chicken.’ Ibn Mas‘ūd said that it is the sperm, which is dead, that emerges from the man who is alive, and the man who emerges living from it when it itself is dead. ‘Ikrimah and as-Suddī also said, ‘It is the grain from ear and the ear from the grain. The kernel emerges from the palm tree and the palm tree emerges from the kernel. Life is likened to the palm and the ear.’ ‘You provide for whoever You will’ means without constriction or stinting, as in ‘He gives without reckoning.’

 ذَلِكَ فَلَيْسَ مِنَ اللَّهِ فِي شَيْءٍ إِلَّا أَنْ تَتَّقُوا مِنْهُمْ تُقْيَةً وَيُحَذِّرُكُمُ اللَّهُ
 نَفْسَهُ وَإِلَى اللَّهِ الْمَصِيرُ ﴿٢٨﴾

28 The believers should not take unbelievers as friends rather than believers. Anyone who does that has nothing to do with Allah at all – unless it is because you are afraid of them. Allah advises you to be afraid of Him. Allah is the final destination.

The believers should not take unbelievers as friends rather than believers.

Ibn ‘Abbās said, ‘Allah forbade the believers to be friendly towards the unbelievers and take them as friends.’ This accords with His words: ‘Do not take any outside yourselves as intimates.’ (3:118) The words:

'He has nothing to do with Allah' means that he is not part of the party of Allah or among His friends. It is like the words in Surah Yusuf: '... ask the town' (12:82). Then Allah makes an exception:

unless it is because you are afraid of them.

Mu'ādh ibn Jabal and Mujāhid said, 'This is taqiyyah in the Path of Islam before the Muslims were strong. Today, however, Allah has made Islam strong so that there is no need to dissemble before the enemy.' Ibn 'Abbās said, 'It is that someone says something with his tongue while his heart is in fact at peace in faith. Such a person should not be killed and does not commit a wrong action.' Al-Ḥasan said, 'Taqiyyah is permissible for human beings until the Day of Rising but taqiyyah may not be used as a justification for killing.' Jābir ibn Zayd, Mujāhid and aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk recited 'taqiyyah' rather than 'tuqāh'.

It is said that if a believer is abiding among the unbelievers, he can flatter them with his tongue, if he fears for himself, as long as his heart is at peace with faith. Taqiyyah is only lawful when there is fear of being killed, amputation or great injury. If someone is forcibly compelled to disbelief, the sound position is that he can be firm and refuse to articulate disbelief, but it is permitted for him to do that as will come in an-Nahl, Allah willing. Ḥamzah and al-Kisā'ī pronounce 'tuqāh' with imālah while the rest make it emphatic. The root of 'tuqāh' is 'wuqayah' on the measure fu'alah and the wāw has been changed into a tā' and the yā' into an alif.

Aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk reported from Ibn 'Abbās that this āyah was revealed about 'Ubādah ibn aṣ-Ṣāmit al-Anṣārī, who was a godfearing man who had been at the Battle of Badr. He had an alliance with the Jews. When the Prophet ﷺ went out on the Day of the Parties, 'Ubādah said, 'Prophet of Allah, I have five hundred men of the Jews with me. I thought that they should come out with me and I can use them to defeat the enemy.' Allah revealed, 'The believers should not take...' It is also said that it was revealed about 'Ammār ibn Yāsir when he said some of what the unbelievers forced him to say as will be mentioned in an-Nahl.

Allah advises you to beware of Him.

Az-Zajjāj said, ‘Allah cautions you about Himself.’ The Almighty says, quoting the words of Sayyidina ‘Isa: ‘You know what is in my self but I do not know what is in Your Self.’ (5:116) It means: ‘You know what I have and what my reality is but I do not know what You have and what Your reality is.’ Others say that it means to be afraid of His punishment. ‘You know what is in my self’ is what is concealed of me. ‘Allah is the final destination’ means that the end will be Allah’s repayment of one’s actions. This affirms the Resurrection.

قُلْ إِنْ تَخْفَوْنَ مَا فِي صُدُورِكُمْ أَوْ تُبْدُوهُ يُعَلِّمَهُ اللَّهُ وَيَعْلَمَ مَا فِي السَّمَوَاتِ
وَمَا فِي الْأَرْضِ وَاللَّهُ عَلَى كُلِّ شَيْءٍ قَدِيرٌ ﴿٥١﴾

29 Say, ‘Whether you conceal what is in your breasts or make it known, Allah knows it. He knows what is in the heavens and what is on earth. Allah has power over all things.’

He knows the secrets in the hearts and what they contain as well as what is in the heavens and the earth. He is the Knower of the unseen worlds and nothing whatsoever is hidden from Him.

يَوْمَ يَجِدُ كُلُّ نَفْسٍ مَّا عَمِلَتْ مِنْ خَيْرٍ مُخْتَصَرًا وَمَا عَمِلَتْ مِنْ سُوءٍ تَوَدُّ لَوْ أَنَّ بَيْنَهَا
وَبَيْنَهُ أَمَدًا بَعِيدًا وَيُحَذِّرُكُمُ اللَّهُ نَفْسَهُ وَاللَّهُ رَءُوفٌ بِالْعِبَادِ ﴿٥٢﴾

30 On the Day that each self finds the good it did, and the evil it did, present there in front of it, it will wish there were an age between it and then. Allah advises you to beware of Him. Allah is Ever-Gentle with His slaves.

The word ‘Day’ is in the accusative as it is governed by the verb in ‘Allah advises you’ while some say it is connected to ‘Allah is the final destination’ or to ‘Allah has power over all things.’ It is possible for it to be a stop and imply an elided ‘Remember the day...’ It is like Allah’s words: ‘Allah is Almighty, Exactor of Revenge. On the Day the earth is changed.’ (14:47-48) The word ‘present’ is a ḥāl modifying an elided pronoun from the connective mā. It implies: ‘On the Day each self finds the good it did present.’ This is on the basis that the verb wajada means ‘to find’, as one finds a lost camel. The second mā is added to the first, and the words ‘it will wish’ is a ḥāl modifying the second mā.

If you make ‘tajīd’ mean ‘you know’, then ‘present’ is the second object, and ‘wish’ is also in the position of a second object. It would imply: ‘On the Day that each self knows the repayment for what it did present before it.’ It is permitted for the second mā to be in the nominative by the inceptive and ‘wish’ to be in the nominative as the predicate of the inceptive and it is not permitted then for mā to mean repayment because ‘wish’ is then nominative. If it had been in the past tense, it could be repayment and the words would mean: ‘Any evil you did, you will wish that there had been an age between it and that,’ in other words like the distance between the east and west. When the future has mā as a precondition, it is only in the jussive. It would imply the elision of a fā, and would imply: whatever evil it did, then it would wish. Abū ‘Alī said, ‘In my view it is analogous to what al-Farrā’ said about His words, exalted is He, “If you obeyed them you would then be idolators” (Sūrat al-An‘ām 6:121) that it is based on the elision of the fā.’

‘Amad’ (age) is the end and the plural is āmād. ‘One says, ‘He overcame the leader (istawla-l-amad).’ An-Nābighah said:

Except one like you or one you precede as the steed comes first when overcoming the leader.

Amad also means anger, and the verb amida is to be angry.

قُلْ إِنْ كُنْتُمْ تُحِبُّونَ اللَّهَ فَاتَّبِعُونِي يُحْبِبْكُمُ اللَّهُ وَيَغْفِرْ لَكُمْ ذُنُوبَكُمْ وَاللَّهُ
 غَفُورٌ رَحِيمٌ

Ḥubb and maḥabbah mean ‘love’ as does ‘ḥibb’, which can also mean ‘beloved’ like khidn and khadīn. Both aḥabba and ḥabba are verbs meaning ‘to love’. When one says aḥabbahu the one loved is muḥabb and when one says ḥabbahu, yaḥibbuhu the one loved is maḥbūb. Al-Jawharī said that this is aberrant because a passive participle does not have a kasrah on the middle letter. Abu-l-Faḥ said, ‘The root in it is ḥabuba and the bā’ is silent and elided into the second. Ibn ad-Dahhān Sa‘īd said that there are two dialectical usages of ḥabba: ḥabba and aḥabba. The evidence that here it is aḥabba is that the same form is also used in 5:54 and 3:31. Ḥabba relates to fa‘ūla because of the saying ḥabīb and to fa‘īla because of the saying maḥbūb. There is no active participle of ḥabba and so one never says, ‘I am a ḥābb.’ The passive participle of the IV form only occurs rarely, such as his words:

...with me he has the rank of the honoured beloved (muḥabb).

Abu Zayd cited ḥababtuhu uḥibbuhu and recited:

For by Allah if not for his dates I would not have loved (ḥababtuhu) him and he was not less than ‘Uwayf and Hāshim.

And he recited:

By your life, I and the demands of a great metropolis are like the one who grows in distance because of what he loves (ḥabba).

Al-Aṣma‘ī cited fathāh on the letter of the present/future along with yā’ alone (yaḥabbu).

Ḥubb is also the name for a jar in Persian which has been arabicised. Its plural is ḥibāb and ḥibabah. Al-Jawharī said that.

The āyah was revealed about the delegation of Najrān when they claimed that what they alleged about ‘Īsā was out of love for Allah. Al-Ḥasan and Ibn Jurayj said that it was revealed about some of the People of the Book who said, ‘We are those who love our Lord.’ It is related that the Muslims then said, ‘O Messenger of Allah, by Allah, we love our Lord,’ and so Allah revealed this.

Ibn ‘Arafah said, ‘Love (maḥabbah) with the Arabs means desire for the thing while aiming for it.’ Al-Azharī said, ‘A person’s love for Allah and His Messenger is to obey them and follow their commands. Allah says: “If you love Allah, then follow me.” Allah’s love for the slave is shown by His blessing them with forgiveness. When Allah says: “Allah does not love the unbelievers,” (3:32) He means that He will not forgive them.’

Sahl ibn ‘Abdullāh said, ‘The sign of love of Allah is love of the Qur’an. The sign of love of the Qur’an is love of the Prophet ﷺ. The sign of the love of the Prophet ﷺ is love of the Sunnah. The sign of love of Allah, love of the Qur’an, love of the Prophet and love of Sunnah is love of the Next World. The sign of love of the Next World is that one loves oneself. The sign of love of oneself is to hate this world. The sign of hatred of this world is to only take from it enough provision to suffice your needs.’

It is related from Abu-d-Dardā’ that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said about: ‘Say, “If you love Allah, then follow me and Allah will love you”’: that it constituted piety, taqwā, humility and abasement of the self. Abū ‘Abdullāh at-Tirmidhī transmitted it.

It is related that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘Anyone who wants Allah to love him must speak the truth, hand over trusts to their owners and not harm his neighbour.’ We find in Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim that Abū Hurayrah reported that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘When Allah loves a person, He calls out to Jibrīl and says, “I love so-and-so, so love him,” and so Jibril loves him. Then a call goes out among the people of heaven, “Allah loves so-and-so, so love him!” and the people of heaven love him. Then acceptance is placed in the earth for him. When He hates a person, He calls out to Jibrīl and says, “I hate so-and-so, so hate him.” So Jibrīl hates him. Then a call goes out among the people of heaven, “Allah hates so-and-so, so hate him!” and they hate him. Then hatred is placed in the earth for him.’ More of this will be mentioned in Sūrat Maryam, Allah willing.

Abū Rajā’ al-‘Uṭāridī recited ‘yaḥbubkum’. ‘Forgive you’ is added to ‘love you’. Maḥbūb related that Abū ‘Amr ibn al-‘Alā’ elided the rā’ at the end of ‘yaghfir’ into the lām of ‘lakum’. An-Naḥḥās stated that al-Khalīl and Sībawayh do not permit the rā’ to be elided into the lām. Abū ‘Amr is too esteemed to err about such matters. Perhaps he lowered the vowel as he does in many places.

قُلْ أَطِيعُوا اللَّهَ وَالرَّسُولَ فَإِن تَوَلَّوْا فَإِنَّ اللَّهَ لَا يُحِبُّ الْكَافِرِينَ ﴿٣٢﴾

32 Say, ‘Obey Allah and the Messenger.’ Then if they turn away, Allah does not love the unbelievers.

Part of the clarification of this will come in an-Nīsā’. The phrase: ‘...if they turn away’ is a precondition but not inflected because it is in the past tense. It implies: if they turn to their disbelief and turn away from obeying Allah and His Messenger. The clause: ‘Allah does not love the unbelievers’ means that He is not pleased with their actions and will not forgive them.

He said ‘fa-inna-llāha’ and not ‘innahu’ because when the Arabs exalt something, they mention it again as Sībawayh quotes:

I do not see death. Nothing gets ahead of death.

Death disturbs both the wealthy and poor.

إِنَّ اللَّهَ اصْطَفَىٰ آدَمَ وَنُوحًا وَآلَ إِبْرَاهِيمَ وَآلَ عِمْرَانَ عَلَى الْعَالَمِينَ ﴿٣٣﴾

33 Allah chose Ādam and Nūḥ and the family of Ibrāhīm and the family of ‘Imrān over all other beings – Allah chose Ādam and Nūḥ

‘Iṣṭafā’ means ‘to choose’. This implies: ‘Allah chose their dīn,’ which is the dīn of Islam. Az-Zajjāj says, ‘He chose them for Prophethood over the people of their times.’

It is said that the name ‘Nūḥ’ is derived from nāḥa (to mourn). It is a foreign name but is inflected normally because it has three letters. He was the Shaykh of the Messengers and the first Messenger whom Allah sent to the people of the earth after Ādam. He prohibited marriage with daughters, sisters, aunts and all close relatives. Some historians said that Idrīs was before him, but that is weak as will be explained in Sūrat al-A‘rāf.

and the family of Ibrāhīm and the family of ‘Imrān over all other beings

The meaning of ‘āl’ (family) was discussed in al-Baqarah. We find in al-Bukhārī that Ibn ‘Abbās said, ‘The family of Ibrāhīm and the family of ‘Imrān include the believers of the family of Ibrāhīm, the family of ‘Imrān, the family of Yāsīn and the family of Muḥammad. Allah says: “The people with the strongest claim to Ibrāhīm are those who followed him and this Prophet and those who believe.” (3:68)’ It is said that the family of Ibrāhīm is Ismā‘īl, Ishāq, Ya‘qūb and the Tribes, and that Muḥammad ﷺ was part of the family of Ibrāhīm. It is said that the family of Ibrāhīm was just himself and the same is true of the family of ‘Imrān. Affirming this is the words of the Almighty: ‘... certain relics left by the families of Mūsā and Hārūn.’ (2:248) We also find in a hadith, ‘I was given one of the flutes of the family of Dāwūd.’ A poet said:

Do not weep for a dead person after the death of the one loved by ‘Alī, ‘Abbās and the family of Abū Bakr.

Another said:

He suffers from the mention of Laylā’s family (āl), as a healthy person suffers from a sting.

He means the one who remembers Laylā herself.

It is said that the family of ‘Imrān is the family of Ibrāhīm, and it is said that it means ‘Īsā because his mother was the daughter of ‘Imrān. It is said that it was ‘Imrān himself. Muqātil said that ‘Imrān was the father of Mūsā and Hārūn, and his name was ‘Imrān ibn Yaşhur ibn Qāhāt ibn Lāwī ibn Ya‘qūb. Al-Kalbī says that ‘Imrān was the father of Maryam, and he was a descendant of Sulaymān. As-Suhaylī says that he was ‘Imrān ibn Mātān whose wife was Ḥannah. He singled out these Prophets for mention because the Prophets and Messengers are according to their genus and their genus is from their offspring. ‘Imrān is not declined because of the ‘ān’ at the end of it.

The phrase ‘over all other beings’ refers to the people of their time according to commentators. Abū ‘Abdullāh Muḥammad ibn ‘Alī at-Tirmidhī al-Ḥakīm says that it means all creatures. It is said that it means all creatures until the Day the Trumpet is sounded. That is because the Prophets and Messengers are the elect of creation. Muḥammad ﷺ exceeds the rank of being chosen because he is also a beloved and a mercy. The Almighty says: ‘We only sent you as a mercy to the worlds.’ (21:107) The other Messengers are created for mercy while the character of Muḥammad ﷺ himself was mercy. That is why he was security for creatures: when Allah sent him, creation was safe from the punishment until the time the Trumpet is sounded. The other Prophets did not have this position. That is why the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘I am a guiding mercy.’ So he said that he himself was mercy for creation from Allah and from Allah for creation.

It is said that Ādam was chosen by Allah for five things. The first was his creation by the Hand of Allah in the best form. The second was that He taught him all the names. The third was the command to the angels to prostrate to him. The fourth was that He let him live in the Garden. The fifth is that He made him the father of mankind.

Allah chose Nūḥ for five things. The first was that He made him the father of mankind because all the rest were drowned and only his descendants remained. The second was his long life. It is said, ‘Bliss to the one who lives a long life and has good actions.’ The third that He answered his prayer about the unbelievers and believers. The fourth is that He carried him in the ship. The fifth is that he was the first to abrogate laws, because before this it was not forbidden to marry aunts.

Allah also chose Ibrāhīm for five things. The first was that He made him the father of the Prophets because it is related that a thousand Prophets descended from him. The second is that He took him as a friend. The third is that He saved him from the Fire. The fourth is that He made him an imam for people. The fifth is that He tested him with instructions and gave him success in carrying them out.

Since Mūsā and Hārūn were the sons of ‘Imrān, Allah chose them since He sent manna and quail down for his people, which no other Prophet had. If it is the father of Maryam, He chose Maryam to bear ‘Īsā without a father which happened to no one else in the world. Allah knows best.

ذُرِّيَّةً بَعْضُهُمْ مِنْ بَعْضٍ وَاللَّهُ سَمِيعٌ عَلِيمٌ ﴿٢٤﴾

34 descendants one of the other. Allah is All-Hearing, All-Knowing.

The meaning of ‘descendants’ was already discussed in al-Baqarah. It is in the accusative for the ḥāl as al-Akhfash said, meaning descendants from the descendants of others. The Kufans say that there is a stop. Az-Zajjāj says that it is an appositive, i.e. He chose some of their descendants from others.

The words ‘one of the other’ can either refer to actual descent or to the fact that they help one another. We see the same usage in 9:67 were the hypocrites assist one another in misguidance as al-Ḥasan and Qatādah said. It is also said that it refers to being selected and chosen and given Prophethood. It is said that it is actual physical descendants of one another, but this is the weakest view.

إِذْ قَالَتِ امْرَأَتُ عِمْرَانَ رَبِّ إِنِّي نَذَرْتُ لَكَ مَا فِي بَطْنِي مُحَرَّرًا فَتَقَبَّلْ مِنِّي

 وَاللَّهُ أَعْلَمُ بِمَا وَضَعْتَ وَلَيْسَ الذَّكَرُ كَالْأُنثَىٰ وَإِنِّي سَمَّيْتُهَا مَرْيَمَ وَإِنِّي
 أُعِيذُهَا بِكَ وَذُرِّيَّتَهَا مِنَ الشَّيْطَانِ الرَّجِيمِ ﴿٣٧﴾

35 Remember when the wife of ‘Imrān said, ‘My Lord, I have pledged to You what is in my womb, devoting it to Your service. Please accept my prayer. You are the All-Hearing, the All-Knowing.’ 36 When she gave birth, she said, ‘My Lord! I have given birth to a girl’ – and Allah knew very well what she had given birth to, male and female are not the same – ‘and I have named her Maryam and placed her and her children in Your safekeeping from the accursed Shayṭān.’

Remember when the wife of ‘Imrān said.

Abū ‘Ubaydah said that the ‘when’ is redundant. Muḥammad ibn Yazīd said: ‘It implies “remember when”.’ Az-Zajjāj said, ‘The meaning is: “He chose the family of ‘Imrān when the wife of ‘Imrān said...”’ She was Ḥannah bint Fāqūd ibn Qunbul, the mother of Maryam and grandmother of ‘Īsā. It is not an Arabic name and Ḥannah is not known in Arabic as a woman’s name. However, we do find Abū Ḥannah al-Badrī, but it is said that his name is Abū Ḥabbah, and that is sounder. His name was ‘Āmir. Dayr Ḥannah is in Syria and there is another place called that which Abū Nuwās mentions in a poem.

Ḥabbah is frequently used as a name in Arabic. That includes Abū Ḥabbah al-Anṣārī, and Abu-s-Sanābil ibn Ba‘kak mentions Ḥabbah in the hadith of Subay‘ah. Khannah is only known in the daughter of Qāḍī Yaḥyā ibn Aktham. She was the mother of Muḥammad ibn Naṣr. Jannah is only known in Abū Jannah, the maternal uncle of Dhu-r-Rummaḥ the poet. All of that is in the book of Ibn Mākūlā.

My Lord, I have pledged to You what is in my womb, devoting it to Your service.

The meaning of nadhhr (pledge, vow) was already discussed. A vow is something which a person imposes on himself which he was not obliged to do. It is said that when she was pregnant the mother of Maryam said, 'If Allah saves me and I give birth to what is in my womb, I will devote him to Him.' 'Laka' means 'to Your service.' 'Muḥarrar' is an adverbial ḥāl or an adjective of something elided. It means: 'I have pledged to You what is in my womb as a boy devoted to You.'

The first is more consistent with the commentary, context and syntax. In respect of syntax, it is putting the adjective in place of what is described which is not permitted in certain places while it is permitted metaphorically in other places. In respect of commentary, it is said that the reason for what 'Imrān's wife said was that she was old and had not given birth. They were the people of a house devoted to Allah and one day she was sitting in the shade of a tree and saw a bird feeding its young and she felt tender and yearned for a child because of seeing that bird. She prayed to Allah to give her a child and she vowed that she would give up the child to serve Him, meaning that he would be a servant of the temple devoted to worship of Allah. That was permitted in their law, and the children were bound to fulfil the vow of their parents. She bore a girl, and a girl was not fitting for temple service either because of being subject to menstruation and the impurity involved or because of not being cut out for mixing with men. She had hoped that it would be a boy that she could devote to His service.

Ibn al-'Arabī said, 'There is no disagreement that 'Imrān's wife did not impose an actual vow on her pregnancy because she was free. There is no disagreement that a person cannot make a vow on behalf of their child, whatever their circumstances. If the one making a vow is a slave, nothing he says in that respect is affirmed. If he is free, it is not sound that he should dictate his child's future. The same is true of a woman. So in what way was it a vow? Allah knows best, but people desire a child for company, help and solace, so this woman asked for a child for company and solace. When Allah granted her that, she vowed to abandon her share of the child's company. That was based on serving Allah. This is the vow of the free pious ones. She wanted him to be devoted from both aspects, free from the servitude of this world and being occupied with it. One of the Sufis said to his mother, "Mother, let me belong to Allah, to worship Him and learn knowledge." She said, "Yes." So he set out until he had an insight and then he returned to her and knocked on the door. She said, "Who is it?" He told her, "Your son, so-and-so." She answered, "We left you to Allah and will not return to you."

Muḥarrar (devoting) is derived from ḥurriyah (freedom), the opposite of slavehood. From this root comes tahrīr (editing) of a book, which is to purify it of confusion and unsoundness. Khaṣīf related from 'Ikrimah and Mujāhid that muḥarrar is someone who is sincerely devoted to Allah with nothing of this world sullyng him. This is a known linguistic usage. Someone who is sincere is called 'ḥurr' and 'muḥarrar' which both have the same meaning.

When she gave birth, she said, 'My Lord! I have given birth to a girl.'

Ibn 'Abbās said, 'She said this because only males are accepted in fulfilment of the vow she had made and Allah had accepted Maryam.' It is said she raised her until she was grown up and then sent her. Ashhab related that from Mālik. It is said that she put her in her wrapping and sent her to the temple and fulfilled her vow straightaway. Perhaps they did not have segregation then as was also the case at the beginning of Islam. Al-Bukhārī and Muslim reported that a black woman used to sweep the mosque in the time of the Prophet ﷺ and then died.

Allah knew very well what she had given birth to.

If it is read as wada'tu ('I have given birth to'), it is connected to the rest of her words. That is the reading of Abū Bakr and Ibn ‘Āmir. It contains the idea of submission to Allah, humility and to put Him above having anything hidden from Him. It is not a report because Allah’s knowledge of everything is confirmed in the heart of the believer. She said that to exalt Allah. In the reading of the majority (wada‘at), it is part of the words of Allah. It implies that it is after: ‘I have placed her and her children in Your safekeeping from the accursed Shayṭān.’ Allah knew very well what she had given birth to. Al-Mahdawī said that. Makkī said that it is information from Allah to us by way of confirmation. Allah knew what Maryam had given birth to, whether or not she said it. This is strengthened by the fact that, if it is part of the words of Maryam, it is like the words, ‘You know best what I have given birth to’ because she called to Him at the beginning of her words: ‘My Lord, I have given birth to a girl.’ It is related from Ibn ‘Abbās as ‘wada‘ti (‘You have given birth to’), and so this was said to her.

male and female are not the same

Some of the Shāfi‘īs use this as evidence that if a woman obeys her husband and has intercourse in the daytime in Ramaḍān, they are not the same with regard to the obligation of kaffārah. Ibn al-‘Arabī said, ‘This is foolishness. This is a report about a Law before you and they do not say that. This righteous woman intended to clarify her situation. She had vowed her son to the service of the temple. When she found it was a girl, she excused herself to her Lord for things being different to what she had intended.’

‘I have named her Maryam’

An-Naḥḥās said that ‘Maryam’ is not inflected because it is a foreign noun which means ‘servant of the Lord’ in their language. The words: ‘her children’ refer to ‘Īsā; the word ‘dhurriyah’ can be used for both the plural and singular. We find in Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim from Abū Hurayrah that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘Every child who is born is pricked by Shayṭān on the day he is born and so it cries out – except for Maryam and her son.’ Then Abū Hurayrah added, ‘Recite, if you like: “I have placed her and her children in Your safekeeping.”’

Our scholars said, ‘The point of this hadith is that Allah answered the supplication of Maryam’s mother. Shayṭān pricks all of the children of Ādam, even the Prophets and awliyā’, except for Maryam and her son. A veil was put between them and the prick hit the veil but none of it pierced through it.’ Our scholars observed, ‘Even if that was the case, it is false that only the two of them are singled out for it, nor does this oblige that the prick of Shayṭān causes misguidance and error in the person pricked. That is a false supposition. Shayṭān often presented forms of corruption and error to the Prophets and awliyā’, but Allah protected them from what Shayṭān cast as He says: “You have no authority over any of My slaves.” (15:42) Moreover, each of the descendants of Ādam has a companion from the shayṭāns assigned to him as was stated by the Messenger of Allah ﷺ. So even if Maryam and her son were protected from the prick, they were not protected from Shayṭān clinging and being attached to them. Allah knows best.

فَنَبَّأَهَا رَبُّهَا بِقَبُولِ حَسَنِ وَأَنَّهَا نَبَاتًا حَسَنًا وَكَهَلَهَا زَكْرِيَّا ۖ كَمَا دَخَلَ

دَعَا زَكْرِيَّا رَبَّهُ ۖ قَالَ رَبِّ هَبْ لِي مِنْ لَدُنْكَ ذُرِّيَّةً طَيِّبَةً إِنَّكَ سَمِيعُ الدُّعَاءِ ۝

37 Her Lord accepted her with approval and made her grow in health and beauty. And Zakariyyā became her guardian. Every time Zakariyyā visited her in the Upper Room, he found food with her. He said, ‘Maryam, how did you come by this?’ She said, ‘It is from Allah. Allah provides for whoever He wills without any reckoning.’ 38 Then and there Zakariyyā called on his Lord and said, ‘O Lord, grant me by Your favour an upright child. You are the Hearer of Prayer.'

Her Lord accepted her with approval and made her grow in health and beauty.

This means 'He let her travel the path of the fortunate' as Ibn 'Abbās said. Some people say that it refers to caring for her upbringing. Al-Ḥasan said that it means He did not punish her for a moment, night or day.

The phrase: 'He made her grow in health and beauty' means that Allah made her physique proportionate without lack or excess. In a single day, she grew the amount a child would normally grow in a year. 'Qabūl' (accepted) and 'nabāt' (grow) are verbal nouns other than the ones that would normally be used with a verb in Forms IV and V. [Illustrative poems omitted] The copy of the Qur'an of Ibn Mas'ūd has 'anzala-l-malā'ikata tanzīlan' because nazzala and anzala mean the same. Al-Mufaḍḍal said that it means, 'He made her grow beautifully.' It is more fitting to take the meaning we mentioned. The root of approval (qabūl) is qubūl because it is a verbal noun like dukhūl and khurūj, and the fathah is used in few letters, like walū' and wazū'. It is only these three. Abū 'Amr, al-Kisā'ī and the imams said that. Az-Zajjāj allowed qubūl based on the root.

Zakariyyā became her guardian.

He adopted her. Abū 'Ubaydah said that he was responsible for her care. The Kufan reading is 'kaffāla' (Form II) which is transitive, taking two objects, and means: 'Zakariyyā was made her guardian,' by Allah who decreed that and made it easy for him. Ubayy's copy of the Qur'an has the verb in Form IV (akfalahā) which has a similar meaning to Form II. It is also transitive, and the two verbs before it are also in Form IV. So Allah is speaking about Himself and what he did with her. That is why it is in Form II.

The rest read it as kafala, ascribing the action to Zakariyyā and so Allah informs us that Zakariyyā undertook her care and guardianship as indicated by His words: '...which of them would be the guardian of Maryam' (3:44). Makkī said that it is preferred because Form II derives from Form I because when when Allah made Zakariyyā her guardian, he became her guardian at Allah's command and because what he did was by Allah's will and decree. So the two readings are intermeshed.

Hārūn ibn Mūsā ibn Kathīr and Abū 'Abdullāh al-Muzanī related 'kafilahā'. Al-Akhfash said that one can say kafala, yakfulu, and kafila, yakfalu, and I have not heard kafula although it has been mentioned.

Ḥafṣ, Ḥamzah and al-Kisā'ī recite Zakariyyā without maddah or hamzah while the rest have a maddah and hamzah as Zakariyā'. The people of Hijaz say Zakariyyā'. The people of Najd elide the alif and say 'Zakariyy'. There are four dialectical usages. Abū Ḥātim said 'Zakariyyu' without inflection because it is a foreign name. This is an error because a name with a yā' in it like this is inflected, like kursiyy and Yaḥyā. If it is read with a maddah and short, it is not inflected because there is a feminine alif in it, it is foreign and definite.

Every time Zakariyyā visited her in the Upper Room, he found food with her.

The word miḥrāb linguistically denotes the noblest place in an assembly, and it will be dealt with more fully in Sūrah Maryam. Tradition tells us that she was in an upper room and that Zakariyyā visited her by way of a ladder. 'Adī ibn Zayd said:

When I came to the lady of the miḥrāb,
I only reached her by climbing a ladder.

Abū Ṣāliḥ related from Ibn 'Abbās that 'Imrān's wife became pregnant when she was old and made a vow that the child would be devoted to the temple. 'Imrān said to her, 'What on earth have you done? What if it is a girl?' They were both distressed about that. Then 'Imrān died while Ḥannah was pregnant and she bore a girl and Allah accepted her. Only boys were devoted to the temple, so the rabbis used their reeds, with which wrote they down the Revelation, to draw lots for her care. Zakariyyā became her guardian and found a place for her. When she was older, he arranged an upper room for her which was reached by a ladder. He hired a wet-nurse for her and she used to lock the door and only Zakariyyā went to her until she was an adult. When she menstruated, he moved her to his house and she stayed with her aunt, the wife of Zakariyyā, as al-Kalbī says. Muqātil says that her sister was the wife of Zakariyyā. When she was pure and had purified herself, he took her back to the room. Some of them say that she did not menstruate but was free from that.

When Zakariyyā visited her, he found her with winter fruit in the summer and summer fruit in the winter. He said: ‘Maryam, how did you come by this?’ She answered, ‘It is from Allah.’ That made Zakariyyā yearn for a child and he said, ‘The One who brings her this can also give me a child.’

The preposition ‘annā’ means ‘from where’ as Abū ‘Ubaydah said. An-Naḥḥās said, ‘This is somewhat negligent because ‘ayna’ asks about place and ‘annā’ asks about direction and method. It means: ‘From where and how did this come to you?’ Al-Kumayyat distinguished between them:

How (annā) and from where (ayna) did rapture affect you when there is no youthful passion or doubt?

As for the words: ‘Allah provides...’ It is possible that Maryam said this or that it is Allah speaking. That was the reason for the supplication of Zakariyyā to ask for a child.

Then and there Zakariyyā called on his Lord.

‘There’ (hunālika) can be used for time and place although its basic use is in reference to place. Al-Mufaḍḍal ibn Salamah said that hunālika is about time and hunāka is about place, but one can be used in place of the other.

grant me by Your favour an upright child.

The word ‘hab’ means ‘give’. Dhurriyyah can be singular or plural, male or female. Here it is singular. This is indicated by Allah’s words: ‘...give me an heir (walī) from You’ (19:5) where He uses the singular, not the plural awliyā. ‘Tayyibah’ is in the feminine because of ‘dhurriyah’. This sort of usage is seen in:

Your father another khalīfah bore him

And you are a khalifah with that perfection.

Where khalīfah is referred to with a feminine verb (waladat).

It is related from Anas that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘If a man dies leaving righteous offspring, Allah will give him the same reward for their actions without that diminishing their rewards at all.’ The derivation of dhurriyyah was discussed in al-Baqarah. ‘Tayyibah’ here means righteous and blessed. The words: ‘You are the Hearer of prayer’ means ‘You accept the prayer.’ We find confirmation of that in the expression: ‘Allah hears whoever praises Him.’

This āyah is evidence that one can ask for a child. It is the sunnah of the Messengers and those who are true. The Almighty says: ‘We sent Messengers before you and gave them wives and children too.’ (11:38) We find in Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim that Sa’d ibn Abī Waqqāṣ said that ‘Uthmān ibn Maz’un wanted to be celibate and the Messenger of Allah ﷺ forbade it. He said, ‘If he had permitted it, we would have castrated ourselves.’ Ibn Mājah transmitted from ‘Ā’ishah that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said: ‘Marriage is part of my Sunnah, and whoever does not act by my Sunnah is not with me. Marry. I will have more numbers than other nations by you. If someone is wealthy, he should marry. If he has no wealth, he should fast. It is a shield.’ This is a refutation of those who say that someone who wants a child is stupid. Allah reports that Ibrāhīm said: ‘Make me highly esteemed among the later peoples’ (26:84) and He says: ‘Those who say, ‘Our Lord, give us joy in our wives and children.’ (25:74)

Al-Bukhārī has a chapter on asking for children. The Prophet ﷺ asked Abū Ṭalḥah when his son died, ‘Did you make love to your wife in the night?’ ‘Yes,’ he answered. He said, ‘May Allah bless you in the result of your night.’ She became pregnant. We find in al-Bukhārī that Sufyān said that a man of the Anṣār said, ‘I saw nine children, all of whom recited the Qur’an.’ There is also a chapter on ‘Supplication for many children with blessing.’ Anas ibn Mālīk said that Umm Sulaym said, ‘Messenger of Allah, pray to Allah for your servant Anas.’ He said, ‘O Allah, give him much wealth and many children and bless him in what You give him.’ The Prophet ﷺ said, ‘O Allah, forgive Abū Salamah, elevate his rank among the guided and give him successors among his descendants.’ Al-Bukhārī and Muslim transmitted it. The Prophet ﷺ said, ‘Marry a loving fertile woman. I will have the largest of the nations by you.’ Abū Dāwūd transmitted it.

There are many reports like this which encourage people to seek to have children since a person hopes to gain benefit by that in his life and after his death. The Prophet ﷺ said, ‘When one of you dies, his actions come to an end except for three,’ and he mentioned ‘a righteous child who prays for him.’ If there had only been this hadith, that would have been enough.

Since this is established, it is obligatory for the human being to make supplication to his Creator to guide his children and spouse to success, guidance, righteousness and chastity and that they help him in his dīn and in worldly things so that he has great benefit from them in this world and the Hereafter. Do you not see that Allah says: ‘...make him, my Lord, pleasing to You’ (19:6) and ‘...give us joy in our wives and children.’ (25:74) The Messenger of Allah ﷺ prayed for Anas: ‘O Allah, give him much wealth and many children and bless him in it.’ Al-Bukhārī and Muslim transmitted this. That is enough.

39 The angels called out to him while he was standing in prayer in the Upper Room: ‘Allah gives you the good news of Yahyā, who will come to confirm a Word from Allah, and will be a leader and a celibate, a Prophet and one of the righteous.’

The angels called out to him

Ḥamzah and al-Kisā’ī recited ‘fa-nādāhu’ with the alif for the masculine and imālah because its root is a yā. Ibn ‘Abbās and Ibn Mas‘ūd read it with an alif and Abū ‘Ubayd preferred it. It is related from Jarīr that Mughīrah ibn Ibrāhīm said that ‘Abdullāh [ibn Mas‘ūd] used the masculine for the angels throughout the Qur’an. Abū ‘Ubayd said, ‘We think that he preferred that in order to be different from the idolaters who said that the angels were the daughters of Allah.’

An-Naḥḥās said, ‘This argument is worthless because the Arabs use both feminine and masculine verbs with “men” as well as with “women”, so how can that be used as an argument in the Qur’an? If it had been permitted to use this in the Qur’an as an argument against them, it would have been permitted for them to use in argument the words of Allah: “When the angels said (qālat).” The argument against them is: “Were they present at their creation (hum)?” (43:19) So how can they say that they are female when it is known that this is mere opinion and whim?” ‘Nādāhu’ is permitted in the masculine plural and nādāthu is permitted because ‘group’ is feminine.

Makkī said, ‘Malā’ikah (angels) is a broken plural for sentient beings and the feminine is used as it is for those who are not sentient. Using the feminine hiya, you say, “They (hiya) are men. They are palm stumps. They are camels.” You use the feminine and say, “The Bedouins said.” This is strengthened by its usage here and elsewhere in the Qur'an (6:93, 13:23) So both masculine and feminine are good.

As-Suddī said that it was Jibrīl alone, and that is found in the reading of Ibn Mas'ūd. It says in an-Naḥl: 'He sends down angels with the Rūḥ' (16:2) and He means Jibrīl and the Rūḥ is the revelation. It is permitted in Arabic to use the plural for a single person. We see that in the Revelation (3:173) where the plural refers to Nu'aym ibn Mas'ūd. It is also said that all the angels called to him. That is what is most apparent. It means that the call came from them.

while he was standing in prayer in the Upper Room: 'Allah gives you the good news of Yaḥyā

'Anna-llāh' means 'bi-anna-llāh'. Ḥamzah and al-Kisā'ī read 'inna,' meaning 'The angels say that Allah...' The people of Madīnah read 'yubashshiruka' while Ḥamzah reads 'yabshuruka'. The same is true of Ḥumayd ibn al-Qays al-Makkī who has 'yubshiruka'. The meaning is the same. They are three dialectal possibilities with the same meaning. The evidence for the first is the majority recitation that this is in the past tense or a command. There are many examples of this in the Qur'an. The second reading which is that of 'Abdullāh ibn Mas'ūd which is from bashara, yabshuru, which is the dialect of Tihāmah. [Poetry] The third is from abshara, yubshiru. [Poetry]

The name of Yaḥyā in the first Book was Ḥayā. Sārah was given her name by Ibrāhīm. In Arabic it means, 'does not give birth'. When he was given the good news of Iṣḥāq, he called her Sārah and Jibrīl gave her that name. She asked, 'Ibrāhīm, why did you omit a letter of my name [i.e. Sarai].' Ibrāhīm asked Jibrīl about that and he said, 'That letter will be added to the name of a descendant of hers among the best of Prophets. His name is Ḥayā and he will be called Yaḥyā.' An-Naqqāsh mentioned it. Qatādah said that he was called Yaḥyā because Allah gave him life with faith and Prophethood. Some of them said that he is called that because Allah revived people through his guidance. Muqātil said that it is derived from the name of Allah, al-Ḥayy (the Living). It is said that it was because he revived the relatives of his mother.

who will come to confirm a Word from Allah.

The ‘Word’ is ‘Īsā according to most commentators. ‘Īsā is called a ‘Word’ because he was brought into existence by the word of Allah ‘Be’ without a father. Abu-s-Sammāl al-‘Adawī recited ‘kilmah’ throughout the Qur’an which is a classical dialectal form. It is said that he is called a Word because people are guided by him as they are guided by the words of Allah. Abū ‘Ubaydah said, ‘a Word from Allah’ is ‘a Book from Allah’. The Arabs call a qaṣīdah (ode) a ‘word’. Many other things are said, but the first is the best known among most scholars.

Yaḥyā was the first to believe in and affirm ‘Īsā. He was three years older than ‘Isā, or six months is also said. They were cousins. When Zakariyyā heard his testimony, he went to him and embraced him while he was wrapped in a cloth. Aṭ-Ṭabarī said, ‘When Maryam was pregnant with ‘Īsā, her sister was also pregnant with Yaḥyā. She visited her sister and said, “Maryam! Do you know that I am pregnant?” Maryam replied, “Do you know that I am also pregnant?” She said to her, “I felt what is in my womb prostrating to what is in your womb.”’ As-Suddī said that is acknowledgement of His words: ‘...confirm a Word from Allah.’

A ‘leader’ (sayyid) is one who leads his people and whose word is accepted. Its root is saywid. This indicates the permission to call a human being ‘sayyid’ as one can also use ‘azīz (mighty) or karīm (generous) for someone. Indeed, it is related that the Prophet ﷺ said to the tribe of Qurayzah, ‘Rise for your sayyid.’

We find in al-Bukhārī and Muslim that the Prophet ﷺ said about al-Ḥasan, ‘This grandson of mine is a leader and perhaps, by him, Allah will put things right between two great parties of Muslims,’ and that took place. When ‘Alī was slain, more than 40,000 gave allegiance to him, including many who had not joined his father and those who broke their allegiance with him. For about seven months he was Caliph in Iraq and the lands beyond Khorasan. Then he went to Mu‘āwiyah with the people of the Hijaz and Iraq while Mu‘āwiyah went to him with the people of Syria. When the groups saw one another at a place called Maskin in Sawad in the region of Anbar, al-Ḥasan did not want to fight because he knew that neither side would be victorious until many of the other side had been slain and in that way the Muslims would be destroyed. He handed over authority to Mu‘āwiyah with certain stipulations that he made, one of which was that he would have authority after Mu‘āwiyah died. Mu‘āwiyah was bound by all of that and the words of the Prophet ﷺ were verified: ‘This son of mine is a leader...’ There is no greater leader than one made a leader by Allah and His Messenger.

Qatādah said that ‘sayyid’ means a leader in knowledge and worship. Ibn Jubayr and aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk said, ‘In knowledge and fear of Allah.’ Mujāhid said, ‘a noble leader.’ Ibn Zayd said, ‘One who is not overcome by anger.’ Az-Zajjāj said, ‘One who is above his peers in every type of good.’ This is comprehensive. Al-Kisā’ī said, ‘A sayyid among goats is one advanced in years.’ A hadith has, ‘...a two-year-old sheep is better than a sayyid goat.’ [Poetry]

‘Celibate’ (ḥaṣūr) is derived from ḥaṣr, meaning confinement. The verbs ḥaṣara and aḥṣara means ‘to confine’. Ibn Mayyādah says:

The shunning of Laylā was not that she kept herself far away
 From you and work did not detain (aḥṣaratka) you.

A she-camel that is ḥaṣūr has a narrow opening to a teat. A man who is ḥaṣūr does not go to women, as if he was held back from them. Ḥaṣūr and ḥāṣir are used for a man who is confined to bed and does not go out. One says, ‘The people drank, but so-and-so was niggardly (ḥuṣira) with them.’ [Poetry] We find in the Revelation: ‘We have made Hell a prison (ḥaṣīr) for the unbelievers.’ (17:8) Ḥaṣīr is where the king sits because he is veiled from others. [Poetry] Yaḥyā was celibate because he did not approach women, as if he was kept from what men normally do, as Ibn Mas‘ūd and others said, the form fa‘ūl often having a passive meaning, as ḥalūb means ‘milked’. [Poetry] Ibn Mas‘ūd, Ibn ‘Abbās, Ibn Jubayr, Qatādah, ‘Aṭā, and others said that it means he does not approach women although he is able to do so.

This is the soundest of the various views for two reasons. The first is that it is praise for him, and praise is given for an acquired trait which is not generally innate. The second is because it expresses an active choice, meaning that he restrained himself from his appetites. [POEM ON VERB FORM] This might have been part of his Divine Law. Our Law, however, stipulates marriage as was already mentioned. Ibn ‘Abbās, Sa‘īd ibn al-Musayyab and aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk said that ḥaṣūr refers to someone who has been castrated. Abū Ṣāliḥ related that Abū Hurayrah said that he heard the Messenger of Allah ﷺ say, ‘Every human being will meet Allah with a sin that he has committed, for which He will either punish him or show mercy to him, except for Yaḥyā the son of Zakariyyā. He was a leader, celibate, a Prophet and one of the righteous.’ It is said that it means he kept himself from disobeying Allah.

As for the expression ‘one of the righteous,’ az-Zajjāj said that the righteous person is the one who practises what Allah has imposed on him and gives people their rights.

قَالَ رَبِّ أَيْفَى يَكُونُ لِي عِلْمٌ وَقَدْ بَلَغْتَنِي الْكِبَرُ وَأَمْرَاتِي عَاقِرٌ قَالَ
كَذَلِكَ اللَّهُ يَفْعَلُ مَا يَشَاءُ ⑤

40 He said, ‘My Lord, how can I possibly have a son when I have reached old age and my wife is barren?’ He said, ‘It will be so. Allah does whatever He wills.’

It is said that ‘Lord’ here means Jibrīl, and he asked Jibrīl how he could have a son. This is the view of al-Kalbī. Some say that he means Allah. ‘Annā’ means ‘how’. There are two points contained in this question. One is that he asked how he could have a son when he and his wife were of an age when they could not conceive, and the second is that he was asking if he would be given a son from his barren wife or from another woman. It is said that he meant: 'How can this be the case when I and my wife are in this state' out of humility.

It is related that the time between his supplication and the good news was forty years, and he was ninety when he received the good news and his wife was a similar age. Ibn 'Abbās and aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk said that he was 120 and his wife was ninety, since the word, 'barren', means too old to conceive. Āqir (barren) can describe a man or woman. The verb is 'aqara. 'Uqr and 'aqārah mean 'barrenness. It is said that someone is 'barren' because it wounds ('aqara) lineage. Barrenness ('uqr) in a woman occurs when she is too old to conceive. Āqir is used for a large tract of sand where nothing grows. 'Uqr refers to the bride-price given to a woman when intercourse with her is a result of dubiousness (or likeness (i.e. to his wife)). It is also used for a cock's egg. 'Uqr is a hearth. The 'uqr of a fire is the middle of it and the 'uqr of a basin is the end of it where camels stand when they arrive. It is a word with multiple meanings.

The 'kāf in 'kadhālīka means: 'Allah does whatever He wishes like that.' Ghulām (son) is derived from ghulmah, which is intense desire for intercourse. [Poetry] It denotes a youth whose moustache has started to grow, or it is used for a boy up to the age of seventeen. The plurals are ghilmah and ghilmān. Ghaylmān is a youth or a girl as well as being a male tortoise. The verb ightilama describes the sea when its waves are clashing.

41 He said, 'My Lord, appoint a Sign for me.' He said, 'Your Sign is that you will not speak to people for three days, except by gesture. Remember your Lord much and glorify Him in the evening and after dawn.’

He said, ‘My Lord, appoint a Sign for me.’

When he was given the good news of a son and did not think that it was not within Allah’s power to bring that about, he asked for a sign by which to recognise the soundness of the matter and that it was truly from Allah, and so Allah punished him by afflicting him with the inability to speak to people after the angels had spoken to him. Most commentators have said, ‘It was not an illness or muteness’ which would be a form of punishment. Ibn Zayd said, ‘When Zakariyyā’s wife became pregnant with Yaḥyā, he could not speak to anyone. Although he recited the Qur’an and invoked Allah, he was unable to converse with anyone.’

except by gesture.

Linguistically, ramz (gesture) means to indicate with the lips, but it is also used for indication with the eyebrows, eyes and hands. Its basis is movement. It is said he sought that sign for increased reassurance, meaning, ‘Complete the blessing by giving me a sign so that the sign will be an increase of blessing and honour.’ Then he was told, ‘Your Sign is that you will not speak to people for three days,’ meaning that he would be unable to speak for three days. This is evidence that this was said to him after the angels gave him the good news. The words: ‘I created you before, when you were nothing.’ (19:9) mean: ‘I brought you into existence by My power. In the same way I will bring a son into existence for you.’ An-Naḥḥās preferred this view. He said, ‘Qatādah’s statement about Zakariyyā being punished by not being able to speak is rejected because Allah did not inform us that he had sinned nor did He forbid him to do that. His words means: “Give me a sign to indicate the existence of a child since that is hidden from me.”’

‘Ramz’ is in the accusative as a separated exception according to al-Akhfash, Al-Kisā’ī says that the verb is ramaza, yarmuzu and yarmizu. It is also recited as ‘ramazan’ and ‘rumuzan’ whose singular is rumzah.

This āyah is evidence for a gesture being able to take the place of words, which is found a lot in the Sunnah. The strongest example is found in the ruling of the Prophet ﷺ in the case of the black woman when he asked her, ‘Where is Allah?’ and she indicated heaven with her head. He said, ‘Free her. She is a believer.’ So this shows that Islam can be confirmed by gesture, and it is the basis of religion by which blood and life are protected and the Garden and salvation from the Fire are merited. The judgment is that her belief was confirmed in the same way that it would have been if she had expressed it verbally. Therefore gesture must be similarly admissible in every other area of the dīn. This is the view of most fuqahā’.

Ibn al-Qāsim related from Mālik that when a mute person makes a gesture indicating divorce, it is binding. In the case of a man who becomes ill and his tongue is disabled, ash-Shāfi‘ī said that he is like a mute person in respect of taking a wife back and divorce. Abū Ḥanīfah said, ‘It is permitted if the gesture is well known. If it is not, then it is void.’ That judgment is not based on analogy, but on istihsān. Analogy would entail it being invalid because he does not speak nor is his gesture understood. Abu-l-Ḥasan ibn Baṭṭāl said, ‘In saying this, Abū Ḥanīfah referred to the fact that he did not know of any sunnah which permitted gestures in different rulings in the dīn.’ Al-Bukhārī attempted to deal with this matter in his chapter, ‘Chapter of gestures in divorce and other matters.’ ‘Aṭā’ said that the words: ‘You will not speak to people’ meant that he should fast for three days because when they fasted they only spoke by gesture. This, however, is unlikely, and Allah knows best.

Some people say that it is permissible for the Qur’an to be abrogated by the Sunnah. Zakariyyā was forbidden to speak when he was able to do so, and this was abrogated by the words of the Prophet ﷺ, ‘There is no silence in the day until night.’ Most scholars say that it is not abrogated because Zakariyyā was prevented from speaking by some disability which kept him from having the power to speak even though he was healthy. That is what most scholars say. Many scholars believe that the hadith means that there should be no silence where remembrance of Allah is concerned. As for prattle, there is no benefit in it and silence in respect of that is good.

Remember your Lord much and glorify Him in the evening and after dawn.'

He commands him to not abandon dhikr in spite of his tongue being restrained according to the first view. The meaning of dhikr was already discussed in al-Baqarah.

Muḥammad ibn Ka'b al-Qurazī said, 'If anyone had had a licence to abandon dhikr, it would have been Zakariyyā since Allah says: "You will not speak to people for three days, except by gesture. Remember your Lord much..." and there might also have been a licence in battle but Allah says: "When you meet a troop, stand firm and remember Allah repeatedly." (8:45) Aṭ-Ṭabarī mentioned it.

The word 'glorify' here means 'pray' as the prayer is called glorification since it disconnects Allah from evil. 'Evening' ('ashiy) is the plural of 'ashyāh. It is also said that it is a singular. Mujāhid said that it is the time from after midday until sunset. In the Muwattā', al-Qāsim ibn Muḥammad said, 'None of the people I met prayed Zuhr until well after noon.' Ibkār is from dawn until mid-morning.

وَإِذْ قَالَتِ الْمَلَائِكَةُ يَا سَعْدِيَّةُ إِنَّ اللَّهَ اصْطَفَيْكِ وَطَهَّرَكِ وَاصْطَفَيْكِ
عَلَى نِسَاءِ الْعَالَمِينَ ﴿٤٢﴾

42 And when the angels said, 'Maryam, Allah has chosen you and purified you. He has chosen you over all other women.

Maryam, Allah has chosen you and purified you.

The words 'purified you' refer to purification from disbelief, as Mujāhid and al-Ḥasan said. Az-Zajjāj said it means of all impurities: menstruation, lochia and other things. Allah 'chose her' to give birth to ‘Īsā over all the women of her time. Al-Ḥasan, Ibn Jurayj and others say that it means over all women until the Trumpet is sounded, and that is sound as we will explain. That is the position of az-Zajjāj and others.

The word ‘chosen’ is repeated because the first time it means chosen for worship and the second chosen to bear ‘Īsā. Muslim reports that Abū Mūsā said that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘There are many perfect men, but the only perfect women are Maryam daughter of ‘Imrān, and Āsiyah, the wife of Pharaoh. ‘Ā’ishah is preferred to other women like tharīd over other types of food.’ Our scholars said that ‘perfect’ means complete. The perfection of each thing is according to what it is. Absolute perfection belongs only to Allah. There is no doubt that the most perfect human beings are the Prophets, then the awliyā’, then the truly sincere, then the martyrs and then the righteous. If this is confirmed, then it is said that the perfection mentioned in the hadith means Prophethood which would necessitate that Maryam and Āsiyyah were Prophets, and that is indeed said. The sound position is that Maryam was a Prophet because Allah gave Revelation to her by means of an angel in the same way that He gave Revelation to the other Prophets. This will be further discussed in Sūrat Maryam. As for Āsiyyah, there is no clear evidence of her Prophethood, but of her ṣiddiqiyyah and excellence, as will be explained in at-Tahrīm.

It is related by sound paths from Abu Hurayrah that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘The best of the women of this world are four: Maryam bint ‘Imrān, ‘Āsiyyah bint Muzaḥam, Khadījah bint Khuwaylid and Fāṭimah bint Muḥammad.’ Ibn ‘Abbās reported that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘The best of the women of the Garden are: Khadījah bint Khuwaylid, Fāṭimah bint Muḥammad, Maryam bint ‘Imrān and ‘Āsiyyah bint Muzaḥam, the wife of Pharaoh.’ Another path has: ‘After Maryam, the mistress of the women of the people of the Garden will be Fāṭimah and Khadījah.’

The apparent meaning of the Qur'an and the hadiths demands that Maryam is the best of all the women of the world from Ḥawwā' to the last woman alive when the Final Hour comes. The angels conveyed to her Revelation from Allah containing responsibility, information and good news, as was conveyed to other Prophets, and so she is a Prophet, and a Prophet is better than a walī. Therefore she is better than all other women, first and last. Next in excellence is Fāṭimah and then Khadījah according to what is related by Ibn 'Abbās whereby the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said: 'The mistress of the women of the world is Fāṭimah, then Khadījah and then Āsiyyah.' This is a good hadith which gives rises to ambiguity.

Allah singled out Maryam for things He did not give to any other woman: the Spirit of Absolute Purity spoke to her, purified her, blew into her shirt and approached her for that breath. That happened to no other woman. She believed the words of her Lord and did not ask for any sign as proof of the good news as Zakariyyā had done. That is why Allah called her siddīqah in the Revelation when He says 'a woman of truth' (5:75) and: 'She confirmed the words of her Lord and His Books and was one of the obedient' (66:12). Allah testified that she was a woman of truth and affirmed the words of the good news and testified that she was one of the obedient.

The good news was received by Zakariyyā and he then considered his old age and the barrenness of his wife and asked for a sign. Maryam received the good news of a boy and then considered her virginity and not being touched by a mortal. She was told, 'That is how it is,' and she said nothing more and affirmed the words of her Lord and did not ask for any sign as proof. What other woman has possessed these qualities? This is why it is related that she will be among the forerunners to the Garden with the Messengers. The Prophet ﷺ said, 'If I were to take an oath, I would carry it out. Only about a dozen men will enter the Garden before the forerunners of my community. They include Ibrāhīm, Ismā'īl, Ishāq, Ya'qūb, the tribes [i.e. Yūsuf and his brothers], Mūsā, ‘Īsā and Maryam bint ‘Imrān.’ Allah knows best.

It is incumbent on someone who follows outward knowledge, and takes outward matters as proof of inward matters, to acknowledge the words of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ, ‘I am the master of the children of Ādam, and it is no boast’ and, ‘On the Day of Rising the Banner of Praise will be in my hands and the keys of honour will be in my hands. I will be the first to speak, the first to intercede, the first to give good news and the first... and the first...’ He only gained this leadership over the Messengers in this world by something immense inwardly. That is also the case with Maryam. She only obtained Allah’s testimony in Revelation to her being a woman of truth and affirmation in words by her rank of proximity. Those who say that she was not a Prophet said that her seeing of the angel Jibrīl was the same as his being seen by the Companions in the form of Dihyah al-Kalbī when he asked about Islam and faith. That did not make the Companions Prophets. The first view is clearer and more frequently taken. Allah knows best.

يَسْمِعُ أَقْسَامَ رَبِّكَ وَأَسْجُدُكَ وَأَزْكَعُ مَعَ الرَّكْعَيْنِ ﴿١٧﴾

43 Maryam, obey your Lord and prostrate and bow with those who bow.’

This means to stand a long time in prayer, as Mujāhid said. Qatādah said that it is to be constant in obedience. The meaning of qunūt has already been discussed. Al-Awzā‘ī said, ‘When the angels said that to her, she stood in the prayer until her feet were swollen and ran with blood and pus.’ Prostration is mentioned before bowing because the conjunction ‘wāw’ does not necessarily imply sequence in time. The disagreement about this was mentioned in al-Baqarah (2:158). It is also said that that was the order in their religion (that prostration preceded bowing). ‘Bow with those who bow’ means to pray like them, even if she did not pray with them. It is said that it means the group prayer. This was also already discussed in al-Baqarah.

44 This is news from the Unseen which We reveal to you. You were not with them when they cast their reeds to see which of them would be the guardian of Maryam. You were not with them when they quarrelled.

This is news from the Unseen which We reveal to you.

This is referring to what Allah mentioned about Zakariyyā, Yahyā and Maryam. The words: ‘We reveal to you’ are evidence of the Prophethood of Muḥammad ﷺ since he was reporting about Zakariyyā and Maryam without having read the previous Books and the People of the Book confirmed it. ‘This’ alludes back to what has just been mentioned. Revelation (wahy) is sending the Message to the Prophet ﷺ and can mean inspiration and indication and the like. Its linguistic root means ‘to inform in secret’ which is why inspiration is called wahy. Usage of it is found in the āyah: ‘When I inspired the Disciples...’ (5:111) and: ‘Your Lord revealed to the bees.’ (16:68) It is said that the words: ‘inspired the Disciples’ means ‘commanded them.’ The verb is wahā and awhā and ramā and armā which mean the same. Al-‘Ajjāj said:

He revealed to it to remain stable and it remained.

Wahy can also mean speed as we see in the hadith: ‘Speed. Speed. (al-wahy. al-wahy.)’ Ibn Fāris says that it means indication, writing and the message and all that entails informing whatever it is. Wahyy is quick and wahā is voice.

You were not with them when they cast their reeds to see which of them would be the guardian of Maryam.

‘You, Muḥammad, were not in their presence.’ Reeds (aqlām), the plural of qalam, are so-called because they have been cut (qalama). It is said that it refers to their arrows. It is also said that it was the reeds with which they wrote the Torah, which is more excellent, since Allah forbade drawing arrows in 5:3, saying that it is ‘deviance’, although doing that is permissible in a different way to the way they were used in the Jāhiliyyah for gambling.

Zakariyyā said, ‘I am more entitled to care for her because I am married to her maternal aunt.’ He was married to Ashya‘ bint Fāqūd, the sister of Ḥannah bint Fāqūd, the mother of Maryam. The tribe of Israel said, ‘We are more entitled. She is the daughter of our scholar.’ So they drew lots. Each one brought his reed and they put them into a river and the one whose reed remained would be the guardian. The Prophet ﷺ said, ‘The reeds were carried away and that of Zakariyyā rose to the top.’ It was a sign for him because he was a Prophet at whose hands Signs appeared. Something else is also said in respect of the grammar of the sentence which gives the meaning: ‘they were looking to see which of them would be the guardian.’

Some of our scholars use this as evidence that drawing lots is a permissible practice. It is a principle in our Shari‘ah for all of those who desire fairness in dividing things up. It is a sunnah according to the majority of fuqahā’, when the evidence is equal on both sides, in order to be fair, to calm hearts and to remove suspicion with respect to the allotting. No one is preferred over the other when that for which lots are drawn is the same type of thing, following the Book and the Sunnah. Abū Ḥanīfah and his people reject drawing lots and reject the hadiths about it and claim that there is no sense to it because it is like drawing arrows which Allah has forbidden. Ibn al-Mundhir related that Abū Ḥanīfah permitted it, saying, ‘Lots are not proper by analogy, but we abandon analogy in that case and take the traditions and the Sunnah.’

Abū ‘Ubayd points out, ‘Three Prophets made use of the practice of drawing lots: Yūnus, Zakariyyā, and our Prophet, Muḥammad ﷺ.’ Ibn al-Mundhir said, ‘The allowance for employing the practice of drawing lots is like a consensus among the people of knowledge when deciding how things should be divided between partners and there is no sense in rejecting it.’ At the end of the chapter on testimony, al-Bukhārī has ‘Chapter on drawing lots in difficult cases and the words of Allah: ‘...when they cast their reeds.’” He includes the hadith of an-Nu‘mān ibn Bashīr: ‘The example of someone who thinks little of the limits of Allah and falls into them is like some people who draw lots on a boat...’ This hadith will be discussed in al-Anfāl and in az-Zukhruf. Al-Bukhārī also has the hadith of Umm al-Alā’ when the Anṣār drew lots for the lodging of the Muhājirūn, and the lot of ‘Uthmān ibn Maz‘ūn went to them, and the hadith of ‘Ā’ishah which says: ‘When the Messenger of Allah ﷺ wanted to travel, he would draw lots between his wives, and he would travel with whichever wife had her lot drawn.’

The transmission from Mālik varies about someone drawing lots to determine which wife goes on a journey with him. Sometimes he says that one draws lots based on the hadith and sometimes he says that he should travel with the one who is most fitted to that journey. There is the hadith of Abū Hurayrah in which the Messenger of Allah ﷺ says, ‘If people knew what a reward there was for the call and the first row, and could find nothing but drawing lots for it, they would draw lots.’ There are many hadiths regarding this matter and the methodology of drawing of lots is described in the books of fiqh. Abū Ḥanīfah argues that the discussion of lots in the case of Zakariyyā and the wives of the Prophet ﷺ was in a context when they would in fact consent without lots being drawn and so it was permitted. Ibn al-‘Arabī says that this is weak because the point of drawing lots is to extract a hidden ruling in a case where there is a dispute. That is not the case when there is mutual consent. It is not valid for anyone to say that lots take the place of mutual consent.

Lots are never drawn when there is mutual consent. It is always when there is a dispute and begrudgement.

According to ash-Shāfi'ī and those who take his position, the description of the methodology of drawing lots is that small pieces of equal size are cut and on each piece the name of the person with a share is written. Then they are placed inside equal-sized nutshells without cracks and left to dry a little. Then a man who was not present puts them in a cloth and covers them with it. Then they are extracted from that. When the name of a man comes out, he is given the portion drawn for him.

The āyah also indicates that a maternal aunt is more entitled to guardianship than all other relatives except the grandmother. The Prophet ﷺ judged that custody of the daughter of Ḥamzah should go to Ja'far who was married to her maternal aunt, saying, 'The maternal aunt is in the position of the mother.' This was already mentioned in al-Baqarah.

Abū Dāwūd transmitted that 'Alī said, 'Zayd ibn Ḥārithah went to Makkah and brought Ḥamzah's daughter. Ja'far said, "I will take her. I am more entitled to my uncle's daughter and I am married to her maternal aunt. A maternal aunt is [like the] mother." 'Alī said, "I am more entitled to my uncle's daughter. I am married to the daughter of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ and so I am more entitled to her." Zayd said, "I am more entitled to her. I went to her, travelled with her and brought her." The Messenger of Allah ﷺ came out and the story was told to him. He said, "I judge that the girl should be with Ja'far. She will be with her maternal aunt and the maternal aunt is like the mother.'" Ibn Abī Khaythamah mentioned that Zayd ibn Ḥārithah was the executor of Ḥamzah. So according to this, the maternal aunt has more entitlement than the executor. When the cousin is her husband, that does not prevent the maternal aunt from taking custody, even if he is not a mahram of the girl.

This āyah indicates the Prophethood of Maryam. The ‘When’ is either connected to ‘quarrelled’ or to ‘you were not with them.’ Abu-s-Sammāl recitation of ‘bi-kalmati’ was already mentioned. ‘His name’ uses the masculine, not the feminine pronoun (for ‘word’) because ‘word’ here refers to ‘son’. Messiah (Masīh) is a title of ‘Īsā, and means ‘truthful’ according to Ibrāhīm an-Nakha‘ī. It is said to be an arabicised word and its root has a shīn. So it has various meanings. Ibn Fāris says that masīh is sweat and also means truthful. A dirham which is masīh is smooth, without engraving. Mash means sexual intercourse. A place which is described as amsah is bare. Mashā’ is a human with thin thighs and buttocks. Someone is described as having traits (mashah) of beauty. Masā’ih are good bows, the singular being masīhah. [Poetry]

They disagree about the origin of the term masīh in respect of ‘Īsā. It is said that he brushed through (masaha) the earth, in that he came to it but did not remain. Ibn ‘Abbās said that he did not wipe over (masaha) anyone with a defect without that healing him, which is why he was called Masīh. According to this it has the meaning of an active participle. It is said that that was because he was anointed (masīh) with the oil of blessings. The Prophets used to be anointed with it and it had a fragrant scent. When he was anointed with it, it was known that he was a Prophet. It is said that it was because beauty touched him and showed on him. It is said that he was called that because he was cleansed with purity from wrong actions.

Abu-l-Haytham said, ‘Masīh is the opposite of masīkh. It is said that Allah smoothed (masaha) the creation of a person with good blessed character and transformed (masakha) someone’s creation into something ugly and blameworthy.’ Ibn al-A‘rabī said, ‘The Masīh is truthful and the Maskhīh is one-eyed which is why he is the Dajjāl.’ Abū ‘Ubayd said, ‘The root of masīh in Hebrew is mashihā and has been Arabicised.’ The Dajjāl is called a Messiah because one of his eyes is smoothed over (mamsūh). Some people call him Mashīkh rather than Masīh although the first is better known. He is called that because he will travel (yasīhu) around in the land and will enter all towns except for Makkah, Madīnah and Jerusalem. The Dajjāl will cause trial (miḥnah) in the land while the son of Maryam brought a gift (minḥah). A poet said:

The Messiah (Masīh) will kill the Messiah (Mashīkh).

We find in Saḥīḥ Muslim from Anas ibn Mālīk that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘There is no land where the Dajjāl will not go except for Makkah and Madīnah.’ The hadith of ‘Abdullāh ibn ‘Amr has ‘except the Ka‘bah and Jerusalem.’ Abū Ja‘far aṭ-Ṭabarī mentioned it. Abū Ja‘far aṭ-Ṭaḥāwī added, ‘the mosque of aṭ-Ṭūr’. He related it from Junādah ibn Abī Umayyah from one of the Companions of the Prophet ﷺ.

We find in the hadith of Abū Bakr ibn Abī Shaybah from Samurah ibn Jundub that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘He will be victorious over the entire world except for the Ḥaram and Jerusalem. He will lay siege to the believers in Jerusalem.’ We find in Saḥīḥ Muslim: ‘When things are like that, Allah will send the Messiah, son of Maryam and he will descend at the white minaret in the east of Damascus, wearing two yellow garments with his hands on the wings of two angels. When he bows his head, it will seem as if drops are falling from his head.

When he raises his head, drops like pearls will fall. Any unbeliever who catches the scent of his breath will die, and his breath will go as far as he can see. He will search for him [the Dajjāl] and will catch him at the gate of Ludd and kill him.’

Finally it is said that there is no derivation for ‘Messiah’ because Allah named him that and so ‘Īsā and Masīḥ are interchangeable. ‘Īsā is a foreign name which is why it is not inflected. If it is Arabicised, it is not inflected in the definite or indefinite because it ends with an alif. They would say that it is from the verb ‘āsa, ya‘ūsu, which is to manage.

of high esteem in this world and the Next, and one of those brought near.

Wajīh (of high esteem) means honoured with high rank and value. According to al-Akhfash, it is in the accusative for the ḥāl. The plural is wijahā’ or wijahā’. ‘One of those brought near’ means brought near to Allah and is added to the words ‘of high esteem’.

He will speak to people in the cradle, and also when fully grown, and will be one of the righteous,’ ‘Cradle’ (mahd) is a place where a child lies during the time of his infancy. The verb means to arrange a matter and smooth it. We find in the Revelation: ‘...making the way easy (yamhadūna) for themselves.’ (30:44) The verb imtihada (Form VIII) is used with something high, like a camel’s hump. The word ‘kahl’ (fully grown) refers to the period between being a boy and being an old man. The term kahlah is used for a woman. Form VIII of the verb is used for a meadow when it is in full bloom. It is said that he spoke to people in the cradle as a sign, and spoke to them when fully grown with Revelation and the Message.

Abu-I-Abbās said, ‘He spoke to them in the cradle to prove his mother’s innocence. He said, “I am the slave of Allah.” (19:30)’ The expression ‘when fully grown’ is said to refer to the fact that when Allah makes him descend from heaven, he will be thirty-three. He will be fully grown and will say to them, ‘I am the slave of Allah’ as he said in the cradle. So both ages are signs and proofs.

Al-Mahdawī said, ‘The point of the āyah is that Allah informs them that ‘Isā will speak to them in the cradle and live until he is fully grown. That is because the norm was that someone who spoke in the cradle did not survive for long.’ Az-Zajjāj said that it means ‘he will speak to them when fully grown.’ Al-Farrā’ and al-Akhfash said that it is added to ‘of high esteem’. It is said that it means that he will speak to people as a child and when fully grown.

Ibn Jurayj related that Mujāhid said that the word ‘kahl’ means being forbearing, but an-Nahhās said that this is not recognised as a linguistic usage. Those who study language say that it means the age of forty. Some of them say that one is a child until the age of sixteen, a youth until the age of thirty-two and then mature at thirty-three, as al-Akhfash said. The words among ‘among the righteous’ is supplementary to ‘of high esteem’ and means ‘among the righteous worshippers.’

Abū Bakr ibn Abī Shaybah mentioned from ‘Abdullāh ibn Idrīs from Ḥuṣayn that Hilāl ibn Yasāf said, ‘Only three people spoke in the cradle: ‘Isā, the child in the story of Yūsuf, and the child in the story of Jurayj.’ We find in Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim from Abū Hurayrah that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘Only three spoke in the cradle: ‘Isā ibn Maryam, the child in the story of Jurayj, and the infant who was being suckled by his mother when a tyrant [passed].’

It was reported from Ṣuhayb in the story of the story of the Trench: ‘A woman was brought to be thrown in the fire on account of her faith with an infant.’ It has in a version other than that in Muslim: ‘She held back from being thrown into it and the child said, “Mother, be steadfast! You are following the truth!”’

Aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk said, ‘Six spoke in the cradle: the witness for [the Prophet] Yūsuf, the child of the hairdresser of the wife of Pharaoh, ‘Isā, Yaḥyā, the child in the story of Jurayj, and child in the story of the tyrant.’ He did not mention the Trench. If that is included, it is seven. There is no contradiction between this and the words of the Prophet ﷺ, ‘Only three spoke in the cradle.’ He reported about what he knew that had been revealed to him at that time. Then later Allah informed him about whatever further He wished and he reported that.

The story about Yūsuf will be dealt with later, Allah willing. The story about Jurayj, the one about the tyrant, and the story about the Trench are found in Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim. The story of the Trench will be found in Sūrat al-Burūj, Allah willing.

As for the story of the hairdresser of Pharaoh’s wife, al-Bayhaqī mentioned from Ibn ‘Abbās that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘When I was taken on the Night Journey, a pleasant fragrance reached me and I asked, “What is this fragrance?” They said, “It is the fragrance of the hairdresser of Pharaoh’s daughter and her children. [While she was combing her hair], the comb fell from her and she said, ‘In the Name of Allah.’” Pharaoh’s daughter asked, ‘My father?’ She answered, ‘My Lord, your Lord and your father’s Lord.’ She said, ‘Do you have a Lord other than my father?’ She replied, ‘Yes, my Lord, your Lord and your father’s Lord is Allah.’ He summoned her and demanded, ‘Do you have a Lord other than me?’ ‘Yes,’ she answered, ‘my Lord and your Lord is Allah.’ He ordered a hollow brass cow to be heated up and then commanded that she be thrown into it. She said, ‘I have something to request of you.’ ‘What is it?’ he asked, She said, ‘Put my bones and those of my children in the same place.’ He said, ‘I will grant that to you because of what I owe you.’ He gave the command and they were thrown one by one into it until it reached the suckling babe. It said, ‘Mother! Do not hold back! We are following the truth.’” Then he said, ‘Four spoke when they were infants: this one, the witness of Yūsuf, the child with Jurayj and ‘Īsā ibn Maryam.’

قَالَتْ رَبِّ أَنَّى يَكُونُ لِي وَلَدٌ وَلَمْ يَمَسِّنِي بَشَرٌ قَالَ كَذَلِكِ إِلهُ يَخْلُقُ مَا يَشَاءُ إِذَا قَضَىٰ أَمْرًا فَإِنَّمَا يَقُولُ لَهُ كُنْ فَيَكُونُ ﴿۵۷﴾

47 She said, ‘My lord! How can I have a son when no man has ever touched me?’ He said, ‘It will be so.’ Allah creates whatever He wills. When He decides on something, He just says to it, ‘Be!’ and it is.

She addressed Jibrīl because he is the one who appeared to her as the messenger of her Lord saying, ‘I am your Lord’s messenger to give you a pure son.’ When she heard that, she asked about how that would occur without sexual intercourse, noting that the normal means of conception was through sexual intercourse either in marriage or fornication. Stressing that, her words are reported in Sūrat Maryam: ‘I am not an unchaste woman’ (19:20) because the words ‘no man has ever touched me’ include both the lawful and the unlawful. It is said that she did not think that anything was impossible for Allah’s power, but she wanted to know how that would occur: by a future husband or by Allah’s direct creation. When Jibrīl said, ‘It will be so! Your Lord says, “That is easy for Me to do”’ (19:9), he breathed into the collar and sleeve of her shift, as Ibn Jurayj says.

Ibn ‘Abbās said that Jibrīl touched the sleeve of her shift with his finger and breathed into it and she conceived immediately. Various other things are said as well, and this will be discussed in Sūrat Maryam, Allah willing.

One of them said that Jibrīl breathed into her womb and it attached itself. One of them said that it is not permitted that the creation be from the breath of Jibrīl because then the child would be part angel and part human, but rather the reason for that is that when Allah Almighty created Ādam and took the covenant from his progeny, he put some of the fluid in the loins of fathers and some in the wombs of mothers. When the two fluids meet, a child is produced. Allah gave Maryam both fluids: some in her womb and some in her spine. Jibrīl breathed into her to stimulate her desire because as long as a woman does not have her desire ignited, she does not become pregnant. When that happened by Jibrīl's breath, the fluid in her spine descended into her womb and the two fluids mixed and the foetus was attached. That is why Allah then says: 'When He decides on something,' meaning when He wants to create something. This was discussed in al-Baqarah.

48 He will teach him the Book and Wisdom, and the Torah and the Gospel, 49 as a Messenger to the tribe of Israel, saying: 'I have brought you a Sign from your Lord. I will create the shape of a bird out of clay for you and then breathe into it and it will be a bird by Allah's permission. I will heal the blind and the leper, and bring the dead to life, by Allah's permission. I will tell you what you eat and what you store up in your homes. There is a Sign for you in that if you are believers.

He will teach him the Book and Wisdom,

Ibn Jurayj said that the Book refers to writing and script. It is said that the Book is other than the Torah and the Gospel which Allah taught 'Īsā.

as a Messenger to the tribe of Israel, saying:

'As a Messenger' either means, 'We will make him a Messenger' or 'He will speak to them as a Messenger.' It is also said that it is joined to the words 'of high esteem.' Al-Akhfash said, 'If you wish, you can make the wāw before Messenger interpolated while the word “Messenger” is a ḥāl modifying hā’ (him). It implies: “He will teach him the Book as a Messenger.” We find in a long hadith reported by Abū Dharr: “The first of the Prophets of the tribe of Israel was Mūsā and the last was ‘Īsā.’

I will create the shape of a bird out of clay for you and then breathe into it and it will be a bird by Allah’s permission.

It means: ‘I will form and fashion it for you.’ Al-A‘raj and Abū Ja‘far recited ‘shape’ as ‘ka-hayyati’ while the rest have it as ‘ka-hay’ati’ with a hamzah. The word ‘ṭayr’ (bird) can be masculine or plural. ‘Breathe into it’ means into part of it or into the clay. It became a bird. ‘Bird’ is read as ṭā’ir or ṭayr.

Wahb said, ‘It flew as long as the people were looking at it. When they stopped looking at it, it fell down dead so as to distinguish the action of creation from the action of Allah.’ It is said that he only created a bat which has the full form of the bird so as to be more extensive in power because it has teats, teeth and ears. It menstruates, becomes pure and gives birth.’

It is said that they asked for the creation of a bat because it is the most wondrous of all creation. Among its wonders is that it is flesh and blood, flies without feathers, reproduces as mammals reproduce, without eggs like other birds, and it produces milk. It is not seen in the light of day or in darkest night, but at sunset and dawn. It laughs like a human being and menstruates like a human being. It is said that the people asked him for a sign out of their obstinacy, saying, ‘Create a bat for us and put a spirit into it if you are telling the truth.’ So he took some clay and fashioned a bat from it and then breathed into it and it flew in the sky. The fashioning and breathing was from ‘Īsā and the creation was from Allah, in the same way that the breathing [into Maryam] was from Jibrīl, and the creation was from Allah.

I will heal the blind and the leper, and bring the dead to life, by Allah’s permission.

Ibn ‘Abbās and Abū ‘Ubaydah said that akmah is someone who is born blind. Ibn Fāris also said that. Suwayd said:

His eyes were blind (akmah) so that they were white.

Mujāhid said that akmah is the one who can see in the day but not at night. ‘Ikrimah said that akmah means someone who is dim-sighted, but linguistically it refers to blindness. The verb is kamiha, yakmahu, kamah. Form II is also used to mean to make blind.

A leper (abraṣ) is someone suffering from white leprosy which is a whiteness that shows on the skin. Abraṣ also means the moon. ‘Sāmm abraṣ’ is an albino. These two ailments are mentioned because medicine was important in the time of ‘Īsā and so Allah showed them that type of miracle.

He brought four individuals back to life: a friend of his, the son of the old woman, the daughter of a tax-collector, and Sām ibn Nūḥ. Allah knows best. The friend had died some days before and He prayed to Allah and he rose by Allah’s permission, lived and had a child. The son of the old woman had passed by him being carried on a bed and he prayed to Allah and he got up, wrapped in his shroud, and carried the bed on his shoulder and returned to his family. He went to the daughter of the tax-collector in the night and prayed to Allah for her. She lived and had children.

When they saw that, they said, ‘He has brought back to life those who have recently died. Perhaps they were not dead but in a stupor.’ So he brought to life Sām ibn Nūḥ. He said, ‘Show me his grave.’ He went out with the people to his grave and he prayed to Allah and he came out of his grave, white-haired. ‘Īsā asked him, ‘Why is your hair white when there was no white hair in your time?’ He answered, ‘Spirit of Allah, you summoned me and I heard a voice saying, “Respond to the Spirit of Allah!” I thought that the Day of Rising had come and terror of that turned my hair white.’ He asked him about the wresting of the soul at death. He said, ‘Spirit of Allah, the bitterness of the wresting has not left my throat.’ He had died more than four thousand years earlier. He told the people, ‘Affirm him. He is a Prophet.’ Some people believed him and said that he was a Prophet and some said that it was sorcery.

It is related from Ismā‘īl ibn ‘Ayyāsh from Muḥammad ibn Ṭalḥah from a man that when ‘Īsā wanted to bring the dead to life, he would pray two rak‘ahs and recite Surat al-Mulk (67) in the first and Surat as-Sajdah (32) in the second. When he finished, he praised Allah and then invoked his seven names: ‘O Ancient! O Hidden! O Constantly Abiding! O Unique! O Odd! O One! O Everlasting Sustainer!’ Al-Bayhaqī mentioned it and said that its isnād is not strong.

I will tell you what you eat and what you store up in your homes.

That is because when he brought the dead back to life, they asked for another sign and said, ‘Tell us what we eat in our houses and store up for the tomorrow.’ He told them in detail: ‘You, you ate such-and-such, and you, you ate such-and-such and stored up such-and-such.’ Mujāhid, az-Zuhrī and as-Sakhtiyānī recited ‘mā tadhkharūna’. Sa‘īd ibn Jubayr and others said, ‘He used to tell the children in the school what they stored up until their fathers forbade them to sit with him.’ Qatādah said, ‘He told them what they ate from the table and what they secretly stored from it.’

وَمُصَدِّقًا لِّمَا بَيْنَ يَدَيْهِ مِنَ التَّوْرَةِ وَلَأَجَلٍ لَّكُمْ بَعْضَ الَّذِي هُمْ حُرِّمَ
 عَلَيْكُمْ وَجِئْتُكُمْ بِآيَاتٍ مِّن رَّبِّكُمْ فَاتَّقُوا اللَّهَ وَأَطِيعُوا ۝
 إِنَّ اللَّهَ رَبِّي وَرَبُّكُمْ فَاعْبُدُوهُ هَذَا صِرَاطٌ مُسْتَقِيمٌ ۝

50 I come confirming the Torah I find already there, and to make lawful for you some of what was previously forbidden to you. I have brought you a Sign from your Lord. So have taqwā of Allah and obey me. 51 Allah is my Lord and your Lord so worship Him. That is a straight path.’

The word ‘confirming’ is an adverbial ḥāl joined to ‘Messenger’.

‘What I find already there’ is what came before him. It is said that ‘Īsā made lawful to them what they had been forbidden in the Torah because of their wrong actions, such as eating fat and animals with claws. It is said that he made lawful for them what their rabbis had forbidden them that was not actually forbidden in the Torah. Abū ‘Ubaydah said that ‘some’ can mean ‘all’. [Poetry] This is wrong theoretically and linguistically and wrong in the context because ‘Īsā allowed them certain foods that Mūsā had forbidden them, such as eating fat and others things, but did not make lawful for them killing, stealing or fornication. The evidence for this is what is related from Qatādah: “‘Īsā brought what was more lenient than Mūsā because Mūsā brought the prohibition of camels and fat and ‘Īsā made some of that lawful.’

An-Nakha‘ī recited ‘ḥaruma’. ‘Some’ means ‘all’ which something is added to it which indicates it as we see in the words of the poet:

You have destroyed Abū Mundhir. Let some of us remain.

Inside you some evil is easier than other kinds.

In the words ‘I have brought you a Sign from your Lord’ the singular for ‘sign’ is used although they are several, and so it is generic. They are all proofs of his Prophethood.

فَلَمَّا أَحَسَّ عَيْسَىٰ مِنْهُمْ الْكُفْرَ قَالَ مَنْ أَنْصَارِي إِلَى اللَّهِ قَالَ
 الْخَوَارِيُّونَ نَحْنُ أَنْصَارُ اللَّهِ ؕ آمَنَّا بِاللَّهِ وَاشْهَدْ بِأَنَّا مُسْلِمُونَ ﴿٥٢﴾

52 When ‘Īsā sensed unbelief on their part, he said, ‘Who will be my helpers to Allah?’ The disciples said, ‘We are Allah’s helpers. We believe in Allah. Bear witness that we are Muslims.

When ‘Īsā sensed unbelief on their part,

This means on the part of the tribe of Israel. The word ‘sensed’ here means knew and found, as az-Zajjāj said. Abū ‘Ubaydah says that it means ‘recognised’. The root of that is knowing about the existence of the thing by touching it, so ‘sensing’ is knowledge of the thing.

Allah says: ‘Do you see (sense) a trace of any one of them?’ (19:98) The word ‘ḥass’ means killing. Allah says: ‘...when you were slaughtering them (taḥussūnahum) by His permission.’ (3:152) There is also the hadith about the locusts: ‘The cold killed (ḥassahu) them.’ ‘Unbelief’ here means disbelief in Allah. It is said that it means hearing words of disbelief from them. Al-Farrā’ said, ‘They wanted to kill him.’

he said, ‘Who will be my helpers to Allah?’

This is asking for help against them. As-Suddī, ath-Thawrī and others said, ‘The meaning is “with Allah”.’ Allah knows best. Al-Ḥasan said, ‘It means, “Who will be my helpers on the Path to Allah” because he called them to Allah.’ It is said that it means, ‘Who will add their help to that of Allah?’ These are two excellent views. He asked for help to defend his people and make the Call to Islam public. Al-Ḥasan and Mujāhid said that. This is the custom of Allah for His Prophets and awliyā’. Lūṭ said: ‘If only I had the strength to combat you or could take refuge in some powerful support’ (11:80). He meant a clan and companions to help him.

The disciples said, ‘We are Allah’s helpers. We believe in Allah.’

The helpers are those who help Allah’s Prophet and His dīn. The ‘disciples’ are the companions of ‘Īsā, who were twelve men according to al-Kalbī and Abū Rawq. There is disagreement about why they were called ‘ḥawwāriyyūn’. Ibn ‘Abbās said that they were called that because of the whiteness of their garments and that they were fishermen. Ibn Abī Najīḥ and Ibn Arṭāh said that they were fullers and were called that because of the whiteness of their garments. ‘Aṭā’ said, ‘Maryam exposed ‘Īsā to various types of work. The last of these was that of the disciples who were fullers and dyers. ‘Īsā’s teacher wanted to travel and he told ‘Īsā, ‘I have many garments of different colours. I have taught you how to dye, so dye them.’ ‘Īsā heated one pot and put all the garments in it and said, ‘By Allah’s permission, be what I want from you.’ The fuller arrived while all the garments were in the pot. When he saw it, he said, ‘You have ruined them!’ Then ‘Īsā brought a red garment, a yellow one, a green one, and other colours and his dye was written on each of them. The fuller was astonished and realised that that was from Allah. He summoned the people to him and they believed in him. So they are the Disciples.

Qatādah and aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk said they were called that because they were the elite companions of the Prophet because of the purity of their hearts. It is said that they were kings and each king prepared food and invited people to come to it. ‘Īsā was seated at a bowl whose contents did not decrease. The king asked him, ‘Who are you?’ ‘Īsa son of Maryam,’ he answered. He said, ‘I leave you this kingdom of mine and will follow you.’ He went with those with him and they were the disciples. Ibn ‘Awn said that.

The root of ḥawar linguistically is whiteness. The verb ḥawwara is used for bleaching a garment. Huwwārā is white food. The verb iḥwarra means to become white. A bowl that is muḥawwarah is whitened. Ḥawārī also means ‘helper’ as the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘Every Prophet has a helper, and my helper is az-Zubayr.’ Hawāriyyāt means women because of their whiteness. [Poetry]

رَبَّنَا آمَنَّا بِمَا أَنْزَلْتَ وَاتَّبَعْنَا الرَّسُولَ فَاكْتُبْنَا مَعَ الشَّاهِدِينَ ﴿٥٣﴾

53 Our Lord, we believe in what You have sent down and have followed the Messenger, so write us down among the witnesses.’

It means that they say: ‘We believe in what is in Your Book and what has appeared of Your judgment.’ The Messenger is ‘Īsā. ‘The witnesses’ are the community of Muhammad ﷺ as Ibn ‘Abbas stated. It means: ‘Confirm our names with their names and place us among them.’ It is also said that it means: ‘Write us down with those who testify that Your Prophets told the truth.’

54 They plotted and Allah plotted. But Allah is the best of plotters.

The people who 'plotted' were the unbelievers of the tribe of Israel in whom he sensed unbelief, in other words they plotted to kill him. That was when 'Īsā and his mother were expelled by his people from among them and he returned to them with the Disciples. He proclaimed the call among them and they wanted to kill him and plotted to assassinate him. That was their plotting. The plotting of Allah is when He draws on His slaves from where they do not know, as al-Farrā' and others said. Ibn 'Abbās said: 'Whenever they commit an error, He renews blessing for them.' Az-Zajjāj said, 'It is Allah's repaying them for their plotting. He named it by the original action which led to it.' We have examples of that in 2:15 and 4:142. This was already discussed in al-Baqarah.

The linguistic root of makr (plot) is using stratagems and deceit. Makr is a plump shank and a type of garment. Makr is a type of plant. It is said that it is russet as Ibn Fāris said.

It is said that Allah's plotting was casting the shape of 'Īsā on someone else while raising 'Īsā to Him when the Jews agreed to kill him. They entered the house and he fled from them and Jibrīl took him up from the window to heaven. Their ruler told a vile man among them called Yahūdhā, 'Go in and kill him. He entered by the window and did not find 'Īsā there. Allah then made him resemble 'Īsā. When he came out looking like 'Īsā', they seized him, killed him and crucified him. Then they said, 'His face is like that of 'Īsā, but his body is like that of our fellow! If this is our fellow, then where is 'Īsā? If this is 'Īsā, where is our fellow?' They began to fight among themselves and killed one another. This is what is meant by the āyah although other things are said as well.

Mākir is an active participle from makara, yamkuru. Some scholars consider ‘the Best of plotters’ to be one of the names of Allah Almighty and say in supplication, ‘O Best of plotters, plot for me and not against me.’ The Prophet ﷺ used to say in his supplication, ‘O Allah, plot for me and not against me!’ We have mentioned this in Kitāb al-Asnā. Allah knows best.

إِذْ قَالَ اللَّهُ يٰعِيسَىٰ اٰیُّ مَتَوَفٰیكَ وَاَرَاغَمَكَ اِلٰیَّ وَمَطَهَّرَكَ مِّنَ الَّذِیْنَ كَفَرُوْا
 وَجَاعِلُ الَّذِیْنَ اَتَّبَعُوْكَ فَوْقَ الَّذِیْنَ كَفَرُوْا اِلٰی یَوْمِ الْقِیٰمَةِ ثُمَّ اِلٰی
 مَرْجِعِكُمْ فَاَحْكُمْ بَیْنَهُمْ فِیْمَا كُنْتُمْ فِیْهِ تَخْتَلِفُوْنَ ﴿۵۵﴾

55 When Allah said, “Īsā, I will take you back and raise you up to Me and purify you of those who disbelieve. And I will place the people who follow you above those who disbelieve until the Day of Rising. Then you will all return to Me, and I will judge between you regarding the things about which you differed.

When Allah said, “Īsā, I will take you back and raise you up to Me

The order here is not sequential as is stated by a group of people with grasp of meanings, including aḍ-Ḍahḥāk and al-Farrā’. They say that the wāw does not entail time sequence. It means: ‘I will raise you to Me, purify you of those who disbelieve and make you die after you descend from heaven’ as in His words: ‘And were it not for a prior word from your Lord, and a specified term, it would inevitably have already taken place.’ (20:129) A poet said:

O palm tree from a root,
 May the mercy and peace of Allah be on you!

And the order of the words is reversed.

Al-Ḥasan and Ibn Jurayj said that ‘take back’ means to take and raise to heaven without him dying. You use the same verb for taking property from a person. Wahb ibn Munabbih said, ‘Allah made Īsā die for three hours and then raised him to heaven.’ This, however, is unlikely because of the sound reports from the Prophet ﷺ about his descent and killing of the Dajjāl as we explained in Kitāb at-Tadhkirah. Ibn Zayd said that ‘take back’ and ‘raise’ mean the same and he has not yet died. Ibn Abī Ṭalḥah related from Ibn ‘Abbās that it means: ‘make you die’. Ar-Rabi‘ ibn Anas said that it is the ‘death’ of sleep. The Almighty says: ‘It is He who takes you back to Himself at night.’ (6:60) This means that He makes you sleep because sleep is the brother of death. The Prophet ﷺ was asked, ‘Is there sleep in the Garden?’ ‘No,’ he answered, ‘sleep is the brother of death and there is no death in the Garden.’ Ad-Dāraquṭnī transmitted it. The sound position is that Allah raised him to heaven without that being through death or sleep, as was stated by al-Ḥasan and Ibn Zayd. Aṭ-Ṭabarī preferred it and it is sound from Ibn ‘Abbās. Ad-Daḥḥāk said that.

Ad-Daḥḥāk said, ‘The story is that ‘Īsā gathered the Disciples in a room. There were twelve of them. The Messiah entered by a niche in the room and Iblīs informed all the Jews about that. About four thousand of them met and attacked the door of the room. The Messiah said to the Disciples, “Which of you will go out and be killed and be with me in Paradise?” One man said, “I will, Prophet of Allah.” He gave him a woollen shirt and turban and handed him his staff and he was made to look like ‘Īsā. He went out to the Jews and they crucified and killed him. Allah robed the Messiah in feathers, clothed him in light and cut him off from the pleasure of food and drink, and he flew with the angels.’

Abū Bakr ibn Abī Shaybah mentioned from Abū Mu‘āwiyah from al-A‘mash from al-Minhāl from Sa‘īd ibn Jubayr that Ibn ‘Abbās said, ‘When Allah Almighty wanted to raise ‘Īsā to heaven, he came out to his twelve Companions from part of the room with his head dripping with water. He said to them, “One of you will deny me twelve times after he has believed in me.” Then he asked, “Which of you will take on my resemblance and be killed in my place and be with me in my degree?” One of their youngest stood and said, “I will!" 'Īsā said, "Sit down." Then he repeated the request and the young man stood and said, "I will!" 'Īsā said, "Sit down." Then he repeated the request yet again and the young man stood and said, "I will!" He said, "Yes then. It will be you." So Allah made him resemble 'Īsā.' Allah Almighty raised 'Īsā to heaven from an aperture in the room. Some of the Jews came, looking for him, and seized the one who looked like him and killed him and then crucified him. One of them denied him twelve times after having believed in him. They split into three groups. One group said, "God was among us for as long as he wished and then ascended to heaven." They are the Jacobites. Another group said, "The son of God was among us for as long as he wished and then Allah raised him to heaven." They are the Nestorians. Another group said, "The slave of Allah and His Messenger was among us for as long as he wished and then Allah raised him to Him." They are the Muslims. The two unbelieving groups fought the Muslim group and killed them. Islam remained extinct until Allah sent Muḥammad ﷺ. Allah revealed: "One faction of the tribe of Israel believed and the other disbelieved. So We supported those who believed..." (61:14) This means that their forefathers believed in the time of 'Īsā and "...against their enemy" means by making their dīn triumph over that of the unbelievers "... and they became victorious."

We find in Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim from Abū Hurayrah that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, 'By Allah, the son of Maryam will descend as a just judge and will break the crosses, kill the pigs and remove the jizyah, and there will be so much wealth that no one will have to strive for it. Rancour, mutual hatred and mutual envy will be removed. People will be invited to receive wealth and no one will accept it.' He also related that the Prophet ﷺ said, 'By the One Who has my soul in His hand, the son of Maryam will say the talbiyah for ḥajj or 'umrah or both at the ravine of ar-Rawḥā.'

He will not bring a new Law and so abrogate our Sharī'ah, but he will renew what has fallen into misuse of it. It is as we find in Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim from Abū Hurayrah that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘How will you be when the son of Maryam descends among you and your imam is from you?’ Ibn Abī Dhi’ib said, ‘Do you know what is meant by “your imam is from you?”’ The transmitter asked him to tell him and he said, ‘He will lead you by the Book of your Almighty Lord and the Sunnah of your Prophet ﷺ.’ We further clarified this in Kitāb at-Tadhkirah.

The root of ‘mutawaffika’ is ‘mutawaffiyuka’ and the ḍammah is elided because it is heavy. It is the predicate of inna, and ‘raise you’ is added to it as is ‘purify you’ and ‘place’. ‘Jā’ilu’ is permitted to be ‘jā’ilun’. It is said that there is a complete stop at ‘purify you of those who disbelieve.’ An-Naḥḥās said that it is a good position.

The you in ‘the people who follow you’ refers to Muḥammad ﷺ. The words ‘...above those who believe’ means by the proof and establishing the evidence. ‘The people who follow you’ is addressed to Muḥammad ﷺ, although aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk and Muḥammad ibn Abān say that the Disciples are meant. Allah knows best.

56 As for those who disbelieve, I will punish them with a harsh punishment in this world and the Next World. They will have no helpers.’ 57 As for those who believe and do right actions, We will pay them their wages in full. Allah does not love wrongdoers. 58 That is what We recite to you of the Signs and the wise Reminder.

They will be punished in this world by killing, crucifixion, capture and the payment of jizyah, and in the Next World by the Fire.

إِنَّ مَثَلَ عِيسَىٰ عِنْدَ اللَّهِ كَمَثَلِ آدَمَ خَلَقَهُ مِنْ تُرَابٍ ثُمَّ قَالَ
لَهُ كُنْ فَيَكُونُ ﴿٥٩﴾ الْحَقُّ مِنْ رَبِّكَ فَلَا تَكُن مِّنَ الْمُتَرَدِّينَ ﴿٦٠﴾

59 The likeness of ‘Īsā in Allah’s sight is the same as Ādam. He created him from earth and then He said to him, ‘Be!’ and he was. 60 It is the truth from your Lord so do not be among the doubters.

This is evidence for the validity of using analogy. The comparison between ‘Īsā and Ādam was based on the fact that, like Ādam, ‘Īsā was created without a father not that he was created from dust. The one resembles the other, even if there is a great difference between them, in that single attribute. Ādam was created from dust and ‘Īsā was not, and there is a difference between them in this respect. But the similarity between them was that they were both created without a father and because the basis of their creation was dust. Ādam was not created from dust itself, but the dust became mud and then clay, and then he was created from that. Similarly, ‘Īsā went from one state to another and then became a human being without a father.

This āyah was revealed about the delegation of Najrān when they denied the words of the Prophet ﷺ: ‘‘Īsā is the slave of Allah and His Word.’ They said, ‘Show us a slave created without a father!’ The Prophet ﷺ replied, ‘Ādam. Who was his father? Do you then wonder at ‘Īsā not having a father? Ādam had neither father nor mother.’ That is referred to by the words of Allah: ‘Every time they come to you with a difficult point, We bring you the truth and the best of explanations.’ (25:33)

It is also related that when the Prophet ﷺ invited them to Islam, they said, ‘We were Muslims before you,’ he said, ‘You lie. Three things keep you from Islam: your statement that Allah has had a son, your eating pork and your bowing to the cross.’ They asked, ‘So who was ‘Īsā’s father?’ Then Allah revealed this āyah up until ‘upon the liars.’ (3:61)

When he invited them to mutually curse one another, they said to one other, ‘If you do it, the wadi will be filled with fire against you.’ They asked, ‘Do you offer us something else?’ He said, ‘It is either Islam, jizyah, or war.’ They agreed to pay jizyah.

The words end at ‘Ādam’. The verb ‘was (yakūn)’ is in the future tense while the past tense is meant as is understood from the meaning. Al-Farrā’ said that ‘It is the truth from your Lord’ is in the nominative by an implied ‘It is’. It is a new sentence whose predicate is ‘from your Lord’. It is said that it is an active participle, i.e. ‘The truth has come to you.’

Do not be among the doubters

This is addressed to the Prophet ﷺ, but what is meant is his community because he had no doubts about the story of ‘Īsā’.

فَمَنْ حَاجَكَ فِيهِ مِنْ بَعْدِ مَا جَاءَكَ مِنَ الْعِلْمِ فَقُلْ تَعَالَوْا نَدْعُ أَبْنَاءَنَا
وَأَبْنَاءَكُمْ وَنِسَاءَنَا وَنِسَاءَكُمْ وَأَنْفُسَنَا وَأَنْفُسَكُمْ ثُمَّ نَبْتَهِلْ
فَيَجْعَلِ اللَّهُ عَلَى الْكَاذِبِينَ ۝

61 If anyone argues with you about him after the knowledge that has come to you, say, ‘Come then! Let us summon our sons and your sons, our women and your women, ourselves and yourselves. Then let us make earnest supplication and call down the curse of Allah upon the liars.’

If anyone argues with you about him after the knowledge that has come to you, say, ‘Come then! Let us summon our sons and your sons, our women and your women, ourselves and yourselves. Then let us make earnest supplication and call down the curse of Allah upon the liars.’

‘If, Muḥammad, anyone argues with you and debates with you about ‘Īsā’ after you know that he is the slave and Messenger of Allah.’

The form ‘ta‘ālaw’ was used for someone respected and with a high position and then was used to ask anyone to come forward. It will be further explained in al-A‘nām. This shows that the term ‘sons’ can refer to grandsons since the Prophet ﷺ brought al-Ḥasan and al-Ḥusayn with Fāṭimah walking behind and ‘Alī behind her. He said to them, ‘If I supplicate, then say, “Āmīn.”’ Ibtihāl is intense supplication as Ibn ‘Abbās said. Abū ‘Ubaydah and al-Kisā’ī said that it is to curse one another. The root of ibtihāl is striving in supplication with curses and other things. Labīd said:

Time looked at the mature masters of his people and strove (ibtihala) [to destroy them].

Bahl means cursing, and a small amount water. Abhala (Form IV) is to leave someone to himself or to his own will. Form I is used in the same way. Ibn ‘Abbās said that it is about the delegation of Najrān. Their leaders were the ‘Āqib (leader), the Sayyid (master) and Ibn Ḥarith.

This āyah is one of those informing about the Prophethood of Muḥammad ﷺ because when he invited them to mutual cursing, they refused and were content to pay the jizyah after their leader told them if they engaged in mutual cursing, the wadi would have been filled with fire against them and that Muḥammad is a Prophet with a Message. He told them that they knew that he had brought definitive information deciding what is true about ‘Īsā. So they did not accept the mutual curse and went to their land having agreed to pay the jizyah: every year a thousand fine robes in Ṣafar and a thousand in Rajab. The Messenger of Allah ﷺ made peace with them on that basis.

Most scholars said that what the Prophet ﷺ said about al-Ḥasan and al-Ḥusayn, ‘...let us summon our sons and your sons’ and about al-Ḥasan, ‘This son of mine is a master’, are specifically for al-Ḥasan and al-Ḥusayn: the Prophet ﷺ called them his sons rather than anyone else since he ﷺ said, ‘Every cause and lineage will be cut off on the Day of Rising except for my lineage and cause.’ That is why some of the people of ash-Shāfi‘ī say about someone who makes a bequest to the child of a certain person who had no children, but had grandchildren from a son and from a daughter, that the bequest goes to the child of the son, but not of the daughter. That is the position of ash-Shāfi‘ī. This will be further dealt with in al-An‘ām and az-Zukhruf, Allah willing.

إِنَّ هَذَا هُوَ الْقَصَصُ الْحَقُّ وَمَا مِنْ إِلَهٍ إِلَّا اللَّهُ وَإِنَّ اللَّهَ هُوَ الْعَزِيزُ
الْحَكِيمُ ﴿٦٢﴾ فَإِنْ تَوَلَّوْا فَإِنَّ اللَّهَ عَلِيمٌ بِالْمُفْسِدِينَ ﴿٦٣﴾

62 This is the true account: there is no other god besides Allah. Allah – He is the Almighty, the All-Wise.

63 And if they turn away, Allah knows the corrupters.

‘This’ indicates the Qur’an and the stories it contains. It is called an ‘account’ because the meanings follow one another in it, as qaṣṣa can also mean ‘to follow’. In the phrase ‘there is no other god besides Allah,’ ‘min’ is added for stress. The Almighty (al-‘Azīz) is the One Who cannot be overcome and the All-Wise (al-Hakīm) is the One with wisdom. This has already been discussed.

قُلْ يَا أَهْلَ الْكِتَابِ تَعَالَوْا إِلَى كَلِمَةٍ سَوَاءٍ بَيْنَنَا وَبَيْنَكُمْ أَلَّا نَعْبُدَ إِلَّا
اللَّهَ وَلَا نُشْرِكَ بِهِ شَيْئًا وَلَا نَتَّخِذَ بَعْضُنَا بَعْضًا أَرْبَابًا مِنْ دُونِ اللَّهِ فَإِنْ
تَوَلَّوْا فَقُولُوا اشْهَدُوا بِأَنَّا مُسْلِمُونَ ﴿٦٤﴾

64 Say, ‘People of the Book! come to a proposition which is the same for us and you – that we should worship none but Allah and not associate any partners with Him and not take one another as lords besides Allah.’ If they turn away, say, ‘Bear witness that we are Muslims.’

Say, ‘People of the Book! come to a proposition which is the same for us and you

According to al-Ḥasan, Ibn Zayd and as-Suddī, this is addressed to the people of Najrān. According to Qatādah, Ibn Jurayj and others, it is addressed to the Jews of Madīnah. They are addressed in that way because they turned their rabbis into Lords in the way they obeyed them. It is also said that it is addressed to both the Jews and the Christians. The Prophet ﷺ also quoted this āyah in his letter to Heraclius. He said, ‘In the Name of Allah, the All-Merciful, Most Merciful. From Muḥammad, the Messenger of Allah, to Heraclius, ruler of Byzantium. Peace be upon whomever follows the guidance. I invite you to Islam. Become Muslim and you will be safe. Become Muslim and Allah will double your reward. If you turn away, then you bear the sin of your subjects. “People of the Book! come to a proposition which is the same for us and you – that we should worship none but Allah and not associate any partners with Him and not take one another as lords besides Allah.’ If they turn away, say, ‘Bear witness that we are Muslims.’”

The word sawā’ means justice and fairness. Qatādah said that. Zuhayr said:

Show me a course of action with no unfairness in it, in which we are equal.

Al-Farrā’ said, ‘Both siwā and suwā have the meaning of equality.’ It is used in 20:58. He said that the reading of ‘Abdullāh has ‘adl’ instead of ‘sawā’’. The reading of Qa’nab has ‘kilmah’. It means: ‘Respond to what we invite you to. It is a just, upright proposition which does not deviate at all from the truth,’ which He, ta’ālā, explained by his words: ‘that we should worship none but Allah.’ and not take one another as lords besides Allah

‘An’ [collected to allā] is in the genitive for the appositive for ‘proposition’ or in the nominative by an implied inchoative. It means: ‘We only worship Allah’ or it is explanative without any place. [OMISSION] Al-Kisā’ī and al-Farrā’ said that the phrase ‘not associate any partners with Him and not take’ is in the jussive, imagining that there is no ‘an’ at the beginning of the words.

It means, ‘We do not follow others in their making anything lawful or unlawful except regarding what Allah Himself has made lawful.’ It is similar to Allah’s words: ‘They have taken their rabbis and monks as lords besides Allah.’ (9:31) It means: ‘They raised them to the station of their Lord by accepting their making things ḥarām or ḥalāl which Allah had not.’ This indicates the falsity of the position of pure istiḥsān which is not based on any legal proof. Aṭ-Ṭabarī said, ‘It is like the rulings by istiḥsān of Abū Ḥanīfah in the determinations he made without any clear reliance on a source.’ It also refutes the Rāfidite Shi‘ites who say that one must accept the position of the Imām without any legal clarification: he can make lawful what Allah has made unlawful without explaining what he has relied on in the Sharī‘ah in doing that. Arbāb (lords) is the plural of rabb. The word ‘besides’ (dūn) means ‘other than’.

If they turn away, say, ‘Bear witness that we are Muslims.’

‘If they turn away’ from what they are being called to, ‘say, “Bear witness that we are Muslims,”’ meaning, ‘we are ascribed to the dīn of Islam, obeying its judgments and acknowledging that Allah has given us favours and blessings in respect of that without taking anyone else as a Lord, not ‘Īsā, ‘Uzayr or the angels, because they are temporal beings just as we are. We do not accept any of the prohibitions made by the monks prohibiting things which Allah has not prohibited to us. If we did that, we would be accepting them as lords.’ ‘Ikrimah said that the meaning of ‘take’ here is ‘prostrate to’. It was already mentioned that prostration to people had existed until the time of the Prophet ﷺ and then the Prophet forbade Mu‘ādh to prostrate to him as was explained in al-Baqarah. Anas ibn Mālik said, ‘We asked, “Messenger of Allah, shall we bow to each other?” “No,” he answered. We asked, “Shall we embrace one another?” “No,” he replied, “shake hands.”’ Ibn Mājah transmitted it in the Sunan. This will be further dealt with in Sūrat Yūsuf, as will touching a copy of the Qur'an without being pure in al-Wāqī'ah.

يَا أَهْلَ الْكِتَابِ لِمَ تَحْجُونَ فِي إِبْرَاهِيمَ وَمَا أَنْزَلْنَا إِلَيْهِ وَالْإِنْجِيلَ
إِلَّا مِنْ بَعْدِهِ أَفَلَا تَعْقِلُونَ ﴿٥٠﴾

65 'People of the Book! why do you argue concerning Ibrāhīm when the Torah and Gospel were only sent down after him? Why do you not use your intellect?

The root of 'lima' (why) is 'limā' and the final alif has been elided to differentiate between the interrogative and the report. These āyahs were revealed because of the claim of each group of the Jews and Christians that Ibrāhīm was following their religion. Allah said that they were lying because Christianity and Judaism only emerged after him. Az-Zajjāj says that this āyah is the clearest argument against the Jews and the Christians since both the Torah and Gospel were revealed after Ibrāhīm and the name of their religions is not found in either Scripture while the name Islam is found in every Scripture. It is said that there were a thousand years between Ibrāhīm and Mūsā and a thousand between Mūsā and 'Īsā. The words 'Why do you not use your intellect?' refutes their argument and invalidates their position. Allah knows best.

هَآئِنَّمْ هُوَ لَآءٍ حَاجِّجْتُمْ فِيمَا لَكُمْ بِهِ عِلْمٌ فَلِمَ تُحَاجُّونَ فِيمَا لَيْسَ
لَكُمْ بِهِ عِلْمٌ وَاللَّهُ يَعْلَمُ وَأَنْتُمْ لَا تَعْلَمُونَ ﴿٥١﴾

66 You are people arguing about something of which you have knowledge. Why do you argue about something of which you have no knowledge? Allah knows; you do not know.'

You are people arguing about something of which you have knowledge.

This means about Muḥammad ﷺ because they knew him from his description in their Books and then they used a false argument.

Why do you argue about something of which you have no knowledge?

This refers to their spurious claim about Ibrāhīm being a Jew or a Christian. The root of ‘hā antum’ is ‘a antum’ and the first hā’ replaces the hamzah because they are sisters as Abū ‘Amr ibn al-‘Alā’ and al-Akhfash said. An-Naḥḥās said that this is a good position. Qunbul reads from Ibn Kathīr: ‘ha’ntum’. The best view is that the hā’ replaces the hamzah. It is possible that the hā is to call attention to it, and it is added to ‘antum’ and the alif is elided because it is used so frequently. There are two dialectal forms for ‘hā’ulā’’: extended and short. [Omission]

This āyah contains evidence for the prohibition of someone arguing about something about which he has no knowledge and the prohibition of the one with no accurate information. The command to debate is for those with knowledge and certainty, as Allah says: ‘Argue with them in the best way.’ (16:125)

It is reported that a man came to the Prophet ﷺ to disown his son and said, ‘Messenger of Allah, my wife has given birth to a black boy.’ The Messenger of Allah ﷺ asked, ‘Do you have camels?’ ‘Yes,’ he replied. He asked, ‘What is their colour?’ ‘Red,’ he said. He asked, ‘Are there any ash-coloured ones among them?’ ‘Yes,’ he replied. ‘Where does that come from?’ he asked. He said, ‘Because of a throw-back.’ The Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘This child may be a throw-back.’ This is reality of debate and the end of how the Messenger of Allah ﷺ was making guidance clear.

67 Ibrāhīm was neither a Jew nor a Christian, but a man of pure natural belief – a Muslim. He was not one of the idolaters.

Allah put him above their false claims and made it clear that he was following the Islamic Ḥanīfiyyah religion and was not an idolater. A ḥanīf is someone who unifies Allah, makes ḥajj, sacrifices, circumcises and faces qiblah. The derivation of Ḥanīf was mentioned in al-Baqarah. Linguistically a Muslim is someone who submits to the command of Allah and obeys Him. The meaning of Islam was also adequately discussed in al-Baqarah.

إِنَّا أَوْلَى النَّاسِ بِإِبْرَاهِيمَ الَّذِينَ اتَّبَعُوهُ وَهَذَا النَّبِيُّ وَالَّذِينَ آمَنُوا
وَاللَّهُ وَلِيُّ الْمُؤْمِنِينَ ﴿٦٨﴾

68 The people with the strongest claim to Ibrāhīm are those who followed him and this Prophet and those who believe. Allah is the Protector of the believers.

Ibn ‘Abbās said, ‘The leaders of the Jews said, “By Allah, Muḥammad, you know that we are the people most entitled to the religion of Ibrāhīm, more than you or any others. He was a Jew and you only envy us.” Then Allah revealed this āyah.’ Awlā means ‘more entitled’. It is said that it means with help and assistance. It is also said that it means with the proof. ‘Those who followed him’ are those following his religion and Sunnah. ‘This Prophet’ is singular to show esteem for him. A similar example of using the singular for this purpose is in 55:68, and this was already discussed extensively in al-Baqarah.

Walī means helper. Ibn Mas‘ūd reported that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘Every Prophet has protectors among the Prophets and my protector among them is my forefather and the Friend of my Lord.’ Then he recited this.

وَمَا يَشْعُرُونَ ﴿٦٩﴾

69 A group of the People of the Book would love to misguide you. They only misguide themselves but they are not aware of it.

This was revealed about Mu‘ādh ibn Jabal, Ḥudhayfah ibn al-

Yaman, and ‘Ammār ibn Yāsir when the Jews of the Banū an-Naḍīr, Qurayzah and Qaynuqā‘ invited them to their religion. This āyah is similar to: ‘Many of the People of the Book would love it if they could make you revert to being unbelievers after you have believed, showing their innate envy.’ (2:109). ‘Min’ is either partitive, meaning ‘some of them’, or it is generic meaning ‘all’.

The words ‘...to misguide you’ means they want you to disobey by turning from Islam and opposing it. Ibn Jarīr said that it means ‘to destroy you.’ An example of that is the words of al-Akḥṭal:

You were the mote in a disturbed frothing wave which the flood casts aside and is completely lost (dalla dalālan).

The words ‘...they are not aware’ mean that they will not misguide them, or that they do not know the soundness of Islam, which they should learn because its proofs are evident and arguments radiant. Allah knows best.

يٰۤاَهْلَ الْكِتٰبِ لِمَ تَكْفُرُوْنَ بِآيٰتِ اللّٰهِ وَاَنْتُمْ تَشْهَدُوْنَ ﴿٧٠﴾

70 People of the Book! why do you reject Allah’s Signs when you yourselves are there as witnesses?

In other words, when you are witnessing the soundest of the signs which you find in your Books, as Qatādah and as-Suddī said. It is also said that it means: ‘When you are witnessing something identical to the signs of the Prophets which you affirm.’

يٰۤاَهْلَ الْكِتٰبِ لِمَ تَلْبِسُوْنَ الْحَقَّ بِالْبٰطِلِ وَتَكْتُمُوْنَ الْحَقَّ وَاَنْتُمْ تَعْلَمُوْنَ ﴿٧١﴾

71 People of the Book! why do you mix truth with falsehood and knowingly conceal the truth?

Mixing is muddling. This was mentioned in al-Baqarah as well as the meaning of the previous āyah and the one before it. ‘Conceal’ can also be ‘taktumū’ as the answer to the question, and ‘knowingly’

(literally ‘and you know’) is a sentence in the position of a ḥāl.

وَقَالَتْ طَائِفَةٌ مِّنْ أَهْلِ الْكِتَابِ ءَامِنُوا بِالَّذِي أُنزِلَ عَلَى الَّذِينَ ءَامَنُوا
وَجَعَلُوا الْتِهَارًا وَكَفَرُوا ءَاخِرُهُ لَعَلَّهُمْ يَرْجِعُونَ ﴿٧٢﴾

72 A group of the People of the Book say, ‘At the beginning of the day, you should claim to believe in what was sent down to those who believe, and then at the end of the day, you should reject it, so that hopefully they will revert.

This was revealed about Ka‘b ibn al-Ashraf, Mālik ibn aṣ-Ṣayf and others. They said to the lowly among their people, ‘Believe in what was revealed to those who believe at the beginning of the day.’ ‘Wajh’ is used for beginning because it is its best part and the first of what is confronted. A poet said:

Luminous in the beginning (wajh) of the day, like an ocean pearl, slipped from its string.

Another said:

Whoever is happy at the killing of Mālik should go to our women at the beginning (wajh) of the day.

The position of Qatādah is that they did that to make the Muslims uncertain. The word tā’ifah means a group. The word is derived from the noun ṭāfa and it is used in the singular.

The āyah means: The Jews said to one another, ‘Display belief in Muḥammad at the beginning of the day and then reject him at the end of it. If you do that, doubt will appear in those who follow him in his religion, and they will revert from his religion to your religion. They will say, “The People of the Book must have better knowledge of it than we do.”’ It is said that the meaning is: ‘Believe in his prayer towards Jerusalem at the beginning of the day, for it is the truth, and reject his other prayer at the end of the day towards the Ka‘bah. Hopefully they will revert to your qiblah.’ Ibn ‘Abbās and others said that. Muqātil said that it means that they came to Muḥammad ﷺ at the beginning of the day and then came away from him and told the lowly ones, ‘It is true. Follow him.’ Then they added, ‘Until we look in the Torah.’ Then they returned at the end of that day and said, ‘We looked in the Torah and it is not him.’ They desired to confuse the lowly by that and make them doubt.

وَلَا تُؤْمِنُوا إِلَّا بِالَّذِينَ تَسْبَعُونَ قُلْ إِنْ أَنْتُمْ تُحِبُّونَ اللَّهَ أَنْ يُرِيكُمْ آيَاتِهِ
 مَا تُؤْتِيهِمْ مِنْ رَحْمَتِهِ فَإِنَّ اللَّهَ يُؤْتِيهِمْ مَنْ يَشَاءُ
 وَاللَّهُ وَاسِعٌ عَلِيمٌ ﴿٣٧﴾

73 Do not trust anyone except for those who follow your dīn.’ Say, ‘Allah’s guidance is true guidance. But you think it is impossible for anyone to be given the same as you were given, or to argue with you before your Lord.’ Say, ‘All favour is in Allah’s Hand and He gives it to whomever He wills. Allah is All-Encompassing, All-Knowing.

Do not trust anyone except for those who follow your dīn.’

This is a prohibition. This is something the Jews said to one another; their leaders said it to their lesser people. As-Suddī said, ‘It is what the Jews of Khaybar said to the Jews of Madīnah.’

This āyah is the most problematic (ashkāl) in the sūrah. It is related from al-Ḥasan and Mujāhid that the meaning is: ‘Do not believe anyone except those who follow your dīn and do not believe that they will argue with you before your Lord because they have no proof. You have a sounder dīn than them.’ The phrase ‘or to argue’ is in the position of the genitive and means ‘by their arguing with you’. It means: ‘Do not affirm them. They have no argument that anyone else has been given anything like we have been given such as the Torah, the manna and quails, the parting of the sea and other similar signs and marks of distinction.’

Allah’s guidance is true guidance.

This is interposed between the two statements.

But you think it is impossible for anyone to be given the same as you were given, or to argue with you before your Lord.'

Al-Akhfash said that import of 'to be given' is: 'Only believe those who follow your religion and do not believe that anyone will be given the like of what you were given and do not believe that they can argue with you.' It is said that it means that the Jewish scholars said: 'Do not believe that any but those who follow your religion will be given the like of what you were given.' The stress here is their denial that anyone could be given the like of what they were given since the Jewish scholars told them, 'Do not believe that anyone but those who follow your religion will be given the like of what you have been given,' stressing the denial of their statement. That is because the Jewish scholars told them, 'Do not believe that anyone but those who follow your religion will be given the like of what you were given,' meaning that no one else will be given the like of what you have been given. So the wording is according to the order. 'An' is in the position of the nominative and it implies: 'to affirm or confirm that anyone can be given the like of what you were given,' 'An' can be in the position of the accusative with a verb implied, which is stronger in Arabic because it is more proper to have a question with a verb. It implies: 'Do you affirm that someone can be given?' or disseminate or mention that?

Ibn Kathīr, Ibn Muḥayṣin and Ḥumayd recited it with maddah. Abū Ḥātim said that 'ān' means 'a li'an' and the lām of the genitive has been elided to lighten the word and the maddah has been replaced as we see in 69:14.

According to this reading, it is possible that the words 'argue with you' refers to the believers and 'aw' means 'an' because they are particles of uncertainty and repayment and can be used in place of each other. In that case the āyah implies: 'O believers, if they argue with you before your Lord, then say, "O Muḥammad, the true guidance is that of Allah and we follow it.”

If it is read without maddah, the first negative indicates their denial when they say, ‘Do not believe.’ So it means that the Jewish scholars said to them, ‘Do not believe that anyone will be given the like of what you have been given, they have neither faith nor proof.’ So it is added to the idea of knowledge, wisdom, the Book, the argument, manna and quails, splitting the sea and other qualities and miracles. It means: ‘Only you have these things, so do not believe anyone other than those who follow your religion will bring the like of what you have been given.’

There is a change in the normal word order according to this reading and the lām is extra. Ibn Jurayj said that it means: ‘Only believe those who follow your dīn, disliking anyone to be given the like of what you have been given.’ Yet another says that it means: ‘Do not speak about what your Books contain of Muḥammad’s description to anyone except those who follow your religion so that it will not be a way for the idolaters to come to believe him.’

Al-Farrā’ said that it is possible that the words of the Jews stop at ‘your dīn’ and then Allah says to Muḥammad ﷺ, ‘Say: “Allah’s guidance is true guidance,”’ i.e. the true clarification is that of Allah. Then ‘But you think it is impossible for anyone to be given the same as you were given’ is to convey the idea that no one will be given the like of what you were given. [Omission]

It is also possible that the entire āyah is addressed to the believers to make their hearts firm and focus their inner eyes so that they do not fall into doubt when the Jews try to confuse them and tell lies about their dīn. It would then mean: ‘Do not believe, believers, other than those follow your dīn. Do not believe that they can be given the like of what you have been given of excellence and the dīn, and do not believe that those who oppose you can argue with you in the presence of your Lord. Guidance is Allah’s guidance and all favour is in His Hand.’

Aḍ-Daḥḥāk said, ‘The Jews said, “We will argue with those who oppose our religion in the presence of our Lord,” and Allah made it clear that they will be refuted and punished, and that the believers will be the victors and debate with their opponents on the Day of Rising.’ We find in a report that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘The Jews and Christians will argue with us before our Lord, and will say, “You gave us one reward and gave them two rewards!” Allah will say, “Were you wronged in your rights at all?” “No,” they will reply. He will say, “That is My bounty which I give to whomever I will.”’

Our scholars say that if they had known that that was by the grace of Allah, they would not argue with you in the presence of our Lord. So Allah informed His Prophet ﷺ, ‘They will argue with you on the Day of Rising in the presence of your Lord.’ Then He said, ‘Now tell them: “All favour is in Allah’s Hand and He gives it to whomever He wills. Allah is All-Encompassing, All-Knowing.”’ Ibn Kathīr recites ‘ān yu’tā’ with maddah for the interrogative. [Poetry] The rest have it without maddah. Sa‘īd ibn Jubayr recited ‘in yu’tā’ with a negative meaning, and it is part of the words of Allah as al-Farrā’ stated. It means: ‘Say, Muḥammad, “Allah’s guidance is true guidance. If anyone is given the like of what you have been given or argues with you before your Lord falsely (meaning the Jews) who say, “We are better than you.”’ [GRAMMATICAL POINTS OMITTED] Al-Ḥasan recited ‘an yu’tiya’ meaning, ‘that anyone one gives someone the like of what you are given’ and the object is elided.

Two things are said about ‘Say, “Allah’s guidance is true guidance.”’ One is that guidance (hudā) is guiding to good and direction (dalāla) is directing to Allah by the Hand of Allah which He gives to His Prophets. So do not deny He can give to other than you the like of what He gave you. If they deny that, say: ‘All favour is in Allah’s Hand and He gives it to whomever He wills.’ The second point is that the guidance is Allah’s guidance which He gives to the believers in affirming Muḥammad ﷺ, and nothing else. Some of the people of subtle indications say about this āyah, ‘Only keep the company of those who agree with you in your states and paths.’ Allah knows best.

يَخْتَصُّ بِرَحْمَتِهِ مَن يَشَاءُ وَاللَّهُ ذُو الْفَضْلِ الْعَظِيمِ ﴿٥٧﴾

74 He picks out for His mercy whoever He wills. Allah’s favour is indeed immense.’

The word ‘mercy’ here refers to Prophethood and guidance, as al-Ḥasan, Mujāhid and others said. Ibn Jurayj said that it means Islam and the Qur’an. Abū ‘Uthmān said, ‘It is the most beautiful statement since through it, the one with hope hopes and the one with fear fears.’

وَمَنْ أَهْلُ الْكَيْبِ مَنِ ان تَامَنُهُ بِقِنْطَارٍ يُؤَدِّهِ إِلَيْكَ وَمِنْهُمْ مَن
 ان تَامَنُهُ بِدِينَارٍ لَا يُؤَدِّهِ إِلَيْكَ إِلَّا مَا دُمْتَ عَلَيْهِ قَائِمًا ذَلِكَ بِأَنَّهُمْ
 قَالُوا لَيْسَ عَلَيْنَا فِي الْأُمِّيَّةِ سَبِيلٌ وَيَقُولُونَ عَلَى اللَّهِ الْكَذِبَ
 وَهُمْ يَعْلَمُونَ ﴿٥٨﴾

75 Among the People of the Book there are some who, if you entrust them with a pile of gold, will return it to you. But there are others among them who, if you entrust them with just a single dinar, will not return it to you, unless you stay standing over them. That is because they say, ‘We are under no obligation where the gentiles are concerned.’ They tell a lie against Allah and they know it.

Among the People of the Book there are some

This refers to Jews such as ‘Abdullāh ibn Salām. The ‘others among them’ refers to Jews such as Finḥāṣ ibn ‘Āzūrā’. A man entrusted him with a dinar and then he cheated him. It is also said that it refers to Ka‘b ibn al-Ashraf and his people.

Ibn Waththāb and al-Ashhab al-‘Uqaylī recited ‘in tīmnahu’ following the dialect of those who recite ‘nista’in’. It is the dialect of Bakr and Tamīm. Nāfi‘ and al-Kisā’ī recite ‘yu’ddihī’ with a yā. Abū ‘Ubayd said that Abū ‘Amr, al-A‘mash, ‘Āṣim and Ḥamzah in the transmission of Abū Bakr agree that there is a stop on the hā’ and recite ‘yu’dddihī’. An-Naḥḥās said that the sukūn on the hā’ is only permitted in poetry by some grammarians. Some of them do not permit it at all. He thought that it was an error on the part of those who recite it, thinking that the apocative is reflected on the hā’. Abū ‘Amr is too esteemed to think something like that. What is sound is that he has a kasrah on the hā’ which is the reading of Yazīd ibn al-Qa‘qā‘. Al-Farrā’ said, ‘The position of some Arabs is that the hā’ is in the jussive when there is a vowel preceding it.’ [POETRY OMITTED] It is said that there can be a sukūn on the hā’ here because it is in the jussive and it is a faded hā’. Abu-l-Mundhīr Sallām and az-Zuhrī recite ‘yu’addihu’ with a ḍammah on the hā’ and without a wāw. Qatādah, umayd and Mujāhid recite ‘yu’addihū’ with a wāw. [MORE ON THIS]

Allah is saying that the People of the Book include both those who are treacherous and those who are trustworthy. The believers cannot distinguish between them and so they should avoid all of them. The People of the Book are singled out for mention, even if some of the believers are like that, because treachery is more frequent among them, and so the words are about what predominates, and Allah knows best.

Qintār was already explained. A dinar weighs 24 qīrāts, and the qīrāt is three medium grains of barley and so it is 72 grains. That is agreed upon. If someone is mindful when it is a lot and discharges it, then it is more likely that he will be the same with a little. If someone is treacherous about a little or refuses to give it, that will be more likely when there is a lot. This is the clearest evidence of the principle of what is implied by the words, and there is great disagreement about it among scholars of legal principles.

Allah mentioned two groups: those who pay readily and those who only pay when they are forced to do so. There are also people who do not pay even if you stand over them. Allah mentioned both groups because they are usual while the third is rare. The words deal with what is usual. Ṭalḥah ibn Muṣarraf, Abū ‘Abd ar-Raḥmān as-Sulamī and others recited ‘dīmtu’ which is the dialect of Azd as-Sarāh.

Abū Ḥanīfah used the words, ‘unless you stay standing over them’ as evidence for staying close to debtors while the other scholars reject that. It was discussed in al-Baqarah. Some of our Baghdādī scholars used this as evidence for imprisoning debtors since if a debtor can be pursued and kept from transacting, it is also permitted to imprison him.

It is said that the meaning is ‘You confront him and intimidate him and make him embarrassed.’ Modesty is in the eyes. Do you not see what Ibn ‘Abbās said, ‘Do not seek something you need from the blind. Modesty is in the eyes. If you seek something you need from your brother, look at him directly in the face so that he is embarrassed and gives it.’ It is said that ‘standing’ is sticking to him. It is also said that ‘standing’ refers to constant asking, not physical standing.

The root of dinar is dinnār and one of the nūns has been changed into a yā’ to lighten the word because it is so frequently used. That is indicated by the plural, danānīr, and the diminutive dunaynīr.

Trusts are of immense importance in the dīn. Part of what shows this is that trusts and kinship will stand at the sides of the Sirāṭ, as is stated in Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim, and only someone who was conscientious about both of them will be able to cross it. Muslim related that Ḥudhayfah said that the Prophet ﷺ told them about the removal of trust and said, ‘A man will go to sleep and trustworthiness will be taken from his heart and just its trace will remain.’ That was mentioned in full in al-Baqarah.

In Ibn Mājah, Ibn ‘Umar reported that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘When Allah Almighty wants to destroy someone, He strips away modesty from him. When modesty is stripped from him, you only meet him as hateful and hated. When you only meet him as hateful and hated, trustworthiness is stripped from him. When trustworthiness is stripped from him, you only meet him as treacherous and perfidious. When you only meet him as treacherous and perfidious, then mercy is stripped from him. When mercy is stripped from him, you only meet him as accursed and cursed. When you only meet him as accursed and cursed, then the halter of Islam is removed from him.’ The Prophet ﷺ said, ‘Return the trust to the one who entrusted it to you and do not betray the one who betrays you.’ Allah knows best.

There is no granting of legal integrity to the People of the Book as a whole, nor to some of them, on the basis of this āyah, contrary to what some believe about that, because there are impious Muslims to whom trust is given, and who are entrusted with a lot of wealth, and that is not considered to be a reason for deeming them to be upright. The method of establishing legal integrity and witnessing is not satisfied by merely discharging a trust in property in transactions and deposits. Do you not see their words: ‘We are under no obligation where the gentiles are concerned’ (3:75)? How can one consider as just someone who believes that our property and honour are fair game? If that had been enough to establish their legal integrity, their testimony against Muslims would have been allowed.

That is because they say, ‘We are under no obligation where the gentiles are concerned.’

The subject of ‘they say’ is the Jews. It is said that when the Jews gave allegiance to the Muslims, they said, ‘We are under no obligation where the gentiles are concerned,’ in other words, ‘There is no barrier stopping us from wronging them since they differ from us.’ They claimed that that is in their Book. Allah says that they are lying and refuted them, saying that, on the contrary, they should be punished for their lies and thinking it to be lawful to take other people's property. Abū Ishāq az-Zajjāj says, 'The sentence ends with 'No' and 'The truth is, if people honour their contracts...' is a new sentence.

It is said that the Jews used to contract debts with the Arabs and when those with the rights asked for their rights, the Jews said, 'You have "no way against us" because you left your dīn and so your debt is cancelled for us.' They claimed that it was the ruling of the Torah and here Allah refutes them, saying that it is not as they say. Allah told them, 'No,' refuting their claim that: 'We are under no obligation where the gentiles are concerned.' Then He says: 'The truth is, if people honour their contracts and are godfearing,' fearing shirk, they are not among the liars, but Allah and His Messenger love them.

A man said to Ibn 'Abbās, 'We deliberately take a portion of the property of the people of the dhimmah in the form of a chicken or a sheep and we say, "There is no harm in that."' He said, 'This is like what the People of the Book said: "We are under no obligation where the Gentiles are concerned." If they have paid the jizyah, their property is not lawful for you except with their consent.' 'Abd ar-Razzāq mentioned it from Ma'mar from Abū Ishāq al-Hamdānī from Ṣa'ṣa'ah.

They tell a lie against Allah and they know it.

This indicates that an unbeliever is not worthy of having his testimony accepted because Allah has described him as being a liar. It also refutes the unbelievers who make ḥalāl and ḥarām other than what Allah has made ḥalāl and ḥarām, and put that in their Sharī'ah. Ibn al-'Arabī said, 'From this is deduced a refutation of those who give judgment based on the principle of istihsān without any proof. I do not know of any of the people of the qiblah who say this.' We find in a tradition: 'When this āyah was revealed, the Prophet ﷺ said, "There is nothing in the Jāhiliyyah which is not under my feet except for trusts. They must be discharged to both the pious and impious."'

بِكَلِمَةٍ أَوْ فِي عَهْدِهِ وَاتَّقَى فَإِنَّ اللَّهَ يُحِبُّ الْمُتَّقِينَ ﴿٧٦﴾

76 No, the truth is, if people honour their contracts and are godfearing, Allah loves the godfearing.

These are those who fear Allah and do not lie and do not make halāl what has made harām. Allah loves those people. The meaning of that has already been discussed. The personal pronoun hā' connected to 'contract' can refer to Allah, or it is possible that it refers to those who honour, and fear disbelief, treachery and breaking contracts. 'Ahd (contract) is a verbal noun.

إِنَّ الَّذِينَ يَشْتَرُونَ عَهْدَ اللَّهِ وَأَبْئِنَهُمْ مِمَّا قَلِيلًا أُولَٰئِكَ لَا خَلَاقَ لَهُمْ فِي الْآخِرَةِ وَلَا يُكَلِّمُهُمُ اللَّهُ وَلَا يَنْظُرُ إِلَيْهِمْ يَوْمَ الْقِيَامَةِ وَلَا يُزَكِّيهِمْ وَلَهُمْ عَذَابٌ أَلِيمٌ ﴿٧٧﴾

77 Those who sell Allah's contract and their own oaths for a paltry price, such people will have no portion in the Next World and on the Day of Rising Allah will not speak to them or look at them or purify them. They will have a painful punishment.

The Imāms related that al-Ash'ath ibn Qays said, 'There was some land that was shared between me and a Jewish man, and he disavowed me, so I took him to the Prophet ﷺ. The Messenger of Allah ﷺ asked me, "Do you have a clear proof?" I answered, "No." He said to the Jew, "Swear." I said, "Messenger of Allah, then he will swear and make off with my property." Then Allah revealed: "Those who sell Allah's contract and their own oaths for a paltry price..."

The Imāms also related from Abū Umāmah that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, 'If anyone takes the right of a Muslim by his oath, Allah will make the Fire obligatory for him and deny him the Garden.' A man said to him, 'Even if it is something insignificant, Messenger of Allah?' He said, 'Even if it is only an arak stick.' Allah not looking at them on the Day of Rising was dealt with in al-

Baqarah.

This āyah and the hadiths indicate that the outward judgment of a judge does not make property lawful inwardly if the one who is given the judgment knows it to be false. The Imāms related from Umm Salamah that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘Litigants come to me and it may be that one of them is more eloquent in his argument than the other and so, because of that, I give judgment about some right, which actually belongs to his brother, in his favour. By doing that I cut out for him a piece of the Fire which he will bring on the Day of Rising, so he should not take it.’

There is no disagreement about this among the Imāms. Abū Ḥanīfah is excessive, saying, ‘The judgment of a judge based on false testimony allows marriage for the one who was forbidden it,’ as was mentioned in al-Baqarah. He claimed that if there are two false witnesses that a man has divorced his wife and the judge decides based on their testimony, she is lawful for the one who marries her knowing that to be false. This is abhorrent and not in keeping with explicit hadiths. It protects property and does not consider it to be lawful based on false rulings. Would property be protected, but not sexual relations? The falsity of this will be dealt with in the āyah about the li‘ān. Allah knows best.

78 Among them is a group who distort the Book with their tongues so that you think it is from the Book when it is not from the Book. They say, ‘It is from Allah,’ but it is not from Allah. They tell a lie against Allah and they know it.

This means a group of the Jews. Abū Ja‘far and Shaybah recited ‘yuluzūna’ indicating frequency. It means that they alter words and make them mean other than what is intended. The root of layy is to incline. One can incline with the hand or with the head. Allah says elsewhere: ‘twisting them with their tongues’ (4:46) which means displaying obstinacy about the truth and turning away from it to something else. The same verb used in the phrase: ‘...refusing to turn back for anyone’ (3:153) means to turn to him when they were climbing. One says lawā ‘alayhi, meaning to turn towards and stand. Layy is bending. The verb is lawā, yalwī, layy and liyān. [Poetry] We find in hadith, ‘The twisting of the finder exposes his honour and exposes him to punishment.’ Alsinah (tongues) is the plural of lisān if it is masculine, and if it is feminine it is alsun.

مَا كَانَ لِبَشَرٍ أَنْ يُوتِيَهُ اللَّهُ الْكِتَابَ وَالْحِكْمَ وَالنَّبُوءَةَ ثُمَّ يَقُولَ لِلنَّاسِ
 كُونُوا عِبَادًا لِي مِنْ دُونِ اللَّهِ وَلَكِنْ كُونُوا رَبَّيُنَا عِبَادًا

79 It is not right for any human being that Allah should give him the Book and judgment and Prophethood, and then that he should say to people, ‘Be worshippers of me rather than Allah.’ Rather he will say, ‘Be people of the Lord because of your knowledge of the Book and because you study.’

‘Mā kāna’ means ‘he should not’. We see this usage in 4:92, 19:35, and 24:16. ‘Bashar’ (human being) can be used for both the plural and the singular because it is a verbal noun. Here it is ‘Īsā’ who is indicated according to ad-Ḍaḥḥāk and as-Suddī, and the Book is the Qur’an, and judgment is knowledge and understanding. It is also said that it is judgments, meaning that Allah does not permit lying to be part of Prophethood. If a human being were to do that, Allah would strip him of the signs of Prophethood. It is, however, possible for a Prophet to say to people, ‘Be people of the Lord.’ This āyah was revealed about the Christians of Najrān. As we said, it is related that the cause of the revelation of the entire sūrah up to āyah 121 was the arrival of the Christians of Najrān, but the Jews are mixed with them because they denied and were obstinate like them.

Rabbāniyyūn is connected to the word ‘Lord’ (rabb). A rabbānī is the one who instructs (rabbā) people with a little knowledge before it becomes great. It is as if he were imitating the Lord in making matters easy. That idea is related from Ibn ‘Abbās. Some have said that root is ‘rabbīyy’ and the alif-nūn are added for stress.

Al-Mubarrad said, ‘The rabbāniyyūn are the masters of knowledge, and the singular is rabbān. It comes from a root meaning “to put right”.’ It means that they manage the affairs of people and put them right. The alif and nūn is for stress as in words like rayyān and ‘atshān. Then the ḍammah of the ascription is added to it as is seen in other words. A poet said:

If I am a pledgee in the air, I am put there by the rabbānī hadith scholars.

‘Rabbānī’ means a scholar with knowledge of the dīn of the Lord who acts on his knowledge, because if he does not act on it, then he is not a scholar. This idea was discussed in al-Baqarah.

Abū Razīn says that it means ‘wise scholars’. Shu‘bāh related from ‘Āṣim from Zirr that ‘Abdullāh ibn Mas‘ūd is reported as saying that it means the wise among the scholars, and Ibn Jubayr says that it is godfearing sages. Aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk said, ‘No one should abandon the memorisation of the Qur’an,’ and quoted this verse. Ibn Zayd said that it refers to rulers and rabbis. Mujāhid said that they are higher than the rabbis. An-Nahhās approves of this, saying that aḥbār are rabbis and a rabbānī is the one who also has insight into political matters.

The Arabs use the verb rabba for putting people’s affairs right and attending to them. Such a person is rābb and rabbānī. Abū ‘Ubaydah said, ‘I heard a scholar say “The rabbānī is the one who knows the lawful and unlawful, commands and prohibitions, and knows the news of the community, past and present.”’

When Ibn ‘Abbās died, Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥanafiyyah said, ‘Today the rabbānī of this community has died.’ It is related that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘There is no believer, male or female, free or slave, but that it is their duty to Allah Almighty to learn the Qur’ān and understanding in the dīn.’ Then he recited: ‘Be people of the Lord...’ Ibn ‘Abbās related it.

because of your knowledge of the Book and because you study.’

The people of Madīnah and Abū ‘Amr read ta‘lamūna, ‘what you know’ which corresponds with ‘study’. Abū Ḥātim preferred this reading. Abū ‘Amr said that it is confirmed by ‘study’ (tadrisūna) in Form I, not ‘tudarisūna’ meaning ‘teach’. Ibn ‘Āmir and the people of Kufa read it ‘tu‘allimūna’, meaning ‘teach’. Abū ‘Ubayd preferred it because it combines the two meanings. Makkī said that Form II is more eloquent because every teacher has knowledge, but not everyone with knowledge is a teacher. Form II indicates both whereas Form I only indicates knowledge. So it is more emphatic and conveys greater censure. The reading with Form I finds evidence in the words of Ibn Mas‘ūd who said that rabbāniyyūn means the wise among the scholars. So it is unlikely that one would say: ‘be wise scholars because of what you teach.’ Al-Ḥasan said, ‘Be wise scholars by your knowledge.’ Abū Ḥaywah recited ‘tudrisūna’ from Form IV and Mujāhid recited ‘ta‘allimūna’.

بِالْكُفْرِ بَعْدَ إِذْ أَنْتُمْ مُسْلِمُونَ ﴿٥٠﴾

80 He would never command you to take the angels and Prophets as Lords. Would He command you to disbelieve after being Muslim?

Ibn ‘Āmir, ‘Āṣim and Ḥamzah recited ‘lā ya‘murakum’ as joined to the previous ‘give.’ This is strengthened because the Jews asked the Prophet ﷺ, ‘Do you want us to take you as a Lord, Muḥammad?’ Then Allah revealed the two verses. ‘He’ here can refer to ‘a human being’: ‘No human being would command,’ meaning ‘Īsā or ‘Uzayr. The rest recite it as ‘lā ya’murukum’ as a new sentence separate from the previous words. So the pronoun refers to Allah: ‘Allah would never command...’ This is strengthened by the reading in the copy of the Qur’an of ‘Abdullah: ‘lan ya’murukum’ which indicates a new sentence and the pronoun refers to Allah. Makkī mentioned it. Sībuwayh and az-Zajjāj said that. Ibn Jurayj and a group said: Muḥammad ﷺ would not command you (lā ya’murukum). This is the reading of Abū ‘Amr, al-Kisā’ī and the people of the two Harams.

He would not command taking the angels and Prophets as Lords. The Christians esteem Prophets and angels to the extent that they turn them into Lords.

Would He command you to disbelieve after being Muslim?

This expresses denial and astonishment. Allah forbade the Prophets from making people slaves so that they would deify them. But people are obliged to respect them. It is confirmed that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘None of you should say, “my slave” (‘abdi) or “my slavegirl” (‘amati), but he should say, ‘my lad’ or ‘my girl. None of you should say “my lord”, but should say “my master”.’ We do find in the Revelation in Surah Yusuf: ‘Mention me when you are with your Lord.’ (12:42) This usage will be explained there, Allah willing.

وَإِذْ أَخَذَ اللَّهُ مِيثَاقَ النَّبِيِّينَ لَمَا آتَيْنَاكُمْ مِنْ كِتَابٍ وَحِكْمَةٍ ثُمَّ جَاءَكُمْ رَسُولٌ مُصَدِّقٌ لِمَا مَعَكُمْ لَتُؤْمِنُنَّ بِهِ وَلَنْ نَنْصُرَهُ ۗ قَالَ أَأَقْرَضْتُمْ وَ أَخَذْتُمْ عَلَىٰ ذَٰلِكُمْ إِصْرِي قَالُوا أَقْرَضْنَا قَالَ فَاشْهَدُوا وَأَنَا مَعَكُمْ مِنَ الشَّاهِدِينَ ۝

81 Remember when Allah made a covenant with the Prophets: ‘Now that I have given you a share of the Book and Wisdom, and then a messenger comes to you confirming what is with you, you must believe in him and help him.’ He asked, ‘Do you agree and undertake my commission on that condition?’ They replied, ‘We agree.’ He said, ‘Bear witness, then. I am with you as one of the witnesses.’

Remember when Allah made a covenant with the Prophets:

It is said that Allah made a covenant with the Prophets that they should affirm one another and command belief in one another. That is the meaning of helping by confirmation. This is the position of Sa‘īd ibn Jubayr, Qatādah, Ṭāwus, as-Suddī and al-Ḥasan. It is the literal meaning of the āyah. Ṭāwus said, ‘Allah made a covenant with the first of the Prophets to believe in what the last brings.’ Ibn Mas‘ūd recited, ‘When Allah made a covenant with those who were given the Book.’ Al-Kisā‘ī said, ‘It is possible that it means: when He made a covenant with those who were with the Prophets.’ The Basrans said, ‘When Allah made a covenant with the Prophets, He made one with those who were with them because they followed them and affirmed them.’ So mā in limā means ‘which’. Sībawayh said, ‘I asked al-Khalīl ibn Aḥmad about “When Allah made a covenant...” and he said, “when” means “which”.’ An-Naḥḥās said, ‘According to al-Khalīl’s view, it implies “to that which I gave you” and the pronoun hā’ is elided because of the length of the word. ‘Min’ clarifies the genus. This is like the position of al-Akhfash. Al-Mahdawī said that ‘comes to you’ and what follows it is a sentence added to a connective and they refer to something described which is elided. It implies: ‘Then a Messenger comes to you, confirming it.’

Then a Messenger comes to you confirming what is with you, you must believe in him and help him.’

Here the Messenger is Muḥammad ﷺ according to ‘Alī and Ibn ‘Abbās. Even though the indefinite is used, it indicates someone specific, a usage also seen in 16:112-113. So Allah made a covenant with all the Prophets to believe in Muḥammad ﷺ and help him if they were to meet him. He commanded them to take on that contract on behalf of their communities.

The lām connected to ‘you must believe’ is the apodosis of the oath which is taking the covenant since it is like an oath. It is like saying, ‘I took your covenant that you should do such-and-such.’ It is as if you were asking for an oath. The oath and its apodosis are separated by a particle which is ‘limā’ in the reading of Ibn Kathīr as will come. Those who read it as ‘lamā’ make it accept the oath, which is making the covenant. The lām connected to the words ‘you must believe’ is the apodosis of an elided oath, implying, ‘By Allah, you must believe!’

Al-Mubarrad and az-Zajjāj said that ‘mā’ is a precondition to which the lām of realisation is added as it is added to in. It means ‘I have given you both of them’ and mā is in the accusative and ‘I have given’ is jussive. ‘Comes to you’ is added to it and the lām is the apodosis of the repayment as we also see in 16:86. Al-Kisā’ī said that ‘believe in it’ is the support of the oath and it is connected by the first lām.

The people of Kufa recite ‘limā’ which means ‘which’ and is connected to ‘take’, meaning that Allah made a covenant with them because of what He gave them of the Book and Wisdom. Then a Messenger comes to them confirming what is with them so that they believe in him after the covenant, because taking the covenant has the meaning of making someone swear an oath. An-Naḥḥās said that Abū ‘Ubaydah said that this is a good position and the meaning is: ‘When Allah made a covenant with those who were given the Book: “You should believe in him since I have told you about him in the Torah.”’

It is also said that there is some elision in the words and it means: ‘When Allah made a covenant with the Prophets: “Teach people what has come to you of the Book and Wisdom and to oblige people to believe.”’ This elision is indicated by ‘Do you undertake My commission on that condition?’ It is also said that ‘limā’ means ‘after’, meaning ‘after what I have given you of the Book and Wisdom.’

Saīd ibn Jubayr reads ‘lammā’ (‘when I have given’). It is possible that the root is ‘lamā’ and ‘min’ is added according to the view of those who think that its addition is mandatory. The nūn has changed into a mīm and there are three mīms, one of which is elided. The people of Madīnah recite ‘We have given you’ (ātaynākum) whereas the others have ‘I have given’ (ātaytukum) in the singular. Not all Prophets were given the Book, only some, but the generality takes precedence here and it applies to the Prophets who were not given the Book because they were given wisdom and Prophethood. Those not given a Book are commanded to take the Book of those before them and so they are included in the description of those who were given the Book.

He asked, ‘Do you agree and undertake my commission on that condition?’

The verb ‘agree’ is derived from iqrār (affirm). The ‘commission’ (īṣr and asr) is the contract. Linguistically it means a burden. It is called that because it involves prohibition and making things difficult.

He said, ‘Bear witness, then.’

The verb ‘bear witness’ means ‘know’, as Ibn ‘Abbās said. Az-Zajjaj said that it means ‘make clear’ because the witness is the one who verifies the claim of the claimant. It is said that it means: ‘Bear witness against yourselves and your followers.’ Sa‘id ibn al-Musayyab said, ‘Allah says to the angels: bear witness against them.’

82 Any who turn away after that are deviators.

Any from the nations of the Prophets who turn away from faith after taking the covenant. Those are the one who have left faith. Someone who is fāsiq is someone who goes out.

83 Is it other than the dīn of Allah that you desire, when everything in the heavens and earth, willingly or unwillingly, submits to Him and to Him you will be returned? 84 Say, ‘We believe in Allah and what has been sent down to us and what was sent down to Ibrāhīm, Ismā‘īl and Ishāq and Ya‘qūb and the Tribes, and what Mūsā and ‘Īsā and all the Prophets were given by their Lord. We do not differentiate between any of them. We are Muslims submitted to Him.’

Is it other than the dīn of Allah that you desire.

Al-Kalbī said that Ka‘b ibn al-Ashraf and his people took an argument they were having with the Christians to the Prophet ﷺ and asked, ‘Which of us is more entitled to the dīn of Ibrāhīm?’ He replied, ‘Neither of the parties have his dīn.’ They said, ‘We are not satisfied with your verdict and we will not take your dīn.’ Then this was revealed. Abū ‘Amr reads it with yā’ (they desire, they return) and with tā’ (you desire, you return). He said the first is specific and the second general and so there is a distinction. Ḥafṣ and others read them both in the third person and the rest with tā’ on both as second person. Allah knows best.

willingly or unwillingly, submits to Him and to Him you will be returned?

The words ‘submits to Him’ mean surrenders, obeys, is humble and subjected. Every creature is obedient and submits because it is created in a form that it cannot depart from. Qatādah said, ‘The believer submits willingly and the unbeliever, at death, unwillingly and that does not help him, since the Almighty says: “But when they saw Our violent force, their faith was of no use to them.” (40:85) Mujāhid said, ‘The submission of the unbeliever is proved unwilling by his prostrating to other than Allah while his shadow prostrates to Allah. Allah says: “Do they not see the things Allah has created, casting their shadows to the right and the left, prostrating themselves before Allah in complete humility?” (16:48) and: “Everyone in heaven or earth prostrates to Allah, willingly or unwillingly.” (13:15) It is said that the meaning is that Allah created creation as He wills: some of them handsome, some ugly, tall and short, healthy and sick, but all have no choice but to obey. The healthy obeys and loves that, and the sick obeys and submits even if he dislikes that. Willingly is submitting with ease and unwillingly is with hardship and rejection on the part of the self. ‘Taw’ and ‘karh’ (willingly and unwillingly) are two verbal nouns used adverbially.

Anas ibn Mālik reported that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said about this, ‘The angels obey Him in heaven and the Anṣār and ‘Abd al-Qays on the earth.’ The Prophet ﷺ also said, ‘Do not curse my Companions. My Companions have submitted out of fear of Allah while other people submit out of fear of the sword.’

‘Ikrimah said that ‘willingly’ implies without need of proof and ‘unwillingly’ means compelled by the evidence of tawhīd. This is indicated by Allah’s words: ‘If you asked them who created them, they would say, “Allah!”’ (43:87) and: ‘If you ask them, “Who created the heavens and the earth and made the sun and moon subservient?” they will say, “Allah.”’ (29:63) Al-Ḥasan said, ‘It is general, but its meaning is specific.’ He also said that the sentence ends at ‘everything in the heavens submits to Him,’ and then Allah says: ‘and the earth, willingly or unwillingly.’ He said that the unwilling are the hypocrites whose knowledge does not benefit them. Mujāhid said that Ibn ‘Abbās said, ‘When someone’s animal is difficult or baulks, recite this āyah in its ear.’

الْخَاسِرِينَ ﴿٨٥﴾

85 If anyone desires anything other than Islam as a dīn, it will not be accepted from him, and in the Next World he will be among the losers.

Mujāhid and as-Suddī said, ‘This āyah was revealed about al-Ḥārith ibn Suwayd, the brother of al-Ḥulās ibn Suwayd. He was one of the Anṣār. He apostatised from Islam along with twelve men, and they joined the unbelievers in Makkah and this āyah was revealed about them. Then he sent to his brother desiring to repent.’ That was related from Ibn ‘Abbās and others. Ibn ‘Abbās said he became Muslim after this was revealed.

and in the Next World he will be among the losers

Hishām said that it means that he will be one of the losers in the Next World. Were it not for that, there would be a separation between the connection and what is connected to. This was already discussed in al-Baqarah (2:130).

كَيْفَ يَهْدِي اللَّهُ قَوْمًا كَفَرُوا بَعْدَ إِيمَانِهِمْ وَشَهِدُوا أَنَّ الرَّسُولَ
حَقٌّ وَجَاءَهُمُ الْبَيِّنَاتُ وَاللَّهُ لَا يَهْدِي الْقَوْمَ الظَّالِمِينَ ﴿٨٥﴾

86 How can Allah guide a people who have disbelieved after having believed? They bore witness that the Messenger was true and that the Clear Signs had come to them. Allah does not guide people who are wrongdoers.

Ibn ‘Abbās said, ‘A man of the Anṣār became Muslim and then apostatised, became an idolater and then regretted it. He sent to his people to ask the Prophet ﷺ if he could repent. His people went to the Messenger of Allah ﷺ and asked, “Is it possible for him to repent?” Then it was revealed: ‘How can Allah guide a people who have disbelieved after having believed...’ (3:86-89) He sent to him and he became Muslim.’ An-Nasā’ī transmitted it. One variant reports that a man of the Anṣār became Muslim and then apostasised and joined the idolaters and Allah revealed this. His people sent those āyahs to him and when he had read them, he said, ‘By Allah, my people would not lie to me about the Messenger of Allah ﷺ and the Messenger of Allah ﷺ would not lie about Allah, and Allah Almighty is the most truthful of the three.’ So he repented and returned. The Messenger of Allah ﷺ accepted that from him and let him be.

Al-Ḥasan says that it was revealed about the Jews because they were given the good news of the Prophet ﷺ and prayed for him against the unbelievers. Then when he was sent, they were stubborn and rejected and so Allah revealed, ‘The repayment of such people ...’

It is said that the word ‘how’ introduces a question which implies denial, meaning ‘Allah will not guide...’. It is the same as Allah’s words: ‘How could any of the idolaters possibly have a treaty with Allah and with His Messenger?’ (9:7) which means that they do not have a treaty. A poet says:

How can I sleep on a bed
When there are people all over it?

Allah does not guide people who are wrongdoers.

The literal meaning of the āyah would be that someone who disbelieves after becoming Muslim cannot be guided by Allah and Allah does not guide wrongdoers. We know, however, that many apostates became Muslims and were guided by Allah and many wrongdoers repented of the injustice they inflicted. Therefore, it actually means: ‘Allah does not guide them as long as they remain in their disbelief and injustice and do not accept Islam.’ When they become Muslim and repent, Allah gives them success in that, and Allah knows best.

أُولَئِكَ جَزَاءُ هُمْرٍ أَنْ عَلَيْهِمْ لعنةُ اللَّهِ وَالْمَلَائِكَةِ وَالنَّاسِ
 أَجْمَعِينَ ﴿٨٧﴾ خَالِدِينَ فِيهَا لَا يُخَفَّفُ عَنْهُمْ الْعَذَابُ وَلَا هُمْ يُنظَرُونَ ﴿٨٨﴾
 إِلَّا الَّذِينَ تَابُوا مِنْ بَعْدِ ذَلِكَ وَأَصْلَحُوا فَإِنَّ اللَّهَ غَفُورٌ رَحِيمٌ ﴿٨٩﴾

87 The repayment of such people is that Allah’s curse is on them and that of the angels and of all mankind. 88 They will be under it for ever. Their punishment will not be lightened. They will be granted no reprieve. 89 Except for those who, after that, repent and put things right. Truly Allah is Ever-Forgiving, Most Merciful.

This is when they remain with their disbelief. The meaning of the curse was mentioned in al-Baqarah. They will not be granted a delay. ‘Those who repent’ refers to al-Ḥārith ibn Suwayd, as we already stated. Included in the exception are all those who return sincerely to Islam.

إِنَّ الَّذِينَ كَفَرُوا بَعْدَ إِسْلَامِهِمْ سَاءَ مَا كَانُوا كُفِرَ لَنْ تُقْبَلَ تَوْبَتُهُمْ وَأُولَئِكَ هُمُ الضَّالُّونَ ﴿٩٠﴾

90 Those who disbelieve after having believed and then increase in their unbelief, their repentance will not be accepted. They are the misguided.

Qatādah, ‘Aṭā’ al-Khurasānī and al-Ḥasan said that this was revealed about the Jews who rejected ‘Isā and the Gospel and then further disbelieved in Muḥammad ﷺ and the Qur’an. Abu-l-‘Āliyah said, ‘It was revealed about the Jews and Christians who rejected Muḥammad ﷺ after their belief in his attribute and description. They ‘increase in their unbelief’ by remaining in their unbelief, or by the wrong actions they acquired. This last is what aṭ-Ṭabarī prefers. He believes that it is about the Jews.

Their repentance will not be accepted.

This is problematic since Allah says, ‘It is He Who accepts repentance from His slaves and pardons evil acts.’ (42:25) It is said to mean: ‘Their repentance will not be accepted at the point of death.’ An-Naḥḥās said this is a good position, as Allah says: ‘There is no repentance for people who persist in doing evil until death appears to them and who then say, “Now I repent.”’ (4:18) It is related from al-Ḥasan, Qatādah and ‘Aṭā, and the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘Allah accepts the repentance of the slave as long as he is not in his death throes.’ This will be discussed in an-Nīsā’.

It is said that the words ‘their repentance will not be accepted’ refer to the good they may have done before they disbelieved because their disbelief cancels those actions. It is said that it means when they turn from their disbelief to another disbelief, but their repentance will be accepted when they return to Islam.

Quṭrub said that this āyah was revealed about some of the people of Makkah. They said, ‘We will wait for death to befall Muḥammad. If it seems good to us to return to our people, we will do so,’ and Allah revealed this, meaning that their repentance will not be accepted while they remain in disbelief. It is not accepted because their resolve is not genuine. Allah accepts all repentance when resolve is genuine.

إِنَّ الَّذِينَ كَفَرُوا وَمَاتُوا وَهُمْ كُفَرَاءَ فَلَنْ يَتُوبَ عَلَيْهِمْ أَلَّا تَرْضَىٰ
 دَهَبًا وَلَا فِئْتَابًا بِرَبِّهِمْ أُولَٰئِكَ هُمُ الْعَذَابُ الْبَاطِلِ وَمَا لَهُمْ مِنْ نَاصِرِينَ ﴿٩١﴾

91 As for those who disbelieve and die unbelievers, the whole earth filled with gold would not be accepted from any of them if they were to offer it as a ransom. They will have a painful punishment. They will have no helpers.

The word mil’ designates the amount which will fill a thing and mal’ is the verbal noun for filling a thing. The wāw before ‘if they were to offer’ is interpolated and redundant. The āyah means: the whole earth filled with gold would not be accepted from anyone if he were to try and ransom himself with it. Some grammarians, however, say that the wāw is not interpolated because it indicates a meaning which is:

‘the whole earth filled with gold would not be accepted from anyone at all, even if he were to try and ransom himself with it.’

According to al-Farrā’, ‘gold’ is in the accusative for explanation. [EXPLANATION] Al-Kisā’ī said that it is in the accusative by an implied ‘min’, i.e. ‘min dhahab’. We see this in 5:95.

We find in Bukhārī and Muslim that Anas ibn Mālik reported that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘An unbeliever will be brought on the Day of Rising and will be told, “Do you think that if you had the entire earth filled with gold, you could ransom yourself with it?” “Yes,” he will reply. He will be told, “Less than that was asked of you.”’

لَنْ تَسْأَلُوا اللَّهَ حَتَّى تُنْفِقُوا مِمَّا تُحِبُّونَ وَمَا تُنْفِقُوا مِنْ شَيْءٍ فَإِنَّ اللَّهَ بِهِ عَلِيمٌ ﴿١٧﴾

92 You will not attain true goodness until you give of what you love. Whatever you give away, Allah knows it.

You will not attain true goodness until you give of what you love.

The Imāms related that Anas said, ‘When this āyah was revealed, Abū Ṭalḥah said, “Our Lord asks us for our property and I testify to you, Messenger of Allah, that I have made my land over to Allah!” The Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, “Give it to your relatives, Ḥassān ibn Thābit and Ubayy ibn Ka’b.”’ We find in al-Muwattā’, ‘The property I love the best is Bayruḥā.’ It faced the mosque. The Messenger of Allah ﷺ used to enter it and drink from its good water.

This āyah is evidence for taking the literal and general meaning of words. The Companions did not understand any further meaning than that of the actual words (faḥwā al-khiṭāb) when the āyah was revealed. When Abū Ṭalḥah heard the words, ‘You will not attain true goodness until you give,’ he did not need to wait until it clarified how Allah wishes His slaves to spend by another āyah or sunnah which elucidated that. They loved many things. It is similar to what Zayd ibn Ḥārithah did. He used to love a horse of his called Sabal and said, ‘O Allah! You know that I have no property which I love more than this horse of mine!’ He took it to the Prophet ﷺ and said, ‘Take it in the way of Allah.’ He ﷺ said to Usāma ibn Zayd, ‘Take it.’ Zayd felt disturbed by that, so the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘Allah has accepted it from you.’ Asad ibn Mūsā mentioned it.

Ibn ‘Umar freed Nāfi‘. ‘Abdullāh ibn Ja‘far gave a thousand dinars. Şafiyah bint Abī ‘Ubaydah said, ‘I think that was his interpretation of the words of Allah: “You will not attain true goodness until you give of what you love.”’

Shibl related from Abū Najīh that Mujāhid said that ‘Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb wrote to Abū Mūsā al-Ash‘arī asking him to buy a slavegirl from the captives of Jalūlā’ for him when Ctesiphon was conquered. Sa‘d ibn Abī Waqqāṣ said, “‘Umar summoned her and liked her. He said, “Allah says: You will not attain true goodness until you give of what you love.”’ He freed her.’

Ath-Thawrī related that he heard that the umm walad of ar-Rabī‘ ibn Khaytham said, ‘When a beggar came to him, he told me to give sugar to the asker. He loved sugar.’ Sufyān said that he was interpreting the words of this āyah.

It is reported that ‘Umar ibn ‘Abd al-‘Azīz bought some bags of sugar and gave them away as ṣadaqah. He was asked, ‘Why didn’t you give their value?’ He replied, ‘Because I love sugar and want to give of what I love.’ Al-Ḥasan said, ‘You will not obtain what you love except by abandoning what you desire and you will not get what you hope for except by steadfastness in enduring what you dislike.’

There is disagreement about the interpretation of the word birr (true goodness). It is said that it means the Garden, as is reported by Ibn Mas‘ūd, Ibn ‘Abbās, ‘Atā’, Mujāhid, ‘Amr ibn Maymūn and as-Suddī. It implies: ‘You will not obtain the reward of birr until you give of what you love.’ Nawāl [which comes from the root, ‘to obtain’] is giving. It means: ‘You will not reach the Garden and be given it until you spend of what you love.’

It is also said that birr means righteous action, as we see in the sound hadith, ‘You must give ṣadaqah. It leads to birr and birr leads to the Garden.’ This was already mentioned in al-Baqarah. ‘Aṭīyah al-‘Awfī said, ‘It means obedience.’ ‘Aṭā’ said, ‘You will not obtain the honour of the dīn and taqwā until you give ṣadaqah while you are healthy and greedy, hoping for life and fearing poverty.’

Al-Ḥasan said that the word ‘you give’ here indicates obligatory zakāt. Mujāhid and al-Kalbī said that it was abrogated by the Āyah of Zakāt. It is said that it means: ‘until you give of what you love in the way of good in ṣadaqah and other acts of obedience.’ This is a more general understanding.

An-Nasā’ī reported that Ṣa‘ṣa‘ah ibn Mu‘āwiyah said, ‘I met Abū Dharr and said, “Relate to me!” He said, “All right. The Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, “There is no Muslim who spends two types of all his property in the Way of Allah without the chamberlains of the Garden greeting him, calling him to what he has.”’ I asked, “How is that?” He said, “If it is a camel, then it is two camels, or if a cow, then two cows.”’

Abū Bakr al-Warrāq said, ‘This āyah is used as evidence for futuwwah, implying that Allah is saying that you will not obtain My goodness to you except by being good to your brothers and spending on them from your property and rank. When you do that, then you will obtain My goodness and kindness.’ Mujāhid said, ‘This is like His words: “They give food, despite their love of it, to the poor.” (76:8)’ and: ‘Whatever you give away, Allah knows it’ and will repay you for it.

كُلُّ الطَّعَامِ كَانَ حَلَالًا لِّبَنِي إِسْرَائِيلَ إِلَّا مَا حَرَّمَ إِسْرَائِيلُ عَلَى نَفْسِهِ
 مِنْ قَبْلِ أَنْ تُنَزَّلَ التَّوْرَةُ قُلْ فَأْتُوا بِالتَّوْرَةِ فَإِنِّي لَأَكْتُمُ صَادِقِينَ ﴿٢٠٥﴾
 فَمَنْ افْتَرَى عَلَى اللَّهِ الْكُذِبَ مِنْ بَعْدِ ذَلِكَ فَأُولَئِكَ هُمُ الظَّالِمُونَ ﴿٢٠٦﴾

93 All food was lawful for the tribe of Israel except what Israel made unlawful for himself before the Torah was sent down. Say, ‘Bring the Torah and read it out if you are telling the truth.’ 94 So any who, after this, invent a lie against Allah are indeed wrongdoers.

Israel is Ya‘qūb. In at-Tirmidhī, Ibn ‘Abbās reported that the Jews said to the Prophet ﷺ, ‘Tell us what Israel made unlawful for himself.’ He said, ‘He lived in the desert and suffered from sciatica and did not find anything which he liked to eat except camel flesh and milk. That is what he made unlawful.’ They said, ‘You spoke the truth.’ It is said that he swore that if he were free of it he would leave the food and drink he loved most, and that was camel flesh and milk.

Ibn ‘Abbās, Mujāhid, Qatādah and as-Suddī said, ‘When he was fleeing from his brother Esau, Ya‘qūb came from Harran making for Jerusalem. He was a strong and violent man. On the way he encountered an angel and thought he was a thief and he started to fight him. The angel touched Ya‘qūb’s thigh and climbed to heaven while Ya‘qūb was looking at him and suddenly sciatica erupted [in his leg]. He had great suffering from it and could not sleep for the pain. He spent the night crying out and swore that if Allah healed him, he would not eat sinew or any food containing sinew, and so he forbade it to himself. After that his sons used to remove sinews from meat. The reason that the angel touched Ya‘qūb was that he had vowed that if Allah were to give him twelve sons and he were to reach Jerusalem sound, he would sacrifice the last of them. Aḍ-Ḍahhāk said that that was to bring him out of his vow.

They disagree about whether Ya‘qūb’s making things unlawful was by his own ijtihād or by permission from Allah. The first is the sound position because Allah ascribed that to him. When a Prophet uses his ijtihād in something, his followers are obliged to follow it because Allah has confirmed him in that, in the same way that they must follow him when he receives revelation. The same is true of what he gives permission for and uses his ijtihād to decide. He must use his ijtihād when he is able to do that. If he did not have permission to make a thing unlawful, he would not embark on making anything lawful or unlawful. In a sound transmission, our Prophet ﷺ made honey unlawful to himself and his slavegirl Māriah. Allah did not confirm the prohibition and revealed: ‘Why do you make unlawful what Allah has made lawful for you?’ (66:1) This will be dealt with in at-Taḥrīm. Aṭ-Ṭabarī said, ‘It is possible to say that the generality of His words in 66:1 indicate that it is not specific to Māriah. Ash-Shāfi‘ī related that kaffārah is obliged for that without the meaning being understood. He made it specific to the text. Abū Ḥanīfah thought that was a principle for forbidding anything permissible and took it to be like an oath.’

Say, ‘Bring the Torah and read it out if you are telling the truth.’

Ibn ‘Abbās said, ‘When Ya‘qūb had sciatica, the doctors told him to avoid camel flesh and so he forbade it for himself. The Jews said, “We forbid camel meat for ourselves because Ya‘qūb forbade it and Allah sent down its prohibition in the Torah.” So Allah revealed this āyah.’ Ad-Ḍaḥḥāk said, ‘Allah called them liars and refuted them, saying, “Muḥammad, say: ‘Bring the Torah and read it out if you are telling the truth.’ (3:93)” The Almighty said: “So any who, after this, invent a lie against Allah are indeed wrongdoers.”

Az-Zajjāj said, ‘This āyah contains the greatest proof of the Prophethood of Muḥammad, our Prophet ﷺ. He reports that it is not in their Book and commands them to bring the Torah which they refused to do, showing by that that they knew that what he said was by revelation.’

‘Atīyyah al-‘Awfī said, ‘That was forbidden them because Ya‘qūb forbade it to them. That was when Ya‘qūb suffered from sciatica and said, “By Allah, if Allah heals me of it, none of my children will ever eat it!”’ [‘Irq an-nasā is sciatica and ‘irq is sinew or sciatic vein.] Al-Kalbī said, ‘Allah did not forbid it in the Torah. He forbade it after the Torah had been revealed because of their wrongdoing and disbelief. When the tribe of Israel committed a major wrong action,

Allah forbade them good food or poured out punishment on them, which is death. That is referred to in the words of the Almighty: “Because of wrongdoing on the part of the Jews, We made unlawful for them some good things which had previously been lawful for them” (4:160) and: “We made unlawful for the Jews every animal with an undivided hoof...” (6:146)’

Ibn Mājah has a chapter in his Sunan: ‘Treating Sciatica’ in which Hishām ibn ‘Ammār and Rāshid ibn Sa‘īd ar-Ramlī related from al-Walīd ibn Muslim from Hishām ibn Hishām that Anas ibn Sīrīn heard Anas ibn Mālīk say that he heard the Messenger of Allah ﷺ say, ‘The cure for sciatica lies in melting the tail of a Bedouin’s sheep which should then be divided into three parts. One part should be drunk each day on an empty stomach.’ Ath-Tha‘labī also transmitted in his Tafsīr from Anas ibn Mālīk who said that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said about sciatica: ‘Take the tail of medium sized Bedouin ram, cut it into small pieces, remove its liquid, divide it into three parts and then ingest one part on an empty stomach for three days.’ Anas said, ‘I told this to more than a hundred people and they were healed by Allah’s permission.’ Shu‘bah said that a Shaykh related to him in the time of al-Ḥajjāj ibn Yūsuf about sciatica, ‘I swear to you by Allah Most High, if you do not stop, I will cauterise you with fire or shave you with a razor!’ Shu‘bah said, ‘I tested it. You say it and wipe over the site.’

قُلْ صَدَقَ اللَّهُ فَاتَّبِعُوا مِلَّةَ إِبْرَاهِيمَ حَنِيفًا وَمَا كَانَ مِنَ الْمُشْرِكِينَ ﴿٩٥﴾

95 Say, ‘Allah speaks the truth, so follow the religion of Ibrāhīm, a man of pure natural belief. He was not one of the idolaters.’

In other words, ‘O Muḥammad, Allah speaks the truth: that is not forbidden in the Torah.’ Then He commands him to follow his dīn. He refuted their false claim about him being an idolater.

TABLE OF CONTENTS FOR ĀYATS

Surat al-Baqarah

254 You who believe! give away some of what We have provided for you... 1

255 Allah, there is no god but Him, the Living, the Self-Sustaining... 2

256 There is no compulsion where the dīn is concerned... 12

257 Allah is the Protector of those who believe... 15

258 What about the one who argued with Ibrāhīm about his Lord... 16

259 Or the one who passed by a town which had fallen into ruin... 20

260 When Ibrāhīm said, 'My Lord, show me how ... 28

261 The metaphor of those who spend their wealth in the Way of Allah... 33

262 Those who spend their wealth in the Way of Allah... 39

264 You who believe! do not nullify your ṣadaqah... 41

265 The metaphor of those who spend their wealth... 44

266 Would any of you like to have a garden of dates and grapes... 47

267 You who believe! give away some of the good things you have earned... 50

268 Shayṭān promises you poverty and commands you to avarice... 56

269 He gives wisdom to whomever He wills... 57

270 Whatever amount you spend or vow you make, Allah knows it... 59

271 If you make your ṣadaqah public, that is good. But if you conceal it... 60

272 You are not responsible for their guidance, but Allah guides... 64

- 273 It is for the poor who are held back in the Way of Allah... 67
- 274 Those who give away their wealth by night and day... 73
- 275-9 Those who practise usury will not rise from the grave except... 74
- 280 If someone is in difficult circumstances, there should be a deferral... 95
- 281 Be fearful of a Day when you will be returned to Allah... 98
- 282 You who believe! when you take on a debt for a specified period... 100
- 283 If you are on a journey and cannot find a writer... 127
- 284 Everything in the heavens and everything in the earth... 140
- 285-6 The Messenger believes in what has been sent down to him... 144

Sūrah Āli ‘Imrān

- 1-3 Alif Lām Mīm. 154
- 3-4 He has sent down the Book to you with truth... 157
- 5 Allah – Him from Whom nothing is hidden, either on earth or... 158
- 6 It is He who forms you in the womb however He will... 159
- 7 It is He who sent down the Book to you from Him... 160
- 8 ‘Our Lord, do not make our hearts swerve aside after You have guided us... 169
- 9 Our Lord, You are the Gatherer of mankind to a Day of which... 171
- 10 As for those who disbelieve, their wealth and children will not help... 171
- 11 as was the case with the people of Pharaoh and those before them... 172
- 12 Say to those who disbelieve: ‘You will be overwhelmed... 173
- 13 There was a sign for you in the two parties which met face to face... 174
- 14 To mankind the love of worldly appetites is painted... 177

15 Say, ‘Shall I tell you of something better than that?’ ... 184
16-17 those who say, ‘Our Lord, we believe, so forgive us... 185
18 Allah bears witness that there is no god but Him... 187
19 The dīn with Allah is Islam... 190
20 If they argue with you, say, ‘I have submitted myself... 191
21-22 As for those who reject Allah’s Signs... 193
23 Do you not see those who have been given a portion of the Book... 196
24 That is because they say, ‘The Fire will only touch us for a number... 197
25 But how will it be when We gather them all together for a Day... 198
26 Say, ‘O Allah! Master of the Kingdom! You give sovereignty... 198
27 You merge the night into the day. You merge the day into the night... 201
28 The believers should not take unbelievers as friends... 202
29 Say, ‘Whether you conceal what is in your breasts or make it known... 204
30 On the Day that each self finds the good it did, and the evil it did... 204
31 Say, ‘If you love Allah, then follow me and Allah will love you... 205
32 Say, ‘Obey Allah and the Messenger.’ Then if they turn away... 207
33 Allah chose Ādam and Nūḥ and the family of Ibrāhīm... 207
34 descendants one of the other. Allah is All-Hearing, All-Knowing. 209
35-36 Remember when the wife of ‘Imrān said, ‘My Lord... 210
37-38 Her Lord accepted her with approval... 213
39 The angels called out to him while he was standing in prayer... 217

- 40 He said, 'My Lord, how can I possibly have a son... 221
- 41 He said, 'My Lord, appoint a Sign for me.' He said, 'Your Sign is that you will not speak to people for three days, except by gesture. Remember your Lord much and glorify Him in the evening and after dawn.' 222
- 42 And when the angels said, 'Maryam, Allah has chosen you and purified you. He has chosen you over all other women. 224
- 43 Maryam, obey your Lord and prostrate and bow with those who bow.' 226
- 44 This is news from the Unseen which We reveal to you... 226
- 45 When the angels said, 'Maryam, Allah gives you good news... 229
- 47 She said, 'My lord! How can I have a son ... 233
- 48 He will teach him the Book and Wisdom, and the Torah... 234
- 50-51 I come confirming the Torah I find already there... 237
- 52 When 'Īsā sensed unbelief on their part, he said... 238
- 53 Our Lord, we believe in what You have sent down... 239
- 54 They plotted and Allah plotted. But Allah is the best of plotters... 239
- 55 When Allah said, "'Īsā, I will take you back and raise you up to Me... 240
- 56-58 As for those who disbelieve, I will punish them... 243
- 59 The likeness of 'Īsā in Allah's sight is the same as Ādam... 243
- 61 If anyone argues with you about him... 244
- 62 This is the true account: there is no other god besides Allah... 246
- 64 Say, 'People of the Book! come to a proposition... 246
- 65 'People of the Book! why do you argue concerning Ibrāhīm... 248
- 66 You are people arguing about something... 249
- 67 Ibrāhīm was neither a Jew nor a Christian... 249
- 68 The people with the strongest claim to Ibrāhīm... 250

- 69 A group of the People of the Book would love to misguide you... 250
- 70 People of the Book! why do you reject Allah's Signs... 251
- 71 People of the Book! why do you mix truth with falsehood... 251
- 72 A group of the People of the Book say, 'At the beginning of the day... 251
- 73 Do not trust anyone except for those who follow your dīn.? ... 252
- 74 He picks out for His mercy whoever He wills... 255
- 75 Among the People of the Book there are some who... 256
- 76 No, the truth is, if people honour their contracts and are godfearing... 259
- 77 Those who sell Allah's contract and their own oaths for a paltry price... 260
- 78 Among them is a group who distort the Book with their tongues... 261
- 79 It is not right for any human being... 261
- 80 He would never command you to take the angels and Prophets... 263
- 81 Remember when Allah made a covenant with the Prophets... 264
- 82 Any who turn away after that are deviators... 266
- 83-84 Is it other than the dīn of Allah that you desire... 267
- 85 If anyone desires anything other than Islam as a dīn... 268
- 86 How can Allah guide a people who have disbelieved after... 268
- 87-89 The repayment of such people is that Allah's curse is on them... 270
- 90 Those who disbelieved after having believed... 270
- 91 As for those who disbelieve and die unbelievers... 271
- 92 You will not attain true goodness until you give of what you love... 272
- 93 All food was lawful for the tribe of Israel except... 274
- 95 Say, 'Allah speaks the truth, so follow the religion of Ibrāhīm... 274

4. 258 What about the one who argued with Ibrāhīm about his Lord, on the basis that Allah had given him sovereignty? Ibrāhīm said, ‘My Lord is He who gives life and causes to die.’ He said, ‘I too give life and cause to die.’ Ibrāhīm said, ‘Allah makes the sun come from the East. Make it come from the West.’ And the one who was an unbeliever was dumbfounded. Allah does not guide wrongdoing people.
5. 259 Or the one who passed by a town which had fallen into ruin? He asked, ‘How can Allah restore this to life when it has died?’ Allah caused him to die a hundred years, then brought him back to life. Then He asked, ‘How long have you been here?’ He replied, ‘I have been here a day or part of a day.’ He said, ‘Not so! You have been here a hundred years. Look at your food and drink – it has not gone bad — and look at your donkey so We can make you a Sign for all mankind. Look at the bones – how We raise them up and clothe them in flesh.’ When it had become clear to him, he said, ‘Now I know that Allah has power over all things.’
6. 260 When Ibrāhīm said, ‘My Lord, show me how You bring the dead to life.’ He asked, ‘Do you not then believe?’ He replied, ‘Indeed I do! But so that my heart may be at peace.’ He said, ‘Take four birds and train them to yourself. Then put a part of them on each mountain and call to them; they will come rushing to you. Know that Allah is Almighty, All-Wise.’
7. 261 The metaphor of those who spend their wealth in the Way of Allah is that of a grain which produces

- seven ears; in every ear there are a hundred grains. Allah gives such multiplied increase to whoever He wills. Allah is All-Encompassing, All-Knowing.
8. 262 Those who spend their wealth in the Way of Allah, and then do not follow what they have spent by demands for gratitude or insulting words will have their reward with their Lord. They will feel no fear and will know no sorrow.
 9. 263 Correct and courteous words accompanied by forgiveness are better than ṣadaqah followed by insulting words. Allah is Rich Beyond Need, All-Forbearing.
 10. 264 You who believe! do not nullify your ṣadaqah by demands for gratitude or insulting words, like him who spends his wealth, showing off to people and not believing in Allah and the Last Day. His likeness is that of a smooth rock coated with soil, which, when heavy rain falls on it, is left stripped bare. They have no power over anything they have earned. Allah does not guide disbelieving people.
 11. 265 The metaphor of those who spend their wealth, desiring the pleasure of Allah and firmness for themselves, is that of a garden on a hillside. When heavy rain falls on it, it doubles its produce; and if heavy rain does not fall, there is dew. Allah sees what you do.
 12. 266 Would any of you like to have a garden of dates and grapes, with rivers flowing underneath and containing all kinds of fruits, then to be stricken with old age and have children who are weak, and then for a fierce whirlwind containing fire to come and strike it so that it goes up in flames? In this way

- Allah makes His Signs clear to you, so that hopefully you will reflect.
13. 267 You who believe! give away some of the good things you have earned and some of what the earth produces for you. Do not have recourse to bad things when you give, things you would only take with your eyes tight shut! Know that Allah is Rich Beyond Need, Praiseworthy.
 14. 268 Shaytān promises you poverty and commands you to avarice. Allah promises you forgiveness from Him and abundance. Allah is All-Encompassing, All-Knowing.
 15. 269 He gives wisdom to whomever He wills and he who has been given wisdom has been given great good. But no one pays heed but people of intelligence.
 16. 270 Whatever amount you spend or vow you make, Allah knows it. The wrongdoers have no helpers.
 17. 271 If you make your ṣadaqah public, that is good. But if you conceal it and give it to the poor, that is better for you, and We will erase some of your bad actions from you. Allah is aware of what you do.
 18. 272 You are not responsible for their guidance, but Allah guides whomever He wills. Whatever good you give away is to your own benefit, when you give desiring only the Face of Allah. Whatever good you give away will be repaid to you in full. You will not be wronged.
 19. 273 It is for the poor who are held back in the Way of Allah, unable to travel in the land. The ignorant consider them rich because of their reticence. You will know them by their mark. They do not ask from

- people insistently. Whatever good you give away, Allah knows it.
20. 274 Those who give away their wealth by night and day, secretly and openly, will have their reward with their Lord. They will feel no fear and will know no sorrow.
21. 275 Those who practise usury will not rise from the grave except as someone driven mad by Shayṭān's touch. That is because they say, 'Trade is the same as usury.' But Allah has permitted trade and He has forbidden usury. Whoever is given a warning by his Lord and then desists, can keep what he received in the past and his affair is Allah's concern. But all who return to it will be the Companions of the Fire, remaining in it timelessly, for ever. 276 Allah obliterates usury but makes ṣadaqah grow in value! Allah does not love any persistently ungrateful wrongdoer. 277 Those who believe and do right actions and establish the prayer and pay zakāt, will have their reward with their Lord. They will feel no fear and will know no sorrow. 278 You who believe! be fearful of Allah and forgo any remaining usury if you are believers. 279 If you do not, know that it means war from Allah and His Messenger. But if you sincerely repent you may have your capital, without wronging and without being wronged.
22. 280 If someone is in difficult circumstances, there should be a deferral until things are easier. But making a free gift of it would be better for you if you only knew.
23. 281 Be fearful of a Day when you will be returned to Allah. Then every self will be paid in full for what it - earned. They will not be wronged.

24. 282 You who believe! when you take on a debt for a specified period, write it down. A writer should write it down between you justly. No writer should refuse to write; as Allah has taught him, so he should write. The one incurring the debt should dictate and should be fearful of Allah his Lord and not reduce it in any way. If the person incurring the debt is incompetent or weak or unable to dictate, then his guardian should dictate for him justly. Two men among you should act as witnesses. But if there are not two men, then a man and two women with whom you are satisfied as witnesses; then if one of them is confused, the other can remind her. Witnesses should not refuse when they are called upon. Do not think it too trivial to write down, whether small or large, with the date that it falls due. Doing that is more just in Allah's sight and more helpful when bearing witness and more likely to eliminate any doubt – unless it is an immediate transaction hand to hand, taken and given without delay. There is nothing wrong in your not writing that down. Call witnesses when you trade. Neither writer nor witness should be put under pressure. If you do that, it is deviancy on your part. Be fearful of Allah and Allah will give you knowledge. Allah has knowledge of all things.
25. 283 If you are on a journey and cannot find a writer, something can be left as a security. If you leave things on trust with one another the one who is trusted must deliver up his trust and be fearful of Allah his Lord. Do not conceal testimony. If someone does conceal it, his heart commits a crime. Allah knows what you do.

26. 284 Everything in the heavens and everything in the earth belongs to Allah. Whether you divulge what is in yourselves or keep it hidden, Allah will still call you to account for it. He forgives whomever He wills and He punishes whomever He wills. Allah has power over all things.

27. 285 The Messenger believes in what has been sent down to him from his Lord, and so do the believers. Each one believes in Allah and His angels and His Books and His Messengers. We do not differentiate between any of His Messengers. They say, 'We hear and we obey. Forgive us, our Lord! You are our journey's end.' 286 Allah does not impose on any self any more than it can bear. For it is what it has earned; against it, what it has merited. Our Lord, do not take us to task if we forget or make a mistake! Our Lord, do not place on us a load like the one You placed on those before us! Our Lord, do not place on us a load we have not the strength to bear! And pardon us; and forgive us; and have mercy on us. You are our Master, so help us against the people of the unbelievers.

3. 3. Sūrah Āl 'Imrān The Family of 'Imrān 1 – 95

1. 1 Alif Lām Mīm. 2. Allah, there is no god but Him, the Living, the Self-Sustaining.

1. 3 He has sent down the Book to you with truth, confirming what was there before it. And He sent down the Torah and the Gospel, 4 previously, as guidance for mankind, and He has sent down the Furqān. Those who reject Allah's Signs will have a - terrible punishment. Allah is Almighty, Exactor of Revenge.

2. 5 Allah – Him from Whom nothing is hidden, either on earth or in heaven.
 3. 6 It is He who forms you in the womb however He wills. There is no god but Him, the Almighty, the All-Wise.
 4. 7 It is He who sent down the Book to you from Him: āyahs containing clear judgments – they are the core of the Book – and others which are open to interpretation. Those with deviation in their hearts follow what is open to interpretation in it, desiring conflict, seeking its inner meaning. No one knows its inner meaning but Allah. Those firmly rooted in knowledge say, ‘We believe in it. All of it is from our Lord.’ But only people of intelligence pay heed.
 5. 8 ‘Our Lord, do not make our hearts swerve aside after You have guided us. And give us mercy from You. You are the Ever-Giving.
 6. 9 Our Lord, You are the Gatherer of mankind to a Day of which there is no doubt. Allah will not break His promise.’
 7. 10 As for those who disbelieve, their wealth and children will not help them against Allah in any way. They are fuel for the Fire,
 8. 11 as was the case with the people of Pharaoh and those before them. They denied Our Signs so Allah seized them for their wrong actions. Allah is fierce in retribution.
 9. 12 Say to those who disbelieve: ‘You will be overwhelmed and crowded into Hell. What an evil resting-place!’

10. 13 There was a sign for you in the two parties which met face to face, one party fighting in the Way of Allah and the other unbelievers. You saw them as twice their number with your own eyes. Allah reinforces with His help whoever He wills. There is instruction in that for people of insight.
11. 14 To mankind the love of worldly appetites is painted in glowing colours: women and children, and heaped-up mounds of gold and silver, and grazing horses with fine markings, and livestock and fertile farmland. All that is merely the enjoyment of the life of this world. The best homecoming is in the presence of Allah.
12. 15 Say, 'Shall I tell you of something better than that?' The godfearing will have Gardens with their Lord, with rivers flowing under them, remaining in them timelessly, for ever, and purified wives, and the Pleasure of Allah. Allah sees His slaves:
13. 16 those who say, 'Our Lord, we believe, so forgive us our wrong actions and safeguard us from the punishment of the Fire.' 17 The steadfast, the truthful, the obedient, the givers, and those who seek forgiveness before dawn.
14. 18 Allah bears witness that there is no god but Him, as do the angels and the people of knowledge, upholding justice. There is no god but Him, the Almighty, the All-Wise.
15. 19 The dīn with Allah is Islam. Those given the Book only differed after knowledge had come to them, envying one another. As for those who reject Allah's Signs, Allah is swift at reckoning.

16. 20 If they argue with you, say, 'I have submitted myself completely to Allah, and so have all who follow me.' Say to those given the Book and those who have no Book, 'Have you become Muslim?' If they become Muslim, they have been guided. If they turn away, you are only responsible for transmission. Allah sees His slaves.
17. 21 As for those who reject Allah's Signs, and kill the Prophets without any right to do so, and kill those who command justice, give them news of a painful punishment. 22 They are the ones whose actions come to nothing in this world or the Next World. They will have no helpers.
18. 23 Do you not see those who have been given a portion of the Book being invited to let Allah's Book be the judge between them? But then a group of them turn away.
19. 24 That is because they say, 'The Fire will only touch us for a number of days.' Their inventions have deluded them in their dīn.
20. 25 But how will it be when We gather them all together for a Day about which there is no doubt? Every self will be paid in full for what it earned. They will not be wronged.
21. 26 Say, 'O Allah! Master of the Kingdom! You give sovereignty to whomever You will You take sovereignty from whomever You will. You exalt whomever You will You abase whomever You will. All good is in Your hands. You have power over all things.
22. 27 You merge the night into the day. You merge the day into the night. You bring out the living from the - dead. You bring out the dead from the living. You provide for whoever You will without any reckoning.’

23. 28 The believers should not take unbelievers as friends rather than believers. Anyone who does that has nothing to do with Allah at all – unless it is because you are afraid of them. Allah advises you to be afraid of Him. Allah is the final destination.
 24. 29 Say, ‘Whether you conceal what is in your breasts or make it known, Allah knows it. He knows what is in the heavens and what is on earth. Allah has power over all things.’
 25. 30 On the Day that each self finds the good it did, and the evil it did, present there in front of it, it will wish there were an age between it and then. Allah advises you to beware of Him. Allah is Ever-Gentle with His slaves.
 26. 31 Say, ‘If you love Allah, then follow me and Allah will love you and forgive you for your wrong actions. Allah is Ever-Forgiving, Most Merciful.’
 27. 32 Say, ‘Obey Allah and the Messenger.’ Then if they turn away, Allah does not love the unbelievers.
 28. 33 Allah chose Ādam and Nūḥ and the family of Ibrāhīm and the family of ‘Imrān over all other beings –
 29. 34 descendants one of the other. Allah is All-Hearing, All-Knowing.
 30. 35 Remember when the wife of ‘Imrān said, ‘My Lord, I have pledged to You what is in my womb, devoting it to Your service. Please accept my prayer. You are the All-Hearing, the All-Knowing.’ 36 When she gave birth, she said, ‘My Lord! I have given birth to a girl' – and Allah knew very well what she had given birth to, male and female are not the same – 'and I have named her Maryam and placed her and her children in Your safekeeping from the accursed Shayṭān.'

31. 37 Her Lord accepted her with approval and made her grow in health and beauty. And Zakariyyā became her guardian. Every time Zakariyyā visited her in the Upper Room, he found food with her. He said, 'Maryam, how did you come by this?' She said, 'It is from Allah. Allah provides for whoever He wills without any reckoning.' 38 Then and there Zakariyyā called on his Lord and said, 'O Lord, grant me by Your favour an upright child. You are the Hearer of Prayer.'
32. 39 The angels called out to him while he was standing in prayer in the Upper Room: 'Allah gives you the good news of Yaḥyā, who will come to confirm a Word from Allah, and will be a leader and a celibate, a Prophet and one of the righteous.'
33. 40 He said, 'My Lord, how can I possibly have a son when I have reached old age and my wife is barren?' He said, 'It will be so. Allah does whatever He wills.'
34. 41 He said, 'My Lord, appoint a Sign for me.' He said, 'Your Sign is that you will not speak to people for three days, except by gesture. Remember your Lord much and glorify Him in the evening and after dawn.'
35. 42 And when the angels said, 'Maryam, Allah has chosen you and purified you. He has chosen you over all other women.'

36. 43 Maryam, obey your Lord and prostrate and bow with those who bow.'
37. 44 This is news from the Unseen which We reveal to you. You were not with them when they cast their reeds to see which of them would be the guardian of Maryam. You were not with them when they quarrelled.
38. 45 When the angels said, 'Maryam, Allah gives you good news of a Word from Him. His name is the Messiah, 'Īsā, son of Maryam, of high esteem in this world and the Next, and one of those brought near. 46 He will speak to people in the cradle, and also when fully grown, and will be one of the righteous.'
39. 47 She said, 'My lord! How can I have a son when no man has ever touched me?' He said, 'It will be so.' Allah creates whatever He wills. When He decides on something, He just says to it, 'Be!' and it is.
40. 48 He will teach him the Book and Wisdom, and the Torah and the Gospel, 49 as a Messenger to the tribe of Israel, saying: 'I have brought you a Sign from your Lord. I will create the shape of a bird out of clay for you and then breathe into it and it will be a bird by Allah's permission. I will heal the blind and the leper, and bring the dead to life, by Allah's permission. I will tell you what you eat and what you store up in your homes. There is a Sign for you in that if you are believers.
41. 50 I come confirming the Torah I find already there, and to make lawful for you some of what was previously forbidden to you. I have brought you a Sign from your Lord. So have taqwā of Allah and

- obey me. 51 Allah is my Lord and your Lord so worship Him. That is a straight path.'
42. 52 When 'Īsā sensed unbelief on their part, he said, 'Who will be my helpers to Allah?' The disciples said, 'We are Allah's helpers. We believe in Allah. Bear witness that we are Muslims.
43. 53 Our Lord, we believe in what You have sent down and have followed the Messenger, so write us down among the witnesses.'
44. 54 They plotted and Allah plotted. But Allah is the best of plotters.
45. 55 When Allah said, "Īsā, I will take you back and raise you up to Me and purify you of those who disbelieve. And I will place the people who follow you above those who disbelieve until the Day of Rising. Then you will all return to Me, and I will judge between you regarding the things about which you differed.
46. 56 As for those who disbelieve, I will punish them with a harsh punishment in this world and the Next World. They will have no helpers.' 57 As for those who believe and do right actions, We will pay them their wages in full. Allah does not love wrongdoers. 58 That is what We recite to you of the Signs and the wise Reminder.
47. 59 The likeness of 'Īsā in Allah's sight is the same as Ādam. He created him from earth and then He said to him, 'Be!' and he was. 60 It is the truth from your Lord so do not be among the doubters.
48. 61 If anyone argues with you about him after the knowledge that has come to you, say, 'Come then! Let us summon our sons and your sons, our women

- and your women, ourselves and yourselves. Then let us make earnest supplication and call down the curse of Allah upon the liars.'
49. 62 This is the true account: there is no other god besides Allah. Allah – He is the Almighty, the All-Wise. 63 And if they turn away, Allah knows the corrupters.
 50. 64 Say, 'People of the Book! come to a proposition which is the same for us and you – that we should worship none but Allah and not associate any partners with Him and not take one another as lords besides Allah.' If they turn away, say, 'Bear witness that we are Muslims.'
 51. 65 'People of the Book! why do you argue concerning Ibrāhīm when the Torah and Gospel were only sent down after him? Why do you not use your intellect?
 52. 66 You are people arguing about something of which you have knowledge. Why do you argue about something of which you have no knowledge? Allah knows; you do not know.'
 53. 67 Ibrāhīm was neither a Jew nor a Christian, but a man of pure natural belief – a Muslim. He was not one of the idolaters.
 54. 68 The people with the strongest claim to Ibrāhīm are those who followed him and this Prophet and those who believe. Allah is the Protector of the believers.
 55. 69 A group of the People of the Book would love to misguide you. They only misguide themselves but they are not aware of it.

56. 70 People of the Book! why do you reject Allah's Signs when you yourselves are there as witnesses?
57. 71 People of the Book! why do you mix truth with falsehood and knowingly conceal the truth?
58. 72 A group of the People of the Book say, 'At the beginning of the day, you should claim to believe in what was sent down to those who believe, and then at the end of the day, you should reject it, so that hopefully they will revert.'
59. 73 Do not trust anyone except for those who follow your dīn.' Say, 'Allah's guidance is true guidance. But you think it is impossible for anyone to be given the same as you were given, or to argue with you before your Lord.' Say, 'All favour is in Allah's Hand and He gives it to whomever He wills. Allah is All-Encompassing, All-Knowing.'
60. 74 He picks out for His mercy whoever He wills. Allah's favour is indeed immense.'
61. 75 Among the People of the Book there are some who, if you entrust them with a pile of gold, will return it to you. But there are others among them who, if you entrust them with just a single dinar, will not return it to you, unless you stay standing over them. That is because they say, 'We are under no obligation where the gentiles are concerned.' They tell a lie against Allah and they know it.'
62. 76 No, the truth is, if people honour their contracts and are godfearing, Allah loves the godfearing.
63. 77 Those who sell Allah's contract and their own oaths for a paltry price, such people will have no portion in the Next World and on the Day of Rising

- Allah will not speak to them or look at them or purify them. They will have a painful punishment.
64. 78 Among them is a group who distort the Book with their tongues so that you think it is from the Book when it is not from the Book. They say, 'It is from Allah,' but it is not from Allah. They tell a lie against Allah and they know it.
65. 79 It is not right for any human being that Allah should give him the Book and judgment and Prophethood, and then that he should say to people, 'Be worshippers of me rather than Allah.' Rather he will say, 'Be people of the Lord because of your knowledge of the Book and because you study.'
66. 80 He would never command you to take the angels and Prophets as Lords. Would He command you to disbelieve after being Muslim?
67. 81 Remember when Allah made a covenant with the Prophets: 'Now that I have given you a share of the Book and Wisdom, and then a messenger comes to you confirming what is with you, you must believe in him and help him.' He asked, 'Do you agree and undertake my commission on that condition?' They replied, 'We agree.' He said, 'Bear witness, then. I am with you as one of the witnesses.'
68. 82 Any who turn away after that are deviators.
69. 83 Is it other than the dīn of Allah that you desire, when everything in the heavens and earth, willingly or unwillingly, submits to Him and to Him you will be returned? 84 Say, 'We believe in Allah and what has been sent down to us and what was sent down to Ibrāhīm, Ismā'īl and Ishāq and Ya'qūb and the Tribes, and what Mūsā and 'Īsā and all the Prophets

- were given by their Lord. We do not differentiate between any of them. We are Muslims submitted to Him.'
70. 85 If anyone desires anything other than Islam as a dīn, it will not be accepted from him, and in the Next World he will be among the losers.
 71. 86 How can Allah guide a people who have disbelieved after having believed? They bore witness that the Messenger was true and that the Clear Signs had come to them. Allah does not guide people who are wrongdoers.
 72. 87 The repayment of such people is that Allah's curse is on them and that of the angels and of all mankind. 88 They will be under it for ever. Their punishment will not be lightened. They will be granted no reprieve. 89 Except for those who, after that, repent and put things right. Truly Allah is Ever-Forgiving, Most Merciful.
 73. 90 Those who disbelieve after having believed and then increase in their unbelief, their repentance will not be accepted. They are the misguided.
 74. 91 As for those who disbelieve and die unbelievers, the whole earth filled with gold would not be accepted from any of them if they were to offer it as a ransom. They will have a painful punishment. They will have no helpers.
 75. 92 You will not attain true goodness until you give of what you love. Whatever you give away, Allah knows it.
 76. 93 All food was lawful for the tribe of Israel except what Israel made unlawful for himself before the Torah was sent down. Say, 'Bring the Torah and read it out if you are telling the truth.’ 94 So any who, after this, invent a lie against Allah are indeed wrongdoers.

77. 95 Say, ‘Allah speaks the truth, so follow the religion of Ibrāhīm, a man of pure natural belief. He was not one of the idolaters.’

His Footstool encompasses the heavens and the earth and their preservation does not tire Him. He is the Most High, the Magnificent.	10
256 There is no compulsion where the dīn is concerned. Right guidance has become clearly distinct from error. Anyone who rejects false gods and believes in Allah has grasped the Firmest Handhold, which will never give way. Allah is All-Hearing, All-Knowing.	23
257 Allah is the Protector of those who believe. He brings them out of the darkness into the light. But those who disbelieve have false gods as protectors. They take them from the light into the darkness. Those are the Companions of the Fire remaining in it timelessly, for ever.	26
258 What about the one who argued with Ibrāhīm about	27

his Lord, on the basis that Allah had given him sovereignty? Ibrāhīm said, ‘My Lord is He who gives life and causes to die.’ He said, ‘I too give life and cause to die.’ Ibrāhīm said, ‘Allah makes the sun come from the East. Make it come from the West.’ And the one who was an unbeliever was dumbfounded. Allah does not guide wrongdoing people.

259 Or the one who passed by a town which had fallen into ruin? He asked, ‘How can Allah restore this to life when it has died?’ Allah caused him to die a hundred years, then brought him back to life. Then He asked, ‘How long have you been here?’ He replied, ‘I have been here a day or part of a day.’ He said, ‘Not so! You have been here a hundred years. Look at your food and drink – it has not gone bad — and look at your donkey so We can make you a Sign for all mankind. Look at the bones – how We raise them up and clothe them in flesh.’ When it had become clear to him, he said, ‘Now I know that Allah has power over all things.’

260 When Ibrāhīm said, ‘My Lord, show me how You bring the dead to life.’ He asked, ‘Do you not then believe?’ He replied, ‘Indeed I do! But so that my heart may be at peace.’ He said, ‘Take four birds and train them to yourself. Then put a part of them on each mountain and call to them; they will come rushing to you. Know that Allah is Almighty, All-Wise.’

44

261 The metaphor of those who spend their wealth in the Way of Allah is that of a grain which produces seven ears; in every ear there are a hundred grains. Allah gives such multiplied increase to whoever He wills. Allah is All-Encompassing, All-Knowing.

51

- 262 Those who spend their wealth in the Way of Allah, and then do not follow what they have spent by demands for gratitude or insulting words will have their reward with their Lord. They will feel no fear and will know no sorrow. 55
- 263 Correct and courteous words accompanied by forgiveness are better than ṣadaqah followed by insulting words. Allah is Rich Beyond Need, All-Forbearing. 58
- 264 You who believe! do not nullify your ṣadaqah by demands for gratitude or insulting words, like him who spends his wealth, showing off to people and not believing in Allah and the Last Day. His likeness is that of a smooth rock coated with soil, which, when heavy rain falls on it, is left stripped bare. They have no power over anything they have earned. Allah does not guide disbelieving people. 60
- 265 The metaphor of those who spend their wealth, desiring the pleasure of Allah and firmness for themselves, is that of a garden on a hillside. When heavy rain falls on it, it doubles its produce; and if heavy rain does not fall, there is dew. Allah sees what you do. 64
- 266 Would any of you like to have a garden of dates and grapes, with rivers flowing underneath and containing all kinds of fruits, then to be stricken with old age and have children who are weak, and then for a fierce whirlwind containing fire to come and strike it so that it goes up in flames? In this way Allah makes His Signs clear to you, so that hopefully you will reflect. 69
- 267 You who believe! give away some of the good things you have earned and some of what the earth produces for you. Do not have recourse to bad things when you give, 72

- things you would only take with your eyes tight shut!
 Know that Allah is Rich Beyond Need, Praiseworthy.
- 268 Shayṭān promises you poverty and commands you to avarice. Allah promises you forgiveness from Him and abundance. Allah is All-Encompassing, All-Knowing. 81
- 269 He gives wisdom to whomever He wills and he who has been given wisdom has been given great good. But no one pays heed but people of intelligence. 82
- 270 Whatever amount you spend or vow you make, Allah knows it. The wrongdoers have no helpers. 84
- 271 If you make your ṣadaqah public, that is good. But if you conceal it and give it to the poor, that is better for you, and We will erase some of your bad actions from you. Allah is aware of what you do. 85
- 272 You are not responsible for their guidance, but Allah guides whomever He wills. Whatever good you give away is to your own benefit, when you give desiring only the Face of Allah. Whatever good you give away will be repaid to you in full. You will not be wronged. 91
- 273 It is for the poor who are held back in the Way of Allah, unable to travel in the land. The ignorant consider them rich because of their reticence. You will know them by their mark. They do not ask from people insistently.
 Whatever good you give away, Allah knows it. 94
- 274 Those who give away their wealth by night and day, secretly and openly, will have their reward with their Lord. They will feel no fear and will know no sorrow. 103
- 275 Those who practise usury will not rise from the grave except as someone driven mad by Shayṭān's touch. That is because they say, 'Trade is the same as usury.' But Allah has permitted trade and He has forbidden usury. 104

Whoever is given a warning by his Lord and then desists, can keep what he received in the past and his affair is Allah's concern. But all who return to it will be the Companions of the Fire, remaining in it timelessly, for ever. 276 Allah obliterates usury but makes ṣadaqah grow in value! Allah does not love any persistently ungrateful wrongdoer. 277 Those who believe and do right actions and establish the prayer and pay zakāt, will have their reward with their Lord. They will feel no fear and will know no sorrow. 278 You who believe! be fearful of Allah and forgo any remaining usury if you are believers. 279 If you do not, know that it means war from Allah and His Messenger. But if you sincerely repent you may have your capital, without wronging and without being wronged. 280 If someone is in difficult circumstances, there should be a deferral until things are easier. But making a free gift of it would be better for you if you only knew. 132

281 Be fearful of a Day when you will be returned to Allah. Then every self will be paid in full for what it earned. They will not be wronged. 137

282 You who believe! when you take on a debt for a specified period, write it down. A writer should write it down between you justly. No writer should refuse to write; as Allah has taught him, so he should write. The one incurring the debt should dictate and should be fearful of Allah his Lord and not reduce it in any way. If the person incurring the debt is incompetent or weak or unable to dictate, then his guardian should dictate for him justly. Two men among you should act as witnesses. But if there are not two men, then a man and two women with whom you are satisfied as witnesses; then if one of them is confused, the other can remind her. Witnesses 138 should not refuse when they are called upon. Do not think it too trivial to write down, whether small or large, with the date that it falls due. Doing that is more just in Allah's sight and more helpful when bearing witness and more likely to eliminate any doubt – unless it is an immediate transaction hand to hand, taken and given without delay. There is nothing wrong in your not writing that down. Call witnesses when you trade. Neither writer nor witness should be put under pressure. If you do that, it is deviancy on your part. Be fearful of Allah and Allah will give you knowledge. Allah has knowledge of all things.

283 If you are on a journey and cannot find a writer, something can be left as a security. If you leave things on trust with one another the one who is trusted must deliver up his trust and be fearful of Allah his Lord. Do not conceal testimony. If someone does conceal it, his heart commits a crime. Allah knows what you do. 175

284 Everything in the heavens and everything in the earth belongs to Allah. Whether you divulge what is in yourselves or keep it hidden, Allah will still call you to account for it. He forgives whomever He wills and He punishes whomever He wills. Allah has power over all things. 192

285 The Messenger believes in what has been sent down to him from his Lord, and so do the believers. Each one believes in Allah and His angels and His Books and His Messengers. We do not differentiate between any of His Messengers. They say, 'We hear and we obey. Forgive us, our Lord! You are our journey's end.' 286 Allah does not impose on any self any more than it can bear. For it is what it has earned; against it, what it has merited. Our 197

Lord, do not take us to task if we forget or make a mistake! Our Lord, do not place on us a load like the one You placed on those before us! Our Lord, do not place on us a load we have not the strength to bear! And pardon us; and forgive us; and have mercy on us. You are our Master, so help us against the people of the unbelievers.

3. Sūrah Āl ‘Imrān The Family of ‘Imrān 1 – 95 209

1 Alif Lām Mīm. 2. Allah, there is no god but Him, the Living, the Self-Sustaining. 209

3 He has sent down the Book to you with truth, confirming what was there before it. And He sent down the Torah and the Gospel, 4 previously, as guidance for mankind, and He has sent down the Furqān. Those who reject Allah’s Signs will have a terrible punishment. Allah is Almighty, Exactor of Revenge. 213

6 It is He who forms you in the womb however He wills. There is no god but Him, the Almighty, the All-Wise. 215

7 It is He who sent down the Book to you from Him: āyahs containing clear judgments – they are the core of the Book – and others which are open to interpretation. Those with deviation in their hearts follow what is open to interpretation in it, desiring conflict, seeking its inner meaning. No one knows its inner meaning but Allah. Those firmly rooted in knowledge say, ‘We believe in it. All of it is from our Lord.’ But only people of intelligence pay heed. 217

8 ‘Our Lord, do not make our hearts swerve aside after You have guided us. And give us mercy from You. You are the Ever-Giving. 229

- 9 Our Lord, You are the Gatherer of mankind to a Day of which there is no doubt. Allah will not break His promise.’ 231
- 10 As for those who disbelieve, their wealth and children will not help them against Allah in any way. They are fuel for the Fire, 232
- 11 as was the case with the people of Pharaoh and those before them. They denied Our Signs so Allah seized them for their wrong actions. Allah is fierce in retribution. 233
- 12 Say to those who disbelieve: ‘You will be overwhelmed and crowded into Hell. What an evil resting-place!’ 234
- 13 There was a sign for you in the two parties which met face to face, one party fighting in the Way of Allah and the other unbelievers. You saw them as twice their number with your own eyes. Allah reinforces with His help whoever He wills. There is instruction in that for people of insight. 235
- 14 To mankind the love of worldly appetites is painted in glowing colours: women and children, and heaped-up mounds of gold and silver, and grazing horses with fine markings, and livestock and fertile farmland. All that is merely the enjoyment of the life of this world. The best homecoming is in the presence of Allah. 239
- 15 Say, ‘Shall I tell you of something better than that?’ The godfearing will have Gardens with their Lord, with rivers flowing under them, remaining in them timelessly, for ever, and purified wives, and the Pleasure of Allah. Allah sees His slaves: 249
- 16 those who say, ‘Our Lord, we believe, so forgive us our wrong actions and safeguard us from the punishment of 250

- the Fire.’ 17 The steadfast, the truthful, the obedient, the givers, and those who seek forgiveness before dawn.
- 18 Allah bears witness that there is no god but Him, as do the angels and the people of knowledge, upholding justice. There is no god but Him, the Almighty, the All-Wise. 253
- 19 The dīn with Allah is Islam. Those given the Book only differed after knowledge had come to them, envying one another. As for those who reject Allah’s Signs, Allah is swift at reckoning. 256
- 20 If they argue with you, say, ‘I have submitted myself completely to Allah, and so have all who follow me.’ Say to those given the Book and those who have no Book, ‘Have you become Muslim?’ If they become Muslim, they have been guided. If they turn away, you are only responsible for transmission. Allah sees His slaves. 258
- 21 As for those who reject Allah’s Signs, and kill the Prophets without any right to do so, and kill those who command justice, give them news of a painful punishment. 22 They are the ones whose actions come to nothing in this world or the Next World. They will have no helpers. 260
- 23 Do you not see those who have been given a portion of the Book being invited to let Allah’s Book be the judge between them? But then a group of them turn away. 264
- 24 That is because they say, ‘The Fire will only touch us for a number of days.’ Their inventions have deluded them in their dīn. 266
- 25 But how will it be when We gather them all together for a Day about which there is no doubt? Every self will 266 be paid in full for what it earned. They will not be wronged.

26 Say, 'O Allah! Master of the Kingdom! You give sovereignty to whomever You will You take sovereignty from whomever You will. You exalt whomever You will 267
You abase whomever You will. All good is in Your hands. You have power over all things.

27 You merge the night into the day. You merge the day into the night. You bring out the living from the dead. 271
You bring out the dead from the living. You provide for whoever You will without any reckoning.'

28 The believers should not take unbelievers as friends rather than believers. Anyone who does that has nothing to do with Allah at all – unless it is because you are afraid 272 of them. Allah advises you to be afraid of Him. Allah is the final destination.

29 Say, 'Whether you conceal what is in your breasts or make it known, Allah knows it. He knows what is in the heavens and what is on earth. Allah has power over all things.' 274

30 On the Day that each self finds the good it did, and the evil it did, present there in front of it, it will wish there were an age between it and then. Allah advises you to beware of Him. Allah is Ever-Gentle with His slaves. 274

31 Say, 'If you love Allah, then follow me and Allah will love you and forgive you for your wrong actions. Allah is Ever-Forgiving, Most Merciful.' 276

32 Say, 'Obey Allah and the Messenger.' Then if they turn away, Allah does not love the unbelievers. 278

33 Allah chose Ādam and Nūḥ and the family of Ibrāhīm and the family of 'Imrān over all other beings – 278

34 descendants one of the other. Allah is All-Hearing, All- 281 Knowing.

35 Remember when the wife of ‘Imrān said, ‘My Lord, I have pledged to You what is in my womb, devoting it to Your service. Please accept my prayer. You are the All-Hearing, the All-Knowing.’ 36 When she gave birth, she 282 said, ‘My Lord! I have given birth to a girl’ – and Allah knew very well what she had given birth to, male and female are not the same – ‘and I have named her Maryam and placed her and her children in Your safekeeping from the accursed Shayṭān.’

37 Her Lord accepted her with approval and made her grow in health and beauty. And Zakariyyā became her guardian. Every time Zakariyyā visited her in the Upper Room, he found food with her. He said, ‘Maryam, how did you come by this?’ She said, ‘It is from Allah. Allah 286 provides for whoever He wills without any reckoning.’ 38
Then and there Zakariyyā called on his Lord and said, ‘O Lord, grant me by Your favour an upright child. You are the Hearer of Prayer.’

39 The angels called out to him while he was standing in prayer in the Upper Room: ‘Allah gives you the good news of Yaḥyā, who will come to confirm a Word from 292 Allah, and will be a leader and a celibate, a Prophet and one of the righteous.’

40 He said, ‘My Lord, how can I possibly have a son when I have reached old age and my wife is barren?’ He said, ‘It 296 will be so. Allah does whatever He wills.’

41 He said, ‘My Lord, appoint a Sign for me.’ He said, 297
‘Your Sign is that you will not speak to people for three

- days, except by gesture. Remember your Lord much and glorify Him in the evening and after dawn.'
- 42 And when the angels said, 'Maryam, Allah has chosen you and purified you. He has chosen you over all other women. 300
- 43 Maryam, obey your Lord and prostrate and bow with those who bow.' 303
- 44 This is news from the Unseen which We reveal to you. You were not with them when they cast their reeds to see which of them would be the guardian of Maryam. You were not with them when they quarrelled. 304
- 45 When the angels said, 'Maryam, Allah gives you good news of a Word from Him. His name is the Messiah, 'Īsā, son of Maryam, of high esteem in this world and the Next, and one of those brought near. 46 He will speak to people in the cradle, and also when fully grown, and will be one of the righteous.' 308
- 47 She said, 'My lord! How can I have a son when no man has ever touched me?' He said, 'It will be so.' Allah creates whatever He wills. When He decides on something, He just says to it, 'Be!' and it is. 313
- 48 He will teach him the Book and Wisdom, and the Torah and the Gospel, 49 as a Messenger to the tribe of Israel, saying: 'I have brought you a Sign from your Lord. I will create the shape of a bird out of clay for you and then breathe into it and it will be a bird by Allah's permission. I will heal the blind and the leper, and bring the dead to life, by Allah's permission. I will tell you what you eat and what you store up in your homes. There is a Sign for you in that if you are believers. 314
- 50 I come confirming the Torah I find already there, and 317 to make lawful for you some of what was previously forbidden to you. I have brought you a Sign from your Lord. So have taqwā of Allah and obey me. 51 Allah is my Lord and your Lord so worship Him. That is a straight path.'

52 When 'Īsā sensed unbelief on their part, he said, 'Who will be my helpers to Allah?' The disciples said, 'We are Allah's helpers. We believe in Allah. Bear witness that we are Muslims. 318

54 They plotted and Allah plotted. But Allah is the best of plotters. 321

55 When Allah said, "'Īsā, I will take you back and raise you up to Me and purify you of those who disbelieve. And I will place the people who follow you above those who disbelieve until the Day of Rising. Then you will all return to Me, and I will judge between you regarding the things about which you differed. 322

56 As for those who disbelieve, I will punish them with a harsh punishment in this world and the Next World. They will have no helpers.' 57 As for those who believe and do right actions, We will pay them their wages in full. Allah does not love wrongdoers. 58 That is what We recite to you of the Signs and the wise Reminder. 325

59 The likeness of 'Īsā in Allah's sight is the same as Ādam. He created him from earth and then He said to him, 'Be!' and he was. 60 It is the truth from your Lord so do not be among the doubters. 326

61 If anyone argues with you about him after the 327 knowledge that has come to you, say, ‘Come then! Let us summon our sons and your sons, our women and your women, ourselves and yourselves. Then let us make earnest supplication and call down the curse of Allah upon the liars.’

62 This is the true account: there is no other god besides Allah. Allah – He is the Almighty, the All-Wise. 63 And if 329 they turn away, Allah knows the corrupters.

64 Say, ‘People of the Book! come to a proposition which is the same for us and you – that we should worship none but Allah and not associate any partners with Him and 329 not take one another as lords besides Allah.’ If they turn away, say, ‘Bear witness that we are Muslims.’

65 ‘People of the Book! why do you argue concerning Ibrāhīm when the Torah and Gospel were only sent down 332 after him? Why do you not use your intellect?

66 You are people arguing about something of which you have knowledge. Why do you argue about something of 332 which you have no knowledge? Allah knows; you do not know.’

67 Ibrāhīm was neither a Jew nor a Christian, but a man of pure natural belief – a Muslim. He was not one of the 333 idolaters.

68 The people with the strongest claim to Ibrāhīm are those who followed him and this Prophet and those who 334 believe. Allah is the Protector of the believers.

69 A group of the People of the Book would love to misguide you. They only misguide themselves but they 334 are not aware of it.

70 People of the Book! why do you reject Allah’s Signs 335 when you yourselves are there as witnesses?

- 71 People of the Book! why do you mix truth with falsehood and knowingly conceal the truth? 335
- 72 A group of the People of the Book say, ‘At the beginning of the day, you should claim to believe in what was sent down to those who believe, and then at the end of the day, you should reject it, so that hopefully they will revert. 336
- 73 Do not trust anyone except for those who follow your dīn.’ Say, ‘Allah’s guidance is true guidance. But you think it is impossible for anyone to be given the same as you were given, or to argue with you before your Lord.’ Say, ‘All favour is in Allah’s Hand and He gives it to whomever He wills. Allah is All-Encompassing, All-Knowing. 337
- 74 He picks out for His mercy whoever He wills. Allah’s favour is indeed immense.’ 341
- 75 Among the People of the Book there are some who, if you entrust them with a pile of gold, will return it to you. But there are others among them who, if you entrust them with just a single dinar, will not return it to you, unless you stay standing over them. That is because they say, ‘We are under no obligation where the gentiles are concerned.’ They tell a lie against Allah and they know it. 341
- 76 No, the truth is, if people honour their contracts and are godfearing, Allah loves the godfearing. 346
- 77 Those who sell Allah’s contract and their own oaths for a paltry price, such people will have no portion in the Next World and on the Day of Rising Allah will not speak to them or look at them or purify them. They will have a painful punishment. 346
- 78 Among them is a group who distort the Book with their tongues so that you think it is from the Book when 347

it is not from the Book. They say, 'It is from Allah,' but it is not from Allah. They tell a lie against Allah and they know it.

79 It is not right for any human being that Allah should give him the Book and judgment and Prophethood, and then that he should say to people, 'Be worshippers of me rather than Allah.' Rather he will say, 'Be people of the Lord because of your knowledge of the Book and because you study.' 348

80 He would never command you to take the angels and Prophets as Lords. Would He command you to disbelieve after being Muslim? 350

81 Remember when Allah made a covenant with the Prophets: 'Now that I have given you a share of the Book and Wisdom, and then a messenger comes to you confirming what is with you, you must believe in him and help him.' He asked, 'Do you agree and undertake my commission on that condition?' They replied, 'We agree.' He said, 'Bear witness, then. I am with you as one of the witnesses.' 351

83 Is it other than the dīn of Allah that you desire, when everything in the heavens and earth, willingly or unwillingly, submits to Him and to Him you will be returned? 84 Say, 'We believe in Allah and what has been sent down to us and what was sent down to Ibrāhīm, Ismā'īl and Ishāq and Ya'qūb and the Tribes, and what Mūsā and 'Īsā and all the Prophets were given by their Lord. We do not differentiate between any of them. We are Muslims submitted to Him.' 355

85 If anyone desires anything other than Islam as a dīn, it 357 will not be accepted from him, and in the Next World he will be among the losers.

86 How can Allah guide a people who have disbelieved after having believed? They bore witness that the Messenger was true and that the Clear Signs had come to them. Allah does not guide people who are wrongdoers. 357

87 The repayment of such people is that Allah's curse is on them and that of the angels and of all mankind. 88 They will be under it for ever. Their punishment will not be lightened. They will be granted no reprieve. 89 Except for those who, after that, repent and put things right. Truly Allah is Ever-Forgiving, Most Merciful. 359

90 Those who disbelieve after having believed and then increase in their unbelief, their repentance will not be accepted. They are the misguided. 359

91 As for those who disbelieve and die unbelievers, the whole earth filled with gold would not be accepted from any of them if they were to offer it as a ransom. They will have a painful punishment. They will have no helpers. 360

92 You will not attain true goodness until you give of what you love. Whatever you give away, Allah knows it. 361

93 All food was lawful for the tribe of Israel except what Israel made unlawful for himself before the Torah was sent down. Say, 'Bring the Torah and read it out if you are telling the truth.' 94 So any who, after this, invent a lie against Allah are indeed wrongdoers. 363

95 Say, 'Allah speaks the truth, so follow the religion of Ibrāhīm, a man of pure natural belief. He was not one of the idolaters.' 366

The Publisher have books from both Authentic and Deviant scholars. The Readers are requested to be careful and differentiate such scholars to make sure about the Authenticity of the knowledge. The sufism mentioned here refers to early stage sufism which is entirely different from what it is today. We recommend the reader to read the book "Devil's Deception" by Ibn Jawzi for further clarification on this issue.

TRANSLATOR'S NOTE

The Arabic for the āyats is from the Algerian State edition of the riwāyah of Imam Warsh from the qirā'ah of Imam Nāfi' of Madina, whose recitation is one of the ten mutawātir recitations that are mass-transmitted from the time of the Prophet ﷺ.

There are minor omissions in the text. Some poems have been omitted which the author quotes to illustrate a point of grammatical usage or as an example of orthography or the usage of a word, often a derivative of the root of the word used in the āyah, but not the actual word used. Often it is difficult to convey the sense in English. Occasionally the author explores a grammatical matter or a tangential issue, and some of these may have been shortened. English grammatical terms used to translate Arabic grammatical terms do not have exactly the same meaning, sometimes rendering a precise translation of them problematic and often obscure.

The end of a juz' may vary by an āyah or two in order to preserve relevant passages.

3. SŪRAH ĀL ‘IMRĀN – THE FAMILY OF ‘IMRĀN 96 – 200

إِنَّ أَوَّلَ بَيْتٍ وُضِعَ لِلنَّاسِ لَلَّذِي عِبَادَةً لِّعَالَمِينَ ﴿٩٦﴾ فِيهِ

 حُجُّ الْبَيْتِ مَنِ اسْتَطَاعَ إِلَيْهِ سَبِيلًا وَمَنْ كَفَرَ فَإِنَّ اللَّهَ غَنِيٌّ عَنِ
 الْعَالَمِينَ ﴿٩٧﴾

96 The first House established for mankind was that at Bakkah, a place of blessing and a guidance for all beings. 97 In it are Clear Signs – the Maqām of Ibrāhīm. All who enter it are safe. Hajj to the House is a duty owed to Allah by all mankind – those who can find a way to do it. But if anyone disbelieves, Allah is Rich Beyond Need of any being.

It is confirmed in Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim that Abū Dharr said, ‘I asked the Messenger of Allah ﷺ about the first mosque established on the earth and he answered, “The Maṣjīd al-Ḥarām.” I asked, “And then?” He said, “Al-Aqsa.” I asked, “How long was there between them?” “Forty years,” he replied, “and then the whole earth became a mosque for you, so pray wherever you are when the time for prayer comes.”’

Mujāhid and Qatādah said, ‘There was no house before it.’ ‘Alī said, ‘There were many houses before it. What is meant is that it is the first house established for worship.’ Mujāhid said, ‘The Muslims and Jews boasted and the Jews said, “The temple of Jerusalem is better and greater than the Ka‘bah because it was the place of the emigration of Prophets and is in the Holy Land.” The Muslims said, “The Ka‘bah is better.” Allah then revealed this āyah.’ How the House was built has already been dealt with in al-Baqarah. Mujāhid said, ‘Allah created the site of this house two thousand years before

He created any of the earth, and its foundations are in the seventh and lowest earth. As for Al-Aqsā, Sulaymān built it.’ An-Nasā’ī transmitted this with a sound isnād from ‘Abdullāh ibn ‘Amr. The Prophet ﷺ said, ‘When Sulaymān ibn Dāwūd built the temple in Jerusalem, he asked Allah for three things. He asked Allah for judgment corresponding to His judgment and he was given it. He asked Allah for a kingdom which no one after him would have and he was given that. He asked Allah, when he finished building the temple, that anyone who approached it for the sole reason of praying in it would have his errors fall from him so that he would be like he was on the day he was born, and this was granted.’ There is some equivocation between the two hadiths because there was a long period of time between Ibrāhīm and Sulaymān. Historians say that there was more than a thousand years between them. It is said that Ibrāhīm and Sulaymān were the predecessors for what others built after them.

It is related that Ādam was the first to build the House, as was already mentioned. Then it is possible that one of his sons built al-Aqsā forty years later. It is also possible that the angels built it with Allah’s permission. All of this is possible, and Allah knows best. ‘Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib said, ‘Allah commanded the angels to build a house on the earth and to do ṭawāf of it before Ādam was created. Then Ādam built what he built of it and did ṭawāf of it and then the Prophets after him, and then Ibrāhīm completed its construction.’

...that at Bakkah,

Bakkah is the actual site of the House and Makkah is the rest of the town according to Mālik ibn Anas. Muḥammad ibn Shihāb said that Bakkah is the mosque and Makkah is all the Ḥaram, including the houses. Mujāhid said that Bakkah is Makkah. The bā’ is replaced by the mīm as done in the word for ‘sticking’: lāzim for lāzib. Aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk and al-Mu’arrij said that.

Then it is also said that Bakkah is derived from the word bakk, which means crowding and Bakkah takes its name from the fact that the people crowd together in it during ṭawāf. Bakka means ‘to throttle’ and it is said that it is called that because it crushes the necks of any tyrants if they act unjustly towards it. ‘Abdullāh ibn az-Zubayr said, ‘No tyrant has ever directed evil at it without Allah breaking his neck.’

It is said that the name Makkah comes from its lack of water, and it is said that it is because it sucks (makka) the marrow from the bones through the hardship involved in reaching it. The verb makka is used for a foal suckling from its mother. A poet said:

It suckled (makkat) and no milk remained inside her.

It is said that it is called that because it sucks the one who does injustice in it, in other words destroys him. It is said that it is called that because people used to whistle (makkā) and laugh in it as in Allah’s words: ‘Their prayer at the House is nothing but whistling and clapping.’ (8:35) a place of blessing and a guidance for all beings.

Allah made it blessed by multiplying the reward of action in it. Barakah is abundant good. It is in the accusative for the ḥāl modifying what is implied by ‘established’, or an adverb of Bakkah. It is a guidance for all.

In it are Clear Signs – the Maqām of Ibrāhīm

The people of Makkah, Ibn ‘Abbās, Mujāhid and Sa‘īd ibn Jubayr read this as ‘a Clear Sign’ in the singular, meaning a Sign of ṭawḥīd, referring to the Maqām of Ibrāhīm alone. They said, ‘The mark of his feet in the Maqām is a Clear Sign.’ Mujāhid explained it as referring to the entire Ḥaram and believed that its Signs include Ṣafā and Marwah, the Corner and the Maqām. The others read it in the plural, meaning the Maqām of Ibrāhīm, the Black Stone, the Ḥaṭīm, Zamzam and all the sacred hallmarks. Abū Ja‘far an-Naḥḥās said the reading with the plural is clearer because the Signs certainly include Şafā and Marwah.

Another sign is that the birds do not fly over it when they are healthy and another sign is that when someone is hunting and the game enters the Ḥaram, he leaves it be. Another sign is that when there is abundant rain at the Yemeni Corner, there is plenty in Yemen, and when it is at the Syrian corner, there is plenty in Syria. When rain covers all of the House, there is plenty in all lands. Another aspect of it is that the jamrahs, in spite of what is added to them, remain the same size.

The word Maqām comes from the verb qāma, to stand, and so it is the place where one stands. The Maqām was dealt with in al-Baqarah along with the disagreement about it. It implies: ‘one of them is the Maqām of Ibrāhīm’, as al-Akhfash said. It is related that Muḥammad ibn Yazīd said that ‘Maqām’ is an appositive for ‘Signs’. A third view is that it means: ‘They are the Maqām of Ibrāhīm’ based on a known Arabic usage. [POEM] Abu-l-‘Abbās said that the word ‘maqām’ actually indicates the plural ‘maqāmāt’ because it is a verbal noun. We see in the Qur’an: ‘Allah has sealed up their hearts and hearing’ (92:8) where ‘hearing’ is in the singular. This is strengthened by the hadith which states: ‘Ḥajj is all the Maqām of Ibrāhīm.’

All who enter it are safe.

Qatādah said, ‘That is also one of the signs of the Ḥaram.’ An-Naḥḥās says that is a good opinion because people are swept away all around it and no tyrant reaches it. They reached Jerusalem and destroyed it but never reached the Ḥaram.’ Allah says: ‘Do you not see what your Lord did with the Companions of the Elephant?’ (105:1) One of the people of meanings said, ‘The form of the āyah is a report while its meaning is a command. It means: “Give security to whoever enters it.”’ The same usage is seen in 2:197. Along these lines, an-Nu‘mān ibn Thābit said, ‘Anyone who commits a wrong action and merits a ḥadd punishment and then takes refuge in the Ḥaram is safe,’ based on this āyah. Allah made security mandatory for those who enter it. That is related from a group of the early generations, including Ibn Abbās and others.

Ibn al-‘Arabī said, ‘There is weakness in the statements of all who say this for two reasons. One is that they do not understand that the āyah is about the past and does not involve the establishment of a future ruling. The second is that they do not acknowledge that its security has been violated and killing and fighting occurred after that. What Allah states cannot occur differently to that statement. So that indicates that this must have been referring to the past.’ Abū Ḥanīfah disagreed and said, ‘Anyone who seeks refuge in the Ḥaram is not given food or water nor is any business done with him nor is he spoken to until he leaves.’ His being forced to leave is not consonant with security. It is related that he said, ‘Retaliation for limbs takes place in the Ḥaram. There is also no security in this case.’ The majority of scholars say that ḥudūd punishments may be carried out in the Ḥaram. It is reported that the Prophet ﷺ ordered the killing of Ibn Khaṭal while he was clinging to the drapes of the Ka‘bah.

Ath-Thawrī related that Ibn ‘Abbās said, ‘If someone commits a crime that merits a ḥadd punishment in the Ḥaram, it is carried out on him. If he commits it outside of the Ḥaram and then seeks refuge in it, he is not spoken to nor is business carried out with him until he leaves the Ḥaram and then the ḥadd is carried out on him.’ This is the position of ash-Sha‘bī. This is also the argument of Kufans. Ibn ‘Abbās understands that this is what the āyah means. He was the scholar of the Community.

What is sound is that by saying that Allah is referring to the many blessings granted to anyone who is there, whoever they are, as Allah also says: ‘Do they not see that We have established a safe haven while people all round them are violently dispossessed?’ (29:67) In the Jāhiliyyah, those who entered it and sought sanctuary were safe from attack and killing as will be explained in al-Mā‘idah. Qatādah said, ‘In the Jāhiliyyah, whoever entered it was safe.’

This is good. It is related that an atheist said to one of the scholars, ‘Does the Qur’an not say: “All who enter it are safe”? We have entered it and we have done such-and-such. Is not the one who enters it safe?’ He said to him, ‘Are you not one of the Arabs? What does someone mean when he says that whoever enters his house is safe? Does he not say to those who obey him, “Leave him be. I have granted him security.” Will he leave him be?’ ‘Yes, of course,’ he replied. He said, ‘That is how it is with His words: “All who enter it are safe”’ Yaḥyā ibn Ja‘dah said that it means he is safe from the Fire.

This is not universal because we find in Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim in the hadith of intercession reported by Abū Sa‘īd al-Khudrī: ‘By the One Who has my soul in his hand, none of you can be more insistent in asking Allah for his rights than the believers on the Day of Rising who will ask Allah for their brothers who are in the Fire. They will say, “Our Lord, they used to fast with us, pray and perform ḥajj!” They will be told, “Bring out those you recognise.”’ The one who enters it is safe from the Fire by performing the practices connected with it, respecting it, acknowledging its right, and seeking to draw near to Allah Almighty.

Ja‘far aṣ-Ṣādiq said, ‘Whoever enters it with purity, as the Prophets and awliyā’ entered it, is safe from Allah’s punishment.’ This is what is meant by his words ﷻ, ‘Anyone who makes ḥajj to this House and does not engage in sexual activity or wrongdoing emerges from his errors like the day his mother bore him. An accepted ḥajj has no reward but the Garden.’ Al-Ḥasan said, ‘An accepted ḥajj is that he returns abstinent in this world, desiring the Next World.’ He recited:

O Ka‘bah of Allah! The supplication of the one who seeks refuge is the supplication of one calling, in need.

He has bade farewell to those he loves and his home and come hovering between fear and hope.

If Allah generously accepts his striving,
he is saved. Otherwise he is not saved.

You are one of those whose intercession is hoped for.
Be kind to Wāfid ibn Ḥajjāj!

It is also said that it means whoever entered it in the year of the Fulfilled ‘Umrah with Muḥammad ﷺ is safe. The evidence is found in the words of the Almighty: ‘You will enter the Maṣjid al-Ḥarām in safety, Allah willing.’ (48:27)

It is said that the word ‘man’ (tr. as ‘all’) here refers to the non-sentient and the āyah is about the safety of game. This is odd. We see in the Revelation: ‘Some of them (minhum) go on their bellies.’ (24:45)

Hajj to the House is a duty owed to Allah by all mankind

In the phrase ‘owed to Allah’ Allah uses the lām of the obligation and then reinforces it with “alā” which is the strongest preposition in Arabic for making something obligatory. Allah uses the most comprehensive of the expressions of obligation to stress the right it has over us and the esteem owed to it. There is no disagreement about its obligatory nature. It is one of the pillars of Islam and is only obliged once in a lifetime. Some people said that it is obliged once every five years and relate about that a hadith which they trace back to the Prophet ﷺ. The hadith is false and not sound. The consensus invalidates their position.

‘Abd ar-Razzāq related from Sufyān ath-Thawrī from al-‘Alā’ ibn al-Musayyab from his father from Abū Sa‘īd al-Khudrī that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘The Lord says, “I have expanded my slave’s provision and yet he does not visit me in iḥrām every four years.”’ It is famous from al-‘Alā’ ibn al-Musayyab ibn Rāfi‘ al-Kāhili al-Kūfi from the children of hadith scholars. More than one related it from him. They include those who said ‘every five years’. Some said: from al-‘Alā’ from Yūnus ibn Khabbāb from Abū Sa‘īd. There is disagreement about all of that.

The atheists deny the ḥajj and say that it involves removing garments, which is contrary to modesty, running, which is contrary to gravity, and stoning the jamrahs for no purpose, which is contrary to logic. They say that all these actions are baseless because they do not recognise their wisdom or cause. They are ignorant of the fact that it is not necessary for the Lord to make His slave understand all that He commands him to do nor to acquaint him with the point of the actions He requires of him. It is incumbent on him to obey, and he must obey without seeking benefit nor asking about the goal. This is the meaning of what the Prophet ﷺ used to say in his talbīyah: ‘At Your service, truly, truly in worship and slavehood. At Your service, God of the Truth.’

The imāms related that Abū Hurayrah said, ‘The Messenger of Allah ﷺ addressed us and said, “People! The Ḥajj has been made obligatory for you, so perform it!” A man asked, “Every year, Messenger of Allah?” He was silent until the man had asked that three times. Then the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, “If I had said yes, it would have become obligatory and you would not be able to do it.” Then he said, “Leave me with what I have left you. Those before you were destroyed for asking too many questions and differing from their Prophets. If I command you to do something, do what you can of it. If I forbid you from doing something, then leave it.”’ (Muslim)

This hadith makes it clear that when an obligation is directed to those responsible for doing it, it is enough that they do it once and it does need to be repeated. This differs from the position of Abū Ishāq al-Isfarāyīnī. It is confirmed that his Companions said to the Prophet ﷺ, ‘Messenger of Allah, is this ḥajj of ours for just this year or for all time?’ He answered, ‘It is for all time.’ This is a text refuting those who say that it is obligatory once every five years. The ḥajj was well known among the Arabs. It was part of what they desired because of its markets, social acceptability and being part of the Ḥanīfiyyah. When Islam came, they were told to do what they knew and to hold to what they recognised. The Prophet ﷺ performed hajj before the obligatory hajj. He had stood at ‘Arafah and did not change the Law of Ibrāhīm that had been changed by Quraysh when they stood at the Mash‘ar al-Ḥarām, saying, ‘We are the people of the Ḥaram and do not leave it. We are the Ḥums.’ This was already explained in al-Baqarah.

One of the oddest claims that I have seen made is that the Prophet ﷺ performed hajj twice before the Hijrah and by that the obligation was cancelled for him because he had responded to the summons of Ibrāhīm when it was said: ‘Announce the Hajj to mankind.’ (22:27) Aṭ-Ṭabarī said, ‘This is unlikely. When it was announced as part of his Sharī‘ah: “Hajj to the House is a duty owed to Allah by all mankind,” then it must also have been a duty for him according to that injunction. If it is said that it is only addressed to those who have not yet performed hajj, that is arbitrary and specific and there is no evidence for it. If someone claims that those who performed hajj in the religion of Ibrāhīm are not addressed by this, it is extremely unlikely.’

The Book and the Sunnah indicate that the hajj should be performed in a person’s own good time, not immediately. That is the final position in the school of Mālīk as Ibn Khuwayzimandād mentioned, and it is the position of ash-Shāfi‘ī, Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥasan ash-Shaybānī, and Abū Yūsuf in one transmission. Some later Baghdadi Mālīkīs believed that the obligation is immediate and it is not permitted to delay it when the ability to perform it exists. That is the position of Dāwūd. The sound view is the first one because Allah says in Sūrat al-Ḥajj: ‘Announce the Hajj to mankind’ (22:27) and al-Ḥajj is Makkan. He says: ‘Hajj to the House is a duty owed to Allah by people.’ This sūrah was revealed in the year of Uḥud in Madīnah in 3 AH and the Prophet ﷺ did not perform hajj until 10 AH.

As for the Sunnah, there is the hadith of Ḍimām ibn Tha‘laba as-Sa‘dī of the Banū Sa‘d ibn Bakr who came to the Prophet ﷺ and asked him about Islam and he mentioned the shahādah, prayer, zakāt, fasting and ḥajj. Ibn ‘Abbās, Abū Hurayrah and Anas related it. There is a lot of mention of the ḥajj in the Sunnah. It is clearly obligatory. The hadith of Anas is better and more complete. There is disagreement about the date of this hadith. It is said that is 5 AH, 7 AH and 9 AH. Ibn Hishām mentioned from Abū ‘Ubaydah al-Wāqidī that it was in the year of the Ditch after the Confederates left.

Ibn ‘Abd al-Barr said, ‘Part of the evidence that the ḥajj can be delayed is the consensus of scholars that if someone able to go on ḥajj delays it for a year or two, and then performs the ḥajj some years after his ability to perform it exists, then he has performed the obligatory ḥajj in its time. All agree that he is not like someone who misses the prayer until its time has passed and makes it up after its time, or someone who misses fasting Ramaḍān due to illness or travel and then makes it up, or like someone who invalidates his ḥajj and then makes it up. It is agreed that if someone performs the ḥajj years after he is able to do so, he is not said to be “making it up”. From this we know that there is wide scope for the time of ḥajj and that it is not immediate.’

Abū ‘Umar said, ‘All who say that ḥajj can be delayed put no time limit on that except what is related from Saḥnūn who was asked about a man who had the wherewithal to make ḥajj and delayed it for some years while he was able to do it and whether that meant that he became fāsiq by delaying the ḥajj, causing his testimony to be rejected. He said it did not, even if that delay was up to sixty years. If it was more than sixty years, he was considered fāsiq and his testimony rejected.’ So he made sixty years the limit. Limits are only stipulated in the Shari‘ah by someone who can legislate.

Ibn al-Khuwayzimandād related this from Ibn al-Qāsim. Ibn al-Qāsim and others said, ‘If he delays it for sixty years, his character is not impaired. If he delays it beyond sixty years, his character is impaired because the Prophet ﷺ said, “The lifespan of my community is between sixty and seventy. Few exceed it.” It is as if the requirement is made urgent for him in these ten years.

Abu ‘Umar said, ‘Some people, like Saḥnūn, cite as evidence the words of the Prophet ﷺ: “The lifespan of my community is between sixty and seventy. Few exceed that.” There is no proof in that because the words deal with the majority of the ages of the community, if the hadith is sound. It contains evidence for scope for this up to the age of seventy because that is still within the lifespan of the majority. It is not proper to call someone of good character and trustworthiness impious through such a weak interpretation.’ Success is by Allah.

Scholars agree that all are addressed in general. Ibn al-‘Arabī said, ‘Even if people disagree about the application of general terms, they agree that this āyah applies to all people, male and female, except children, who are excluded by the consensus that they are excluded from the obligations of responsibility. The same applies to slaves who are also not included. They are excluded from it by the words: “those who can find a way to do it.” A slave lacks the ability because his master can prevent him from doing it by his right of ownership and Allah put the right of the master before His right out of kindness to His slaves. There is no disagreement about this either in the community as a whole or between the imams. We do not hasten to affirm what we do not actually know. The only evidence regarding it is the accepted consensus.’ Ibn al-Mundhir said that most of the people of knowledge agree, with the exception of the odd person whose disagreement is not considered, that if a child or slave has made ḥajj and then the child becomes an adult or the slave is freed, they still owe the ḥajj if they can find a way to do it.

Abū ‘Umar said, ‘Dāwūd disagreed with most of the fuqahā’ of the cities and leaders of tradition about slaves and said that they are required to perform ḥajj. According to the majority of scholars, however, slaves are not among those addressed by this command. That is because they do not possess freedom of action and cannot perform ḥajj without their master's permission. That is the same as slaves not being addressed by the requirement to attend Jumu'ah in 62:9. It is the position of most scholars except for rare exceptions. Slaves are also excluded from the obligation of giving testimony in 2:282. They are not included in that. It is also possible that children are excluded from the command to perform ḥajj in this āyah even though they are included in "mankind" since the pen [recording responsibility] has been lifted from them. Women are excluded from the words: "You who believe, when the prayer is called...", despite the fact that they are among those who believe, just as slaves are excluded from this. That is the position of the fuqahā' of the Hijaz, Iraq, Syria and the Maghrib. It is not permitted for them to deviate in the interpretation of the Book.'

If it is asked, 'If the slave lives in the vicinity of the Masjid al-Ḥarām and his master gives him permission, why is it not necessary for him to perform ḥajj?' The answer is that this question is based on consensus and it may be that there is no reason for that. But since it is confirmed that this ruling is based on consensus, we use it as evidence for the fact that any ḥajj he performs while still a slave is not counted as the obligatory ḥajj. It is related from Ibn 'Abbās that the Prophet ﷺ said, 'If a child performs ḥajj and then reaches adulthood, he must perform another ḥajj. If a desert Arab performs ḥajj and then emigrates, he must perform another ḥajj. If a slave performs ḥajj and then is freed, he must perform another ḥajj.'

Ibn al-'Arabī said, 'Some of our scholars are careless and have said, "The ḥajj is not confirmed for a slave, even if his master has given permission, because originally he was an unbeliever and the ḥajj of an unbeliever is not counted. When he became a slave perpetually, he was not instructed to perform ḥajj.'" This is unsound in three ways. The first is that we believe that the secondary rulings of the Sharī‘ah are also directed at unbelievers, and there is no disagreement that that is the view of Mālik. The second is that all acts of worship are obliged for him with respect to the prayer and fasting while he is a slave. If he had done them while an unbeliever, they would not be counted. The third is that unbelief is removed by Islam, so its ruling must also be removed.’ Success is by Allah.

those who can find a way to do it.

Ad-Dāraquṭnī reported that Ibn ‘Abbās said, ‘It was asked, “Messenger of Allah, should ḥajj be done every year?” “Rather it is one ḥajj,” he replied ﷺ. He was asked, “What is ‘a way?” He said, “Provision and a mount.”” That is related from Anas, Ibn Mas‘ūd, Ibn ‘Umar, Jābir, ‘Ā’ishah, and ‘Amr ibn Shu‘ayb from his father from his grandfather. ‘Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib related that the Prophet ﷺ said: ‘Ḥajj to the House is a duty owed to Allah by all mankind – those who can find a way to do it.’ He said that he was asked about that and the Prophet ﷺ said that it meant, ‘That you have the use of a camel.’

Ibn Mājah also transmitted the hadīth of Ibn ‘Umar in the Sunan as did Abū ‘Īsā at-Tirmidhī in the Jāmi‘. He said that it is a good hadīth. According to the people of knowledge, the practice is that when a man has provision and transport, he must perform ḥajj. Things are said by the people of hadīth about the memory of Ibrāhīm ibn Yazīd al-Khūzī al-Makkī. They transmitted from Wakī‘ and ad-Dāraquṭnī from Sufyān ibn Sa‘īd from Ibrāhīm ibn Yazīd from Muḥammad ibn ‘Abbād that Ibn ‘Umar said, ‘A man went to the Prophet ﷺ and asked, “Messenger of Allah, what makes ḥajj mandatory?” He answered, “Provision and a mount.” He asked, “Messenger of Allah, what is the state of the ḥājji?” He replied, “Dishevelled, ill-smelling.” Another rose and asked, “What is ḥajj?” He answered, “Clamour and shedding blood.”” Wakī‘ said that ‘clamour’ is raising the voice with the talbīyah and ‘shedding blood’ is making the sacrifices.

Among those who said that provision and a mount are preconditions for the ḥajj were ‘Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb, his son ‘Abdullāh, ‘Abdullāh ibn ‘Abbās, al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī, Sa‘īd ibn Jubayr, ‘Aṭā’ and Mujāhid. That is the position of ash-Shāfi‘ī, ath-Thawrī, Abū Ḥanīfah and his people, Aḥmad, Ishāq, ‘Abd al-‘Azīz ibn Abī Salamah, and Ibn Ḥabīb. ‘Abdūs mentioned something similar from Saḥnūn.

Ash-Shāfi‘ī says, ‘Ability has two aspects. One is that a person is physically able to do it and has enough money to achieve the ḥajj. The second is that someone is disabled in his body and unable to ride, but is able to have someone perform ḥajj on his behalf for a wage or without a wage. This will be explained. The one who is physically able is obliged by Allah’s Book to perform ḥajj by Allah’s words: “those who can find a way to do it.” The one who is financially able to do it is obliged to perform the ḥajj by the Sunnah on the basis of the hadith related about the Khath‘amī woman. As for the one who is able to do it himself, he is the strong person who incurs, in riding a mount, no hardship beyond his ability to bear it. If this is the case at a time when he possesses provision and a mount, he is obliged to make ḥajj himself. If he lacks provision and transport, or either one of them, then the obligation of ḥajj is cancelled for him. If someone is able to walk and has provision or the ability to earn provision on the way through their skill, such as leather work, cupping or a similar trade, it is recommended that they make ḥajj on foot, whether man or woman.’ Ash-Shāfi‘ī added, ‘The man has less of an excuse than a woman because he is stronger.’ They consider this to be recommended, not mandatory. If the only way he is able to get provision is by begging from people on the way, it is disliked for him to perform ḥajj because he becomes a burden on people.

Mālik ibn Anas said, ‘If he is both able to walk and also has provision, he must perform ḥajj. If he has no mount but is able to walk, there is some question. If he possesses the necessary provision, he is obliged to perform ḥajj. If he does not possess it, but is able to obtain what he needs on the way, there is also some question about that. For those who do not themselves work, it is not obliged, but in the case of those who earn their living by a trade or craft, it is obliged. It is the same if it is someone's custom to beg. He must perform ḥajj.' Mālik made it obligatory for someone able to walk, even if he does not have provision or mount. That is the position of 'Abdullāh ibn az-Zubayr, ash-Sha'bī and 'Ikrimah.

Ad-Daḥḥāk said, 'If a person is strong, young and healthy but has no money, he should hire himself out in exchange for food or its equivalent until he completes his ḥajj.' Muqātil said to him, 'So Allah has obliged people to walk to the House?' He answered, 'If someone were to have a legacy for him in Makkah, would he then abandon it? No, he would go to it, even crawling. It is on that basis that the ḥajj is obliged for him.'

These scholars cite as evidence the words of the Almighty: 'Announce the ḥajj to mankind. They will come to you on foot.' (22:27) They said, 'That is because the ḥajj is one of the physical acts of worship which are individual obligations. For that reason neither provision nor a mount are obligatory preconditions for its being obligatory, any more than is the case with the prayer and fasting.' They said that if the hadith of al-Khūzī about provision and a mount is sound, then we would apply it to all people, most of whom live at a great distance. The generality of the words which apply to the most usual circumstances occurs frequently in the Sharī'ah, the words of the Arabs and their poetry.

Ibn Wahb, Ibn al-Qāsim and Ashhab reported that Mālik was asked about this āyah and said, 'With respect to that people are judged according to their ability, wealth and resilience.' Ashhab asked Mālik, 'Is it a matter of provision and a mount?' 'No,' he replied, 'By Allah, it is only according to the ability of people. Someone may have provision and a mount and still not be able to go whereas another may be able to go on foot.'

If someone has the ability and sets out to perform the obligatory ḥajj, and then something stops him, such as a creditor who prevents him from going until he settles his debt, there is no disagreement about that. If someone has a family who need support, he is not obliged to perform ḥajj until they have sufficient to maintain them for the time he is absent, because maintenance is an immediate obligation while ḥajj can be done later, and so the family is put first. The Prophet ﷺ said, ‘It is enough of a wrong action for a man to let those he feeds perish.’

The same applies if someone fears his parents will perish and there are none to attend to them. There is no way for him to perform ḥajj. If they forbid him because of over-fondness and loneliness, however, he should not pay any attention to that. A woman can be prevented by her husband, but it is also said that he cannot prevent her. What is sound is that he can stop her from going, especially since we say that it is not necessary to perform ḥajj immediately.

The sea does not annul the obligation to do ḥajj when it is generally considered safe, as we mentioned in al-Baqarah, when someone knows he will not be adversely affected. If there is real probability of shipwreck or sea-sickness or inability to do the prayer, then people should not go. If there is no place to prostrate because of the crowd and narrowness of the place, Mālik said, ‘If someone cannot bow and prostrate except on their brother’s back, they should not go.’ Then he said, ‘Is someone going to embark when they are not going to be able to pray! Woe to anyone who abandons the prayer!’

The obligation of Ḥajj is cancelled if, on the route, there is an enemy taking lives or someone demanding money, if it is an unspecified or exorbitant amount. There is disagreement on whether the obligation is cancelled when the amount demanded is not exorbitant. Ash-Shāfi‘ī said, ‘He should not pay even a single grain, and the obligation of ḥajj is cancelled.’ Ḥajj is obligatory for someone whose usual income is gained through begging and thinks that it is probable he will find someone to give what he needs, as we mentioned when we discussed possessing the means.

If the impediments preventing someone going on ḥajj are removed and he has insufficient ready funds to make ḥajj but possesses saleable goods, he must sell some of his goods to give himself enough money to fulfil the obligation. Ibn al-Qāsim was asked about a man who had a water-skin and nothing else. Should he sell it to enable himself to go on ḥajj and leave his children with nothing to live on? He said, 'Yes, he must do that and leave his children dependent on ṣadaqah.' The first position, however, is the correct one, based on the hadith: 'It is enough of a wrong action for a man to let those he feeds perish.' That is the view of ash-Shāfi'ī. The apparent position of his school is that ḥajj is only mandatory for someone with no family or children if he has sufficient money to cover the entire journey. One of them said that the return journey is not taken into account because the fact that someone has no wife or dependants there means that it is no great hardship for him to stay in other than his homeland and so, in fact, all lands can be his homeland. The first position is more correct because a person feels alienated when parted from his homeland. Do you not see that when an unmarried man commits fornication, he is flogged and exiled from his home, whether he has family there or not.

In al-Umm, ash-Shāfi'ī said, 'If someone has a residence, a servant and can provide maintenance for his family during his absence, then he is obliged to perform ḥajj.' The apparent meaning of this is that he considers the expense of ḥajj to be over and above that of a servant and a residence because he mentions that before maintenance of the family. It is as if he was saying that the obligation to go on Ḥajj only comes into force after all these have been taken into account. His people said that he is obliged to sell the house and servant and rent a house and servant for his family. If he has goods, he should trade in them and earn a sufficient profit to support his dependants during the whole of his absence. If he has to spend from the goods themselves, so that the profits from them are reduced and there is not enough to cover his costs, is he then obliged to perform ḥajj from the sale of the goods or not? There are two views. The first is the view of the majority, and it is sound and well known, which is that there is no disagreement that if someone has an estate whose revenue covers his needs, he must sell that estate to enable him to perform ḥajj, and so the same must be true of goods. Ibn Shurayḥ said, ‘That is not the case. The goods should not be sold and the person does not perform ḥajj from their proceeds because the ḥajj is not obligatory if a person’s sufficient needs are not met. This discussion is about ability both physically and in terms of wealth.’

As for someone who is ill and sickly (ma‘dūb), ‘adb is cutting and that term is used of a sword. It is as if someone who reaches the point where they cannot stay on a mount or be firm on it is the same as someone whose limbs are severed and thus unable to do anything. Scholars disagree about the ruling governing such a person since there is a consensus that they are not obliged to travel on ḥajj on the basis that the ḥajj is only obligatory for someone who is able to do it. Someone ill or sickly does not have the ability to do it. Mālik said, ‘When someone is sickly, the obligation of ḥajj is completely cancelled for him. No one should perform ḥajj on his behalf, even if he is in a position to enable them to do so, either with or without a wage. The ḥajj is not an obligation for him. If someone becomes chronically ill, the obligation of ḥajj is cancelled for him. It is not permitted for anyone to perform ḥajj on his behalf in any case. If he states in his will that someone should perform ḥajj on his behalf, that is taken from the third of the estate [allowed to be left as bequests] and it is a voluntary action.’ His evidence is Allah’s words: ‘Man will have nothing but what he strives for.’ (53:39) He reported that he only has that for which he strives, so if someone says that he is striving on behalf of someone else, that is contrary to the literal meaning of the āyah and to Allah's words: 'Hajj to the house is a duty owed to Allah by all mankind...' This person lacked the ability because the hajj is enjoined on those responsible for reaching the House themselves and because it is an act of worship which cannot be delegated when the ability is lacking, just as is the case with the prayer.

Muḥammad ibn al-Munkadir related from Jābir that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, 'By means of one hajj, Allah will admit three to the Garden: the deceased, the one who takes on hajj for him and the one who carries that out.' Abu-l-Qāsim Sulaymān ibn Aḥmad ad-Dāraquṭnī transmitted this from 'Amr ibn Ḥuṣayn as-Sadūsī from Abū Ma'shar from Muḥammad ibn al-Munkadir. The name of Abū Ma'shar was Najīḥ. They considered him to be weak.

Ash-Shāfi'ī said, 'Regarding someone who is chronically ill, very sickly or very old, who finds someone able to perform the hajj on his behalf, he possesses a certain type of ability. There are two forms of it. One is that he is able to pay someone to perform hajj on his behalf. That person performs his obligatory hajj. This is the view of 'Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib. It is related that he told a very old man who had not performed hajj, 'Equip a man to perform hajj on your behalf.' This position was taken by ath-Thawrī, Abū Ḥanīfah and his people, Ibn al-Mubārak, Aḥmad and Ishāq. The second is that he is able to find someone to pay on his behalf and represent him in performing hajj on his behalf. According to ash-Shāfi'ī, Aḥmad and Ibn Rāhawayh, hajj is also an obligation for such a person. Abū Ḥanīfah said that the hajj is not obligatory for them. Ash-Shāfi'ī cited as evidence what Ibn 'Abbās related about the woman of Khath'am who asked the Prophet ﷺ, 'Messenger of Allah, Allah has obliged His slaves to perform hajj. My father is a very old man who cannot remain firm on a mount. Can I perform hajj on his behalf?' 'Yes,' he answered. That was during the Farewell Ḥajj. One variant has: 'He cannot remain upright on a camel.' The Prophet ﷺ said, 'Perform hajj for him. Do you think that if your father owed a debt, you would not settle it for him?’ ‘Yes,’ she answered. He said, ‘It is more fitting to settle a debt owed to Allah.’ So the Prophet ﷺ said that his obligation to do hajj was fulfilled by his daughter voluntarily performing it and spending on it herself on his behalf. His indication that a father’s obligation to do hajj could be fulfilled by the voluntary action of his daughter, suggests that it is even more appropriate to for someone to fulfil their hajj obligation by hiring someone to do it on their behalf on the basis of their ability to pay for it from their own wealth. As for someone having to give out wealth beyond what they are able to afford, what is sound is that it is not obliged for them to do so.

Our scholars have said the aim of the hadith about the Khath‘amī woman is not to make hajj obligatory in that situation. Its aim is to encourage being good to parents and seeing to their best interests in this world and the Next and to accrue benefit for them naturally and in the Sharī‘ah. When he saw in the woman reaction and obedience and true filial piety and eagerness to bring her father good and reward, and her sorrow at his missing the blessing of hajj, he responded to that in the same way that he said to another woman who said, ‘My mother made a vow to perform hajj but did not perform hajj before her death. Can I perform hajj on her behalf?’ ‘Perform hajj on her behalf. Do you think that if your mother owed a debt you would not pay it?’ ‘Yes,’ she answered. This indicates that it is about obedience and bringing good and blessings to dead people. Do you not see that he ﷺ likened the hajj to a debt?

The consensus is that if someone dies while owing a debt, his relative is not obliged to settle it from his money. He may do that voluntarily and thereby settle the debt for him. Part of the evidence in this hadith that it was not an obligation for her father is this woman’s explicit statement: ‘he was unable.’ Hajj is not obligatory for someone who is unable. This is a clear statement denying the obligation and preventing the duty. So it is not permitted for what is definitively negative at the beginning of the hadith to become affirmative by supposition at the end of it. This is confirmed by the words: 'it is more fitting to settle Allah's debt.' Taking this literally, it is not a consensus. It is, in fact, more fitting to settle a debt to a person and the consensus is that one begins with that on account of the poverty of the human being and the wealth of Allah Almighty. Ibn al-'Arabī said that.

Abū 'Umar ibn 'Abd al-Barr mentioned that the hadith of the Khath'amī woman, in the view of Mālik and his people, was specific to her. Others said that there is some disturbance in it. Ibn Wahb and Abū Muṣ'ab said that it is specific to the right of the child. Ibn Habīb said, 'The indulgence comes about the ḥajj on behalf of an elderly person. There is no encouragement to do it if he has not yet performed ḥajj or, for someone who has died without performing ḥajj, that his child should perform it on his behalf, even if he has not left instructions about that and, Allah willing, it satisfies it. This discussion is about those who are sickly and the like. The hadith of the Khath'amī woman was transmitted by the imams. It refutes the statement of al-Hasan that a woman is not permitted to perform ḥajj on behalf of a man.'

Scholars agree that if someone does not have adequate provision for the journey, they are not obliged to perform ḥajj. Even if a non-relative gives them money with which to make ḥajj, there is consensus that they do not have to accept it since a favour is attached to it. If a man gives his father money, ash-Shāfi'ī said that he must accept it because a man's son is part of his earning and there is no favour attached to that. Mālik and Abū Ḥanīfah said that he is not obliged to accept it because it entails a lowering of respect for his parents. He can satisfy it when they have died. Allah knows best.

But if anyone disbelieves, Allah is Rich Beyond Need of any being.

Ibn 'Abbās and others said, 'This refers to anyone who rejects the obligatory nature of ḥajj and does not think that it is obligatory.’ Al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī and others said, ‘Anyone who abandons the ḥajj when he is able to do it is an unbeliever.’ At-Tirmidhī related from al-Ḥārith that ‘Alī reported that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘When someone possesses provision and a mount with which to reach the House of Allah and does not perform ḥajj, he can die a Jew or a Christian. That is because Allah says in His Book: “Ḥajj to the House is a duty owed to Allah by all mankind, those who can find a way to do it.”’ Abū ‘Īsā said, ‘This hadith, however, is gharīb. We only know it from this path. Its isnād is questionable. Hilāl ibn ‘Abdullāh is unknown and al-Ḥārith is considered to be weak.’ Something similar is related from Abū Umāmah and ‘Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb.

It is related from ‘Abd Khayr ibn Yazīd from ‘Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said in a khuṭbah of his, ‘O people! Allah has obliged ḥajj on those of you who are able to find a way to it. If someone does not do it, he can die however he wishes. If he wishes, as a Jew, a Christian or a Magian, unless he is excused by reason of illness, or a tyrant. He has no portion in my intercession nor will he come to My Basin.’

Ibn ‘Abbās said that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘If someone has enough money to enable him to perform ḥajj but he does not perform ḥajj, or property on which zakāt is due but he does not pay zakāt, he will be questioned at death and the Resurrection.’ It was said, ‘Ibn ‘Abbās, we think that this is about the unbelievers!’ He said, ‘I recite to you the Qur’an: “O you who believe! do not let your wealth or your children divert you from the remembrance of Allah. Whoever does that is lost. Give from what We have provided for you before death comes to one of you and he says, ‘My Lord, if only You would give me a little more time so that I might give ṣadaqah and be one of the righteous!’”’ (63:9-10) Al-Ḥasan ibn Ṣāliḥ said in his commentary, ‘and give zakāt and perform ḥajj.’

It is reported that a man asked the Prophet ﷺ about this āyah and he said, ‘Anyone who performs ḥajj not hoping for a reward, or remains behind not fearing punishment, has disbelieved in Him.’ Qatādah related that al-Ḥasan said that ‘Umar said, ‘I thought about sending some men to the cities to look into those who had wealth but did not perform ḥajj and imposing the jizyah on them. That is on account of Allah’s words: “But if anyone disbelieves, Allah is Rich Beyond Need of any being.” This is to demonstrate severity. That is why our scholars have said that the āyah implies that if someone dies without performing ḥajj when he was able to do so, the threat is aimed at him directly. It cannot be satisfied by someone performing ḥajj on his behalf because a ḥajj performed by someone else does not remove the obligation to do ḥajj from him and so the threat is not removed from him. Allah knows best. Sa‘īd ibn Jubayr said, ‘If my neighbour dies and possesses wealth, but has not performed ḥajj, I will not pray over him.’

قُلْ يَا أَهْلَ الْكِتَابِ لِمَ تَكْفُرُونَ بِآيَاتِ اللَّهِ وَاللَّهُ شَهِدٌ عَلَىٰ مَا تَعْمَلُونَ ﴿٩٨﴾
 يَا أَهْلَ الْكِتَابِ لِمَ تَصُدُّونَ عَن سَبِيلِ اللَّهِ مِن مَّا أَمِنَ تَبِعُوا نَهَا عِوَجًا وَأَنسُمُ

98 Say, ‘People of the Book, why do you reject Allah’s Signs when Allah is witness of everything you do?’ 99 Say, ‘People of the Book, why do you bar those who believe from the Way of Allah, desiring to make it crooked, when you yourselves are witnesses to it? Allah is not unaware of what you do.’

‘Why do you bar from the Way of Allah?’

It means to turn people away from the dīn of Allah. Al-Ḥasan recited ‘tusiddūna’ [instead of ‘tasuddūna’]. They are two dialectical forms from ṣadda, aṣadda. ‘Crookedness’ denotes bias and deviation in the dīn, words and actions, and what will divert someone from the straight path or what is upright, as Abū ‘Ubaydah and others said. We see the same meaning in His words: ‘they will follow the Summoner who has no crookedness in him at all.’ (20:108) It means that they will not deviate if they respond to his summons. The verb ‘āja means to stop in a place and stand. ‘Ā’ij is someone standing. [POEM] A man who is a’raj has bad character and ‘awaj is clear bad character. In respect of a horse, ‘ij refers to the curving of the sinews in the back leg. It is praised. The term a’awjīyah was used of certain horses in the Jāhilyyah whose legs were far apart.

you yourselves are witnesses to it.

It means: you understand it. It is said: ‘You witness that it is written in the Torah that the dīn of Allah that is accepted is Islam alone by reason of the fact that it contains the description of Muḥammad ﷺ.’

يَا أَيُّهَا الَّذِينَ ءَامَنُوا إِن تَطِيعُوا فِرْقَانًا مِنَ الَّذِينَ أُوتُوا الْكِتَابَ
يُرُدُّوكُمْ بَعْدَ إِيمَانِكُمْ كَمَا بُرِّدْتُمْ ۗ

100 You who believe! if you obey a group of those given the Book, they will make you revert to unbelievers after you have believed.

This was revealed about a Jew who wanted to rekindle the civil war between Aws and Khazraj after it had been stopped by the Prophet ﷺ. He sat among them and recited some poetry to them which one of the tribes had recited about their wars. The other tribe said, ‘But our poet said this and that about such-and-such a day.’ Some of that provoked them and they said, ‘Come on! Let us start the war again!’ Aws shouted, ‘People of Aws!’ and Khazraj shouted, ‘People of Khazraj!’ They met and took up their weapons and formed ranks for fighting and then this āyah was revealed. The Prophet ﷺ came and stood between the ranks and recited it in a loud voice. When they heard his voice, they listened to him, and when he finished, they threw their weapons aside and embraced one another, weeping. ‘Ikrimah, Ibn Zayd and Ibn ‘Abbās reported the story.

The one who did this was Shās ibn Qays the Jew. He introduced into Aws and Khazraj someone who would recall to them the wars that had taken place between them. The Prophet ﷺ came and reminded them and people recognised that it was a provocation from Shayṭān and a machination on the part of their enemy. So they threw down their weapons, wept and embraced one another and then left with the Prophet ﷺ in obedience to him. Then Allah revealed this. 'You who believe' are Aws and Khazraj and the words 'a group of those given the Book' refer to Shās and his people.

they will make you revert to unbelievers after you have believed.

Jābir ibn 'Abdullāh said, 'There was no arrival that day more hateful to us than that of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ. Then he indicated to us with his hand and we refrained and Allah Almighty made peace between us. Then there was no one we loved more than the Messenger of Allah ﷺ. I have not experienced a day whose start was uglier or more repulsive and whose end had a greater reward than that day.'

وَكَيْفَ تَكْفُرُونَ وَأَنْتُمْ تُبْلَىٰ عَلَيْهِمْ آيَاتُ اللَّهِ وَفِيكُمْ رَسُولُهُ ۗ وَمَنْ يَعْتَصِمْ بِاللَّهِ فَقَدْ هُدِيَ إِلَىٰ صِرَاطٍ مُسْتَقِيمٍ ﴿٥١﴾

101 How can you disbelieve, when Allah's Signs are recited to you and the Messenger is there among you?

Whoever holds fast to Allah has been guided to a straight path.

The Almighty asks this with amazement. The words 'Allah's Signs' refer to the Qur'an and 'the Messenger' is Muḥammad ﷺ. Ibn 'Abbās said, 'There was fighting and bad feeling between Aws and Khazraj in the Jāhiliyyah. They mentioned what had happened between them and it provoked them to pick up swords against one another. They went to the Prophet ﷺ and mentioned that to him and he went to them. Then this āyah was revealed.'

The āyah includes those who did not see the Prophet ﷺ because the establishment of his Sunnah took the place of actually seeing him. Az-Zajjāj says that it is possible that this āyah was directed only to the Companions of Muḥammad ﷺ because the Messenger of Allah ﷻ was among them and they saw him. It is also possible that this is addressed to the entire Community because His traces and signs and the Qur'an which he was given are among us in the place of the Messenger ﷺ, even if we did not see him.

Qatādah said, 'There are two clear signs in this āyah: the Book of Allah and the Prophet of Allah. The Prophet of Allah has passed, and the Book of Allah remains among them as a mercy and a blessing. It contains its lawful and unlawful, and obedience and disobedience.'

The phrase 'Whoever holds fast' means someone who is patient and holds to Allah's dīn and obeys Him. Then he is given success and rightly guided. Ibn Jurayj says that it means he believes in Him. It is said that it means, 'Whoever holds to the rope of Allah,' which is the Qur'an. The verbs a'sama and i'tasama mean to hold to something to the exclusion of anything else. Anyone who clings to something is called 'mu'sim' and 'mu'tasim'. Someone who defends something is called 'āsim'. Al-Farazdaq said:

I am the son of the defenders (āsimīn) of the Banū Tamīm.

[POEMS] Food is described as defending (a'sama) someone from being hungry. The Arabs say, 'the food kept him (a'sama) from being hungry. That is why they call pottage (sawīq) 'Abū 'Āsim.' Aḥmad ibn Yaḥyā said, 'The Arabs called bread 'āsim and jābir, and they also called it 'āmīr'. [POEMS]

يَا أَيُّهَا الَّذِينَ آمَنُوا اتَّقُوا اللَّهَ حَقَّ تَقَاتِهِ وَلَا تَمُوتُنَّ إِلَّا وَأَنْتُمْ مُسْلِمُونَ ﴿٥٠﴾

102 You who believe! have taqwā of Allah with the taqwā due to Him and do not die except as Muslims.

An-Naḥḥās related from Murrah ibn 'Abdullāh that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, 'The taqwā due to Him is that He be obeyed and not disobeyed, remembered and not forgotten, thanked and not shown ingratitude.' Ibn 'Abbās said, 'It means not disobeying Him for the blink of an eye.’ The commentators mentioned that when this āyah was revealed, they asked, ‘Messenger of Allah, who is strong enough for this?’ It was hard for them and then Allah revealed: ‘So show fear of Allah as much as you are able to’ (64:16), and this āyah was abrogated as Qatādah, ar-Rabī and Ibn Zayd said. Muqātil said, ‘Nothing in Āl Imrān is abrogated except this āyah.’

It is also said that the words: ‘So show fear of Allah as much as you are able to’ is clarification of this āyah. The meaning is: ‘Fear Allah with the taqwā due to Him as much you are able to.’ This is more correct because when there is a choice between reconciling and abrogation, reconciling is more appropriate. ‘Alī ibn Abī Ṭalḥah reported that Ibn ‘Abbās said, ‘The words of Allah: “You who believe, have taqwā of Allah with the taqwā due to Him,” are not abrogated. “The taqwā due to Him” is that one fights to the utmost in the Way of Allah and does not fear the blame of any blamer for Allah’s sake, and establishes justice, even against oneself and one’s children.’ An-Naḥḥās said, ‘Whenever an obligation is mentioned in an āyah, it is mandatory for the Muslims to implement it and there is no abrogation in it.’ This was already mentioned in al-Baqarah.

وَأَعْتَصِمُوا بِحَبْلِ اللَّهِ جَمِيعًا وَلَا تَفَرَّقُوا وَاذْكُرُوا نِعْمَتَ اللَّهِ عَلَيْكُمْ إِذْ كُنْتُمْ
 أَعْدَاءً قَالَفَ بَيْنَ قُلُوبِكُمْ فَأَصْبَحْتُمْ بِنِعْمَتِهِ إِخْوَانًا وَكُنْتُمْ عَلَى شَفَا حُفْرَةٍ مِنَ
 النَّارِ فَأَنْقَذَكُمْ مِنْهَا كَذَلِكَ يُبَيِّنُ اللَّهُ لَكُمْ آيَاتِهِ لَعَلَّكُمْ تَهْتَدُونَ ﴿١٠٣﴾

103 Hold fast to the rope of Allah all together, and do not separate. Remember Allah’s blessing to you when you were enemies and He joined your hearts together so that you became brothers by His blessing. You were on the very brink of a pit of the Fire and He rescued you from it. In this way Allah makes His Signs clear to you, so that hopefully you will be guided.

Hold fast to the rope of Allah all together, and do not separate.

‘Hold fast’ (i’taṣimū) comes from ‘iṣmah, which is defence, and it is also used for the guards (badhraḡah) of a caravan. That is because they organise those who would defend it against those who would harm it. Ibn Khāluwayh said that badhraḡah is not Arabic, but a Persian word that has been Arabicised.

‘Habl’ (rope) is a word with multiple meanings. Its linguistic root is the means by one which one reaches a need and desire. It is a ligament in the neck and a long track of sand. That usage is found in hadith. It is a halter and a covenant. Al-A‘shā said:

When the covenants (hibāl) of the tribe seceded it, they took their contracts from another for you.

He means security. It is also cunning, and hibālah is a snare.
[POEM]

None of these meanings is meant in the āyah except that of ‘covenant’, as Ibn ‘Abbās said. Ibn Mas‘ūd said that the rope of Allah is the Qur’an. ‘Alī and Abū Sa‘īd al-Khudrī related this from the Prophet ﷺ, and the same is reported from Mujāhid and Qatādah. Abū Mu‘āqiyah related from al-Hijrī from Abu-l-Aḡwaṣ from ‘Abdullāh that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘This Qur’an is the rope of Allah.’

Taqiyy ibn Mukhallad related from Yaḡyā ibn al-Ḥamīd from Hushaym from al-‘Awwām ibn Ḥawshab from ash-Sha‘bī that ‘Abdullāh ibn Mas‘ūd said that it refers to the Community. It is related from him and others by various paths of transmission. All the meanings are similar because Allah commanded friendship and forbade separation. Separation is destruction and the group is salvation. Ibn al-Mubarāk said:

The community is the rope of Allah, so hold fast to the firmest handhold of it for the one who draws near.

and do not separate.

This means in respect of your dīn, in the way the Jews and Christians separated in their respective religions, as Ibn Mas‘ūd and others said. It is permitted for it to mean: ‘Do not separate by following your individual passions and desires. Be brothers in the dīn of Allah.’ So that should prevent them cutting off one another and plotting against one another. This is indicated by what follows it:

Remember Allah’s blessing to you when you were enemies and He joined your hearts together so that you became brothers by His blessing.

There is no evidence in the āyah for the prohibition of disagreement concerning secondary rulings. That is not true disagreement. The disagreement intended here is that which makes harmony and joining together impossible. As for rulings in matters of ijtihād, disagreement regarding them is due to the deduction of precepts and fine meanings of the Shari‘ah. The Companions continued to disagree in respect of judgments about different matters. In spite of that, they were in complete harmony. The Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘The disagreements of my Community are a mercy.’ Allah is forbidding any sort of disagreement that results in discord.

At-Tirmidhī reported from Abū Hurayrah that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘The Jews divided into seventy-one or seventy-two sects and the Christians into the like of that. My community will divide into seventy-three sects.’ At-Tirmidhī said that it is a sound hadith. Ibn ‘Umar also transmitted that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘What happened to the tribe of Israel will happen to my community, step by step, so that if one of them were to come to his mother openly, my community would also have those who do that. The tribe of Israel divided into seventy-two sects and my community will divide into seventy-three. All of them will be in the Fire except for one.’ ‘Who are they, Messenger of Allah?’ they asked. He replied, ‘What I and My Companions follow.’ He transmitted it from ‘Abdullāh ibn Ziyād al-Ifriqī from ‘Abdullāh ibn Yazīd from Ibn ‘Umar. He said, ‘This hadith is ḥasan gharīb. We only know it from this path.’ Abū ‘Umar said, “Abdullāh al-Ifriqī is trustworthy. His people trusted him and praised him while others said that he was weak.’

In his Sunan Abū Dāwūd transmitted from Mu‘āwiyah ibn Abī Sufyān that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘Before you the People of the Book divided into seventy-two sects and this community will divide into seventy-three. Seventy-two will be in the Fire and one in the Garden: it is the Jama‘ah. Some people will emerge from my Community and those passions will move them as rabies moves its sufferer. There is no vein or joint of them which that will not enter.’

In the Sunan of Ibn Mājah, Anas ibn Mālik reported that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘Anyone who leaves this world sincerely believing in Allah alone and being sincere in worshipping Him with no partner, establishing the prayer and paying the zakāt, dies with Allah pleased with him.’ Anas said, ‘It is the dīn of Allah which the Messengers brought and conveyed from their Lord before the muddling of hadiths and different sects.’ The confirmation of that is at the end of what Allah revealed. He says: “If they repent...” in other words ‘if they abandon idols and worship of them’, “...and establish the prayer and pay zakāt, they are your brothers in the dīn.” (9:11) It is transmitted from Naṣr ibn ‘Alī al-Jahḍamī from Abū Aḥmad from Abū Ja‘far ar-Rāzī from ar-Rabī‘ ibn Anas from Anas.

Abu-l-Faraj al-Jawzī said, ‘If it is said that these sects are known, the answer is that we know the differences and the roots of sects and each of the sects is sub-divided into further sects, even if we do not know all the names of those sects and schools. It is clear to us that the roots of sects are the Ḥarūriyyah (Khārijites), the Qadariyyah, the Jahmiyyah, the Murji‘ites, the Rāfiḍites and the Jabriyyah.’ One of the people of knowledge said, ‘There are six sects that form the basis of these misguided sects and each of them divided into twelve sub-sects so they became seventy-two.’

There are twelve sects of the Ḥarūriyyah. The first are the Azraqiyyah who say, ‘We do not know anyone to be a believer,’ and they say that all the people of the qiblah are unbelievers except for those who espouse the same view as them. There are the Ibāḍiyyah who say, ‘Whoever takes our view is a believer and whoever turns away from it is a hypocrite.’ There are the Tha‘labiyyah who say that Allah does not decree; the Khāzimiyyah who say that they do not know what faith is and all creatures are excused; the Khalafiyah who claim that anyone who abandons jihād, male or female, is an unbeliever; and the Kūziyyah who said that no one should touch another person because he does not know whether he is pure or impure and should not eat with him until he repents and has a ghusl. There are the Kanziyyah who say that no one is allowed to give another person his wealth because he might not deserve it and so he should store it (kanz) in the earth until the people of the truth appear. There are the Shamrākhiyyah who say there is nothing wrong in touching women who are not relatives. There are the Akhnasiyyah who said that the dead find neither good nor evil after death. There are the Ḥakamiyyah who say that anyone who asks for the judgment of a creature is an unbeliever. There are the Mu‘taziliyyah [of the Ḥarūriyyah] who say that the business of ‘Alī and Mu‘āwiyah is unclear and so they are free of both parties. And there are the Maymūniyyah who say that there is no ruler except with the consent of those we love.

There are also twelve sects of Qadariyyah. There are the Aḥmariyyah who stipulate about Allah’s justice that He must give people charge of their affairs and come between them and acts of disobedience. There are the Thanawiyyah who claim that good is from Allah and evil is from Shayṭān. There are the Mu‘tazilites who say that the Qur’an is created and deny the Attributes of Divine Lordship. There are the Kaysāniyyah who say, ‘We do not know whether actions are from Allah or from people. We do not know whether people will be rewarded or punished.’ There are the Shayṭāniyyah who say that Allah did not create Shayṭān. There are the Sharīkiyyah who say that all evil actions are decreed except for disbelief. There are the Wahmiyyah who say that the actions and words of people have no essence and they do neither good nor evil actions. There are the Zabriyyah who say that it is a duty to act by every revealed Book, whether abrogated or abrogating. There are the Mas‘adiyyah who claim that if someone disobeys and then repents, his repentance is not accepted. There are the Nākithiyyah who claim that someone who breaks his allegiance to the Messenger of Allah ﷺ does not sin. There are the Qāsiṭiyyah who [preferred seeking the world to doing-without, and the Nazzāmiyyah who] followed Ibrāhīm ibn an-Nazzām in saying that someone who claims that Allah is a thing is an unbeliever.

The Jahmiyyah likewise make up twelve sects. There are the Mu‘attilah who claim that everything a human being thinks of is created and if someone claims that Allah can be seen, he is an unbeliever. There are Marīsiyyah who say that most of the attributes of Allah are created. There are the Multaziqah who say that the Creator is everywhere. There are the Wāridiyyah who say that no one who recognises his Lord will enter the Fire and no one who enters it will ever emerge from it. There are the Zanādiqah who say that no one can establish a Lord for himself because affirmation can only occur after perception by the senses and what is not perceived cannot be confirmed. There are the Ḥarqiyyah who claim that the Fire will burn the unbeliever once and he will remain burned forever but not feel the heat of the Fire. There are the Makhlūqiyyah who claim that the Qur’an is created. There are the Fāniyyah who claim that the Fire and Garden will vanish. Some of them say that they are not created. There are the Qabriyyah who deny the punishment of the grave and intercession. There are the Lazfiyyah who say that our articulation of the Qur’an is created.

The twelve sects of the Murji’ah are the Tārikiyyah who say that Allah did not impose any obligation on His creation other than believing in Him and whoever believes in Him can do whatever he wishes. There are the Sā'ibiyah who say that Allah left His creation to do whatever they wish. There are the Rājīyyah who say that someone obedient is not called obedient nor someone disobedient called disobedient because we do not know what Allah has in store for him. There are the Sālībiyyah who say that obedience is not part of faith. There are the Bahīshīyyah who say that faith is knowledge and whoever does not know the truth from the false or the lawful from the unlawful is an unbeliever. The 'Amaliyyah say that faith is action. The Manqūsiyyah say that faith does not increase or decrease. The Mustathniyyah say that 'if Allah wills' is part of faith. The Mushabbihah say that His sight is like our sight and His hand like our hands. The Ḥashawīyyah said that ruling of all hadiths is the same and someone who omits the nāfilah is like someone who omits the obligatory. The Zāhiriyyah forbid analogy. The Bid'iyah were the first to innovate these things in this community.

The Rāfiḍites also have twelve sects. There are the 'Alawīyyah who say that the Message was really sent to 'Alī but Jibrīl made a mistake. The Amriyyah said that 'Alī and Muḥammad shared in Prophethood. The Shi'ah said that 'Alī was the executor of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ and his heir after him and the community fell into disbelief by giving allegiance to someone else. The Ishāqiyyah said that Prophethood will continue until the Day of Rising and whoever has the knowledge of the People of the House is a Prophet. The Nāwūsiyyah say that 'Alī is the best of the community and anyone who prefers someone to him has disbelieved. The Imāmiyyah said that it is not possible for this world to be without an imām from the descendants of Ḥusayn. The imām is taught by Jibrīl and if he dies, another takes his place. The Zaydiyyah said that all the descendants of Ḥusayn have the right to be imāms in the prayer. If one of them is present, the prayer is not permitted behind someone else. It makes no difference whether they are pious or impious. The ‘Abbāsiyyah claimed that al-‘Abbās was the most entitled to be caliph. The Tanāsukhiyyah believed in transmigration of souls. If someone was a good-doer, his soul leaves and enters into someone who will have a happy life. The Raj‘iyyah claim that ‘Alī and his companions will return to this world and take revenge on their enemies. The Lā‘inah curse ‘Uthmān, Ṭalḥah, az-Zubayr, Mu‘āwiyah, Abū Mūsā, ‘Ā’ishah and others. The Mutarabbiṣah resemble those performing the hajj practices and in every age set up a man whom they put in charge, claiming that he is the mahdī of the community. When he dies, they set up another.

The Jabriyyah have twelve sects. There are the Muḍṭariyyah who say that the human being has no action: it is Allah who does everything. The Af‘aliyyah say that we have actions but no capacity to do them. We are like beasts led by ropes. The Mafrūghiyyah said that all things were created in the past and now nothing is created. The Najjāriyyah claimed that Allah Almighty punishes people for His actions, not for their actions. The Mannāniyyah said that you are responsible for what occurs to your heart, so do whatever you deem to be good. The Kasbiyyah said that the slave of Allah earns neither reward nor punishment. The Sābiqiyyah said you may act as you wish. The fortunate will not be harmed by their wrong actions and the wretched will not be helped by their piety. The Ḥibbiyyah said that if someone drinks a cup of the love of Allah, the pillars of worship are cancelled for him. The Khawfiyyah said that if someone loves Allah, he cannot fear Him because the lover does not fear his Beloved. The Fikriyyah said that if someone increases his knowledge, worship is no longer binding on him. The Khashabiyyah said that this world is shared equally among people and there is no superiority between them in their legacy from their father Ādam. The Manniyyah say that we have no action, only ability.

Further discussion of sects in this Community will come at the end of Sūrat al-An‘ām Allah willing.

Ibn ‘Abbās said to Simāk al-Ḥanafī: ‘Ḥanafī, the Community (Jamā‘ah)! The Community! Past nations were destroyed when they split into sects. Did you not hear the words of the Almighty, “Hold fast to the rope of Allah altogether and do not separate”?’

Abū Hurayrah reports in Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘Allah is pleased with three things for you and dislikes three things for you. He is pleased that you worship Him and do not associate anything with Him, that you hold all together to the rope of Allah, and that you do not split up. He dislikes three things for you: chitchat, asking too many questions and wasting wealth.’ So Allah obliged us to hold to His Book and the Sunnah of His Prophet ﷺ and to consult them in cases of disagreement. He commanded us to join together in holding fast to the Book and Sunnah in terms of belief and action. That is the means to unity and the remedy for disunity and assures the best interests of the community in this world and the dīn and safety from discord. He commanded togetherness and forbade us falling into the schisms which have occurred to the people of the two Books. This is the complete sense of the āyah and is evidence for the validity of consensus as one of the fundamental principles of fiqh. Allah knows best.

Remember Allah’s blessing to you when you were enemies

Allah commanded them to remember His blessings, the greatest of which is Islam and following His Prophet ﷺ. By it enmity and division are removed and love and harmony are brought about. It is Aws and Khazraj who are meant although the āyah is of general import.

so that you became brothers by His blessing.

This means you became brothers in the dīn by the blessing of Islam. In the Qur’an aṣbaḥa always means ‘become’ as is seen elsewhere. Ikhwān (brothers) is the plural of akh. Someone is called a ‘brother’ because he aims to follow the path of his brother.

You were on the very brink of a pit of the Fire

‘Shafā’ is the edge of anything. Allah also uses the term in ‘on the brink (shafā) of a crumbling precipice.’ (9:109) A poet said:

We dug (hafarnā) [the well] Sajlah for the ḥājīīs, growing above its edge (shifāhā) is a plant.

The verb ashfā ‘alā’ means to be on the brink of something. The verb is used of a sick person on the brink of death. All that remains of it is shafā, a little. Ibn as-Sikkīt said, ‘It is said of a dying man or waning moon or setting sun, “Only a little (shafā) remains of it.”’ Al-‘Ajjāj said:

Many an elevated place is high for the one who ascends it.

I ascended it when the sun had set or was close (shafā) to it.

‘Had set’ is ‘bilā shafā’ and ‘bi-shafā’ means that a little remains of it. It is a weak verb with yā. One dialect has it as being one of those words with a wāw. An-Nahḥās said, ‘The root of shafā is shafawa which is why it is written with an alif and without imālah.’ Al-Akhfash said, ‘When imālah is not permitted in it, it is known that there was originally a wāw there. Imālah comes from the yā’. The dual is shafawān.’

Al-Mahdawī said that being on the brink of a fire is a metaphor for them leaving disbelief for belief.

وَلَتَكُنَّ مِنْكُمْ أُمَّةٌ يَدْعُونَ إِلَى الْخَيْرِ وَيَأْمُرُونَ بِالْمَعْرُوفِ وَيَنْهَوْنَ عَنِ
الْمُنْكَرِ وَأُولَئِكَ هُمُ الْمُفْلِحُونَ ﴿١٠٤﴾

104 Let there be a community among you who call to the good, and enjoin the right, and forbid the wrong. They are the ones who have success.

We have already discussed what enjoining the right and forbidding the wrong entails. ‘Min’ (among) here is partitive. It means that those who enjoin must be people with knowledge, and not all people have knowledge. It is also said that it is generic, and the command is general for everyone. The first position is sounder and indicates that enjoining the right and forbidding the wrong is a farḍ kifāyah. Allah made it specific when He says: ‘Those who, if We establish them firmly on the earth, will establish the prayer...’ (22:41). This is not all people. Ibn az-Zubayr recited: ‘Let there be a community among you who call to the good, and enjoin the right and forbid the wrong, and seek Allah’s help in what befalls them.’ Abū Bakr al-Anbārī said, ‘This addition is, in fact, commentary on the part of Ibn az-Zubayr. It is an error on the part of some transmitters to add it to the words of the Qur’an. It indicates the soundness of the description in the hadith related from my father from Ḥasan ibn ‘Arafah from Wakī’ from Abū ‘Aṣim from Abū ‘Awn from Ṣubayḥ who said that he heard ‘Uthmān ibn ‘Affān recite, “Let there be a community among you who call to the good, and enjoin the right and forbid the wrong, and seek Allah’s help in what befalls them.” No intelligent person doubts the fact that ‘Uthmān did not consider this addition to be part of the Qur’an since he did not include it in the text of his copy of the Qur’an when he was the leader of the Muslims. He mentioned it as an admonition and to stress the prior words of the Lord.’

وَلَا تَكُونُوا كَالَّذِينَ تَفَرَّقُوا وَاخْتَلَفُوا مِنْ بَعْدِ مَا جَاءَهُمُ الْبَيِّنَاتُ وَأُولَٰئِكَ لَهُمْ عَذَابٌ عَظِيمٌ ﴿١٠٥﴾

105 Do not be like those who split up and differed after the Clear Signs came to them. They will have a terrible punishment

This means the Jews and the Christians, according to most commentators. One of them said that it refers to the innovators of this community. Abū Umāmah, reciting this āyah, said that it is about the Ḥarūriyyah. Jābir ibn ‘Abdullāh said that it means the Jews and Christians. The verb ‘came’ is in the masculine for the plural. If the verb had been in the feminine, it would refer to the group.

يَوْمَ تَبْيَضُّ وُجُوهٌُ وَتَسْوَدُّ وُجُوهٌُ فَأَمَّا الَّذِينَ اسْوَدَّتْ وُجُوهُهُمْ أَكَفَرْتُمْ
 بَعْدَ إِيمَانِكُمْ فَذُوقُوا الْعَذَابَ بِمَا كُنْتُمْ تَكْفُرُونَ ﴿١٠٦﴾ وَأَمَّا الَّذِينَ
 أَبْيَضَّتْ وُجُوهُهُمْ فَمِنْ رَحْمَةِ اللَّهِ هُمْ فِيهَا خَالِدُونَ ﴿١٠٧﴾

106 on the Day when faces are whitened and faces are blackened. As for those whose faces are blackened: ‘What! Did you disbelieve after having believed? Taste the punishment for your unbelief!’ 107 As for those whose faces are whitened, they are in Allah’s mercy, remaining in it timelessly, for ever.

On the Day when faces are whitened and faces are blackened.

This is a reference to the Day of Rising when people are resurrected from their graves. The faces of the believers will be whitened and those of the unbelievers blackened. It is said that that occurs when the books are read out. When the book of the believer is read out and he sees his good actions in it, he will rejoice and his face will be brightened. When the unbeliever and hypocrite read their books and see their evil deeds, their faces will be darkened. It is said that this occurs when the scales are set up. It is said that it is when the Almighty says: ‘Keep yourselves apart today, O evildoers.’ (36:59)

It is also said that it happens on the Day of Rising when every group is commanded to join what they worshipped. When they do that they will be wretched and their faces darkened. The believers, People of the Book and hypocrites will stay where they are. Allah will ask the believers, ‘Who is your Lord?’ and they will reply, ‘Our Lord is Allah Almighty.’ He will ask them, ‘Will you recognise Him if you see Him?’ They will reply, ‘Glory be to Him! When He shows Himself, we will recognise Him.’ They will see Allah in the way He wishes them to and the believers will prostrate and their faces will become as white as snow. The hypocrites and People of Book will be unable to prostrate and they will be miserable and their faces dark. The whitening of faces is their shining with bliss and the darkening is their being covered by the painful punishment.

It is also read as 'tībyaḍḍu' and 'tiswaddu' which is the dialect of Tamīm. Yayhyā ibn Watthāb recited it this way. Az-Zuhrī recited 'tabyāḍḍu' and 'taswāḍḍu.' It is also permitted for the tā' to have a kasrah and to have 'yabyaḍḍu' in the masculine plural. The whitening of the faces is their shining with blessing and their darkening is from the painful punishment that oppresses them.

There is disagreement about who specifically is being referred to here. Ibn 'Abbās said that the faces of the people of the Sunnah are white and those of innovation dark. This statement of Ibn 'Abbās is related by Mālik ibn Sulaymān al-Harawī, the brother of Ghassān, from Mālik ibn Anas from Nāfi' from Ibn 'Umar who reported that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said about these words: 'It means that the faces of the people of the Sunnah will be whitened and the faces of the people of innovation will be blackened.' Abū Bakr Aḥmad ibn 'Alī ibn Thābit al-Khaṭīb mentioned it. It is said that this is munkar from Mālik.

'Aṭā' said, 'The faces of the Muhājirūn and Anṣār will be whitened and the faces of the Banū Qurayzah and an-Naḍīr blackened.' Ubayy ibn Ka'b said, 'Those whose faces are blackened are the unbelievers and they will be asked, "Do you disbelieve after your affirmation of belief when you were brought forth from the back of Ādam like atoms?"' This is what aṭ-Ṭabarī preferred. Al-Ḥasan says that the āyah is about the hypocrites. Qatādah says that it is about the apostates. 'Ikrimah said, 'They are the people from the People of the Book who confirmed their Prophets and affirmed Muḥammad ﷺ before he was sent and then, when he was sent, rejected him. That is what is meant by the words of the Almighty: "What! Did you disbelieve after having believed?"' That is preferred by az-Zajjāj.

Mālik ibn Anas said, 'It is about the people of sects.' Abū Umāmah al-Bāhilī reported that it is about the Khārijites. Another report says that it is about the Qadariyyah. At-Tirmidhī reported that Abū Ghālib said, ‘Abū Umāmah saw heads set up at the gate of Damascus. He remarked, ‘The dogs of the Fire! The worst to be slain under heaven and the best is the one they killed.’ Then he recited the āyah: “On the Day when faces are whitened and faces are blackened...” I said to Abū Umāmah, “Did you hear that from the Messenger of Allah ﷺ?” He answered, “If I had not heard it from the Messenger of Allah ﷺ once, two times, three times (and he went on to ‘seven times’), I would not have related it to you.” He said that it is a ḥasan hadith.

We find in Ṣaḥīḥ Bukhārī that Sahl ibn Sa’d said, ‘The Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, “I will reach the Basin before you. Whoever passes by me will drink, and whoever drinks will never be thirsty again. Some people will come whom I recognise and who recognise me but a barrier will be put between me and them.”’ Abū Ḥāzim said, ‘An-Nu‘mān ibn Abī ‘Ayyāsh asked, “Is that how you heard it from Sahl ibn Sa’d?” “Yes,” I answered. He said, “I testify that I heard it from Abū Sa‘īd al-Khudrī and he added, ‘I will say, “They are from me!” It will be said, “You do not know what they innovated after you.” I will say, “Away! Away with those who altered things after me!”’”’

Abū Hurayrah related that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘On the Day of Rising, a group of my Companions will come to the Basin and be kept away from it. I will say, “O Lord, my Companions!” He will say, “You do not know what they innovated after you! They turned their backs in retreat.”’

There are many hadiths that talk about this. Anyone who alters, changes or innovates in the dīn of Allah anything not pleasing to Allah and for which Allah has not given permission will be among those who are driven far from the Basin and whose faces are blackened. Those who are driven farthest away are those who opposed the Muslim Community and caused splits among them, such as the Kharijites and their different sects, the Rāfiqites with their clear misguidance, and the Mu‘tazilites with their various sects.

All of these altered and innovated. That is also the case with the extravagant wrongdoers who commit injustice and tyranny and blot out the truth and kill and humiliate its people, as well as those who publicly commit major wrong actions and who treat acts of disobedience lightly, and the group of the people of deviation, sects and innovations. It is feared that all of those are meant by the āyah. As we made clear, only a denying unbeliever who does not have the weight of a mustard seed of faith in his heart will remain in the Fire forever. Ibn al-Qāsim said, ‘There may be from other than the people of sects, those who are worse than the people of sects.’ It used to be said, ‘Full sincerity is avoiding acts of disobedience.’

As for those whose faces are blackened,

There is some elision here, like ‘They were asked, “What! Did you disbelieve after having believed?”’ on the Day of the Covenant when they said, ‘Yes, indeed.’ It is also said that these are the Jews who believed in Muḥammad ﷺ before he was sent and rejected him after he was sent. Abu-I-‘Āliyah said that this is directed at the hypocrites: ‘Do you reject secretly after affirming openly?’ The people who know Arabic agree that there must be a fā’ in the apodosis of ammā since it means: ‘As for Zayd, he is happy.’

Those whose faces are whitened are those who obeyed Allah and fulfilled His covenant. ‘In Allah’s mercy’ is in His Garden and the Abode of His generosity. May Allah place us among them and make us avoid the paths of innovation and misguidance and guide us to the path of those who believed and did good deeds! Amīn.

تِلْكَ آيَاتُ اللَّهِ تَنْزَلُوهَا عَلَيْكَ بِالْحَقِّ وَمَا اللَّهُ يُرِيدُ ظُلْمًا لِلْعَالَمِينَ ﴿١٠٨﴾
 وَلِلَّهِ مَا فِي السَّمَاوَاتِ وَمَا فِي الْأَرْضِ وَإِلَى اللَّهِ تُرْجَعُ الْأُمُورُ ﴿١٠٩﴾

108 These are Allah’s Signs which We recite to you with truth. Allah desires no wrong for any being. 109 Everything in the heavens and everything in the earth belongs to Allah. All matters return to Allah.

‘Allah’s Signs’ are the Qur’an. ‘We recite to you’ means ‘Jibrīl brought them down to you and recited them to you.’ ‘Truth’ is truthfulness. Az-Zajjāj said that the words ‘These are Allah’s signs’ mean that they are the proofs and evidence of Allah. It is said that ‘tilka’, which normally means ‘those’, here means ‘these’, but when they came to an end, it becomes as if they are far and so ‘those’ is used. Also, ‘Allah’s Signs’ can be an appositive for ‘these’ rather than an adjective. ‘Allah desires no wrong for any being’ means that He will not punish them without wrong action on their part.

Everything in the heavens and everything in the earth belongs to Allah.

Al-Mahdawī says that the manner in which this is connected to what is before it is that, after Allah mentions the states of the believers and unbelievers and the fact that He does not desire wrong for any being, He then mentions the vast extent of His power and His absolute freedom from any hint of injustice, since everything in the heavens and the earth is in His hand. It is also said that it is the beginning of a new sentence: Allah is making it clear to His slaves that everything in the heavens and the earth belongs to Him so that they should ask of Him and worship Him and not worship other than Him.

كُنْتُمْ خَيْرَ أُمَّةٍ أُخْرِجَتْ لِلنَّاسِ تَأْمُرُونَ بِالْمَعْرُوفِ وَنَهَوْنَ عَنِ
الْمُنْكَرِ وَتُؤْمِنُونَ بِاللَّهِ وَلَوْ آمَنَ أَهْلُ الْكِتَابِ لَكَانَ خَيْرًا لَهُمْ مِنْهُمْ
الْمُؤْمِنُونَ وَأَكْثَرُهُمُ الْفَاسِقُونَ ﴿١١٠﴾

110 You are the best nation ever to be produced before mankind. You enjoin the right, forbid the wrong and believe in Allah. If the People of the Book were to believe, it would be better for them. Some of them are believers but most of them are deviators.

You are the best nation ever to be produced before mankind.

At-Tirmidhī related from Bahz ibn Ḥakīm that his grandfather heard the Messenger of Allah ﷺ say about these words: ‘You are the culmination of seventy communities. You are the best and noblest of them in the sight of Allah.’ He said that it is a ḥasan hadith.

Abū Hurayrah said, ‘We are the best of people for people. We drag them in chains to Islam.’ Ibn ‘Abbās said, ‘They are those who emigrated from Makkah to Madīnah and were present at Badr and Ḥudaybiyah.’ ‘Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb said, ‘Whoever does what they did is like them.’

It is said that it is the Community of Muḥammad ﷺ, specifically the righteous among them and the people of excellence. They will be the witnesses against other people on the Day of Rising as mentioned in al-Baqarah. Mujāhid said that this is according to the preconditions mentioned in the āyah. It is said that it means: ‘You are in the Preserved Tablet.’ It is said, ‘Since you believed, you were made the best nation.’ It is said that it is good news for the Prophet ﷺ and His community. Al-Afkhash points out that it means the best people of a dīn. [POETRY]

It is said that the verb ‘kāna’ here is in the perfect tense and it means: ‘You have been created and brought into existence’ and ‘the best nation’ is descriptive. It is also said that ‘kāna’ is redundant and it simply means: ‘you are the best nation.’ Similar examples of this usage are found in 19:29 and 2:86.

Sufyān related from Maysarah al-Ashja’ī from Abū Ḥāzim that Abū Hurayrah said about this āyah, ‘You drag people in chains to Islam.’ An-Naḥḥās said, ‘According to this, it implies; “you are the best nation for people.”’ Mujāhid said, ‘You are the best nation when you enjoin the right and forbid the wrong.’ It is also said that the nation of Muḥammad ﷺ will become the best nation because the Muslims will be the most numerous and enjoining the right and forbidding the wrong is widespread among them. It is also said that it is the Companions of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ who are being referred to as he said, ‘The best of people are my generation...’, meaning those among whom he was sent.

Since it is confirmed in Revelation that this nation is the best of nations and the Imāms report that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘The best of my community are my generation, then the one after them and then the one after them,’ this indicates that those at the beginning of this community are better than those after them, and the majority of scholars believe that. Those who were Companions of the Prophet ﷺ and saw him, even once, are better than those who came after him. No action is equivalent to that of the company of the Prophet ﷺ.

Abū Umar Ibn ‘Abd al-Barr believed that it was possible for there to exist after the Companions those who were better, owing to the fact that the statement of the Prophet ﷺ was not universal, since a generation inevitably contains both the excellent and less excellent. His generation contained hypocrites who opposed faith and people of major wrong actions who had the ḥudūd carried out on them. He said to them, ‘What do you say about a thief, a drinker and a fornicator?’ He said about those in his generation, ‘Do not curse my Companions.’ He said to Khālīd ibn al-Walīd about ‘Ammār, ‘Do not insult someone who is better than you.’

Abū Umāmah reported that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘Bliss to the one who sees me and believes in me, and bliss seven times over to the one who did not see me but believes in me.’ We find in the Musnad of Abū Dāwūd aṭ-Ṭayālīsī from Muḥammad ibn Abī Ḥumayd from Zayd ibn Aslam from his father that ‘Umar said, ‘I was sitting with the Prophet ﷺ when he asked, “Do you know which of creation are best in faith?” We replied, “The angels.” He said, “That is true of them, but other than them.” We said, “The Prophets.” He said, “It is true of them, but others.” Then the Messenger of Allah ﷺ went on, “The best of creatures in faith are a people in the loins of men who will believe without seeing me. They will find a page and act by what is in it. They are the best of creatures in faith.”’ Ṣāliḥ ibn Jubayr related that Abū Jum‘ah said, ‘We asked, “Messenger of Allah, is there anyone better than us?” “Yes,” he replied, “A people will come after you who will find a Book between two covers and believe in what is in it and believe in me without seeing me.”’ Abū ‘Umar said that Abū Jum‘ah was a Companion and his name was Ḥabīb ibn Sibā‘. Ṣāliḥ ibn Jubayr was one of the trustworthy Tābi‘ūn.

Abū Tha‘labah al-Khashanī related that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘Ahead of you lie days requiring steadfastness, and steadfastness in those days will be like grasping live coals. The one who acts in those days will have the reward of fifty men who do the same action as he does now.’ It was asked, “Messenger of Allah, of their men?” He replied, “Rather of your men.” Abū ‘Umar said that some transmitters omit ‘Rather your men’. ‘Umar said in explanation of this āyah, ‘Any who does the like of your actions is like you.’ The hadiths are not contradictory because the first is particular, and success is by Allah.

It is said about what is conveyed by the hadiths regarding this matter that his generation ﷺ is preferred because they were strangers in respect of their faith because of the great number of unbelievers around them, their steadfastness in the face of the persecution they faced and their holding to their dīn. As for the later members of this community, they will be strangers when they establish the dīn and hold to it and are steadfast in obeying their Lord at the time of the appearance of evil, impiety, bloodshed, acts of disobedience and major wrong actions, and then, at that time, their actions will be pure just as the actions of the first ones were pure. Part of what attests to this are the words of the Prophet: ‘Islam began as a stranger and will become as it began. Blessed be the strangers!’ There is also the hadith reported by Abu Tha‘labah that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘My Community is like the rain. It is not known whether the beginning or end of it is best.’ Abū Dāwūd aṭ-Ṭayālīsī and Abū 'Īsā at-Tirmidhī mentioned it. Hishām ibn 'Ubaydullāh ar-Rāzī mentioned from Mālik from az-Zuhrī that Anas said that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, 'The metaphor of my Community is like the rain. It is not known whether the beginning or end of it is best.' Ad-Dāraquṭnī mentioned it from Mālik. Abū 'Umar said that there is no disagreement that Hishām ibn 'Ubaydullāh is trustworthy.

It is related that when 'Umar ibn 'Abd al-'Azīz was appointed caliph, he wrote to Sālim ibn 'Abdullāh, 'Write to me informing me of the behaviour of 'Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb so I can act on it.' Sālim wrote to him, 'If you act on the behaviour of 'Umar, then you are better than 'Umar because your time is not like the time of 'Umar and your men are not like the men of 'Umar.' He wrote to the fuqahā' of his time and they wrote to him the same as Sālim told him.

Some counter the hadith, 'The best of people are my generation,' with the words of the Prophet ﷺ, 'The best of people is the one who has a long life and good actions and the worst of people is the one who has a long life and bad actions.' Abū 'Umar said that these hadiths mean that the first and the last are equal in faith and righteous action in a corrupt time when the people of knowledge and the dīn are few and there is a lot of corruption and bloodshed, and when the believers are abased and the deviants exalted and the dīn becomes a stranger again in the same way it began as a stranger, and the one who stands by it is like someone who holds on to hot coals. The two are equal, except for the people of Badr and al-Ḥudaybīyah. If someone reflects on the reports regarding this matter, what is correct will be clear to him. Allah gives His bounty to whomever He will.

You enjoin the right and forbid the wrong

This is praise for this community when they understand this and act by it. If they do not, praise is removed from them and censure attached to them. That is a reason for their destruction. We have already discussed what is meant by enjoining the right and forbidding the wrong at the beginning of this sūrah.

If the People of the Book were to believe, it would be better for them.

It would be better for the People of the Book to believe in the Prophet ﷺ. Then Allah tells us that some of them are believers and some are deviants, but that the majority are deviants.

لَنْ يَضُرُّوكُمْ إِلَّا أَذًى وَإِنْ يُقْلِلُواكُمْ يُولُواكُمْ الْآذَانَ بِلَرْشَةٍ
لَا يُنصِرُونَ ﴿١١١﴾

111 They will not harm you except with abusive words. If they fight you, they will turn their backs on you. Then they will not be helped.

This means that they deny you with their twisting and lies. They will not be victorious, as al-Ḥasan and Qatādah said. The exception here can be connective, meaning they will not harm you except for a little. So ‘abusive words’ is a verbal noun. The āyah is a promise from Allah to His Messenger ﷺ and to the believers that the People of the Book will not overcome them and they will be helped against them and not be uprooted or harmed by their lies and twisting and that the ultimate victory will be for the believers. It is also said that the exception is one of separation, and the meaning is that they will not harm you at all, but you hear from them what vexes you. Muqātil said, ‘The leaders of the Jews, Ka‘b, ‘Adī, an-Nu‘mān, Abū Rāfi‘, Abū Yāsir, Kinānah and Ibn Ṣūriyā went to those of their people who were believers, such as ‘Abdullāh ibn Salām and his people, and abused them for becoming Muslims, and Allah revealed this.’ It means verbal abuse. ‘If they fight you...’ refers to the fact that they will be defeated. ‘Then they will not be helped’ is a new sentence. This āyah contains a miracle for the Prophet ﷺ because those Jews who fought him did turn their backs.

112 They will be plunged into abasement wherever they are found, unless they have a treaty with Allah and with the people. They have brought down anger from Allah upon themselves, and they have been plunged into destitution. That was because they rejected Allah’s Signs and killed the Prophets without any right to do so. That was because they disobeyed and went beyond the limits. 113 They are not all the same. There is a community among the People of the Book who are upright. They recite Allah’s Signs throughout the night, and they prostrate. 114 They believe in Allah and the Last Day, and enjoy the right and forbid the wrong, and compete in doing good. They are among the righteous. 115 You will not be denied the reward for any good thing you do. Allah knows those who have taqwā.

They will be plunged into abasement wherever they are found,

This refers to the Jews. ‘Wherever they are found’ means wherever they are encountered. This abasement was already mentioned in al-Baqarah. Then follows an absolute exception: ‘unless they have a treaty (literally, rope) with Allah and the people’. A treaty (rope) with the people means the dhimma status which they have. ‘The people’ here means Muḥammad ﷺ and the believers to whom they pay the jiḥyah and so they are protected. There is some elision here, meaning ‘They are protected by a contract from Allah.’ Al-Farrā’ said that.

They have brought down anger from Allah upon themselves, ‘Brought down’ either means ‘returned’ or ‘endured’. The linguistic root means that it is obliged for them, and this was discussed in al-Baqarah. Then Allah tells about the reason for that, and this was also discussed in al-Baqarah.

They are not all the same.

This is the conclusion of the statement. Ibn Mas‘ūd said that it means that the People of the Book and the community of Muḥammad ﷺ are not the same. It is said that it means: the believers and unbelievers of the People of the Book are not the same. Abū Khaythamah Zuhayr ibn Ḥarb related from Hāshim ibn al-Qāsim from Shaybān from ‘Āṣim from Zirr that Ibn Mas‘ūd said, ‘One night the Messenger of Allah ﷺ was late for the ‘Ishā’ prayer and then he came out into the mosque while the people were waiting for the prayer. He said, “There is no one among the people of the religions who remembers Allah Almighty at this hour except you.” Then this āyah was revealed.’ Ibn Wahb related the like of it.

Ibn ‘Abbās said that: “There is a community among the People of the Book who are upright. They recite Allah’s Signs throughout the night, and they prostrate” refers to those who believed with the Prophet ﷺ.

Ibn Ishāq reported from Ibn ‘Abbās that when ‘Abdullāh ibn Salām, Tha‘labah ibn Sa‘yah, Usayd ibn Sa‘yah, Usayd ibn ‘Ubayd and others of the Jews became Muslim and affirmed and desired Islam and were firm in it, the rabbis of the Jews and the people of disbelief said, ‘Only the worst of us believe in Muḥammad and follow him. If they had been among the best of us, they would not have left the religion of their fathers for another.’ Then Allah revealed this.

Al-Afkhash said that it implies that some of the People of the Book have a good path. He recited:

Does someone with a community sin when he obeys?

It is said that there is some elision and it means: ‘There is a community among the People of the Book who are upright and another which is not upright.’ It is like the words of Abū Dhu’ayb:

I disobeyed. My heart belongs to her. I obey its command and do not know whether seeking her is right guidance [or error].

Al-Farrā’ says that the noun ‘community’ is in the nominative agreeing with the adjective ‘same’ [which is in the nominative] and so it implies: ‘A group among the People of the Book who are upright, reciting the signs of Allah are not the same as a group who disbelieve.’ An-Naḥḥās says that this statement is incorrect for several reasons grammatically. One is that the word ‘community’ is in the nominative because of the adjective ‘same’ and so it does not refer to a noun which has no action on it. Because of this it is in the nominative by something which does not act on the verb and implies what is not needed. That is because the unbelieving [group] was already mentioned and so there is no need for that implication. Abū ‘Ubaydah said, ‘This is like their words, “The fleas ate me” and “your companions left.”’ An-Naḥḥās said, ‘This is an error because they were already mentioned, and in the case of “The fleas ate me” [which is literally “they ate me, the fleas”] because they were already mentioned.’

They recite Allah’s Signs throughout the night, and they prostrate.

The word ānā ‘throughout’ means its hours. Its singular is inan, anan or inyin. The word ‘prostrate’ here means doing the whole prayer. Al-Farrā’ and az-Zajjāj said that it necessarily means that because there is no recitation in rukū‘ and sujūd. It is like Allah’s words: ‘they prostrate to Him,’ meaning that they do the prayer. We find in al-Furqān: ‘When they are told to prostrate to the All-Merciful...’ (25:60) and elsewhere: ‘Prostrate before Allah and worship Him.’ (53:62) It is also said that it just means normal prostration, but the reason for its revelation refutes that. What is meant is the ‘Ishā’ prayer, as we mentioned from Ibn

Mas‘ūd. The idolaters went to sleep when it became dark, while the people of tawhīd stood before Allah in the ‘Ishā’ prayer reciting the Signs of Allah. Do you not see that when Allah mentions their standing, He is including their prostration? Ath-Thawrī said that it is prayer done between Maghrib and ‘Ishā’. It is also said that it refers to night prayers. It is related that a man of the Banū Shaybah who used to study the Divine Books said, ‘We find among the words of the Lord: “Does a camel herder or shepherd reckon that when night covers him and he is helpless that he is like someone who stands and prostrates in prayer at the end of the night?”’

They believe in Allah and the Last Day, and enjoin the right and forbid the wrong, and compete in doing good. They are among the righteous.

‘They believe’ here means they affirm Allah and affirm what Muḥammad ﷺ says. It is said that the phrase ‘enjoin the right’ has a general meaning and it is also said that it means to command that the Prophet ﷺ be followed and that the phrase ‘forbid the wrong’ means to forbid the bad and to forbid opposing him. The words ‘compete in doing good’ mean they do good actions and hasten to them without finding them burdensome since they know the value of their reward. It is said that it means that they hasten to act before they miss the time prescribed for that action. ‘They are among the righteous,’ means they will be with the righteous, who are the Companions of Muḥammad ﷺ, in the Garden.

You will not be denied the reward for any good thing you do.

Al-A‘mash, Ibn Waththāb, Ḥamzah, al-Kisā‘ī, Ḥafṣ, and Khalaf read this as ‘They will not ... they do,’ reporting about the upright community. That is the recitation of Ibn ‘Abbās and it is preferred by Abū ‘Ubayd. The rest read it as ‘You,’ as direct address following from ‘you are the best nation...’ That is preferred by Abū Ḥātim. Abū ‘Amr reads it both ways. The āyah means: even if you deny the reward for any good you do, you will be thanked for it and rewarded for it.

إِنَّ الَّذِينَ كَفَرُوا لَنْ تُغْنِيَ عَنْهُمْ أَمْوَالُهُمْ وَلَا أَوْلَادُهُمْ مِنَ اللَّهِ شَيْئًا
وَأُولَئِكَ أَصْحَابُ النَّارِ هُمْ فِيهَا خَالِدُونَ ﴿١١٦﴾

116 As for those who disbelieve, their wealth and children will not help them against Allah in any way. They are the Companions of the Fire, remaining in it timelessly, forever.

Muqātil said, ‘After Allah mentions the believers of the People of the Book, He then mentions the unbelievers among them.’ Al-Kalbī said, ‘He made this an inceptive and He says, “Those who disbelieve will not be helped by a lot of wealth or a lot of children against the punishment of Allah.”’ He singles out children here because they are their closest relatives. The rest of this has already been mentioned.

مَثَلُ مَا يُنْفِقُونَ فِي هَذِهِ الْحَيَاةِ الدُّنْيَا كَمَثَلِ رِيحٍ فِيهَا صِرٌّ أَصَابَتْ حَرْثَ
قَوْمٍ ظَلَمُوا أَنفُسَهُمْ فَأَهْلَكَتُهُ وَمَا ظَلَمَهُمُ اللَّهُ وَلَكِنْ أَنفُسُهُمْ يَظْلِمُونَ ﴿١١٧﴾

117 The metaphor of what they spend in their life in this world is that of a wind with an icy bite to it which strikes the crops of a people who have wronged themselves and destroys them. Allah did not wrong them; rather it was themselves they were wronging.

The mā (what) here can act like a verbal noun or it can mean ‘which’ and what it refers to is elided. It is like ‘a wind that blows’ which is a blowing wind. Ibn ‘Abbās says that the word ṣirr means intense cold. It is said that its root is ṣarīr, which is a screeching sound, and so it is the sound of a strong wind. Az-Zajjāj says that it is the sound of the flames of the fire in that wind. This was mentioned in al-Baqarah. In a hadith it says that locusts which have been killed by ṣirr are forbidden. So the āyah means: the metaphor of the spending of the unbelievers, in its falsity, disappearance and lack of benefit, is like crops hit by a cold wind or by a fire which burns them up and destroys them. So their owners have no benefit at all from the crops after having had high hopes for their use and benefit.

Allah did not wrong them by that, but they wronged themselves by disbelief and disobedience and denying the right of Allah. It is said that they wronged themselves by cultivating outside the proper time of cultivation and in other than its proper place and so Allah punished them for putting the thing in other than its proper place, as al-Mahdawī stated.

يَا أَيُّهَا الَّذِينَ ءَامَنُوا لَا تَتَّخِذُوا بِيٰطَانَةَ تَمِيمٍ ذُو كِبَرٍ لَا يَأْتِيكُمُ خَبْرٌ ءَلَا
 وَدُوَامَا عَيْنَيْكُمْ قَدْ بَدَتِ الْبَغْضَاءُ مِنْ أَفْوَاهِهِمْ وَمَا تُخْفِي صُدُورُهُمْ ءَكْبَرُ
 قَدْ بَيَّنَّا لَكُمُ الْآيَاتِ إِنْ كُنْتُمْ تَعْقِلُونَ ﴿١٥٧﴾

118 You who believe, do not take any outside yourselves as intimates. They will do anything to harm you. They love what causes you distress. Hatred has appeared out of their mouths, but what their breasts hide is far worse. We have made the Signs clear to you if you use your intellect.

Allah is emphasising the blameworthy nature of relying on unbelievers. This is connected to His previous words: ‘...if you obey a group of those given the Book.’ (3:100). The word biṭānah (intimates) is a verbal noun used for both singular and plural. The biṭānah of a man are his closest companions who have deep knowledge of his affairs. It is derived from batn, the opposite of outward. A poet said:

Those are my closest friends and inner circle.

They, rather than any relative, are my weak spot.

In this āyah Allah forbade the believers to take the unbelievers, Jews and people of sects as intimates, to consult them for their opinions and to rely on them in their affairs. It is said that you should not converse with anyone who is opposed to your school and dīn. A poet says:

Do not ask about a man. Ask about his close companion.

Every close companion follows the one he is close to.

We find in the Sunan of Abū Dāwūd that Abū Hurayrah reported that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘A man follows the religion of his close friend, so each of you should be very careful about whom he takes as a close friend.’ It is related that Abū Mas‘ūd said, ‘Reckon people by their brethren.’ Then Allah clarified the reason why connection is forbidden.

They will do anything to harm you.

This means to corrupt you, meaning that they will spare no effort to corrupt you. Even if they do not fight you openly, they will not stop striving to deceive and betray you, as will be explained.

Abū Umāmah said that this refers to the Khārījites. It is related that Abū Mūsā al-Ash‘arī employed a dhimmī as a scribe and ‘Umar wrote to him to reprimand him and recited this āyah to him. Abū Mūsā came to ‘Umar with the accounts and presented them to ‘Umar who liked them. A letter came to Abū Mūsā and he said, ‘Where is your scribe so that he can read this letter to the people?’ He replied, ‘He does not enter the mosque.’ He asked, ‘Is he in janābah?’ ‘He is a Christian,’ he answered. He rebuked him and said, ‘Do not bring them near. Put them far away. Do not honour them. Allah has abased them. Do not trust them when Allah has said that they are treacherous.’ ‘Umar said, ‘Do not employ the People of the Book. They think bribes are lawful. Seek help in your affairs with those who fear Allah.’ ‘Umar was told, ‘There is a man among the Christians of Hira and no one writes better than he does. Should he not write for you?’ He replied, ‘I will not take staff from anyone other than the believers.’ So it is not permitted to employ the dhimmīs as scribes nor put them in charge of other matters of buying and selling.

Circumstances have changed at this time as the People of the Book have been taken as scribes and trustees and entrusted with those roles by wealthy ignorant governors and amirs. Al-Bukhārī reported that Abū Sa‘īd al-Khudrī transmitted that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘Allah did not send a Prophet nor appoint a caliph without him having two counsellors, one counsellor commanding the right and encouraging it, and one counsellor commanding the wrong and encouraging it. The one protected is the one that Allah protects.’ Anas ibn Mālīk reported that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘Do not seek light from the fire of the idolaters nor engrave an Arab on your signet-rings.’ Al-Ḥasan ibn Abi-l-Ḥasan explained it as meaning, ‘Do not consult the idolaters in any of your affairs and do not engrave Muḥammad on your rings.’ Al-Ḥasan said, ‘The confirmation of that is found in the Book of Allah: “You who believe! do not take any outside yourselves as intimates.”’

The expression ‘outside yourselves’ means from other than yourselves with regard to conduct and good position. It means that they will not fall short in anything designed to corrupt you. The verb alā means ‘to fall short’. The phrase ‘lā ālū juhḍan’ means ‘I did not omit any effort,’ i.e. ‘I did not fall short.’ The verbal usage ‘alawtu uluwwan’ means ‘I fell short.’ Imru’u-l-Qays said:

As long as a man still has a spark of life to reach the end of matters and does not fall short (āl)

‘Khabāl’ or khabl is corruption. That can be in respect of actions, bodies and minds. Khabl is a wound which renders a limb unsound. Khabl is the handicapping of limbs, as it refers to disorder. A man who is described as khabil or mukhabbal is dim-witted or mad. A person can become disordered (khabala) by love. Aws said:

Son of Lubaynā, you have no hand but a hand whose strength is disordered (makhbūlah).

Al-Farrā’ said:

Ibn Sa‘d gave a glance and prepared for it.

Your companions and mount are disordered (khabāl).

The word 'khabāl' is in the accusative on account of being the second object, as the verb 'falling short' is transitive, taking two objects. If you wish, it can be a verbal noun, or it can be genitive. The word mā in 'love what causes you' acts as a verbal noun. They love what is hard for you. 'Anat is hardship and it was already mentioned in al-Baqarah.

Hatred has appeared out of their mouths.

This means: enmity and denial of you have appeared from their mouths. Hatred is the opposite of love. Baghdā' is a feminine verbal noun. Mouths are mentioned rather than tongues to indicate their bragging and prattle. This is greater than the concealed hatred that shows in their eyes. In this sense, the Prophet ﷺ forbade a man to speak openly about his brother's honour. The verb used in the hadith means to open the mouth. A donkey opens its mouth when it brays (shahy) as horses do when they neigh. It describes horses with their mouths open. This hadith is not understood to be evidence for it being permitted to attack someone's reputation by whispering. Scholars agree that it is forbidden as the revelation says: 'Do not backbite one another.' (49:12) The Prophet ﷺ said, 'Your blood, your property and your honour is forbidden to you.' Mentioning 'shahw' alludes to bragging and presumptuousness. Know that.

This āyah provides evidence that the testimony of an enemy against his enemy is not permitted. That is the position of the people of Madīnah and the people of the Hijaz. It is related from Abū Ḥanīfah that it is permitted. Ibn Baṭṭāl and Ibn Sha'bān said, 'Scholars agree that it is not permitted for someone to testify against his enemy, even if he is reputable. Enmity removes fairness, so how much more is that the case with the enmity of the unbeliever?'

But what their breasts hide is far worse.

This reports that their concealed enmity is worse than their open enmity. 'Abdullāh ibn Mas'ūd recited 'badā' (appeared) in the masculine because baghdā' and baghd mean the same.

هَآئِمْ ؕ أَوْلَآءَ تُحِبُّونَهُمْ وَلَا يُحِبُّونَكُمْ وَتُؤْمِنُونَ بِالْكِتَابِ كُلِّهِ ؕ وَإِذَا
لَقَوَكُمْ قَالُوا ؕ آمَنَّا وَإِذَا خَلَوْا عَضُّوا عَلَيْكُمْ الْأَنَامِلَ مِنَ الْغَيْظِ ؕ قُلْ
مُوتُوا بِغَيْظِكُمْ ؕ إِنَّ اللَّهَ عَلِيمٌ بِذَاتِ الصُّدُورِ ﴿٥١﴾

119 There you are, loving them when they do not love you, even though you believe in all the Books. When they meet you, they say, ‘We believe.’ But when they leave they bite their fingers out of rage against you. Say, ‘Die in your rage.’ Allah knows what your hearts contain.

There you are, loving them when they do not love you,

This refers to the hypocrites. The evidence for that is the words of the Almighty: ‘When they meet you, they say, “We believe.”’ Abu-l-‘Āliyah and Muqātil stated that.

Love here means true friendship, in other words, ‘You, Muslims, offer them true friendship but they do not offer you true friendship because of their hypocrisy.’ It is said that it means: ‘You desire Islam for them while they desire unbelief for you.’ It is said that what is meant are the Jews. The majority say that.

Kitāb (Book) is generic. Ibn ‘Abbās says that it means ‘Books’. The Jews believe in some, as the Almighty says: ‘When they are told, “Believe in what Allah has sent down,” they say, “We believe in what was sent down to us.’ And they reject anything beyond that.” (2:91)

When they meet you, they say, ‘We believe.’

They say that they believe in Muḥammad ﷺ and that he is the Messenger of Allah.

But when they leave they bite their fingers out of rage against you.

“But when they leave” and are among themselves, they bite the ends of their fingers in exasperated hatred against you and say to one another, ‘Do you not see that these people are victorious and numerous?’ Biting the fingers is due to the frustration of not being able to act on the rage they feel. It is as Abū Ṭālib said:

They bite their fingers in anger after you leave.

Someone else said:

May Allah make their rage last long! When they see me, they bite the ends of their fingers out of rage.

The verb used is 'adda. 'Udd is the fodder of animals in the cities. It is like dregs and crushed date-stones. Form IV of the verb is used for feeding camels this kind of fodder and a plump camel is called 'udāḍī. 'Idd is a cunning man who has many schemes. Biting the fingers is the action of someone who is angry and cannot act on his anger or someone who has something happen to him that he cannot change. This biting ('add) with the teeth is like biting the hand when someone has missed something or gnashing the teeth in regret. It is like other things that one does like counting pebbles and drawing lines in the sand when grieved. It is written with a ḍād. 'Azz with a zā' refers to the hardness of time as in the poem:

The hardness of time, Ibn Marwan, does not leave any wealth other than worn out and empty.

Anāmīl (fingers) is the plural of anmalah or anmulah. When Abu-l-Jawzā' recited this āyah, he said that it referred to the Ibādīyyah. Ibn 'Aṭīyyah said, 'This description applies to many of the people of innovation among mankind until the Day of Rising.'

Say, 'Die in your rage.' Allah knows what your hearts contain.

If it is asked how did they not die since when Allah says to a thing, 'Be!' it is, there are two answers. One is made by aṭ-Ṭabarī and many commentators who say that it is a supplication against them, with the meaning: 'Say to them, "May Allah make your rage last until you die."' This would make it a directive to pray against them. The second is that Allah is telling them that they will not obtain what they hope for. Death will occur before that happens. According to this the meaning of supplication is removed and the meaning of harsh rebuke remains. This idea is found in the words of Musāfir ibn

Abī ‘Amr:

We grow in our desires and gouge out the eye of the envier.

It is similar in implication to Allah’s words: ‘Anyone who thinks that Allah will not help him in this world and the Next should stretch a rope up to the ceiling and then hang himself.’ (22:15)

إِنْ تَمَسَّكُمْ حَسَنَةٌ تَسُومُهُمْ وَإِنْ تُصِبْكُمْ سَيِّئَةٌ يَفْرَحُوا بِهَا وَإِنْ تَصَابَرُوا
وَتَشَقُّوا لَا يَضُرَّكُمْ كَيْدُهُمْ شَيْئًا إِنَّ اللَّهَ بِمَا يَعْمَلُونَ مُحِيطٌ ﴿١٥﴾

120 If something good happens to you, it galls them. If something bad strikes you, they rejoice at it. But if you are steadfast and godfearing, their scheming will not harm you in any way. Allah encompasses what they do.

If something good happens to you, it galls them.

As-Sulamī recited it with yā’ (yamsaskum rather than tamsaskum) and the rest with tā’. The expression is general to all that is good and bad. What the commentators mention of fertility and drought, the cohesion of the believers and disunity and other things are examples, not disagreement.

The meaning of the āyah is: ‘Anyone who has this description of intense enmity, rancour and joy at hardships befalling the believers, is not worthy to be your intimate, especially in the weighty matter of jihād which is the basis of this world and the Next.’ How excellent are the words:

It is hoped that every enmity will be mended except for the one who envies you out of envy.

But if you are steadfast and godfearing, their scheming will not harm you in any way.

‘But if you are steadfast’ in the face of their attempts to harm you and in remaining obedient to Allah and taking the believers as friends. The verb for ‘harm’ is dāra, yaḍūru. Allah’s precondition for negating their harm is steadfastness and taqwā. This is meant to console the believers and strengthen their souls.

The Makkans and Madinans and Abū ‘Amr recited ‘yadirkum’ from dāra as we mentioned. Part of that is the expression, ‘lā dayr’, ‘no causing of harm’. Al-Kisā’ī related that he heard ‘dāra, yaḍūru’ and allowed ‘yadurkum’ and claimed that the copy of the Qur’an of Ubayy ibn Ka‘b had ‘yadrurkum’. The Kufan reading is yadurrukum from darra, which also means to harm. It can also be in the nominative by an implied fā’. It means: ‘it will not harm you’. [POEM] This is the position of al-Kisā’ī and al-Farrā’. Or it can be in the nominative with the intention of advancement. Sībuwayh composed:

If your brother is felled, you will be felled.

It means: it will not harm you if you are steadfast and godfearing.

It can be in the jussive with a ḍammah on the rā’ because of the meeting of two silent letters, following the ḍammah. The same is true of those who put a fathah on the rā’ if the verb is in the jussive and the fathah is because of the meeting of two silent letters since the fathah is light. Abū Zayd related it from al-Mufaḍḍal from ‘Āṣim. Al-Mahdawī related it. An-Naḥḥās related, ‘Al-Mufaḍḍal aḍ-Ḍabbī related from ‘Āṣim: “yadurrikum” with a kasrah on the rā’ because of the meeting of two silent letters.’

وَإِذْ عَدَوْتَ مِنْ أَهْلِكَ تُبَوِّئُ الْمُؤْمِنِينَ مَقَاصِدَ لِلْقِتَالِ وَاللَّهُ سَمِيعٌ
عَلِيمٌ ﴿١٢١﴾

121 Remember when you left your family early in the day to install the believers in their battle stations. Allah is

All-Hearing, All-Knowing.

The regent in ‘when’ is implied: ‘Remember when you left early in the day.’ It means, ‘You went out in the morning.’ ‘Your family’ refers to ‘your house with ‘Ā’ishah’. This refers to the battle of Uḥud and the entire āyah was revealed about it. Mujāhid, al-Ḥasan, Muqātil and al-Kalbī, however, say that it is about the Battle of the Ditch, and it is also reported that al-Ḥasan said that it is the Battle of Badr that is being referred to.

Most, however, say that it is about Uḥud, as is indicated by the words in the following āyah: ‘And remember when two of your clans were on the point of losing heart.’ This happened at Uḥud. The idolaters moved towards Madīnah with 3000 men to take their revenge for Badr. They camped at Uḥud on the side of a wadi on a canal facing Madīnah on Wednesday, 12 Shawwāl 3 AH at the beginning of the thirty-first month of the Hijrah. They remained there during Thursday while the Prophet ﷺ was in Madīnah. The Messenger of Allah ﷺ dreamt that the blade of his sword was dented and some cows of his were slaughtered and that he put his hand in a strong coat of mail. He interpreted it as meaning that a group of his Companions would be killed and that a man of his house would be struck down and that the coat of mail was Madīnah. This is found in Muslim. All of that is according to what is known about the battle of Uḥud.

The root of ‘install’ (tabawwu) is to take positions, as when one moves into a house to live in it. Using the same verb, the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘Let anyone who tells a lie about me take his seat in the Fire.’ Here the verb means to place them in their military positions.

Al-Bayhaqī reports that Anas said that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘I dreamt that I was following a ram and the handle of my sword broke. I interpreted it to mean that I would kill the ram of the people and the breaking of the handle of the sword to be the killing of a man of my family.’ Ḥamzah was killed and the Messenger of Allah ﷺ killed Ṭalḥah, the banner-bearer.

Mūsā ibn ‘Uqbah mentioned that Ibn Shihāb reported, ‘The banner-bearer of the Muhājirūn was one of the Companions of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ. He said, “I am ‘Āṣim (the protector), Allah willing, of what is with me!” Ṭalḥah ibn ‘Uthmān said to him, “Will you, ‘Āṣim, come forth to individual combat?’ “Yes,” he replied. That man went forth and struck the head of Ṭalḥah until the sword went through his beard and killed him. So the banner-bearer was killed as in the dream of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ about the ram.’

إِذْ هَمَّتْ طَّائِفَتَيْنِ مِنْكُمْ أَنْ تَفْشَلَا وَاللَّهُ وَلِيَهُمَا وَعَلَى اللَّهِ فَلْيَتَوَكَّلِ
 الْمُؤْمِنُونَ ﴿١٢٢﴾

122 And remember when two of your clans were on the point of losing heart and Allah was their Protector. Let the believers put their trust in Allah.

The agent in ‘when’ is ‘to install’ or ‘All-Hearing, All-Knowing.’ The two clans are the Banū Salimah of Khazraj and the Banū Ḥārithah of Aws. They were the two flanks of the army in the Battle of Uḥud. ‘Losing heart’ means to lose courage. We find in al-Bukhārī that Jābir reported that when this was revealed, he said, ‘We are the two clans, the Banū Ḥārithah and Banū Salimah. We do not wish that it had not been revealed because Allah says: “Allah was their Protector.”’ It is said that they were the Banū al-Ḥārith, Banū al-Khazraj and Banū an-Nabīt. An-Nabīt was ‘Amr ibn Mālik of Aws. ‘Losing heart’ alludes to cowardice. That is its linguistic meaning.

After they went out and ‘Abdullāh ibn Ubayy went back with the hypocrites who were with him, the two clans were on the point of losing heart, but Allah preserved their hearts and they did not turn back. That is known from the words of Allah: ‘Allah was their Protector,’ in other words the Protector of their hearts from following up on this thought. It is said that they wanted not to go out and that was a small wrong action for them. It is said that it was a suggestion of the self, something that occurred to their minds, and so Allah acquainted His Prophet ﷺ with it and their insight was increased. They did not succumb to that weakness; Allah protected them from it; so they censured one another and went with the Prophet ﷺ.

The Messenger of Allah ﷺ proceeded until he was looking down on the idolaters. He set out from Madīnah with a thousand men. ‘Abdullāh ibn Abī Salūl went back with three hundred men in anger since in his opinion it was better to remain and fight in Madīnah when the enemy came to them. His opinion coincided with that of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ but most of the Anṣār rejected it. The Messenger of Allah ﷺ went out with the Muslims and those of them whom Allah honoured with martyrdom were martyred. Mālik said, ‘Four Muhājirūn were killed at Uḥud and seventy Anṣār.’

Maqā‘id are positions, like mawāqif, and it is used for firm positions, especially that of archers. This is the the story of Uḥud in brief, and its details will be sufficiently dealt with.

Accompanying the idolaters were a hundred cavalry under the command of Khālīd ibn al-Walīd while the Muslims did not have a single horse. In the battle the Messenger of Allah ﷺ was wounded on his face, his lower right incisor was broken with a stone and his helmet cut into his head. May He reward him on behalf of his community and the dīn for the staunchest steadfastness that any Prophet could have had. Those who did that to the Prophet ﷺ were ‘Amr ibn Qamī’ah al-Laythī and ‘Utbaḥ ibn Abī Waqqāṣ. It is said that ‘Abdullāh ibn Shihāb, the grandfather of the famous faqīh, Muḥammad ibn Muslim ibn Shihāb, was the one who inflicted the face injury on the Prophet ﷺ. Al-Wāqidī said, ‘What is established with us is that the one who shot at the face of the Prophet ﷺ was Ibn Qamī’ah and the one who broke the incisor was ‘Utbaḥ ibn Abī Waqqāṣ.’

Al-Wāqidī said with his isnād that Nāfi‘ ibn Jubayr said, ‘I heard a man of the Muhājirūn say, “I was present at Uḥud and saw arrows coming from every side and the Messenger of Allah ﷺ was in the midst of them and they were all diverted from him. I saw ‘Abdullāh ibn Shihāb az-Zuhūrī saying on that day, ‘Direct me to Muḥammad! Direct me to Muḥammad! I will not survive if he survives!’ The Messenger of Allah ﷺ was actually beside him without anyone else with him. Then he passed by him. Ṣafwān rebuked him and he replied, 'By Allah, I did not see him! I swear by Allah, he is protected from us! Four of us went out, having promised each other and made a pact that we would kill him, but we were unable to do that.'

Stones were thrown at the Messenger of Allah ﷺ until he fell into a ditch which had been dug by Abū 'Āmir ar-Rāhib to trap the Muslims. The Prophet ﷺ fell on his side and Ṭalḥah helped him to stand up again. Mālik ibn Sinān, the father of Abū Sa'īd al-Khudrī, sucked the blood from the wound of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ and two rings of his helmet were stuck in his face. Abū 'Ubaydah ibn al-Jarrāḥ extracted them using his front teeth and his two front teeth fell out, so he had no front teeth.''''

Ḥamzah was killed in this battle by Waḥshī, a slave of Jubayr ibn Muṭ'im. Jubayr had told him, 'If you kill Muḥammad, we will give you the reins of horses. If you kill 'Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib, we will give you a hundred camels. If you kill Ḥamzah, you are free.' Waḥshī said, 'As for Muḥammad, he is protected by Allah and no one will reach him. As for 'Alī, everyone he fights is killed. Ḥamzah is a brave man but perhaps I might get lucky and kill him.' Hind said when he was getting ready or passed by him, 'Heal me and heal yourself, Abū Dasamah!' Waḥshī hid behind a rock while Hamzah was attacking some of the idolaters. When he came back from his sortie and passed Waḥshī, he threw a javelin at him and it struck him and he fell down dead. Hind cut out Ḥamzah's liver and chewed it but could not swallow it and threw it away. She went up on a high rock and shouted some verses at the top of her voice. She said:

We have paid you back for the day of Badr!

A war following a war is frenzied.

I could not bear the loss of 'Utbah nor my brother, his uncle and my first-born.

I have satisfaction and have fulfilled my vow.

Waḥshī, you slaked the rancour in my breast.

I will thank Waḥshī for all my life, even until my bones have rotted in the grave!

Hind bint Uthāthah ibn ‘Abbād ibn al-Muṭṭalib answered her:

You were disgraced at Badr and after Badr, daughter of a slanderer, great only in disbelief.

Allah brought against you in the dawn tall, radiant men from Hāshim,

Each slashing with a sharp sword:

Ḥamzah my lion and ‘Alī my falcon.

When Shaybah and your father desired treachery towards me,

We dyed their breasts with blood.

Your evil vow was the worst of vows.

‘Abdullāh ibn Rawāḥah said while he was weeping for Ḥamzah:

My eye wept, and it was right to weep, although weeping and lamentation is of no use, for the lion of Allah on the morning that they said,

‘Is that slain man Ḥamzah?’

All the Muslims were distressed about him there.

The Messenger was distressed by it.

O Abū Ya‘lā, your pillars are smashed, you, the glorious, pious, generous.

Allah’s peace be upon you in the Gardens, enjoying an everlasting bliss.

O Hāshim, the best of men, be steadfast.

All your deeds are good and fine.

The Messenger of Allah is noble and patient.

He speaks by Allah's command when he speaks.

Who will inform Lu'ayy for me?

After today fortunes will change.

Before today, they knew and tasted

Our fighting in which rancour was slaked.

You have forgotten our blows at the pool of Badr

when quick death came to you in the morning,

The mourning when Abū Jahl lay fallen, the vultures wheeling over him.

ʿUtbah and his son fell together as well as Shaybah, bitten by the polished sword.

with a spear in his belly.

Ask the skulls of the Banū Rabīʿah.

There are notches in our swords from them.

So Hind, do not gloat about Ḥamzah,

Your might is abased.

Weep, Hind, and do not tire.

Shed tears as one bereaved for her child.

There is also an elegy for him by his sister, Ṣafīyyah which is mentioned in the S̄rah. May Allah be pleased with all of them.

Let the believers put their trust in Allah.

This contains clarification of the meaning of trust or reliance (tawakkul). Linguistically tawakkul means to display incapacity and rely on others, meaning literally to lean on someone else. Scholars disagree about the reality of tawakkul. Sahl ibn ʿAbdullāh was asked about it and said, 'One group say that it is contentment with Allah's guarantee and having no expectation from created beings.' Others have said, 'It is abandoning means and relying on the Causer of means. If the means distracts someone from the Causer, it strips them of the name of trust.' Sahl also said, 'Whoever says that trust entails abandoning means has attacked the Sunnah of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ because Allah says: "So make full use of any booty you have taken which is lawful and good." (8:69) Booty is earning. The Almighty also says: "So strike their necks and strike all their finger joints!" (8:12) This is action.' The Prophet ﷺ said, 'Allah loves the person with a profession.'

Someone else said, 'This is the position of the common fuqahā': trust in Allah is trusting in Allah and believing that His decree will be carried out, and that it is necessary to follow the Sunnah of His Prophet ﷺ in striving with the means of obtaining food and drink, and defence against the enemy and preparing weapons and using what the usual sunnah of Allah demands. This is also the position of recognised Sufis, but in their view the term of 'tawakkul' is not merited if someone puts their confidence in these means and their hearts turn to them. That is because the means do not in themselves bring benefit nor avert harm. Rather the cause and the result are the action of Allah alone. All is from Him and by His will. When someone relies on those means, the name 'trusting' is stripped from him.

Those who trust have two states. One is the state of the one who is firm in trust and does not turn to any of those means with his heart and he is only occupied with the ruling of the matter. The second is the state of the one who is not firm, and he is the one who turns at times to those means, sometimes without averting them from himself by scholarly reasoning, definitive evidence and experience. So he remains like that until Allah raises him by His generosity to the station of those with firm trust and joins him to the degrees of those with direct knowledge of Allah.

تَشْكُرُونَ ﴿١٢٣﴾ إِذْ تَقُولُ لِلْمُؤْمِنِينَ أَلَنْ يَكْفِيَكُمْ أَنْ يُبَدِّدَ رَبُّكُمْ بِثَلَاثَةِ
ءَالْفٍ مِنَ الْمَلَائِكَةِ مُنَزَّلِينَ ﴿١٢٤﴾ بَلَىٰ إِنْ تَصْبِرُوا وَتَتَّقُوا وَيَأْتُوكُم مِّن فَوْرِهِمْ
هَذَا يُمْدِدْكُمْ رَبُّكُمْ بِخَمْسَةِ ءَالْفٍ مِنَ الْمَلَائِكَةِ مُسَوِّمِينَ ﴿١٢٥﴾

123 Allah helped you at Badr when you were weak so have taqwā of Allah, so that hopefully you will be thankful. 124 And when you said to the believers, ‘Is it not enough for you that your Lord reinforced you with three thousand angels, sent down?’ 125 Yes indeed! But if you are steadfast and are godfearing and they come upon you suddenly, your Lord will reinforce you with five thousand angels, clearly identified.

Allah helped you at Badr when you were weak

The battle of Badr took place on the Friday 17th Ramaḍān eighteen months after the Hijrah. Badr is the name of some wells there from which the place takes its name. Ash-Sha‘bī said that the water belonged to a man of Juhaynah called Badr, but the first derivation is more frequently cited. Al-Wāqidī and others say that it is the name of the place and its origin is not transmitted. This will be further dealt with in al-Anfāl.

The weakness referred to is about the Muslims being few in number and that is because they numbered three hundred and thirteen or fourteen while their enemy were between nine hundred and a thousand strong. The word, adhillah, the plural of dhalīl, literally means ‘abased’, but the use of abasement here is metaphorical. In themselves they were nothing but mighty, but in relation to their enemy and to all the unbelievers on the earth it seemed that they were in a state of abasement and that they would be overcome.

Nasr is help. Allah helped them at Badr and killed the leaders of the idolaters. On that day Islam was firmly established. It was the first battle which the Prophet ﷺ fought. We find in Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim that Buraydah said, ‘The Messenger of Allah ﷺ went on seventeen expeditions and he fought in eight of them.’ Abū Ishāq said, ‘I met Zayd ibn Arqam and asked him, “How many expeditions did the Messenger of Allah ﷺ go on?” “Nineteen,” he answered. I asked, “How many times did you go with him?” “Seventeen,” was the answer. I asked, “What was the first expedition he went on?” “Al-‘Usayr or al-‘Ushayr,” he said.’ All of this disagreement is found in histories and Prophetic biographies.

Muḥammad ibn Sa‘d said in the Ṭabaqāt: ‘The Messenger of Allah ﷺ went on twenty-seven expeditions (ghazwah) himself and sent out fifty-six expeditions (sariyyah). (One variant has forty-six.) Those the Messenger of Allah ﷺ personally fought in are: Badr, Uḥud, al-Muraysī‘, the Ditch, Qurayzah, the Conquest of Makkah, Ḥunayn and Ṭā‘if.’ Ibn Sa‘d stated: ‘This is what there is consensus on. Some transmissions state that he fought against the Banu-n-Naḍir, and at Wadī al-Qurā in the return from Khaybar and al-Ghābah.’

If this is confirmed, we say that Zayd and Buraydah each reported about what they knew or witnessed. Zayd said, ‘The first expedition he ﷺ took part in was Dhāt al-‘Usayrah.’ This differs from what historians and biographers say. Muḥammad ibn Sa‘d said that there were three expeditions before al-‘Ushayrah, meaning that he ﷺ took part in them personally.

Ibn ‘Abd al-Barr said in Kitāb ad-Durar on expeditions: ‘The first expedition that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ himself made was the Waddān expedition in Ṣafar. He arrived in Madīnah on the 12th of Rabī‘ al-Awwal and remained there for the rest of the month and for the entire year until Ṣafar 2 AH. Then he went out in Ṣafar, appointing Sa‘d ibn ‘Ubādah over Madīnah, and reached Waddān. He made peace with the Banū Ḍamrah and then returned to Madīnah and there was no fighting. That is the expedition which is called al-Abwā’. Then he remained in Madīnah until Rabī‘ al-Ākhir of that year. Then he went out, appointing as-Sā'ib ibn 'Uthmān ibn Maz'ūn over Madīnah, until he reached Buwāṭ in the neighbourhood of Raḍwā. He returned to Madīnah without any fighting and remained there for the rest of Rabī' al-Ākhir and part of Jumāda-l-Ūlā. He then went out on an expedition and appointed Abū Salamah ibn 'Abd al-Asad over Madīnah and took the route to al-'Usayrah.'

Ibn Ishāq mentioned that 'Ammār ibn Yāsir said, "Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib and I were comrades in the 'Usayrah expedition in the valley of Yanbu'. When the Messenger of Allah ﷺ halted there, we stayed there for a month and there he concluded a truce with the Banū Mudlij and their allies among the Banū Ḍamrah and then left them. 'Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib said to me, "Abu-l-Yaqzān, do you want to go to those men and see what they are doing?" There was a group of the Banū Mudlij working on a well of theirs. We went and watched them for a while and then felt sleepy. So we went to a group of palm-trees in a cleared part of the ground and slept in the soft dust. By Allah, we were only awoken by the Messenger of Allah ﷺ nudging us with his foot. We sat up, covered in dust, and the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said to 'Alī, "What are you doing, Abū Turāb ('father of dust')?" We told him what we were doing. He said, "Shall I tell you of the two most wretched of men?" "Yes indeed, Messenger of Allah," we answered. He said, "Uḥaymir of Thamūd who slaughtered the She-camel, and the one who will strike you, 'Alī, here," and the Messenger of Allah ﷺ put his hand on his head, "until this is soaked with it," and he put his hand on his beard.' Abū 'Umar said, 'He stayed there for the rest of Jumāda-l-Ūlā and some nights of Jumāda-l-Ākhirah. He left the Banū Mudlij and returned without any fighting.'

After that, a few days later, the first expedition to Badr took place. There is no uncertainty about this on the part of historians and biographers. Zayd ibn Arqam reported about what he knew. Allah knows best. He said that the name was al-‘Ushayr or al-‘Usayr to which a hā’ was added and so it becomes al-‘Ushayrah. After that came the great expedition of Badr. Badr was the greatest of encounters in excellence for those who attended it. In it, according to the scholars, Allah helped His Prophet ﷺ and the believers with His angels, as is indicated by the literal words of the āyah. That did not happen at Uḥud. Those who state that it refers to the Battle of Uḥud make the words: ‘Allah helped you at Badr ... you will be thankful’ an interpolation. This is the position of ‘Āmir ash-Sha‘bī but some people disagree with that. There are many reports which state that the angels were present at Badr and fought there.

Confirming that is what is stated by Abū Usayd Mālik ibn Rabī‘ah who was present at Badr: ‘If I were with you today at Badr and had my sight back, I would show you the ravine from which the angels emerged. I have no doubt about it whatsoever.’ ‘Aqīl related it from az-Zuhrī from Abū Ḥāzim Salamah ibn Dīnār. Abū Ḥātim said, ‘Only this one hadīth is known from Abū Ḥāzim. It is said that Abū Usayd was the last of the people of Badr to die. Abū ‘Umar mentioned him in al-Isti‘āb and elsewhere.’

In Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim we find that ‘Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb said, ‘On the Day of Badr, the Messenger of Allah ﷺ looked at the idolaters who numbered one thousand while his Companions were only three hundred and thirteen in number. The Prophet ﷺ faced the qiblah and raised his hands and began to speak to his Lord, “O Allah, fulfil what You promised me! O Allah, bring what You promised me! O Allah, if You destroy this band of the people of Islam, You will not be worshipped on the earth!” He continued to speak to his Lord with his hands raised until the cloak fell from his shoulders. Abū Bakr came to him, picked up his cloak and put it back on his shoulders and then held him from behind and said, “Prophet of Allah, you have entreated your Lord enough. He will fulfil His promise to you.” So Allah revealed: “Remember when you called on your Lord for help and He responded to you: 'I will reinforce you with a thousand angels riding rank after rank.'" (8:9) So Allah reinforced him with angels.'

Abū Zumayl related that Ibn 'Abbās said, 'While a man of the Muslims was chasing an idolater ahead of him, he heard the crack of a whip above him and the sound of a horseman saying, "Forward, Ḥayzūm!" He looked at the idolater and he fell down. He looked at him and his nose had been struck and his head cut by the whip. The Anṣārī told the Messenger of Allah ﷺ about that and he said, "You spoke the truth. That was from the help of the third heaven." On that day they killed seventy and captured seventy.'

More about this will come in al-Anfāl, Allah willing. The Sunnah and Qur'an support what the majority say about the help of the angels. Praise be to Allah. Khārijah ibn Ibrāhīm related that his father said, 'The Messenger of Allah ﷺ asked Jibrīl, "In the battle of Badr which angel said, 'Forward, Ḥayzūm?'" Jibrīl answered, "Muḥammad, I do not know all of the people of heaven!"'

Alī told the people, 'While I was drawing water from the well of Badr, a strong wind came whose like I had never seen and then went. Then another strong wind came whose like I had never seen except for the wind before it. (I think he said, 'Then a strong wind came.') The first wind was Jibrīl who descended with a thousand angels to the Messenger of Allah ﷺ. The second wind was Mikā'il who descended with a thousand angels to the right of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ. Abū Bakr was on his right. The third wind was Isrāfīl who descended with a thousand angels to the left of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ. I was on the left.'

Sahl ibn Ḥunayf said, 'In the Battle of Badr, one of us would point with his sword at the head of an idolater and his head would fall from his body before he reached him.' Ar-Rabi' ibn Anas said, 'In the Battle of Badr, the people recognized those slain by the angels by the blows on their necks and their fingertips, which were as if fire had burned them.’ Al-Bayhaqī mentioned all of this. Some of them said that the angels fought and the sign of their striking the unbelievers was evident because every place they struck caught fire. Abū Jahl said to Ibn Mas‘ūd, ‘You have killed me? I have only been killed by someone so fast that I could not reach the hoof of his horse with my steed if I tried.’ The benefit of the great number of angels was to give tranquillity to the hearts of the believers and Allah Almighty appointed those angels to fight until the Day of Rising. Every Muslim army that is steadfast and anticipating, the angels come to them and fight with them.

Ibn ‘Abbās and Mujāhid said, ‘The angels only fought in the Battle of Badr. They were present at other battles, but did not fight. They were reinforcements.’ Some of them said, ‘The reason why there was a large number of angels present was that those who were fighting that day made much supplication and glorification.’ According to this view, the angels did not fight on that day but were present by the supplication to be firm. The first view is more frequently held.

Qatādah said, ‘In the Battle of Badr, Allah reinforced them with a thousand and then three thousand and then it became five thousand.’ That is borne out by His words: ‘Remember when you called on your Lord for help and He responded to you: “I will reinforce you with a thousand angels riding rank after rank”’ (8:9), and ‘Is it not enough that your Lord reinforced you with three thousand angels, sent down?’ (3:124), and ‘Yes indeed! But if you are steadfast and godfearing and they come upon you suddenly, your Lord will reinforce you with five thousand angels, clearly identified.’ (3:125) On the Day of Badr the believers were steadfast and were godfearing and so Allah reinforced them with five thousand angels as He promised. This was all in the Battle of Badr. Al-Ḥasan said, ‘Those five thousand will reinforce the believers until the Day of Rising.’

Ash-Sha‘bī said, ‘On the day of the Battle of Badr, the Prophet ﷺ and his Companions heard that Kurz ibn Jābir al-Muḥāribī wanted to reinforce the idolaters and that was hard for the Prophet ﷺ and the Muslims. Therefore, Allah revealed this āyah. Kurz heard about the defeat and did not reinforce them, but returned. So Allah also did not reinforce them with five thousand. They were reinforced with a thousand.’ It is said that Allah promised the believers on the Day of Badr that if they were steadfast in obeying Him and feared and avoided what He prohibited, He would help them in all their wars. They were not steadfast and did not fear forbidden things except in the Battle of the Confederates and so He reinforced them when they laid siege to Qurayzah.

It is said that this is about Uḥud: Allah promised them help if they were steadfast, but they were not steadfast and so He did not reinforce them with a single angel. If He had reinforced them, they would not have been defeated. ‘Ikrimah and aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk said that.

It is said that it is confirmed that Sa‘d ibn Abī Waqqāṣ said, ‘I saw two men to the right and left of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ in the Battle of Badr who were wearing white clothing and fighting fiercely. I never saw them before that nor after that.’ It is said that perhaps this is particular to the Prophet ﷺ and he had two angels who fought with him, and that was not reinforcements for the Companions. Allah knows best.

The descent of the angels was one of the means of help which the Lord does not need. The creature needs it. The heart should be connected to Allah and trust in Him. He is the Helper with or without means: ‘His command when He desires a thing is simply to say to it, “Be!” and it is.’ (36:82). But He reports about that so that creation will obey what they are commanded to follow in respect of those secondary means that have been followed in the past: ‘You will not find any alteration in the pattern of Allah.’ (33:62) That does not detract from trust. It refutes the one who says, ‘Secondary means are for the weak, not the strong.’ The Prophet ﷺ and his Companions were strong and others were weak. This is clear.

The verb madda (reinforce) is the form used for evil and amadda for good. This was already mentioned in al-Baqarah. ‘Sent down’ is recited by Abū Ḥaywah as ‘munzalīna’, meaning that they bring down help. Ibn ‘Āmir recited ‘munazzalīna’, indicating its frequency.

The words end with ‘Yes indeed!’ and then there is a new sentence. ‘If you are steadfast’ means against the enemy, and ‘are godfearing’ is added to it, meaning fear to disobey Him. The apodosis of the precondition is ‘reinforce you’

But if you are steadfast and godfearing and they come upon you suddenly,

The meaning of ‘min faurihim’ is ‘in a headlong manner,’ according to ‘Ikrimah, Qatādah, al-Ḥasan, ar-Rabī‘, as-Suddī and Ibn Zayd. It is said by Mujāhid and aḍ-Ḍahhāk that it means ‘out of their anger’. They were angry about Badr on the Day of Uḥud. The root of fawr is to aim for something and take it seriously. Fawr means boiling, and so describes vehement anger. It is used to describe a boiling pot as in 10:40. A poet said:

Their pots boiled over us and we made them continue.

Your Lord will reinforce you with five thousand angels, clearly identified.

‘Clearly identified’ means they were marked with signs. Ibn ‘Āmir, Ḥamzah, al-Kisā’ī read it in the active tense (musawwimīn), which would mean, ‘they clearly identified themselves with signs’. Abū ‘Amr, Ibn Kathīr and ‘Āṣim prefer the passive, implying known by a sign and making their horses known. Aṭ-Ṭabarī and others preferred this reading. Most commentators said that it refers to their releasing their horses in the attack. Al-Mahdawī said that Allah released them against the unbelievers. Ibn Fūrak said that.

Based on the first reading, there is disagreement about the mark of the angels. ‘Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib and Ibn ‘Abbās and others said that they wore white turbans with tails. Al-Bayhaqī mentioned it from Ibn ‘Abbās and al-Mahdawī related it from az-Zajjāj. The exception was Jibrīl who had a yellow turban like that of az-Zubayr ibn al-‘Awwām. Ibn Ishāq said that. Ar-Rabī‘ said that their sign was that they were on piebald horses. Al-Bayhaqī mentioned that Suhayl ibn ‘Amr said, ‘In the Battle of Badr, I saw white men on piebald horses between heaven and earth with distinguishing marks, killing and taking captives.’ So ‘clearly identified’ indicates the piebald horses, not the marks. Allah knows best.

Mujāhid said that their horses had short tails and manes, and their forelocks and tails were marked with wool. Ibn ‘Abbās also said that at Badr the angels were marked by white wool in the forelocks and tails of their horses. ‘Abbād ibn [Ḥamzah ibn] ‘Abdullāh ibn az-Zubayr, Hishām ibn ‘Urwah, and al-Kalbī said that the angels descended in the mien of az-Zubayr, wearing yellow turbans with the tails between their shoulders. That was stated by ‘Abdullāh and ‘Urwah, the sons of az-Zubayr. ‘Abdullāh said, ‘Az-Zubayr had a yellow turban.’

The āyah is evidence for adopting a sign and identification mark for tribes and squadrons, which the ruler appoints for them, so that each is distinct from the others in fighting, and for the excellence of piebald horses since the angels rode them. Perhaps they descended on them with horses like that of al-Miqdād, which was piebald. They had no other horses and they descended on these horses in honour of al-Miqdād in the same way that Jibrīl wore a yellow turban in honour of az-Zubayr. Allah knows best.

The āyah also is evidence for wearing wool, which was worn by the Prophets and righteous. Abū Dāwūd and Ibn Mājah related from Abū Burdah from his father: ‘My father said to me, “I wish that you could have seen us with the Messenger of Allah ﷺ when we were hit by the rain; I think that we smelled like goats.”’ The Prophet ﷺ wore a Greek woollen jubbah with narrow sleeves. The imams related that. Yūnus also wore one. This will be discussed in an-Nahl, Allah willing.

As for what Mujāhid mentioned about their horses having cropped tails and manes, it is unlikely. We find in the Muṣannaḥ of Abū Dāwūd that ‘Uqbah ibn ‘Abd as-Sulamī heard the Messenger of Allah ﷺ say, ‘Do not cut short the forelocks, manes or tails of horses. Their tails keep the flies away, their manes keep them warm, and good is tied to their forelocks.’ There must be some doubt about what Mujāhid said because according to that the horses of the angels were like that. Allah knows best.

The āyah also indicates the excellence of white and yellow as colours since the angels wore them. Ibn ‘Abbās said, ‘If someone wears yellow sandals, his needs are fulfilled.’ The Prophet ﷺ said, ‘Wear white garments. They are the best of your garments. Shroud your dead in them. Turbans are the crowns of the Arabs and their dress.’ Rukānah, who is the one who wrestled with the Prophet ﷺ and the Prophet ﷺ threw him down, said, ‘The difference between us and the idolaters are the turbans over our caps.’ Abū Dāwūd transmitted it. Al-Bukhārī said that its isnād is unknown and it is not known who listened to whom.

وَمَا جَعَلَهُ اللَّهُ إِلَّا بُشْرَىٰ لَكُمْ وَلِتَطْمَئِنَّ قُلُوبُكُم بِهِ ۗ وَمَا النَّصْرُ إِلَّا مِنْ عِنْدِ
اللَّهِ الْعَزِيزِ الْحَكِيمِ ﴿١٢٦﴾ لِيَقْطَعَ طَرَفًا مِّنَ الَّذِينَ كَفَرُوا أَوْ يَكْتَسِبَهُمْ
فَيَنْقَلِبُوا خَائِبِينَ ﴿١٢٧﴾

126 Allah only did this for it to be good news for you and so that your hearts might be set at rest by it (help comes from no one but Allah, the Almighty, the All-Wise) 127 and so that He might cut off a group of those who disbelieve or crush them and they might be turned back in defeat.

The word ‘this’ refers to their being reinforced by the angels, the promise, or reinforcements. That is indicated by the previous words ‘reinforce you’, the clear identification, the sending down or the number, which may have been as many as five thousand. The lām connected to ‘set at rest’ is the lām of becoming, meaning ‘so that your hearts might be put at rest by it, He made...’ A similar usage is seen in 41:12. The phrase ‘Help comes from no one but Allah,’ means for the believers. The unbelievers are not included in that because any victory they gain is full of disappointment and loss and has a bad outcome.

And so that He might cut off a group of those who disbelieve or crush them and they might be turned back in defeat.

Allah cuts them off by killing them. The thrust of the sentence is: ‘Allah helped you at Badr so that He might cut off...’ It is also said that the meaning is: ‘Help is only from Allah so that He might cut off...’ It could also be connected to the idea of help, meaning, ‘He helped you so that He might cut off...’ It is a reference to the idolaters who were killed at Badr, according to al-Ḥasan and others. As-Suddī said that it refers to the idolaters killed at Uḥud, who numbered eighteen.

The meaning of ‘crush’ is to make them sad. Someone who is ‘makbūt’ is sad. It is related that the Prophet ﷺ went to Abū Ṭalḥah and saw that his son was sad (makbūt). He asked, ‘What is wrong with him?’ He answered, ‘His sparrow has died.’ According to those who study language, the root of ‘crush them’ (yakbitahum) is ‘yakbidahum’ to cause sorrow and exasperation in their livers (akbād), and the dāl has been replaced by a tā’ as we see in sabara and sabada (shave). The verb kabata is used for diverting and humbling the enemy, and kabada is to afflict him in his liver. One refers to sorrow or enmity ‘burning’ one’s liver. The Arabs call an enemy someone with ‘a black liver’ because when livers are burned by enmity, they become black. Al-A‘shā said:

What you suffered from the arrival of a people who are the enemy with blackened livers

The phrase ‘turned back in defeat’ (khāba, yakhūbu) means with disappointed hopes. Khā'ib is someone whose hopes are cut off. Khayyāb is a steel which does not produce fire.

لَيْسَ لَكَ مِنَ الْأَمْرِ شَيْءٌ أَوْ يَتُوبَ عَلَيْهِمْ أَوْ يُعَذِّبَهُمْ فَإِنَّهُمْ ظَالِمُونَ ﴿١٢٨﴾
 وَلِلَّهِ مَا فِي السَّمَاوَاتِ وَمَا فِي الْأَرْضِ يَغْفِرُ لِمَن يَشَاءُ وَيُعَذِّبُ مَن
 يَشَاءُ وَاللَّهُ غَفُورٌ رَّحِيمٌ ﴿١٢٩﴾

128 You have no part in the affair. Either He will turn towards them or He will punish them, for they are wrongdoers. 129 Everything in the heavens and everything in the earth belongs to Allah. He forgives whoever He wills and punishes whoever He wills. Allah is Ever-Forgiving, Most Merciful.

You have no part in the affair.

It is confirmed in Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim that the Prophet's incisor was broken at Uḥud and his head cut so that it bled. He said, 'How can a people prosper when they injure the head of their Prophet and break his tooth while he is calling them to Allah Almighty?' and Allah revealed this.

Aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk said, 'The Prophet ﷺ wanted to invoke against the unbelievers and Allah sent down this. It is said that he asked for permission to call for their extermination, but when the āyah was revealed, he knew that some of them would become Muslim, and so many of them did, including Khālīd ibn al-Walīd, 'Amr ibn al-'Āṣ, 'Ikrimah ibn Abī Jahl, and others.' At-Tirmidhī related that Ibn 'Umar said, 'The Prophet ﷺ made invocation against four people and Allah revealed: "You have no part in the affair." Allah guided them to Islam.' He said that it is a sound gharīb ḥasan hadith.

It is said that the phrase 'either He will turn towards them' is added to 'cut off a group'. It means: 'so that He might kill a group of them or sadden them with defeat or turn to them or punish them.' 'Aw' here can mean 'until'.

Our scholars said that the words of the Prophet ﷺ refer to finding it unlikely that those who did that to him would prosper. The words of Allah: 'You have no part in the affair' bring close what he had thought unlikely and desiring their Islam. When he desired that, he said, 'O Allah, forgive my people. They do not know.' We find in Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim that Ibn Mas'ūd said, 'It is as if I could see the Messenger of Allah ﷺ recounting that the people of one of the Prophets struck and wounded him, and he said, as he wiped the blood from his face, "O Allah, forgive my people. They do not know." They said to him, "You should curse them!" He said, "I was not sent as a curser. I was sent as a caller and a mercy. O Allah, forgive my people! They do not know."'"

Our scholars said that the one reported about in the hadith of Ibn Mas'ūd is the Prophet ﷺ. He is, in fact, relating about himself as proven by the fact that it is explicitly reported that when the teeth of the Prophet ﷺ were broken and his face injured in the Battle of Uḥud, that was very hard for his Companions to bear. They said, 'You should curse them!' He answered, 'I was not sent as a curser. I was sent as a caller and a mercy. O Allah, forgive my people! They do not know.' It was as if that had been revealed to him ﷺ before that happened to him at Uḥud. The Prophet ﷺ did not make that specific. When that occurred to him, then it was clear that it was about him as we mentioned.

It is also made clear by what 'Umar said to him: 'May my mother and father be your ransom, Messenger of Allah! Nūḥ invoked against his people. He said, "My Lord, do not leave a single one of the unbelievers on earth!" (71:26) If you were to invoke against us in the same way, we would be destroyed to the last one of us. Your back has been trodden on, your face bloodied and your teeth broken, but you refuse to speak other than good!' He answered ﷺ, 'Lord, forgive my people! They do not know.'

[One variant of the account has that] 'Allah was very angry with people who broke the teeth of their Prophet,' meaning with the actual person who did that. We have mentioned his name along with the disagreement about who it was. We said that the statement became specific because a group of those who were present at Uḥud later became good Muslims.

The Kufans claim that this āyah abrogates the qunūt which the Prophet ﷺ used to perform in the rukūʿ of the last rakʿah of Ṣubḥ. They use as evidence the hadith of Ibn ʿUmar who heard the Prophet ﷺ say in the Fajr prayer after raising his head from rukūʿ, ‘O Allah, our Lord and praise is yours in the last.’ Then he said, ‘O Allah, curse so-and-so and so-and-so.’ Allah revealed: ‘You have no part in the affair.’ Al-Bukhārī transmitted it. Muslim reported it from Abū Hurayrah in a more complete form. This is not abrogation. Allah is informing His Prophet ﷺ that the business is not up to him and that he only knows of the Unseen what Allah acquaints him with and that the entire affair belongs to Allah. He will turn to those He wishes and punish those He wishes. It implies: ‘You have no part in the affair. Everything in the heavens and in the earth belongs to Allah, both you and them. He forgives whomever He wishes and turns to whomever He wishes.’ There is no abrogation, and Allah knows best. His words explain that all matters are by the decision and decree of Allah. This also refutes the Qadariyyah and others in their views about Allah’s decree.

Scholars disagree about the qunūt in Fajr and other prayers. The Kufans forbid it in Fajr and other prayers, and that is the position of al-Layth and Yaḥyā ibn Yaḥyā al-Laythī al-Andalūsī, the companion of Mālik. Ash-Shaʿbī disliked it. It says in the Muwattāʾ about Ibn ʿUmar, ‘He did not do the qunūt in any prayer.’ An-Nasāʾī related from Qutaybah from Khalaf that Abū Mālik al-Ashjāʿī reported that his father said, ‘I prayed behind the Prophet ﷺ and he did not do the qunūt. I prayed behind Abū Bakr and he did not do the qunūt. I prayed behind ʿUmar and he did not do the qunūt. I prayed behind ʿUthmān and he did not do the qunūt. I prayed behind ʿAlī and he did not do the qunūt.’ Then he said, ‘My son, it is an innovation.’

It is said that the qunūt is always done in Fajr and other prayers when a disaster befalls the Muslims. Ash-Shāfi‘ī and aṭ-Ṭabarī said that. It is said that it is recommended in Fajr and that is reported from ash-Shāfi‘ī. Al-Ḥasan and Saḥnūn said that it is sunnah. That is demanded by the transmission of ‘Alī ibn Ziyād from Mālīk that the one who deliberately omits it must repeat it. Aṭ-Ṭabarī related the consensus that missing it out does not invalidate the prayer. Al-Ḥasan said that one does the sujūd of forgetfulness for it and that is one of the positions of ash-Shāfi‘ī. Ad-Dāraquṭnī related from Sa‘īd ibn ‘Abd al-‘Azīz that the one who forgets the qunūt in Ṣubḥ should do the sujūd of forgetfulness.

Mālīk preferred it to be done before rukū‘, which is the position of Iṣḥāq. It is also related from Mālīk that it can be done after rukū‘. That is related from the four caliphs and it is also the position of ash-Shāfi‘ī, Aḥmad, and Iṣḥāq. It is related from a group of Companions that there is a choice regarding that. Ad-Dāraquṭnī related with a sound isnād that Anas said, ‘The Messenger of Allah ﷺ continued to do the qunūt in the morning prayer until he left this world.’ Abū Dāwūd mentioned in al-Marāsīl that Khālīd ibn Abī ‘Imrān said, ‘While the Prophet ﷺ was invoking against Muḍar, Jibrīl came to him and indicated to him that he should be silent and so he was. He said, “Muḥammad, Allah has not sent you as an abuser or curser. He sent you as a mercy. He did not send you as a punishment: You have no part in the affair. Either He will turn towards them or He will punish them, for they are wrongdoers.”’ Then he taught him this qunūt: ‘O Allah! Truly we seek Your help and Your forgiveness and believe in You and praise You for all good. We thank You and are not ungrateful to You and submit ourselves to you and surrender and abandon all who reject You. O Allah You alone we worship. We pray and prostrate to You. We strive and struggle in Your Way. We hope for Your mercy and fear Your harsh punishment. Certainly Your punishment encircles the unbelievers.’

يَا أَيُّهَا الَّذِينَ ءَامَنُوا لَا تَأْكُلُوا الرِّبَا أَضْعَافًا مُضَاعَفَةً وَاتَّقُوا اللَّهَ لَعَلَّكُمْ تُفْلِحُونَ ﴿١٣٠﴾ وَاتَّقُوا النَّارَ الَّتِي أُعِدَّتْ لِلْكَافِرِينَ ﴿١٣١﴾ وَأَطِيعُوا اللَّهَ وَالرَّسُولَ لَعَلَّكُمْ تُرْحَمُونَ ﴿١٣٢﴾

130 You who believe, do not feed on usury, multiplied and then remultiplied. Have taqwā of Allah so that hopefully you will be successful. 131 Have fear of the Fire which has been prepared for the unbelievers. 132 Obey Allah and the Messenger so that hopefully you will gain mercy.

You who believe, do not feed on usury, multiplied and then remultiplied.

This is a prohibition against consuming usury interpolated into the story of Uḥud. Ibn ‘Aṭīyah said, ‘I do not recall anything transmitted about that.’ Mujāhid said, ‘They used to sell on credit and, when the term came, they would increase the price for a delay and so Allah revealed: “You who believe, do not feed on usury multiplied and then remultiplied.”’

Usury is singled out among acts of disobedience because it is that against which Allah has declared war when He says: ‘If you do not, know that it means war from Allah and His Messenger.’ (2:279). War allows killing, and so it is as if He were saying, ‘If you do not fear usury, you will be defeated and killed.’ So he commanded them to give up usury because they used to practise it, and Allah knows best.

‘Multiplied’ is in the accusative for the ḥāl, and ‘remultiplied’ is recited as ‘mudā‘afah’ as well as ‘mudā‘afah’. It indicates that they increased the usury time after time. The usury practised by the Arabs was that they increased the debt. The one owed the money would say, ‘Will you settle or increase it?’ as we mentioned in al-Baqarah. This went on year after year and the expression stresses the ugliness of what they were doing. That is why Allah mentions that it was being ‘remultiplied’.

Have taqwā of Allah so that hopefully you will be successful.

Fear Him regarding any wealth gained from usury and do not consume it.

Have fear of the Fire which has been prepared for the unbelievers.

Then He alarms them by saying: ‘Have fear of the Fire.’ Most commentators say that this is a threat directed at those who allow usury. Whoever allows usury disbelieves and is called an unbeliever. It is said that it means: fear the action which will strip faith from you and make the Fire mandatory for you, because usury is one of the wrong actions which make it inevitable that a person will be stripped of their faith and causes one to fear for them.

Another such action is lack of respect for one’s parents. A tradition has come that a man called ‘Alqamah who was disobedient to his parents was dying. He was told, ‘Say: “There is no god but Allah,”’ and he was unable to do that until his mother came and was pleased with him. Other things are cutting off relatives, usury, and treachery in respect of a trust. Abū Bakr al-Warrāq reported that Abū Ḥanīfah said, ‘It is that which most removes faith from a person when he dies.’ Abū Bakr said, ‘We looked at wrong actions which remove faith and we did not find anything quicker in doing that than wronging people.’

This āyah indicates that the Fire is already created, which refutes the Jahmites who said that it is non-existent and not prepared.

Obey Allah and the Messenger so that hopefully you will gain mercy.

The instruction ‘Obey Allah’ means you should obey Allah in respect the obligations of the dīn ‘and the Messenger’ in respect of sunnahs. It is said that it specifies obedience to Allah in respect of forbidding usury and to the Messenger in respect of the prohibition which he conveyed. ‘So that hopefully you will gain mercy’ means so that Allah will be merciful to you.

سَارِعُوا إِلَىٰ مَغْفِرَةٍ مِّن رَّبِّكُمْ وَجَنَّةٍ عَرْضُهَا السَّمَاوَاتُ
وَالْأَرْضُ أُعِدَّتْ لِلْمُتَّقِينَ ﴿١٣٣﴾

133 Race each other to forgiveness from your Lord and a Garden as wide as the heavens and the earth, prepared for the godfearing:

Race each other to forgiveness from your Lord

Nāfi‘ and Ibn ‘Āmir read it without wāw (and) before it, as in the copies of the Qur’an of the people of Madīnah and Syria. The rest of the seven have a wāw (and) before it. Abū ‘Alī said that both are correct and well-known. If it is read with a wāw, it is adding a sentence to the sentence before it. If it is read without the wāw, it is because the second sentence is related to the first, but has no need of being joined to it by ‘and’. ‘Race each other’ is the verbal noun form of Form III.

There is some elision in the āyah, meaning: ‘Race to that which will make forgiveness mandatory,’ which is obedience. Anas ibn Mālik and Makḥūl said that it means racing to the takbīr al-ihrām. ‘Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib said that it means racing to the performance of the obligations. ‘Uthmān ibn ‘Affān said that means racing to sincerity. Al-Kalbī said that it means racing to repentance from usury. It is said it means racing to steadfastness in fighting. Other things are said as well. The āyah is general and means the same as the earlier āyah: ‘Race each other to the good.’ (2:148)

a Garden as wide as the heavens and the earth.

The mudāf is elided in this sentence. [POEM] Scholars disagree about its interpretation. Ibn ‘Abbās said that the heavens and the earth are connected to one another as when a garment is opened up and it is clear that its parts are connected. That is the breadth of the Garden and only Allah knows how high it is. That is what the majority say and it is not denied. We find in a hadith reported by Abū Dharr from the Prophet ﷺ: ‘The seven heavens and seven earths in comparison to the Footstool are only like some dirhams cast into a desert, and the Footstool in comparison to the Throne is only like a ring cast into a desert.’ These things are much greater than the heavens and the earth, and the power of Allah is greater than all that.

Al-Kalbī said, ‘There are four Gardens: the garden of ‘Adn, the Garden of Refuge, the Garden of Firdaws, and the Garden of Bliss. The dimensions of each Garden is the same as the heavens and the earth if they were all joined together.’ Ismā‘īl as-Suddī said, ‘If the heavens and the earth were broken into mustard seeds, each mustard seed would be a garden whose breadth was like that of the heaven and the earth.’ We find in the Ṣaḥīḥ: ‘The least of the people of the Garden in rank will be the one who wishes and wishes until wishes are no more. Allah Almighty says, “You will have that and ten like it.”’ Abū Sa‘īd al-Khudrī related it, and Muslim and others transmitted it.

Ya‘lā ibn Abī Murrah said, ‘In Homs I met at-Tanūkhī, the emissary of Heraclius to the Messenger of Allah ﷺ. He was a very old man. He said, “I brought the letter of Heraclius to the Messenger of Allah ﷺ. He handed the letter to a man on his left. I asked, ‘Who is your companion who is reading?’ ‘Mu‘āwiyah,’ they replied. The letter I was sent with said: ‘You have written inviting me to a Garden whose breadth is like that of the heaven and the earth. Where is the Fire?’ The Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘Glory be to Allah! Where is the night when the day comes?’”’

‘Umar al-Fārūq used this argument against the Jews when they said to him, ‘I think that you say, “A Garden whose breadth is like that of the heaven and the earth.” So where is the Fire?’ They told him, ‘You have taken this from what is in the Torah.’

Breadth is used instead of height because height is usually greater than width. When height is mentioned, it does not indicate the extent of the breadth. Az-Zuhrī says, ‘No one knows its height except Allah.’ This is like Allah’s words: ‘They will be reclining on couches lined with rich brocade.’ (55:54) He described the lining as being the most excellent that is possible since it is known that the outside of something is always better than its lining. The Arabs say, ‘a wide land’ and ‘a wide wilderness’. A poet says:

It is as the lands of Allah which, although they are wide, are like the palm of the snatcher of a fearful fugitive.

People also say that this is simply a metaphorical usage in Arabic. Since the Garden has the greatest possible dimensions in respect of space and breadth, it is good to refer to it as ‘the breadth of the heavens and the earth.’ It like referring to a man by saying, ‘This one is an ocean’ and to a large animal by saying, ‘This one is a mountain.’ The āyah does not intend to define its breadth, but it means that it is the widest thing you could possibly imagine.

Most scholars say that the Garden is already created since Allah uses the word, ‘prepared’. We also have the evidence provided by the hadiths about the Night Journey and other sound hadiths. The Mu‘tazilites claim that neither the Garden nor the Fire is created now and that Allah will create them when He rolls up this world. He will start with the creation of the Garden and the Fire in whatever way He wishes because they are the Abode of Repayment in respect of both reward and punishment. They say that they will be created after the acknowledgment of responsibility at the moment of repayment and that, just as the responsibility and repayment are not combined in this world, they are not combined in the Next World either.

Ibn Fūrak said, ‘What is in the Garden will increase on the Day of Rising.’ Ibn ‘Aṭīyah said, ‘This is a reference to what Mundhir ibn Sa‘īd and others say about the Garden not being created yet.’ Ibn ‘Aṭīyah also said, ‘The words “What is in the Garden will increase on the Day of Rising” indicate that it already exists, but it needs addition for the increase to occur.’

Ibn ‘Aṭīyyah spoke the truth. He said, ‘In respect of the Footstool, the seven heavens and the seven earths are like a dirham thrown into a wilderness on earth. In respect of the Throne, the Footstool is like a ring cast into a wilderness. The Garden is now as it will be in the Next World. Its breadth is like the breadth of the heavens and the earth. According to what is related in Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim, the Throne is its ceiling. It is known that the ceiling contains what is under it and more. If all created things are like a ring in comparison to it, who is capable of estimating its dimensions? Only Allah, its Creator whose power has no end and the vastness of whose kingdom is without limit knows its height and breadth. Glory be to Him and exalted is He!’

الَّذِينَ يَنْفِقُونَ فِي السَّرَّاءِ وَالضَّرَّاءِ وَالْكُلُوبِ وَالْغَيْظِ وَالْعَافِينَ
عَنِ النَّاسِ وَاللَّهُ يُحِبُّ الْمُحْسِنِينَ ﴿١٣٤﴾

134 those who give in times of both ease and hardship, those who control their rage and pardon other people –
Allah loves the good-doers –

those who give in times of both ease and hardship,

This is one of the qualities of the godfearing for whom the Garden is prepared. The literal meaning of the āyah is that it is praise for doing acts that are recommended. Ibn ‘Abbās, al-Kalbī and Muqātil said that sarrā’ is ease and darrā’ is difficulty. ‘Ubayd ibn ‘Umayr and aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk said that they mean comfort and hardship. It is said that they mean health and illness. Ease and hardship can also refer to health and illness, or life and bequests after death. It is also said to refer to weddings and wedding feasts and to calamities and tragedies. It is said to mean spending which delights you, like spending on your children and relatives on the one hand, and giving to your enemies on the other. Or it can refer to hospitality and gifts on the one hand, and to what is spent on those who cause harm on the other. The āyah is universal.

those who control their rage.

Controlling rage is to retract it into yourself. It is said that it refers to someone who does not display his rage when he is able to inflict it on his enemy. The verb is also used in irrigation when the onward flow is blocked so that the water builds up. Kizāmah is something that blocks the flow of water. From it comes the word kizām which is a stopper for a bottle or waterskin. When the cud is stopped before it reaches an animal's mouth, the verb for that is kazama, as az-Zajjāj said. One describes a male camel and she-camel in that way. [POEM] It is said that that happens to the camel in a state of alarm when it refuses to move. The word akzūm is used of a man filled with sorrow and grief. We find in the Revelation: 'His eyes turned white from sorrow, hidden within him (kazīm).' (12:84), 'His face darkens and he is furious (kazīm)' (16:58) and 'when he called out in absolute despair (makzūm).' (68:48)

Ghayz (rage) is the source of anger and they often go together. The difference between them is that rage does not show on the limbs while anger shows through action. That is why anger is ascribed to Allah when it designates His actions against those with whom He is angry. Some people explain rage as being anger, but this is not good. Allah knows best.

pardon other people

Pardoning people is the most majestic form of good action when a person pardons another when he sees he is in the right. When someone deserves punishment and is spared, he has been pardoned. There is disagreement about the identity of the 'people' referred to here. Abu-l-ʿĀliyah, al-Kalbī and az-Zajjāj said that it means slaves. Ibn ʿAṭīyah says that this is good as an example since they are servants and often commit wrong action and power over them is easy to have and they are easy to punish.

It is reported that one day, when he had guests, the slavegirl of Mihrān ibn Maymūn brought in a bowl of hot broth. She stumbled and the broth went over him. He wanted to beat her and the girl said, ‘My master, implement the words of Allah: “those who control their rage.”’ ‘I have done it,’ he answered. She said, ‘And act by what follows it: “pardon other people.”’ He stated, ‘I have pardoned you.’ The slave-girl then said: ‘Allah loves the good-doers.’ He said, ‘I will act well by you. You are free for the sake of Allah.’ Something similar is related from al-Aḥnaf ibn Qays.

Zayd ibn Aslam said that what is meant is pardoning their wrongdoing and evil. This is general and it is the literal meaning of the āyah. Muqātil ibn Ḥayyān said about this āyah, ‘We heard that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said about it, “There are only a few of those among my community; only someone protected by Allah. They were numerous in the nations of the past.” Allah praises those who forgive when they are angry when He says: ‘When they are angry, they forgive’ (42:38). Here He praises those who control their rage. He says that He loves them for acting well in that respect.

There are many hadiths reported about controlling rage, pardoning people and controlling oneself when angry. It is one of the greatest acts of worship and jihād of the nafs. The Prophet ﷺ said, ‘The strong man is not the one who throws people down in wrestling. The strong man is the one who has control of himself when he is angry.’ And he said ﷺ, ‘There is nothing which one can swallow better and with a greater reward than swallowing one’s rage for the sake of Allah.’ Anas reported that a man asked, ‘Messenger of Allah, what is the strongest thing of all?’ ‘The anger of Allah,’ he replied. He asked, ‘And what will save a person from the anger of Allah?’ ‘Not getting angry,’ he replied. Al-‘Arjī said:

When you are angry, be dignified and control your rage.

Then you will see what you say and hear.

It is enough of an honour that you are patient for a time:

Allah will be pleased with you and you will be elevated.

‘Urwah ibn az-Zubayr said about pardon:

People will not achieve glory, even if they are noble, until they are humble even though they are mighty against people.

They are insulted and you see their colours shining.

It is not pardon due to abasement, but rather the pardon of honour.

Abū Dāwūd and at-Tirmidhī related from Mu‘ādh ibn Anas al-Juhanī that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘If anyone controls his rage when he is able to act on it, Allah will summon him in front of creatures and give him a choice to have whichever of the houris he wishes.’ He said that it is a ḥasan gharīb hadith. Anas reported that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘On the Day of Rising, a caller will call out, “Whoever is due a wage from Allah should enter the Garden.” It will be asked, “Who is due a wage from Allah?” The reply will come, “Those who pardoned others will stand and enter the Garden without any reckoning.”’

Ibn al-Mubārak said, ‘I was sitting with Manṣūr when he ordered a man to be killed. I said, “Amīr al-Mu‘minīn! The Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘On the Day of Rising a caller will call out before Allah, “Whoever has a hold on Allah should come forward.” None will come forward except the one who pardoned a wrong action.”’
He ordered that he be let go.’

Allah loves the good-doers

This means that He will reward them for their doing good. Sarī as-Saqaṭī said, ‘Doing good is to do good at the moment when it is possible. Not every moment has good-doing possible in it.’ A poet said:

Hasten to do good when you are able to do so.

You will not be able to do so all the time.

Abu-l-‘Abbās al-Jummānī said:

Not every moment and time

Provides scope for acts of charity.

When you are able, then make haste out of fear of the time when it is not possible.

All of this was already discussed in al-Baqarah.

وَالَّذِينَ إِذَا فَعَلُوا خِيئَةً أَوْ ظَلَمُوا أَنْفُسَهُمْ ذَكَرُوا اللَّهَ فَاسْتَغْفَرُوا
لِدُنُوبِهِمْ وَمَنْ يَغْفِرُ الذُّنُوبَ إِلَّا اللَّهُ وَلَمْ يُصِرُّوا عَلَىٰ مَا فَعَلُوا وَهُمْ
يَعْلَمُونَ ﴿١٣٥﴾

135 those who, when they act indecently or wrong themselves, remember Allah and ask forgiveness for their bad actions (and who can forgive bad actions except Allah?) and do not knowingly persist in what they were doing.

Those who, when they act indecently or wrong themselves,

In this āyah Allah speaks of a group who are lesser than the first group but connects them with them out His mercy and favour. They are those who repent. ‘Aṭā’ related that Ibn ‘Abbās said, ‘This āyah was revealed about Nabhān at-Tammār. His kunyah was Abū Muqbil. A beautiful woman came to him to sell him some dates. He pulled her to him and kissed her and then regretted doing that. He went to the Prophet ﷺ and mentioned it and this āyah was revealed.’

In the Musnad of Abū Dāwūd aṭ-Ṭayālīsī, ‘Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib and Abū Bakr reported that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘There is no one who commits a wrong action and prays two rak‘ahs and then asks Allah for forgiveness without Allah forgiving him.’ Then he recited this āyah and the āyah: ‘Anyone who does evil or wrongs himself...’ (4:110) At-Tirmidhī transmitted it and said that it is a ḥasan hadith.

The āyah is general. It was sent down about a particular occasion but then applies to all who have done that or worse. It is said that the reason that this āyah was revealed was that a Thaqaḫī man went on an expedition and left an Anṣārī friend of his to look after his family. That man betrayed him by attempting to force himself on his wife. She defended herself and he only kissed her hand. He regretted doing that and went out wandering about the place in regret and repentance. The Thaqaḫī came and his wife told him what his friend had done. He went out after him and took him to Abū Bakr and ‘Umar hoping that there would be some relief for him but they just rebuked him. He went to the Prophet ﷺ and told him what he had done and then this āyah was revealed. It is more fitting that it is general because of the hadith.

Ibn Mas‘ūd reported that the Companions said, ‘Messenger of Allah, the tribe of Israel is more honoured by Allah than we are. When one of them committed a wrong action, in the morning his punishment was written on the door of his house. (One variant has ‘the expiation of his wrong action was written on the lintel of his house.’): “Cut off your nose. Cut off your ear,” and so on.’ Then Allah revealed this āyah as expansion, mercy and replacement for that which was done among the tribe of Israel. It is related that Iblīs wept when this āyah was revealed.

The word ‘fāḫishah’ (indecenty) is used for all types of disobedience but is often specific to fornication so that Jābir ibn ‘Abdullāh and as-Suddī said that this āyah is about fornication. In the words ‘or wrong themselves’, it is said that ‘or’ here means ‘and’ what is meant are actions less than the major wrong actions.

remember Allah and ask forgiveness for their bad actions

‘Remember Allah’ here means accompanied by fear of His punishment and shame before Him. Aḍ-Daḥḥāk said, ‘They remember the Great Day of Presentation before Allah, and it is said that they realise in themselves that Allah will question them about what they did,’ as is also stated by al-Kalbī and Muqātil. Muqātil also says that they remember Allah on the tongue when they commit wrong actions.

The phrase 'ask forgiveness for their bad actions,' means that they seek forgiveness because of their wrong actions and this applies to every expression or supplication of this sort. We already mentioned at the beginning of this sūrah the 'master of asking forgiveness' and that its time is before dawn. Asking forgiveness is a tremendous matter and its reward huge, so that at-Tirmidhī reported that the Prophet ﷺ said, 'If anyone says, "I ask forgiveness of Allah, and there is no god but Him, the Living, the-Self-Sustaining and I turn to Him in repentance," he will be forgiven, even if he had fled from the heat of battle.' Abū Hurayrah said, 'I did not see anyone who asked for forgiveness more than the Messenger of Allah ﷺ.' Makhūl said, 'I did not see anyone who asked for forgiveness more than Abū Hurayrah.' Makhūl used also to often pray for forgiveness.

Our scholars said that the form of asking forgiveness which is desired is one that removes persistence in the wrong action and whose effect is confirmed in the heart, not just the expression on the tongue. As for someone who says, 'I ask Allah's forgiveness' with his tongue while persisting in the disobedience he is asking forgiveness for, he must ask forgiveness for doing that, and his minor wrong action is joined to the major ones. Al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī said, 'Our asking forgiveness requires asking forgiveness.' This was in his time, so what is it like in our time when a person is seen to be bent on doing wrong and eager for it while the prayer beads are in his hand and he is claiming that he is asking for Allah's forgiveness for his wrong actions? That is nothing but mockery on his part. Allah says: 'Do not make a mockery of Allah's signs.' (2:231)

Who can forgive bad actions except Allah?

This means that there is no one who forgives disobedience nor removes its punishment except Allah.

and do not knowingly persist in what they were doing.

'Do not persist' means that they should not remain fixed and resolved on continuing what they were doing. Mujāhid said, ‘They do not continue in it.’ Ma‘bad ibn Šubayḥ said, ‘I prayed behind ‘Uthmān with ‘Alī at my side. He turned to us and said, ‘I prayed without wudū’.’ Then he left and did wudū’ and prayed.’

Persisting is to resolve on a matter with the heart and not refrain from it. The verb is used for tying up dirhams in a purse. Al-Ḥaṭī‘ah said when describing horses:

Faces frowning, not curried, brave.

When they are asked to gallop with whips, they persist.

They are firm in running. Qatādah said that ‘persisting’ is being obdurate in disobeying Allah. A poet said:

He persists at night when his deeds are hidden.

Woe! Everyone with an obdurate heart is a cheat.

Sahl ibn ‘Abdullāh said, ‘The ignorant man is dead. The forgetful man is asleep. The rebellious man is drunk. The persistent man is destroyed. Persistence lies in procrastination. Procrastination is to say, “I will repent tomorrow.” This is the claim of the nafs. How can it repent tomorrow when it has no control over it!’ Someone else said, ‘Persistence is to intend not to repent. When someone intends to repent, their persistence ceases.’ Sahl’s version is better. It is reported that the Prophet said ﷺ, ‘There is no repentance when there is persistence [in the action].’

Our scholars say that what brings about repentance and not persisting is constant reflection on the Book of Allah, the Almighty, Ever-Forgiving, and what He has mentioned of the details of the Garden promised for the obedient and what He has described of the punishment of the Fire threatened for the disobedient. A person continues doing that until his fear and hope are strong and he calls on Allah with the awe and longing that are the fruits of hope and fear. He fears the punishment and hopes for the reward. It is Allah Who gives success in doing what is correct. It is said that what brings it about is a Divine awakening by which Allah alerts those for whom He desires happiness to the ugliness and harm of wrong actions since they are a deadly poison.

I say that this does not exactly accord with the expression, but does accord with the meaning. A person does not reflect on the promise and threat of Allah unless He alerts him to it. When, by success granted by Allah, someone looks at himself and finds himself filled with the wrong actions he has done and the evils he has committed, and regrets his excess and abandons it out of fear of Allah's punishment, then Allah affirms that he repents. If he does not do that, he persists in disobedience. Sahl ibn 'Abdullāh said, 'The sign of true repentance is that the wrong action distracts him from food and drink, as happened with the three who stayed behind [the Tabūk expedition].'

There are various things said about the word 'knowingly'. It is said that it means that they remember their wrong actions and repent of them. An-Naḥḥās says that this is a good understanding. It is said that it means that they know that Allah will punish persistence in wrongdoing. 'Abdullāh ibn 'Ubayd ibn 'Umayr said that it means that they know that if they repent, Allah will turn to them. It is said that it means that they know that if they ask for forgiveness, Allah will forgive them. It is said that they know what is forbidden for them. That was stated by Ibn Ishāq. Ibn 'Abbās, al-Ḥasan, Muqātil and al-Kalbī said that it means that they know that persistence is harmful and that it is better to leave it than to persist in it. Al-Ḥasan ibn al-Faḍl said that it means that they know that they have a Lord who forgives wrong actions.

This is taken from the hadith of Abū Hurayrah in which the Prophet ﷺ said, 'Someone committed a wrong action and said, "O Allah, forgive me my wrong action!" Allah, Blessed and Exalted, said, "My slave committed a wrong action and then acknowledged that he had a Lord who forgives wrong action and punishes wrong action.” That person again committed a wrong action and said, “O Lord, forgive me my wrong action!” Allah, Blessed and Exalted, said, “My slave committed a wrong action and then acknowledged that he had a Lord who forgives wrong action and punishes wrong action.” Then the same person again committed a wrong action and said, “O Lord, forgive me my wrong action!” Allah, Blessed and Exalted, said, “My slave committed a wrong action and then acknowledged that he had a Lord who forgives wrong action and punishes wrong action. I have forgiven My slave so let him do what he likes.” Muslim transmitted it.

This is evidence for the validity of repentance after breaking it by repeating the wrong action because the first repentance was obedience. Then it was broken and another new act of repentance is required. Returning to wrong action is uglier than doing it the first time because undoing repentance is ascribed to the second wrong action. Returning to repentance is better than doing it the first time because it entails clinging to the Gate of the Generous because none but Him can forgive wrong actions.

His words at the end of the hadith, ‘Let him do what he likes,’ is a command which actually means honour according to one view. It is like Allah’s words: ‘Enter it in peace.’ (15:46) The end of the words is a report about the state of the person who is told that he has been forgiven his earlier wrong actions and, Allah willing, is protected in his future affairs.

The āyah indicates the immense benefit of acknowledging one’s wrong actions and asking for forgiveness for them. The Prophet ﷺ said, ‘When someone acknowledges his wrong action and then repents to Allah, Allah turns to him.’ It is transmitted in both Ṣaḥīḥ collections. Someone said:

A lad is entitled to pardon when he admits to the wrong actions he committed.

Someone else said:

Admit your wrong action and then ask to have it excused.

Denial of the wrong action means there are two wrong actions.

We find in another hadith in Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim that Abū Hurayrah reported that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘By the One in Whose hand my soul is, if you had not sinned, Allah would have removed you and brought other people who did commit wrong actions and asked for the forgiveness of Allah Almighty so that He could forgive them.’ This is the benefit which comes from the names of Allah, the Ever-Forgiving (al-Ghafūr) and the One Who Turns to His slaves (at-Tawwāb), as we explained in Kitāb al-Asnā.

The wrong actions for which one can repent are either kufṛ or something else. The repentance of the unbeliever is to believe while regretting his past disbelief. Faith on its own does not constitute repentance. Repentance for anything other than kufṛ is either on account of a right due to Allah or a right due to others. In the case of the right of Allah, it is enough repentance to abandon not observing it, although in some cases the Sharī‘ah is not satisfied with simple abandonment but requires the action to be made up, like the prayer and fasting, and in other cases expiation is necessary, such as for breaking oaths and ẓihār. Where the rights of other people are concerned, they must be fulfilled to those to whom they are owed. If they are not found, then one gives ṣadaqah on their behalf. If someone finds no way to come up with what he owes due to hardship, then it is hoped that Allah will pardon him. His bounty is freely given. How many He has provided surety against consequences and changed their evil deeds into good deeds. This will be explained later.

If someone does not remember his wrong action and recognise it, he does not have to repent for it specifically, but when he remembers a wrong action, he must repent of it. The interpretation of many people of what our Shaykh Abū Muḥammad ‘Abd al-Mu‘ṭī al-Iskandarānī mentioned from al-Muḥāsibī, namely that repentance for a category of actions is not valid, means that regret for them as a whole is not sufficient. A person has to repent of each transgression by his limb or heart specifically. People thought that that was his position but it is not what he meant and his words do not demand that understanding. The ruling is that when someone recognises the ruling of actions, and the disobedience he has done, then it is valid for him to repent of all of them that he acknowledges. If he does not recognise that the action was in disobedience to Allah, then he cannot repent of it, either as a whole or in particular. That is like when a man is involved in one of the categories of usury without knowing that it is usury. When he hears the words of Allah: 'You who believe, have taqwā of Allah and forgo any remaining usury if you are believers. If you do not, know that it means war from Allah and from His Messenger' (2:2778-279), he finds the threat terrible but thinks that he is safe from usury. When he learns the reality of usury now and thinks about what he has done in the past and knows that he has been involved in a lot of usury in the past, then it is sound for him to repent of all of it now and he does not have to specify each instance of it.

That is true of all the wrong actions and evil deeds someone has done, such as slander, tale-bearing and other forbidden actions which they did not know were forbidden. When they understand the import of their past words, then they can repent of all of that and regret being remiss in what was due to Allah. When they ask the one they wronged to release them and he releases them overall and is content with forgoing his right, that is permitted because it comes under the legal principle of giving something which is unknown. This happens in spite of a people's greed and avarice in seeking their due, so how is it then with the Most Generous of the generous Who bounteously bestows acts in which Allah is obeyed and gives the means to do them and pardons disobedience, both small and great?

Our Shaykh said that this is what the imam means and it is that which his words indicate for the one who studies it. What someone thinks about regret only being valid for the actual action done or movement made or a specific silence would be attributing responsibility for something no one is actually capable of undertaking and that is not prescribed in the Sharī'ah, even if it is logically possible. The person would have to know exactly how many sips of wine he had taken, exactly how many movements he had made when fornicating, and exactly how many steps he had taken towards the ḥarām. No one is able to do that and therefore repent in an exactly specific way. More concerning the rulings and preconditions of repentance will be dealt with in an-Nīsā' and elsewhere, Allah willing.

and do not knowingly persist in what they were doing.

This is clear evidence for what Qāḍī Abū Bakr ibn aṭ-Ṭayyib said, 'A person is punished for any disobedience he prepares for consciously and resolves on with his heart.' We find in revelation: 'Those who desire to profane it with wrongdoing, We will let them taste a painful punishment.' (22:25). Allah says: 'In the morning it was like burnt land stripped bare.' (68:30) The people referred to here were punished before their action because of their resolve as will be explained in the appropriate place. In a hadith in al-Bukhārī we find, 'When two Muslims clash with their swords, then both the killer and killed are in the Fire.' They asked, 'Messenger of Allah, we can understand this with regard to the killer, but what about the murdered man?' He said, 'He also was eager to kill his companion.' So threat is directed at the desire, which is the resolve and unsheathing of weapons.

Evidence of this is also found what at-Tirmidhī related in a sound marfū' report from Abū Kabshah al-Anmārī: 'This world consists of four types of people. There are those whom Allah provides with money and knowledge and they are fearful of their Lord in respect of it and maintain ties of kinship with it and acknowledge the right of Allah over it. Such a person is in the best position. There are those whom Allah provides with knowledge but does not provide with money. They have a sincere intention and say, “If I had money, I would have acted as so-and-so acted.” Such a person is rewarded according to his intention, so the reward of both types is the same. There are those whom Allah provides with money but does not provide with knowledge, so they proceed haphazardly with their money without any knowledge. Such a person is not fearful of his Lord in respect of it nor does he maintain ties of kinship with it nor acknowledge the right of Allah over it. This person is in the worst position. Then there are those whom Allah does not provide with either money nor knowledge, so such a person says, “If I had money, I would have acted as so-and-so acted.” He is repaid according to his intention, so the burden of sin of both of them is the same.’

This is the position of the Qāḍī and it is that of the generality of the early generations and people of knowledge among the fuqahā, hadith scholars and mutakallimūn. One pays no attention to any disagreement about this on the part of those who say that a person is not taken to task for what he only intends to do and mentally prepares for.

There is no contrary evidence in the words of the Prophet ﷺ: ‘If someone intends to commit an evil action and does not do it, it is not recorded for him. If he does it, one wrong action is recorded.’ That is because ‘if he does not do it’ means that he does not resolve on doing it as indicated by what we mentioned. ‘If he does it’ means that he actually does it or resolves to do it. Success is by Allah.

أُولَٰئِكَ جَزَاءُ هُمْ مَغْفِرَةٌ مِّن رَّبِّهِمْ وَجَنَّاتٌ تَجْرِي مِن تَحْتِهَا الْأَنْهَارُ
خَالِدِينَ فِيهَا وَنَعْمَ أَجْرُ الْعَامِلِينَ ﴿١٣٦﴾

136 Their recompense is forgiveness from their Lord, and Gardens with rivers flowing under them, remaining in them timelessly, for ever. How excellent is the reward of those who act!

After forgiving wrong actions, Allah is generous towards those who are sincere in repentance and do not persist in wrong action. This can also be connected to the story of Uḥud and refer to those who fled, but then turned in repentance and did not persist. Allah will forgive them.

فَدَخَلَتْ مِنْ قَبْلِكُمْ سُنَنٌ فَسِيرُوا فِي الْأَرْضِ فَانظُرُوا
كَيْفَ كَانَ عَاقِبَةُ الْمُكَذِبِينَ ﴿١٣٧﴾

137 Whole societies have passed away before your time, so travel about the earth and see the final fate of the deniers.

This is solace from Allah for the believers. Sunan here is the plural of sunnah, which is the Straight Path. A person who is on a straight path does not incline to any lower desires. Al-Hudhalī said:

Do not be alarmed by a sunnah that you are travelling on.

The first to be pleased with a sunnah is the one who travels on it.

Sunnah also means a leader or imām who is followed, and one says, ‘So-and-so is an excellent sunnah’ when people imitate him in good. It is also used for a bad leader in the same way. Labīd said:

There is a group whose fathers are their sunnah.

Each group of people have a sunnah and their leader.

Sunnah also refers to a nation. Sunnahs are nations. The poem goes:

People have not seen any virtue like their virtue and have not seen their like in past nations (sunan).

Az-Zajjāj says that what is meant are the people of sunnahs. There is elision. Ibn Zayd said it means ‘likes’. ‘Aṭā’ said that it means laws. Mujāhid says that it refers to those nations like ‘Ād and Thamūd who were destroyed before you.

The ‘final fate’ is the end of the business and refers to the Battle of Uḥud. Allah is saying, ‘I give them a delay and a respite and draw them on until the book reaches its term,’ meaning the victory of Allah and the believers, and the destruction of the enemy who are unbelievers.

هَذَا بَيَانٌ لِلنَّاسِ وَهُدًى وَمَوْعِظَةٌ لِّلَّذِينَ آمَنُوا ﴿٣٨﴾

138 This is a clear explanation for all mankind, and guidance and admonition for those who are godfearing.

This means the Qur’an, as al-Ḥasan and others said. It is said that it indicates the previous āyah: ‘Whole societies have passed away before your time’ and is a threat.

وَلَا تَهِنُوا وَلَا تَحْزَنُوا وَأَنْتُمُ الْأَعْلَوْنَ إِنْ كُنْتُمْ مُؤْمِنِينَ ﴿٣٩﴾

139 Do not give up and do not be downhearted. You shall be uppermost if you are believers.

Allah comforted and consoled them for the killing and wounding they suffered at Uḥud and encouraged them to fight their enemy and forbade them to be feeble and lose heart. The phrase ‘Do not give up’ means ‘Do not be weak and cowardly, Companions of Muḥammad, about fighting your enemies because of what befell you.’ ‘Do not be downhearted’ for your losses or the defeat. ‘You shall be uppermost’ means: ‘You will have the victory in the end if “you believe” in the truth of My promise.’ It is said that ‘if’ (in) here means ‘when’.

Ibn ‘Abbās said, ‘The Companions of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ were defeated at Uḥud and while they were in that condition, Khālīd ibn al-Walīd came with his cavalry and wanted to look down on them from the mountain. The Prophet ﷺ said, “O Allah, do not let them be above us! O Allah, we have no strength except by You, O Allah, only this group worship you in the land,” and Allah revealed this āyah. A group of Muslims archers went up the mountain and shot at the horses of the idolaters until they routed them.’ That is what His words, ‘You shall be the uppermost’ are referring to.

The āyah means that after Uḥud they will always overcome their enemies. Indeed after that no army went out during the time of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ without being victorious, and in every battle after the Messenger of Allah ﷺ, where even one of the Companions was present, they had victory. All these lands were conquered during the time of the Companions of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ. When they came to an end, no land was conquered as they had conquered them all in their time.

This āyah is conclusive evidence of the excellence of this community because they are addressed directly in the same way that Allah addressed His Prophets. Allah said to Mūsā: 'You will be uppermost.' (20:68) He told this community: 'You shall be the uppermost.' This is derived from His Name, al-A'lā (Most High).

إِنَّمَسَسَكُمُ قَرْحٌ فَقَدْ مَسَّ الْقَوْمَ قَرْحٌ مِّثْلُهُ، وَتِلْكَ الْأَيَّامُ نَدَاوَهُنَّابَيْنَ

140 If you have received a wound, they have already received a similar wound. We deal out such days to people turn by turn, so that Allah will know those who believe and can gather martyrs from among you – Allah does not love wrongdoers –

If you have received a wound, they have already received a similar wound.

‘Wound’ is read both as qarḥ and qurḥ. According to al-Kisā’ī and al-Akhfash, they are two dialectical forms. Al-Farrā’, however, said that qarḥ means a wound and qurḥ means pain. It means: If you were wounded at Uḥud, they were wounded at Badr. Muḥammad ibn as-Samayfa‘ recited ‘qarah’.

We deal out such days to people turn by turn,

This is said to be in war: sometimes to the believers so that Allah gives victory to His dīn, and sometimes to the unbelievers when the believers disobey, in order to test them and purify them of their wrong actions. When they do not disobey Allah, the party of Allah will be the victors. It is said that it refers to the alternation of joy and sorrow, health and illness, wealth and poverty. 'Dawlah' is to come around again. A poet said:

One day is for us and one day is against us.

One day of delay and one day of victory.

so that Allah will know those who believe

This alternation is to set apart the believer from the hypocrite and distinguish between them as is clear in Allah's words: 'What assailed you on the day the two armies met was by Allah's permission, so that He would know the believers, and so that He would know the hypocrites.' (3:166-167) It is said that it is in order to know the steadfastness of the believers for which they will be rewarded just as He informed them that they are responsible.

and can gather martyrs from among you.

This means to honour you with martyrdom, with the implication that some people will be slain so that they can be witnesses against people by their actions. It is said, 'This is why he is called a martyr (shahīd).' It is also said to be because the Garden bears witness for him, and it is said that their spirits are present in the Abode of Peace because they are alive in the presence of their Lord while the souls of others have not yet reached the Garden. So shahīd in fact means shāhid, or present in the Garden. This is sound, as will come later.

The virtue of martyrdom is immense. Enough for you regarding that are the words of the Almighty: 'Allah buys from the believers their selves...' (9:111) and 'O you who believe! shall I direct you to a transaction which will save you from a painful punishment? It is to believe in Allah and His Messenger and do jihad in the Way of Allah with your wealth and your selves ... That is the Great Victory.' (61:10-12)

We find in the Ṣaḥīḥ of al-Bustī from Abū Hurayrah that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘What the martyr experiences from being killed is no more than one of you experiences from a wound.’ An-Nasā’ī related from Rāshid ibn Sa’d from one of the Companions of the Prophet ﷺ that a man said, ‘Messenger of Allah, why is the martyr excused from what other believers are tested with in their graves?’ He replied, ‘The flash of the sword at his head is his test.’

We find in al-Bukhārī: ‘Those Muslims killed in the Battle of Uḥud included Ḥamzah, al-Yamān, an-Naḍr ibn Anas and Muṣ‘ab ibn ‘Umayr.’ Amr ibn ‘Alī related from Mu‘ādh ibn Hishām from his father that Qatādah said, ‘We do not know of any tribe of the Arabs with more martyrs and mightier on the Day of Rising than the Anṣār.’ Qatādah said, ‘Anas ibn Mālīk related to us that seventy were killed in the Battle of Uḥud, seventy at Bi’r Ma‘ūnah and seventy in the Battle of Yamāmah.’ He added, ‘Bi’r Ma‘ūnah was in the time of the Prophet ﷺ and the Battle of Yamāmah was in the time of Abū Bakr against Musaylimah the Liar.’

Anas said, ‘Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib was brought to the Prophet ﷺ with over sixty wounds from stabbings, blows or thrusts. The Prophet ﷺ began to pass his hand over him and they were healed by Allah’s permission as if they had not been there.’

The words ‘gather martyrs from among you’ indicate that Allah’s Will is not the same as His Command, which is the position of the people of the Sunnah. Allah forbade the unbelievers to kill the believers – Ḥamzah and others – while He willed that they be killed. He forbade Ādam to eat from the tree while He willed that he would do so. He ordered Iblīs to prostrate but did not will that he do so and so Iblīs refused. That is indicated by His words: ‘but Allah was averse to their setting out so He held them back.’ (9:46) He commanded all of them to do jihād but created laziness and the reasons that stop people from doing it.

It is reported that ‘Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib said, ‘Jibrīl came to the Prophet ﷺ at Badr and said to him, “Give your Companions a choice regarding the captives. They can either kill them or let them be ransomed, but if they do that the like number of them will be killed next year.” They said, “The ransom and let us be killed.”’ At-Tirmidhī related it and said that it is a ḥasan hadith. Allah fulfilled His promise by the martyrdom of His friends after He had given them a choice and they chose being killed.

Allah does not love wrongdoers

This means the idolaters. Even if they receive injury from the believers, Allah does not love the unbelievers, but if He allows pain to be afflicted on the believers, it is a sign that He loves them.

وَلِيُحِصَّ اللَّهُ الَّذِينَ ءَامَنُوا وَتَحَقَّقَ الْكُفْرَ بَيْنَ ۝

141 and so that Allah can purge those who believe and wipe out the unbelievers.

There are three things said about this. One is that the word ‘purge’ means ‘to test’. The second is that it means ‘to purge’ them of their wrong actions, which would apply some elision. Al-Farrā’ said that. The third is that the meaning is ‘to purify’. Al-Khalīl says the verb is used for a rope which is smoothed. Part of that usage is: ‘O Allah, purge us of our wrong actions,’ meaning to save us from being punished for them.

Abū Ishāq az-Zajjāj said, ‘I read out to Muḥammad ibn Zayd that al-Khalīl said that purging is delivering.’ It means that He tests the believers to make them firm and purify them of their wrong actions. He will wipe out the unbelievers by destruction.

أَمْ حَسِبْتُمْ أَنْ تَدْخُلُوا الْجَنَّةَ وَلَمَّا يَعْلَمِ اللَّهُ الَّذِينَ جَاهَدُوا مِنْكُمْ وَيَعْلَمِ
الصَّالِحِينَ ۝

142 Or did you imagine that you were going to enter the Garden without Allah knowing those among you who had struggled and knowing the steadfast?

‘Am’ can mean ‘indeed’ or it is said that the mām is extra. It means: ‘Did you suppose, you who were defeated at Uḥud, that you would enter the Garden as those who entered who were killed and endured the pain of wounds and killing without proceeding on their path and being steadfast as they were steadfast?’ The words ‘without Allah knowing those among you who had struggled,’ refer to knowledge of witnessing so that there is repayment. It means: without knowing those who did not struggle so that He knows that from you.

In the phrase ‘knowing the steadfast,’ the verb has a fathah (ya‘lama) because of an implied ‘an’ according to al-Khalīl. Al-Ḥasan and Yaḥyā ibn Ya‘mar recited ‘ya‘lami’ in the jussive case based on the context. It can also be recited as ‘ya‘lamu’ as a separate sentence, and this is the reading of ‘Abd al-Wārith from Abū ‘Amr. The wāw means ‘so that’.

وَلَقَدْ كُفِّرْتُمْ مَمْتُونَ الْمَوْتِ مِنْ قَبْلِ أَنْ تَلْقَوْهُ فَقَدْ رَأَيْتُمُوهُ وَأَنْتُمْ
نَنْظُرُونَ ﴿٣٣﴾

143 You were longing for death before you met it. Now you have seen it with your own eyes.

‘You were longing for death,’ in other words martyrdom, before you met it. It is before killing or before meeting the causes of death. That is because many of those who had not been at Badr used to wish for a day of fighting. Then they were defeated at Uḥud. Some of them remained firm until they were killed, including Anas ibn an-Naḍr. When the Muslims withdrew, he said, ‘O Allah, I am free of what those have done!’ He joined the fight and exclaimed, ‘It is the fragrance of the Garden that I sense!’ He fought until he was martyred. Anas said, ‘We only recognised him by his finger tips. He had about eighty wounds.’ It is about him and those like him that Allah revealed: ‘men who have been true to the contract they have made with Allah.’ (33:23)

The āyah censures those who were defeated, especially those who encouraged the Prophet ﷺ to leave Madīnah. So this refers to those Muslims who wished for martyrdom based on standing firm and being steadfast in jihad, not for the unbelievers to kill them, because such a wish would be disobedience and disbelief, which one cannot long for. So this question on the part of the Muslims is asking for Allah to grant them martyrdom as well as asking for steadfastness in jihad, even if it results in being killed.

‘Now you have seen it with your own eyes.’ Al-Akhfash said that this is repetition for the sake of stress. It is said that it means: ‘while you are looking with no defect in your eyes’ which is an expression used in Arabic for actually seeing something. This conveys stress. Some of them said that it means: “You were looking at Muḥammad ﷺ. So why were you defeated?”

وَمَا مُحَمَّدٌ إِلَّا رَسُولٌ قَدْ خَلَتْ مِنْ قَبْلِهِ الرُّسُلُ أَفَإِنْ مَاتَ أَوْ قُتِلَ
 انْعَبْتُمْ عَلَىٰ أَعْقَابِكُمْ وَمَنْ يُنْقَلِبْ عَلَىٰ عَقْبَيْهِ فَلَنْ يَضُرَّ اللَّهَ شَيْئًا
 وَسَيَجْزِيهِ اللَّهُ الشُّكْرَ ﴿١٤٨﴾

144 Muḥammad is only a Messenger and he has been preceded by other Messengers. If he were to die or be killed, would you turn on your heels? Those who turn on their heels do not harm Allah in any way. Allah will recompense the thankful.

This was revealed because of the defeat of the Muslims at Uḥud when Shayṭān shouted, ‘Muḥammad has been killed!’ ‘Aṭīyyah al-‘Awfī said, ‘Some people said, “Muḥammad has been struck down, so surrender to them. They are your brothers.” Others said, “If Muḥammad had been struck down, should you not continue as your Prophet did until you join him!” So Allah revealed this āyah about that along with the āyahs after it up to āyah 148.’

The mā in the sentence is negative. Ibn ‘Abbās recited ‘Messengers’ without the definite article. Allah informs us in this āyah that the Messengers do not remain among their people forever and that He desires us to hold to what the Messengers brought, even if they die or are killed. He honoured and chose two names for His Prophet ﷺ which are derived from His Name. These names are Muḥammad and Aḥmad. This is used in Arabic for someone with many praiseworthy qualities. A poet said:

To the noble glorious praised (muḥammad) chief.

This was discussed in al-Fātiḥah. ‘Abbās ibn Mirdās said:

O Seal of the Prophets, you are sent with good! Every guidance to the Path is your guidance.

Allah built love for you for His creation and named you Muḥammad.

This āyah is the end of the censure of those defeated and conveys that they will not be defeated, even if Muḥammad ﷺ is killed. Prophethood is not endangered by death. Allah knows best.

This āyah is the clearest evidence of the courage and boldness of Abū Bakr aṣ-Ṣiddīq. Courage and boldness are defined by the firmness of the heart in the face of affliction, and there could be no calamity greater than the death of the Prophet ﷺ as we explained in al-Baqarah, and at that time his courage and knowledge became clear. People, including ‘Umar, said, ‘The Messenger of Allah ﷺ is not dead!’ ‘Uthmān was mute and ‘Alī hid and things were unsettled. Then the Ṣiddīq removed the confusion with this āyah when he came from his house in Ṣunḥ. The hadith is found in al-Bukhārī.

We find in the Sunan of Ibn Mājah that ‘Ā’ishah said, ‘When the Messenger of Allah ﷺ died while Abū Bakr was with his wife, the daughter of Khārījah, at al-‘Awālī, people began to say, “The Prophet ﷺ has not died. It is just what happens when he is overcome by the revelation!” Abū Bakr came, uncovered his face, kissed him between the eyes and said twice, “You are too noble for Allah to make you die twice! By Allah, the Messenger of Allah ﷺ has died.” ‘Umar was in a corner of the mosque, saying, “By Allah, the Messenger of Allah ﷺ has not died and will not die until he cuts off the hands and feet of many of the hypocrites!” Abū Bakr rose and went up the minbar and said, “Whoever worships Allah, Allah is alive and will never die. Whoever worships Muḥammad, Muḥammad has died. ‘Muḥammad is only a Messenger and he has been preceded by other Messengers. If he were to die or be killed, would you turn on your heels? Those who turn on their heels do not harm Allah in any way. Allah will recompense the thankful.’” ‘Umar said, “It was as if I had not read it until that day.” He retracted what he had been saying.’

This is what Abū Naṣr ‘Ubaydullāh al-Wā’ilī mentioned in Kitāb al-Ibānah. He said that Anas ibn Mālīk heard ‘Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb give allegiance to Abū Bakr in the mosque of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ. He sat on the minbar of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ to testify before Abū Bakr. He said, ‘Yesterday I said something to you, and it is not as I said. By Allah, I did not find what I said in a Book revealed by Allah nor in anything given to me by the Messenger of Allah ﷺ, but I hoped that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ would live so that he could direct us – so that he would be the last of us to die – and Allah chose for His Messenger what is with Him instead of what is with us. This is the Book by which Allah guided His Messenger. Take it and you will be guided by what the Messenger of Allah ﷺ was guided by.’

Abū Naṣr al-Wā’ilī said, ‘The statement that he made and then retracted was: “The Messenger of Allah ﷺ has not died and will not die until he cuts off the hands and feet of many of the hypocrites!” That was due to the immensity of what had happened and his fear of civil unrest and the appearance of hypocrites. When he saw the strength of the greater certainty of Abū Bakr aṣ-Ṣiddīq when he spoke the words of Allah: “Every self will taste death” (3:185), and: “You will die and they too will die” (39:30) and what he said, he came to his senses and was firm. He said, “It was as if I had never heard the āyah before Abū Bakr spoke.” People went out and about in the streets of Madīnah repeating it as if it had only been revealed on that day. There is no dispute about the fact that he ﷺ died on a Monday, at the same time he entered Madīnah on his Hijrah, when it was well into morning, and was buried on Tuesday or Wednesday night.’

Şafīyyah bint ‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib composed an elegy for the Messenger of Allah ﷺ:

O Messenger of Allah! You were our hope!

You were good to us and not harsh.

You were merciful, a guide and a teacher.

Today, everyone who weeps must weep for you.

By your life, I do not weep for the Prophet because of his loss, but out of fear that bloodshed will come.

It is as if it comes on my heart when Muḥammad is mentioned and the burning brands I fear after the Prophet.

May Allah, the Lord of Muḥammad, bless a grave in Yathrib again.

May my mother, maternal aunt, uncle, fathers and my life and property be the ransom of the Messenger of Allah!

You spoke the truth, and conveyed the Message truthfully.

You died a firm staff, bright and clear.

If the Lord of mankind had made our Prophet live
we would have been fortunate, but His command is carried out.

May the greeting of people be to you from Allah and may He admit you in the Gardens of Eden in pleasure.

I see Ḥasan as his orphan and legacy, a young man weeping and praying for his grandfather today.

Why was the burial of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ delayed when he had said to the people of a house who delayed burying their dead, ‘Hurry to bury your corpse. Do not delay it’?

There are three points in the answer. The first is what we mentioned about the lack of agreement over his death. The second was because they did not know where to bury him. Some people said that it should be in al-Baqī’ and others said in the mosque. Some people said that he should be kept until he could be carried to his ancestor Ibrāhīm, until the greatest scholar said, ‘A Prophet is only buried where he dies.’” Ibn Mājah, the Muwattā’ and other sources mentioned it. The third is that they were preoccupied with the dispute which occurred between the Muhājirūn and the Anṣār about allegiance and waited until the business was settled, unity restored, and the situation was secure, and they gave their allegiance to Abū Bakr. Then they gave him a second allegiance on the following day in a group and with their assent. By him Allah delivered them from the catastrophe of the Riddah and the dīn was established. Praise be to Allah, the Lord of the worlds. Then they went back to the Prophet ﷺ and looked into burying him and washed and shrouded him. Allah knows best.

They disagree about whether the funeral prayer was performed for him or not. Some say that it was and some said that it was not but that each person stood to make supplication because he was too elevated to have someone pray over him. Ibn al-‘Arabī said that this is weak because the Sunnah is that there is a prayer in the janāzah as there is a prayer over him in supplication when someone says, ‘O Allah, bless Muḥammad until the Day of Rising,’ and that benefits us.

It is said that the prayer was not said over him because there was no imām. This is weak because whoever establishes the obligatory prayer is their imām. It is also said that people prayed individually because each of them wanted his blessing individually and not subject to anyone else. Allah knows best whether that is sound.

Ibn Mājah transmitted with a ḥasan isnād which is sound from Ibn ‘Abbās: ‘When we finished preparing him on Tuesday, he was placed on the bed in his room and then the people came in and prayed over the Messenger of Allah ﷺ, and when the men had finished, the women came in. When the women were finished, the children came in. None of the people acted as imām over the Messenger of Allah ﷺ.’ It is transmitted from Naṣr ibn ‘Alī al-Jahḍamī from Wahb ibn Jarīr from his father from Muḥammad ibn Ishāq. He said that Ḥusayn ibn ‘Abdullāh related it from ‘Ikrimah from Ibn ‘Abbās.

Concerning the change of circumstance after the death of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ, Anas said, ‘On the day when the Messenger of Allah ﷺ entered Madīnah, every part of it was illuminated. On the day he died, every part was cast into darkness. We had not shaken off the dust from our hands after burying the Messenger of Allah ﷺ until we doubted our own hearts.’ Ibn Mājah transmitted it. Muḥammad ibn Bashshār related from ‘Abd ar-Raḥmān ibn Mahdī from Sufyān from ‘Abdullāh ibn Dīnār that Ibn ‘Umar said, ‘We used to be careful about our words and delighting with our wives in the time of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ fearing that the Qur’an would be revealed about us. When the Messenger of Allah ﷺ died, we spoke.’

Umm Salamah bint Abī Umayyah, the wife of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ, said, ‘In the time of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ, when people stood to pray, their eyes would not leave the spot where their feet were. When the Messenger of Allah ﷺ died and Abū Bakr was in charge and people stood to pray, their eyes would not leave the place of their brow. When Abū Bakr died and ‘Umar was in charge, when people stood to pray, their eyes would not leave the place of the qiblah. When ‘Uthmān ibn ‘Affān was in charge, the fitnah came and then people would look to the right or the left in the prayer.’

If he were to die or be killed, would you turn on your heels?

This is a metaphor for reverting to being unbelievers after faith, according to Qatādah and others. It is said to mean to return to being what they were before. It is said that this refers to actually and not metaphorically being routed. It is said that it means you would behave like apostates.

Those who turn on their heels do not harm Allah in any way.

They will harm themselves and expose themselves to punishment for opposition. Obedience does not help Allah and disobedience does not harm Him. He is free of need of any sort.

Allah will recompense the thankful.

Those who were steadfast, fought, and were martyred. This is a promise connected to a threat.

وَمَا كَانَ لِنَفْسٍ أَنْ تَمُوتَ إِلَّا بِإِذْنِ اللَّهِ كَتَبَ مُوَجَلَاءَ وَمَنْ
يُرِدْ ثَوَابَ الدُّنْيَا نُؤْتِهِ مِنْهَا وَمَنْ يُرِدْ ثَوَابَ الْآخِرَةِ نُؤْتِهِ مِنْهَا
وَسَجَّزِي السَّاجِدِينَ ﴿١٤٥﴾

145 No self can die except with Allah’s permission, at a predetermined time. If anyone desires the reward of this world, We will give him some of it. If anyone desires the reward of the Next World, We will give him some of it.

We will recompense the thankful.

No self can die except with Allah’s permission, at a predetermined time.

This is encouragement to perform jihād and information that death is necessary and that every human being will die, slain or not slain, when the time written for him to die comes. ‘Mu’ajjal’ means at a certain term. ‘With Allah’s permission’ means according to His decision and decree. ‘Kitāb’ here means written by Allah. ‘A predetermined time’ is the time in which Allah knows that the spirit of the person will leave his body. When someone is killed, we know that that is his time and it is not correct to say, ‘If he had not been killed, he would have lived.’ The evidence for this is found in the words of the Almighty:

‘When their time comes, they cannot delay it a single hour or bring it forward’ (7:34), ‘Allah’s appointed time is certainly coming’ (29:5), and ‘There is a prescribed limit to every term.’ (13:38) The Mu‘tazilites claim that the term can be moved forward and back, and that if someone is murdered, he died before his time because the killer is responsible and must pay blood money. Here in this āyah the Almighty makes it clear that no self can die before its time. This will be further discussed in al-A‘rāf, Allah willing. The evidence for this is found in the books of knowledge as will be explained in Tāhā (20:52).

If anyone desires the reward of this world, We will give him some of it.

This means booty. This was revealed about those who left their post to get booty. It is said that it is general to all who desire this world rather than the Next World. It means: ‘We will give him what is allotted for him of it.’ We find in the Revelation: ‘As for anyone who desires this fleeting existence, We hasten in it whatever We will.’ (17:18)

If anyone desires the reward of the Next World, We will give him some of it.

This means We will give him the reward of his actions, as Allah can multiply the reward for whomever He wishes. It is said that it refers to ‘Abdullāh ibn Jubayr and those who remained at their posts until they were killed.

We will recompense the thankful.

We will give them the eternal reward for not fleeing. It is said that it means provision in this world, so that the thankful person does not imagine that he has been deprived of what was allotted him which the unbelievers obtained.

146 Many a Prophet has been killed, when there were many thousands with him! They did not give up in the face of what assailed them in the Way of Allah, nor did they weaken, nor did they yield. Allah loves the steadfast. 147 All they said was, ‘Our Lord, forgive us our wrong actions and any excesses we went to in what we did and make our feet firm and help us against these unbelieving people.’

Many a Prophet has been killed.

Az-Zuhrī said, ‘Shayṭān shouted at Uḥud, ‘Muḥammad has been killed!’ and a group of the Muslims were routed.’ Ka‘b ibn Mālik said, ‘I was the first to recognise the Prophet ﷺ. I saw his eyes shining under the helmet. I called out in my loudest voice, ‘‘This is the Messenger of Allah!’’ He indicated for me to be silent, and then Allah revealed: ‘‘Many a Prophet has been killed when there were many thousands with him!...’’

‘Ka-ayyin’ means ‘how many?’ Al-Khalīl and Sībawayh said that it is ‘ayy’ with the kāf of resemblance added to it and so it is indeclinable with it and means: ‘how many?’ In the copy of the Qur’an it has a nūn because it is a word that has been moved from its basic meaning and its expression has changed because the meaning has changed and then it has been used frequently and there is elision in it.

There are four dialectical forms of the word. Ibn Kathīr recited ‘kā’in’, like ‘kā’in’, as an active participle, its root being kay’ where the yā’ has been changed into an alif as happens with yay’as and thus some say yā'as with ya's. [POEMS] Ibn Muḥayṣin recited 'ka'in' with a hamzah and the alif shortened, like ka'in, which is from kā'in and the alif has been elided. He also has 'ka'yin' like ka'yin and it is a reversal of kay' and it has been lightened. The rest have 'ka-ayyin' like ka'ayyin. It is the root. [POEMS] A fifth version is 'kay'in' like kay'in. It is as if lightened from kayyi' and reversed. [MORE DISCUSSION] An-Naḥḥās said that Abū 'Amr stopped at 'ka'ayy' without a nūn because it is tanwīn. Sawrah ibn al-Mubārak related that from al-Kisā'ī. The rest stop with a nūn following the script of the Qur'an.

The āyah is meant to encourage the believers and is a command to follow those before them who followed the Prophets. It means: many Prophets were killed while there were devout people with them, or many Prophets were killed and their communities did not apostasise. Two things are said here. The first was said by al-Ḥasan and Sa'īd ibn Jubayr. Al-Ḥasan said, 'No Prophet has ever been killed in battle,' while Ibn Jubayr said, 'We have not heard of any Prophet being killed in battle.' The second is transmitted from Qatādah and 'Ikrimah and then one is permitted to stop after 'killed'. This is according to the reading of Nāfi', Ibn Kathīr, Abū 'Amr, and Ya'qūb (which is qutila, killed.) It is the reading of Ibn 'Abbās, and Abū Ḥātīm preferred it.

There are two aspects to it. One is that 'killed' refers to the Prophet ﷺ alone and the words end at 'killed' and there is some elision in the words, meaning that there were many with him, and it is as you would say, 'In spite of the huge army with him, the general was killed.' 'I went out and there were goods with me.' The second is that killing affected the Prophet ﷺ and the many with him, and the words mean, 'some of those with him were killed.' The Arabs say, 'We killed Banū Tamīm and Banū Sulaym,' when some of them were killed. So 'they did not give up' refers to those with him. I think that this is more appropriate to the context in which the āyah was revealed. The Prophet ﷺ was not killed while some of his Companions were killed.

The Kufans and Ibn ‘Āmir read qātala (How many a Prophet has fought). That is the reading of Ibn Mas‘ūd and Abū ‘Ubayd preferred it. Allah’s praise of those who fight includes those who are killed, but praise of those who were killed does not include those who fought. So ‘fought’ is more universal.

Many thousands is read as ribbiyyūna, rubbiyyūna and rabbīyyūna. Most read it as ribbiyyūna. ‘Alī read it as rubbiyyūna and Ibn ‘Abbās as rabbīyyūna. Ribbiyyūna refers to many groups, according to Mujāhid, Qatādah, aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk and ‘Ikrimah. The singular is ribbiyy or rubbiyy. ‘Abdullāh ibn Mas‘ūd says that it means many thousands. Ibn Zayd said that it means followers. The first is better known linguistically. Ribbah and rubbah is a bag in which arrows are collected. Rabāb is a confederation of tribes. Abān ibn Tha‘lab said that ribbiyy means ten thousand. Al-Ḥasan said that they are steadfast scholars. Ibn ‘Abbās, Qatādah, ar-Rabī‘ and as-Suddī said that it is a large group. Ḥassān said:

When a company withdraw from the truth, we attack them in a large company (ribbiyy).

Az-Zajjāj said that the two readings with dammah refers to large groups. It is said that it is ten thousand. It is related from Ibn ‘Abbās that rabbīyyūna with fathah is derived from rabb (Lord). Al-Khalīl said that it is a singular for those who are steadfast with the Prophets. They are the rabbāniyyūn who are attributed to devotion, worship and recognition of Allah’s lordship. Allah knows best.

They did not give up in the face of what assailed them in the Way of Allah.

The verb ‘give up’ means to weaken. It was already mentioned. Wahn is the shattering of resolve by fear. Al-Ḥasan and Abu-s-Sammāl recited ‘wahunū’ instead of ‘wahanū’. Abū Zayd said that they are two dialectical usages. The verb is wahana, and awhana, Form IV, is to weaken. Wāhinah is the shortest rib and wahan camels are bulky. Wahn is also a time in the middle of the night. It means they did not become weak when their Prophet was killed or their comrades were slain. It means: ‘the rest of them did not become weak.’ The mudāf is elided.

nor did they weaken, nor did they yield.

‘They did not weaken’ in the face of the enemy and ‘they did not yield,’ because of what they suffered in jihād. Istikānah is humility and abasement. Its root is istakanū on the measure of Form VIII and the fathah of the kāf is filled and an alif results from it. For those who make it come from kawn it is Form X. The first is more in keeping with the meaning of the āyah. It has been recited as ‘famā wahnū wamā da‘fū’. Al-Kisā’ī related ‘da‘afū’.

Then Allah reports that after some of them were killed or their Prophet was killed, they were steadfast and did not flee and remained steady in the face of death. They asked for forgiveness so that their death would be accompanied by repentance for their wrong actions if they were given martyrdom. They asked for firmness so that they would not be routed and for help against the enemy. Feet are singled out for firmness because they are what one stands on. He is saying, ‘Did you do and say the like of that, Companions of Muḥammad?’ He answered their supplication and granted them help, victory and booty in this world and forgiveness in the Next World when they go there. That is how Allah treats His sincere servants who are true in repentance, support His dīn and are firm in meeting His enemy by His true promise and true words.

Allah loves the steadfast.

He means here those who are steadfast in jihād.

All they said was, ‘Our Lord, forgive us our wrong actions and any excesses

Some recite ‘mā kāna qawluhum’ in the nominative, making ‘qawol’ the noun of kāna. So it means: ‘All that they say is’. For those who read it in the accusative, qawl is the predicate of kāna whose meaning is ‘all they said’.

‘Wrong actions’ are minor wrong actions and ‘excesses’ are major wrong actions. Excess (isrāf) describes being excessive in something and exceeding the limits. We find in Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim that Abū Mūsā al-Ash‘arī reported that the Prophet ﷺ used to make this supplication: ‘O Allah, forgive my error, ignorance and excess in my business and what you know better than I do.’ So a person must use the supplications found in the Book of Allah and sound Sunnah and leave others based on their own choice. Allah has chosen for His Prophet and His friends and instructed them how they should make supplication.

فَأَبْلِهِمُ اللَّهُ تَوَابَ الدُّنْيَا وَحُسْنَ ثَوَابِ الْآخِرَةِ وَاللَّهُ يُحِبُّ الْحَسَنِينَ ﴿١٤٨﴾

148 So Allah gave them the reward of this world and the best reward of the Next World. Allah loves good-doers.

The reward of this world is help and victory over one’s enemies. ‘The best reward of the Next World’ is the Garden. Al-Jahḍarī recited ‘fa-athābahum’ from thawāb (reward).

يَا أَيُّهَا الَّذِينَ ءَامَنُوا إِن تُطِيعُوا الَّذِينَ كَفَرُوا يُرَدُّوكُمْ
عَلَىٰ أَعْقَابِكُمْ فَتَنْقَلِبُوا خَاسِرِينَ ﴿١٤٩﴾ بَلِ اللَّهُ مَوْلَاكُمْ وَهُوَ
خَيْرُ النَّاصِرِينَ ﴿١٥٠﴾

149 You who believe! if you obey those who disbelieve, they will turn you round on your heels and you will be transformed into losers. 150 No, Allah is your Protector. And He is the best of helpers.

When Allah commanded people to follow in the footsteps of the helpers of the earlier Prophets, He also warned them against obeying the unbelievers, meaning the Arab idolaters, Abū Sufyān and his people. It is said that it means the Jews and Christians. ‘Alī said that it is in reference to what the hypocrites said to the believers when they suffered that defeat: ‘Return to your father’s religion.’

‘They will turn you round on your heels,’ making you revert to disbelief. Then you will return defeated. Allah is the One who will help and preserve you if you obey Him. It is recited as ‘bali-llāha’ in the accusative, implying ‘Rather, obey Allah, your Master.’

سَنَلِقُ فِي قُلُوبِ الَّذِينَ كَفَرُوا الزُّعْبَ بِمَا أَشْرَكُوا بِاللَّهِ
مَا لَهُمْ بِهِ سُلْطَانٌ وَمَأْوِيَهُمُ النَّارُ وَبِئْسَ مَثْوَى الظَّالِمِينَ ﴿٥٩﴾

151 We will cast terror into the hearts of those who disbelieve because they have associated others with Allah for which He has not sent down any authority.
Their shelter will be the Fire. How evil is the abode of the wrongdoers!

This echoes Allah’s words: ‘He cast terror into their hearts.’ (59:2) ‘Terror’ is recited with two syllables as ru‘ub (rather than ‘ru‘b’) by Ibn ‘Āmir and al-Kisā’ī. These are two dialectical forms. Ru‘b means fear, a verbal noun from ra‘aba. Someone terrified is described as mar‘ūb. It is possible that ru‘b is a verbal noun and ru‘ub a simple noun. The root of ru‘b (terror) comes from filling, and the verb is used for the filling of a watering-trough or of a torrent filling a valley. It means: ‘We will fill the hearts of the idolaters with fear and alarm.’ As-Sakhtiyānī recited it with yā, ‘sa-yulqī’ (‘He will cast’) while the rest use the Divine nūn (‘We will cast’).

As-Suddī and others said, ‘When Abū Sufyān and the idolaters left for Makkah after Uḥud, they went part of the way and then regretted doing that. They said, “What we have done is bad! We should have killed them until none of them was left except the odd runaway. Let us go back and wipe them out!” When they resolved on that, Allah cast terror into their hearts so that they did not do it.’ ‘Casting’ is used for the actual throwing down of physical objects as in 7:150 where it refers to the Tablets, in 26:44 where it refers to ropes and staffs, and in 36:45 where it is used for a staff. It is used metaphorically in this āyah as it is in 20:39 in reference to love.

because they have associated others with Allah for which He has not sent down any authority

This is the reason Allah cast terror into their hearts. Shirk is to make someone else a partner. The phrase for which He has not sent down any authority is further explanation. ‘Sultān’ is supporting proof, clarification and excuse. This is why the ruler is called a ‘sultan’ because he is the proof of Allah on the earth. It is also said that sultān is derived from salīt, the oil used in a lamp, which is from sesame seed. Imru’u-l-Qays said:

He tipped the sesame oil (salīt) with the twisted wicks.

So the sultan gives light by giving victory to the truth and curbing the false. Salīt is also used for a sharp edge and so it refers to force (salātah). The root of sultān is strength because by it he overcomes and the nūn is additional to the root. Salātah is used for a sharp-tongued woman and for a man with an eloquent tongue. He means that Allah has given no authority for the worship of idols in any religion and it is not logical to permit that. Then He says where their final resting place will be: the Fire, and then blames them. Mathwā is the place in which one resides, derived from the verb thawā. Ma’wā is any sort of shelter to which one resorts either in the night or the day.

وَلَقَدْ صَدَقَكُمُ اللَّهُ وَعْدَهُ إِذْ فَضَّلْتُمْ بِهِ تَتَابِعُهُمْ بِيَوْمِهِمْ

152 Allah fulfilled His promise to you when you were slaughtering them by His permission. But then you faltered, disputing the command, and disobeyed after He showed you what you love. Among you are those who want this world and among you are those who want the Next World. Then He turned you from them in order to test you – but He has pardoned you. Allah shows favour to the believers.

Muḥammad ibn Ka'b al-Qurazī said, 'When the Messenger of Allah ﷺ returned to Madina from Uḥud after they had suffered, they said to one another, "How did this happen to us when Allah has promised us victory?" Then this was revealed. That is because they killed the banner-bearer of the idolaters and the seven after him who held the banner. Victory was going to the Muslims but, when they were distracted by booty, some of the archers left their positions for booty and that led to the rout.'

Al-Bukhārī reports that al-Barā' ibn 'Āzib said, 'In the Battle of Uḥud when we met the idolaters, the Messenger of Allah ﷺ positioned the archers and put 'Abdullāh ibn Jubayr in charge of them, saying: "Do not leave your position. Even if you see that we have defeated them, do not leave. If you see that they have defeated us, do not help us against them." When we met them, the Muslims defeated them so that we saw the women running for the mountain, their garments raised and anklets showing. The [archers] began to say, "Booty! Booty!" 'Abdullāh said, "The Prophet ﷺ made you promise that you would not leave." They left, became confused, and seventy were struck down. Abū Sufyān ibn Ḥarb looked down and asked, "Is Muḥammad among the people?" He said, "Do not answer him." Then he asked, "Is the son of Abū Quḥāfah among the people?" He said, "Do not answer him." Then he said, "Is the son of al-Khaṭṭāb among the people?" Then he said, "Those have been killed. If they had been alive, they would have answered." 'Umar could not restrain himself and said, "By Allah, you have lied, enemy of Allah! All of those you numbered are among the living!

That which will vex you remains!” Abū Sufyān said twice, “Hubal be high!” The Prophet ﷺ said, “Answer him!” They said, “What shall we say?” He said, “Say: ‘Allah is Higher and More Majestic.’” Abū Sufyān said, “We have al-‘Uzzā and you have no ‘Uzzā.” The Prophet ﷺ said, “Answer him!” They asked, “What shall we say?” He said, “Say: ‘Allah is our Protector and you have no Protector.’” Abū Sufyān said, “A day which is in return for the day of Badr. Victory in war goes in turns. You will find some of the people mutilated. I did not order it, but it does not disturb me.”

It is related from Sa’d ibn Abī Waqqāṣ in al-Bukhārī and Muslim: ‘I saw the Messenger of Allah ﷺ on the Day of Uḥud and two men were with him fighting for him as fiercely as possible.’ One transmission from Sa’d has: ‘They were wearing white clothes. I never saw them before or after.’ He meant that they were Jibrīl and Mikā’īl. Another variant has: ‘They were fighting for the Messenger of Allah ﷺ as fiercely as possible. I never saw them before or after.’ Mujāhid, however, says that the angels did not fight with them that day and that the only day they fought with them was Badr. Al-Bayhaqī says that Mujāhid means that they left when the people disobeyed the Messenger and were not steadfast in what they had been commanded to do.

‘Urwah ibn az-Zubayr said, ‘If they were steadfast and godfearing, Allah Almighty promised that He would reinforce them with five thousand angels, clearly identified, and He did that. When they disobeyed the command of the Messenger and abandoned their positions and the archers, out of desire for this world, failed to follow the instruction that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ had given them about not leaving their positions, the reinforcement of the angels was taken from them. Allah revealed: “Allah fulfilled His promise to you when you were slaughtering them by His permission.” So Allah was true to His promise and showed them victory. When they disobeyed, He punished them with affliction.’

‘Umayr ibn Ishāq said, ‘In the Battle of Uḥud, they left the Messenger of Allah ﷺ exposed while Sa’d was shooting from in front of him with a lad handing him arrows. Whenever one arrow was gone, he brought him another. He said “Shoot, Abū Ishāq!” When they finished, they looked to see where the young man was and did not see or recognise him.’

Muḥammad ibn Ka’b said, ‘When the banner-bearer of the idolaters was killed and their banner fell, ‘Amrah bint ‘Alqamah al-Ḥārithah raised it up. Ḥassān said about that:

Had it not been for the Ḥārithī woman,
They would have been sold in the markets like chattels.

‘Tahussūnahum’ means to kill and eradicate them. A poet said:

We slaughtered (ḥasasnāhum) them with swords and their remnants were scattered and separated.

Jarīr said:

The swords slaughter (tahussuhum) them utterly and their remnants took flight and scattered.

Abū ‘Ubayd said that ḥass is eradication by killing. Locusts are described as ‘maḥsūs’ when they are killed by cold. Cold is a killer which burns off (maḥassah) plants. A year that is ḥasūs has a drought that consumes everything. Ru’bah said:

We suffered a severe (ḥasūs) year that consumed and left everything dry after it was green.

Its root is ḥiss which is perceiving something by touch (ḥāssah). Ḥassa is to remove his senses by killing.

‘With His permission’ means with His knowledge, or according to His decree and command.

But then you faltered, disputing the command,

You lost courage and weakened. The verb is fashila, yafshahu, and verbal noun fashil and fashl. The apodosis of ‘hattā’ is elided. This sort of form is permissible and is, in fact, seen elsewhere in the Qur’an as in 6:25. Al-Farrā’ said that the apodosis is ‘disputing’ and the wāw is redundant as we see elsewhere. [OMISSION] Some people said that the wāw before ‘disobeyed’ is redundant, meaning ‘then you faltered and disputed, disobeying.’ On this basis, there is a change in the word order here; it means ‘when you disputed and disobeyed, then you faltered.’

Abū ‘Alī said that the apodosis can be ‘He turned you from them and ‘then’ is redundant. It implies: ‘until when you faltered, disputed and disobeyed, He turned you from them.’ [ILLUSTRATIVE POEM] Al-Akhfash permitted it to be redundant as in the case in 9:118.

It is said that ‘hattā’ means ‘ilā’ (to) and then it has no apodosis, i.e. ‘Allah fulfilled His promise to you until you faltered,’ meaning that the promise was contingent on remaining firm. ‘Disputing’, or disagreeing, refers to the archers arguing with one another when some wanted to go after booty and others said that they would remain firm following the command of the Prophet ﷺ.

and disobeyed after He showed you what you love.

They disobeyed the command of the Messenger ﷺ to remain firm. The words ‘after He showed you what you love’ refer to the victory which was going to the Muslims at the beginning of Uḥud when the banner-bearer of the idolaters fell. When he fell, the Prophet ﷺ and his Companions spread out in separate squadrons and began to slaughter the enemy. The enemy cavalry charged three times but the barrage of arrows drove them back. When the fifty archers saw that victory had gone to their brothers, some of them said, ‘Why are we standing here when Allah has defeated the enemy?’ So they left their positions that they had promised the Messenger of Allah ﷺ they would not leave. They disputed, faltered and disobeyed the Messenger and then the cavalry attacked and killed them. The words of the āyah express rebuke for them. The manner of the rebuke is that they saw the beginning of a victory, but they must know that complete victory lies in standing firm, not in being routed.

Among you are those who want this world and among you are those who want the Next World.

Then He explains the cause of the dispute: 'this world' here means booty. Ibn Mas'ūd said, 'None of us was aware that any of the Companions of the Prophet ﷺ desired this world and its goods until the Day of Uḥud.' Those who wanted the Next World were those who stayed firm in their position and did not dispute the command of their Prophet ﷺ with their commander, 'Abdullāh ibn Jubayr. Khālīd ibn al-Walīd and 'Ikrimah ibn Abī Jahl, who were still idolaters then, attacked him and killed those who had remained with him. May Allah have mercy on them.

The blame lies with those who retreated, not with those who stood firm. Those who stood firm won the reward. This is because it is said that when general punishment descends on a people in which the righteous and children are destroyed, the punishment does not actually happen to them. It was the means to their gaining their reward. Allah knows best.

Then He turned you from them in order to test you

This means: 'after He had let you overpower them, He turned you from them in flight.' That indicates that both disobedience and disagreement are created by Allah. The Mu'tazilites say that it means: 'then you turned,' and it is connected to the terror of the Muslims which Allah removed from the hearts of the unbelievers to test them. Al-Qushayrī points out that this would not help because removing terror from the hearts of the unbelievers so that they would disdain the Muslims is ugly and not permitted, and would make the āyah meaningless. It is said that 'He turned you from them' means that 'He did not oblige you to pursue them.'

He has pardoned you. Allah shows favour to the believers.

He did not eradicate you after your disobedience and opposition. It is said that this is addressed to everyone, and it is said that it is only addressed to the archers who disobeyed, which an-Naḥḥās prefers. Most commentators say that it is like Allah’s words: ‘Then He pardoned you.’ (2:52) Allah shows favour by pardon and forgiveness.

Ibn ‘Abbās said, ‘The Prophet ﷺ was not helped in any place as he was helped at Uḥud.’ He [‘Ubaydullāh, the transmitter] said, ‘We do not acknowledge that.’ Ibn ‘Abbās said, ‘The Book of Allah stands between me and those who deny that. Allah Almighty says about the Battle of Uḥud: “Allah fulfilled His promise to you when you were slaughtering them by His permission. But then you faltered, disputing the command, and disobeyed after He showed you what you love. Among you are those who want this world and among you are those who want the Next World. Then He turned you from them in order to test you – but He has pardoned you. Allah shows favour to the believers.” (3:152) He means the archers. The Prophet ﷺ had put them in a position and told them, “Guard our backs. If you see us being killed, do not help us. If you see us taking booty, do not join us.”

‘When it looked as if the Messenger of Allah ﷺ had won and they had exposed the camp of the idolaters, the archers all turned away and went to loot the camp, joining the ranks of the Companions of the Prophet ﷺ and becoming mixed up with them (and he intertwined the fingers of his hands). After the archers deserted their position, the enemy cavalry attacked the Companions of the Prophet ﷺ from that position. They fought one another in a confused melée and many Muslims were slain.

‘At the beginning of the day, the Messenger of Allah ﷺ and his Companions were in the ascendancy to the point that seven or nine standard-bearers of the idolaters were struck down. The Muslims charged towards the mountain but did not reach the place that people call “the Cave” which is under the hollowed-out rock. Then Shayṭān shouted out: “Muḥammad has been killed!” People were in no doubt at that moment that it was true and we continued to think the Messenger of Allah ﷺ had been killed until he appeared to us between two men of Sa'd. We recognised him by the way he walked. We were so happy that it was as if what had happened to us had not happened. He came towards us, saying, "Allah will be very angry with a people who have bloodied the face of their Prophet!"

Ka'b ibn Mālik said, 'I was the first Muslim to recognise the Messenger of Allah ﷺ. I recognised him by his eyes shining from under his helmet. I called out in my loudest voice, "Company of Muslims! This is the Messenger of Allah ﷺ coming!" He indicated that I should be quiet.'

إِذْ تَصْعَدُونَ وَلَا تَلُؤُونَ عَلَىٰ أَحَدٍ وَالرَّسُولُ يَدْعُكُمْ فِي
 أُخْرَيْكُمْ فَأَنْتُمْ غَمَّائِمٌ لِّكَيْلًا تَمْحَرُونَ عَلَىٰ مَا فَاتَكُمْ
 وَلَا مَا أَصَابَكُمْ وَاللَّهُ خَيْرٌ بِمَا تَعْمَلُونَ ﴿٥٦﴾

153 Remember when you were scrambling up the slope, refusing to turn back for anyone, and the Messenger was calling to you from the rear. Allah rewarded you with one distress in return for another so you would not feel grief for what escaped you or what assailed you.

Allah is aware of what you do.

Remember when you were scrambling up the slope, refusing to turn back for anyone,

'When' can be connected to 'He pardoned you.' Most recite 'scrambling up' as tuṣ'adūna. Abū Rajā' al-Uṭāridī, Abū 'Abd ar-Raḥmān as-Sulamī, al-Ḥasan and Qatādah recite taṣ'adūna, meaning climbing the mountain. Ibn Muḥayṣin and Shibl recited both verbs with yā' in the third person. Al-Ḥasan recited talūna with one wāw. Abū Bakr ibn 'Ayyāsh related from 'Aṣim tulūna with a ḍammah on the tā' which is an aberrant dialect. An-Naḥḥās said that.

Abū Ḥātim said that aṣ'ada is to travel forward and ṣa'ida is to ascend a mountain or something else. Iṣ'ād is travelling on level land, the bottom of valleys, and ravines. Ṣu‘ūd is an elevation on a mountain, plateau, steps and stairs. It is possible that they were on an elevated place on the mountain after climbing up from the valley and so both readings convey the meaning.

Qatādah and ar-Rabī‘ said, ‘They climbed up the valley in the Battle of Uḥud. Ibn ‘Abbās said that they climbed at Uḥud while they were fleeing. Both of the readings are correct as those who retreated on that day climbed and were made to climb. Allah knows best.

Al-Qutabī and al-Mubarrad said that Form IV is used when the distance is far and so it as if the distance is far on the ground just as it is in climbing. A poet said:

O those who ask where she went (aṣ‘adat), she has a promised rendezvous in the valley of Yathrib.

Al-Farrā’ said that iṣ‘ād is to begin a journey and inḥidār is to return from it. One can say, ‘We “climbed”’ from Baghdad to Makkah and to Khorasan and similar places when you set out for them and began the journey, and inḥadara is to return. Abū ‘Ubaydah said:

You wept for the departure (iṣ‘ād).

Today you have been sent and the camel driver shouts.

Al-Mufaḍḍal said that ṣa‘ida, aṣ‘ada and ṣa‘ada mean the same. ‘Refusing to turn back’ means to ascend and continue without looking at one another in the flight. Someone simply going up can turn his head or his animal.

‘For anyone’ refers to Muḥammad ﷺ according to al-Kalbī. ‘Ukhrā’ means ‘behind them’ Al-Bukhārī says that it is the feminine of ‘ākhir’. ‘Amr ibn Khālid related from Zuhayr that Abū Iṣḥāq heard al-Barā’ ibn ‘Āzib say, ‘On the day of the Battle of Uḥud, the Prophet ﷺ put ‘Abdullāh ibn Jubayr in charge of the men on foot. Then they were routed and the Messenger of Allah ﷺ was calling to them from behind them. The Prophet ﷺ was left with only twelve men.’ Ibn ‘Abbās and others said that he called out, ‘Servants of Allah! Return!’ while they were fleeing. He was calling to change what was objectionable. It is impossible that he would see something objectionable, in this case the rout, and not forbid it. According to this, the rout was an act that amounted to disobeying Allah, but this is not the case as will be explained, Allah willing.

Allah rewarded you with one distress in return for another.

Ghamm (grief) linguistically comes from ‘to cover’, as when the day becomes dark or the crescent moon is covered so that it cannot be seen. So one says that something grieves (ghamma) a person.

Mujāhid, Qatādah and others said that the first grief was killing and wounding, and the second was the alarm at the killing of the Prophet ﷺ when shayṭān shouted that out. It is said that the first grief was on account of the victory and booty that eluded them, and the second was on account of the killing and defeat they suffered. It is said that the first was the defeat and the second was Abū Sufyān and Khālid looking down on them, which grieved the Muslims since they thought that they would attack and kill them. This made them forget what had afflicted them. That is when the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘O Allah, do not let them be over us.’

The bā’ in ‘bi-ghamm’ has the meaning of ‘alā’. It means that they grieved the Prophet ﷺ by opposing him and Allah repaid them for that by their distress over what afflicted some of them. Al-Ḥasan said that the first grief was Uḥud in return for what happened to the idolaters at Badr. ‘Distress’ is called a reward as the repayment for a wrong action is called a wrong action. It is said that Allah gave them success in spite of their wrong action and so they were distracted by that from what afflicted them.

So you would not feel grief for what escaped you or what assailed you.

This is connected to ‘He pardoned you’ or to ‘Allah rewarded you.’ It means: ‘This is sorrow after sorrow so that you would not grieve over the booty you missed or your defeat.’ The first view is better. It can also mean: ‘so that you would not be sad about what missed you and your punishment for disobeying the Messenger of Allah ﷺ.’ The same usage is found in 7:12 and 58:29. It is said that it means a succession of sorrows so that after this you will not be distracted by booty. His words: ‘Allah is aware of what you do’ is a threat.

 فِي بُيُوتِكُمْ لَبَرَزَ الَّذِينَ كُتِبَ عَلَيْهِمُ الْقَتْلُ إِلَى مَضَاجِعِهِمْ وَلِيَبْتَلِيَ اللَّهُ مَا
 فِي صُدُورِكُمْ وَلِيُخَيِّصَ مَا فِي قُلُوبِكُمْ وَاللَّهُ عَلِيمٌ بِذَاتِ الصُّدُورِ ﴿١٥٤﴾

154 Then He sent down to you, after the distress, security, restful sleep overtaking a group of you, whereas another group became prey to anxious thoughts, thinking other than the truth about Allah – thoughts belonging to the Time of Ignorance – saying, ‘Do we have any say in the affair at all?’ Say, ‘The affair belongs entirely to Allah.’ They are concealing things inside themselves which they do not disclose to you, saying, ‘If we had only had a say in the affair, none of us would have been killed here in this place.’ Say, ‘Even if you had been inside your homes, those people for whom being killed was decreed would have gone out to their place of death.’ So that Allah might test what is in your breasts and purge what is in your hearts. Allah knows the contents of your hearts.

Then He sent down to you, after the distress, security

It is said that amn and amānah mean the same. It is also said that amānah is security when there is cause for fear and amn is when there is no cause for fear. It is in the accusative by the effect of ‘sent down’ and ‘sleep’ is an appositive for it. It is also said that it is in the accusative as the object as if He were saying, ‘He sent down sleep on you for security.’ Ibn Muḥayṣin recited ‘ammah’. After the sorrows the believers experienced at Uḥud, Allah granted them sleep and most of them fell asleep. Those who feel secure sleep and fearful people do not sleep. In al-Bukhārī, Anas reported that Abū Ṭalḥah said, ‘We were overcome with slumber when we were in the lines on the Day of Uḥud.’ He said, ‘My sword would fall from my hand and I would pick it up, and it would fall from my hand I would pick it up again.’

‘Overtaking’ is read both as taghshā and yaghshā. Yaghshā refers to sleep and taghshā to security.

Another group became prey to anxious thoughts, thinking other than the truth about Allah – thoughts belonging to the Time of Ignorance

Tā’ifah (group) can be applied to both one person and to a group. Here it refers to the hypocrites: Mu‘attab ibn Qushayr and his companions. They went out hoping for booty and fearing the believers. They did not sleep and regretted taking part in the expedition and said all sorts of things.

‘Qad ahammathum anfusuhum’ means that it impelled them to worry. Hamm is anything someone is concerned about. The verb ahamma is used for something being of concern to someone. Something that is muhimm is significant. ‘Ahamma’ is used when something causes you disquiet and hamma is to concern you. The wāw before ‘group’ makes it adverbial and so means ‘when they became prey’. They thought that the business of Muḥammad ﷺ was false and that he would not win. The phrase ‘thoughts belonging to the Time of Ignorance’ has an omission: ‘thinking the thoughts of the people of the Time of Ignorance.’

‘Do we have any say in the affair at all?’

This is a question which indicates denial, and implies ‘We did not have any say in the business about going out. We were forced to go out.’ This is indicated by what Allah reports that they said. Az-Zubayr said, ‘On that day sleep was released on us and while sleep was overcoming me, I heard Mu‘attab ibn Qushayr say, “If we had only had a say in the affair, none of us would have been killed here in this place.”’ It is said that it means that he says, ‘We do not have any of the victory which Muḥammad promised us.’ Allah knows best.

Say, ‘The affair belongs entirely to Allah.’

Abū ‘Amr and Ya‘qūb recited ‘kulluhu’ in the nominative for the inceptive whose predicate is ‘to Allah’ while the rest have ‘kullahu’ in the accusative, as you say, ‘The business is all Allah’s’ for stress. This is stress on its universality and total encompassment. This encompassing meaning is only stress. It is also said that it is an adjective modifying ‘affair’. Al-Akhfash said that it is an appositive, meaning ‘Success is in Allah’s hand. He gives success to whomever He wishes and disappoints whomever He wishes.’ Juwaybir said from aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk from Ibn ‘Abbās that the words ‘thoughts belonging to the Time of Ignorance’ allude to denial of the Decree and that is what they were saying, and so Allah replied with this āyah, stating that the Decree, both good and evil, belongs to Allah.

They are concealing things inside themselves which they do not disclose to you, saying, ‘If we had only had a say in the affair, none of us would have been killed.’

What they are concealing is shirk, disbelief and denial. They did not show this to you. They said, ‘Our tribes would not have been killed.’ It is said that the hypocrites said, ‘If we had known, we would not have gone out to fight the people of Makkah and our leaders would not have been killed.’ Allah then refutes them:

Say: ‘Even if you had been inside your homes, those people for whom being killed was decreed would have gone out to their place of death.’

The time when people will die is written on the Preserved Tablet.

‘Madāji’ means the places where they will be struck down. It is also said that ‘killing’ here means ‘fighting’, because fighting leads to death. Abū Ḥaywah recited ‘burriẓa’ meaning ‘made to go out’. It is said: ‘If you had failed to go out, hypocrites, you would have been brought out to another place in which you would have fallen so that Allah might test what is in your breasts and show it to the believers.’

So that Allah might test what is in your breasts and purge what is in your hearts.

The wāw in the beginning is interpolated as in 6:75. The verb is elided with the lām which indicates ‘in order to be’. This implies: ‘He obliged fighting for you and did not give you victory at Uḥud in order to test what is in your breasts and to purge your evil deeds when you return and are sincere.’ It is said that ‘test’ is to put through a trial in order to test. It is said that it is so that you will witness what is invisible of His knowledge. It is said that there is some elision and it implies: ‘so that He might test the friends of Allah.’

Allah knows the contents of your hearts.

He knows the good and evil they contain. It is said that the contents of the hearts are the hearts themselves.

إِنَّ الَّذِينَ تَوَلَّوْا مِنْكُمْ يَوْمَ الْتَفَىٰ الْجَمْعَيْنِ إِنَّمَا اسْتَزَلَّهُمُ الشَّيْطَانُ
بِغَضِّ مَا كَسَبُوا ۗ وَلَقَدْ عَفَا اللَّهُ عَنْهُمْ ۗ إِنَّ اللَّهَ غَفُورٌ رَحِيمٌ ﴿١٥٥﴾

155 Those of you who turned their backs on the day the two armies clashed – it was Shayṭān who made them slip for what they had done. But Allah has pardoned them. Allah is Ever-Forgiving, All-Forbearing.

This refers to those who turned their backs on the idolaters at Uḥud, as ‘Umar and others said. As-Suddī said that it means those who fled to Madīnah when defeated rather than those who went up the mountain. It is also said to refer to certain people who remained behind the Prophet ﷺ for three days when they were defeated and then left.

The meaning of 'made them slip' means to induce them to slip by reminding them of their previous errors. They disliked staying firm because they might be killed. That is what is meant by the words 'for what they had done'. It is said that it means to move them to slip. It is Form X from zallah, which is an error. It is said that the verbs zalla and azalla mean the same. Then it is said that they disliked fighting before sincere repentance. This is the first position. The second is that their repentance is for their disobeying the Prophet ﷺ by abandoning their position for booty.

Al-Ḥasan said that the words 'what they had done' refer to their acceptance of the whispering of Iblīs. Al-Kalbī said, 'Shayṭān made their actions seem good to them.' It is also said that their retreat was not disobedience because, when they heard that the Prophet ﷺ had been killed, they wanted to fortify Madīnah and cut off what the enemy wanted to do to them. It is possible that they did not hear the call of the Prophet ﷺ because of their terror. It is also possible to say that the numbers of the enemy were more than twice their number because they were 700 and the enemy were 3000 so in theory retreat in such circumstances was permissible, but to retreat from the Prophet ﷺ was an error which is not permitted. Perhaps they imagined that the Prophet ﷺ had retreated to the mountain. The best view is the first one.

In general, if the affair is taken to be a definite wrong action, Allah pardoned it. If it is taken to be a permissible retreat, then the āyah is about those who retreated a great distance, more than the permitted amount. Abu-l-Layth Naṣr ibn Muḥammad ibn Ibrāhīm as-Samarqandī mentioned from al-Khalīl ibn Aḥmad from as-Sarrāj from Qutaybah from Abū Bakr ibn Ghaylān from Jarīr that 'Uthmān and 'Abd ar-Raḥmān ibn 'Awf had words, and 'Abd ar-Raḥmān ibn 'Awf said to him, 'Do you abuse me when I was present at Badr and you were not. I gave allegiance under the Tree and you did not, and you were one of those who turned in retreat on the day of the Meeting (meaning Uḥud)?’ ‘Uthmān responded to him: ‘As for what you said about being present at Badr while I was not, I was not absent from anything where the Messenger of Allah ﷺ was present except when the daughter of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ was ill and I was tending to her. The Messenger of Allah ﷺ gave me one of the shares of the Muslims. As for the Pledge of the Tree, the Messenger of Allah ﷺ had sent me as an envoy to Makkah and the Messenger of Allah ﷺ put his right hand on his left and said, “This is for ‘Uthmān.” The right hand and left hand of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ are better for me than my own right hand and left hand. As for the day of the Meeting, Allah has said, “Allah has pardoned them,” so I am among those Allah has pardoned.’ ‘Uthmān defeated ‘Abd ar-Raḥmān in that argument.

This idea is also validated by Ibn ‘Umar as we find in Ṣaḥīḥ Bukhārī. ‘Abdān reported from Abū Ḥamzah that ‘Uthmān ibn Mawhab said, ‘A man came and made the ḥajj to the House. He saw some people sitting there and asked, “Who are those people?” They answered, “They are Quraysh.” He inquired, “Who is that old man among them?” They replied, “‘Abdullah ibn ‘Umar.” He said, “If I ask you about something, will you answer me?” He continued, “I entreat you by the sanctity of this House, do you know that ‘Uthmān fled on the Day of Uḥud?” He answered, “Yes.” He said, “Do you know that he was absent from Badr and not present at it?” He replied, “Yes.” He said, “Do you know that he was absent from the Pledge of Riḍwān and not present at it?” He answered, “Yes.” The man said, “Allah is greater!” Ibn ‘Umar said, “Let me now explain to you what you asked me about. As for his fleeing at Uḥud, I testify that Allah pardoned him. As for being absent from Badr, he was married to the daughter of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ who was ill and the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said to him, ‘You will have the reward and share of a man who was present at Badr.’ As for his being absent from the Pledge of Riḍwān, if there had been anyone dearer than ‘Uthmān in the valley of Makkah, he would have sent him in his place. The Messenger of Allah ﷺ sent ‘Uthmān and the Pledge of Riḍwān took place after ‘Uthmān had gone to Makkah. Therefore the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said of his right hand, ‘This is the hand of ‘Uthmān,’ and struck it against his other hand and said, ‘This is for ‘Uthmān.’” Ibn ‘Umar said to him, “Take this with you now.””

This āyah is like Allah’s turning to Ādam and the words of the Prophet ﷺ, ‘Ādam overcame Mūsā in a argument.’ That was when Mūsā criticised Ādam for being the cause, when he ate from the tree, of him and his descendants leaving the Garden. Ādam replied, ‘Do you blame me for something which Allah decreed for me forty years before I was created? And then He turned to me. Whoever He turns to incurs no wrong action and whoever has no wrong action is not subject to blame.’ That is the case with those whom Allah pardons. This is a report from Allah and His report is true. Others who commit wrong action and repent hope for His mercy and fear His punishment. They fear that their repentance might not be accepted. Even if it is accepted, their fear dominates them since they do not definitively know that.

يَا أَيُّهَا الَّذِينَ ءَامَنُوا لَا تَكُونُوا كَالَّذِينَ كَفَرُوا وَقَالُوا لِإِخْوَانِهِمْ إِذَا صَرَبُوا
 فِي الْأَرْضِ أَوْ كَانُوا غُرَى لَوْ كَانُوا عِنْدَنَا مَا مَاتُوا وَمَا قُتِلُوا لِيَجْعَلَ اللَّهُ
 ذَٰلِكَ حَسْرَةً فِي قُلُوبِهِمْ وَاللَّهُ يُخَيِّئُ وَيُمَيِّتُ وَاللَّهُ بِمَا تَعْمَلُونَ
 بَصِيرٌ ﴿١٥٦﴾

156 You who believe! do not be like those who disbelieve and say of their brothers, when they are going on journeys or military expeditions, ‘If they had only been with us, they would not have died or been killed,’ so that Allah can make that anguish for them in their hearts. It is Allah Who gives life and causes to die.

Allah sees what you do.

The words 'do not be like those who disbelieve' refer to the hypocrites. 'Their brothers' are their brothers in hypocrisy or in lineage. They said this about the expedition which the Prophet ﷺ sent to Bi'r Ma'ūnah. The Muslims were forbidden to say what the hypocrites said. The words 'when they are going' refer to what was already mentioned because the words have the meaning of a precondition since 'those' was indefinite and not determined and so 'idha' is in the position of 'idh' as the past tense in the apodosis takes the place of the future.

The verb 'going' means travelling for trade or something else in the course of which they die. Ghuzzā (expeditions) is the plural of ghāzi. It is a broken plural and does not change whatever case it is in. The plural is like rāki', rukka', sā'im, ṣuwam, nā'im, nuwwam, shāhid, shuhhad, and ghā'ib, ghuyyub. The plural can be ghuzāh like qudāh, and ghuzzā with maddah, like durrāb and ṣuwām. It is said that ghazīyy is the plural of ghuzāh. It is related that az-Zuhrī recited 'ghuzzā'. A woman whose husband is on an expedition is called mughziyah. A donkey which is late in reproducing is a mughziyah. The verb aghzat describes a she-camel which is hard to impregnate. Ghazw is aspiring for a thing and maghzā is the goal. That which has to do with an expedition is 'ghazawī'.

so that Allah can make that anguish for them in their hearts

This refers to their thoughts and words. The lām is connected to His words, 'they said'. This makes their statement that if they had not gone out, they would not have been killed, a cause of regret for them. Hasrah is regret. It is concern for what was missed and could not be obtained. A poet said:

O my anguish that I have not obtained my goal with her.

I did not enjoy proximity or nearness.

It is said that it is connected to something elided and means: 'Do not be like them so that Allah makes that statement a regret because those words display their hypocrisy. It is also said that it means: ‘Do not believe them nor pay any attention to that,’ and that caused anguish in their hearts. It is said that their anguish and disgrace will be on the Day of Rising because of the honour and blessing the believers will enjoy.

It is Allah Who gives life and causes to die.

He decrees those who go out to fight and remain alive and those who stay behind and die among their families.

Allah sees what you do.

It is recited as both ta‘malūna (what you do) and ya‘malūna (what they do). Then He reports that being killed in the Way of Allah and death in it is better than the entire world.

وَلَيْنَ فُتِلْتُمْ فِي سَبِيلِ اللَّهِ أَوْ مِتُّمْ لَمَغْفِرَةٍ مِّنَ اللَّهِ وَرَحْمَةً خَيْرٌ مِّنَّا
تَجْمَعُونَ ﴿١٥٧﴾ وَلَيْنَ مَسْءُرًا أَوْ قُتِلْتُمْ لِيَلِيَ اللَّهُ تَحْشُرُونَ ﴿١٥٨﴾

157 If you are killed in the Way of Allah or if you die, forgiveness and mercy from Allah are better than anything you can acquire. 158 If you die or you are killed, it is to Allah that you will be gathered.

The apodosis here is elided and there is no need for it because of the apodosis of the oath in forgiveness. It is more fitting for there to be no need for it with the apodosis of the oath because it has the beginning of the words and means ‘He will forgive you.’

The word ‘die’ is read as mittum with the people of the Hijaz, as in nimtum, from the verb māta yamātu, like kiftu yakhāfu. Lower Muḍar say muttum, like ṣumtum, from māta yamūtu, kāna yakūnu, and qāla yaqūlu. This is the position of the Kufans and it is good.

The phrase ‘it is to Allah that you will be gathered’ is a warning. By saying this, Allah warns them: ‘Do not flee from the battle and from what you have been commanded to do. Rather flee from His punishment which is painful. You will return to Him and no one but

He has the power to harm or benefit you.’ Allah knows best.

فَبِمَا رَحْمَةٍ مِّنَ اللَّهِ لِنْتَ لَهُمْ وَلَوْ كُنْتَ فَظًّا غَلِيظَ الْقَلْبِ لَانفَضُّوا مِنْ حَوْلِكَ فَاعْفُ عَنْهُمْ وَاسْتَغْفِرْ لَهُمْ وَشَاوِرْهُمْ فِي الْأَمْرِ فَإِذَا عَزَمْتَ فَتَوَكَّلْ عَلَى اللَّهِ إِنَّ اللَّهَ يُحِبُّ الْمُتَوَكِّلِينَ ﴿٥٦﴾

159 It is a mercy from Allah that you were gentle with them. If you had been rough or hard of heart, they would have scattered from around you. So pardon them and ask forgiveness for them, and consult with them about the matter. Then when you have reached a firm decision, put your trust in Allah. Allah loves those who put their trust in Him.

It is a mercy from Allah that you were gentle with them.

The use of ‘mā’ in ‘it is a mercy’ is connective and used for stress as is the case elsewhere in the Qur’an (4:155, 38:11). It is not redundant in general although Sībawayh applies the idea of redundancy to it since its governing function is removed.

The meaning of the āyah is that when the Prophet ﷺ was kind to those who had retreated at Uhud and did not rebuke them, Allah made it clear that it was by Allah’s success that he did that.

It is also said that ‘mā’ is interrogative, meaning, ‘By what mercy from Allah were you gentle to them?’ and expresses wonder. This is unlikely. If that were the case, mā would be written without the alif. The verb for being gentle is lāna yalānu.

If you had been rough or hard of heart, they would have scattered from around you.

The word ‘rough’ (fazz) implies coarseness and roughness, from the verb fazza. The plural is afzāz. The Prophet ﷺ was not rough or harsh nor did he shout in markets. The expression ‘hard of heart’ refers to scowling, lack of indulgence, and lack of compassion and mercy. Al-Mufaddal said about a reminder:

He is not rough (fazz) with the lowly.
They aim for his gifts, but he is easy.

He is rough (fazz) with his enemies who are cautious of him, as his attack is death, and its recipient is cut.

Another said:

I will die of deprivation in my house
While others die of surfeit.

This world is generous to the ignorant and harsh and rough (fazz) to those of intelligence.

Hardness of the heart is expressed through the frowning of the face, lack of reaction to the desires of others, and lack of compassion and mercy. A poet said:

He weeps for us, but we do not weep for anyone.
Our livers are harder than those of camels.

The verb 'scattered' means split up. You separate (Form I) people and they are split up. The root of the word fadd means to break and snap. An illustration of that is the words of Abu-n-Najm describing camels:

Early to water, not bare.
The pebbles scatter from them on the high plateau.

The root of fadd has a kasrah. That can be seen from the expression: 'lā yafḍudu-llāhu fāk' (May Allah not break your teeth).

The meaning is: 'O Muḥammad, were it not for your kindness, their shame and awe of being near to you would have prevented them from coming back to you after they had retreated and abandoned you.'

So pardon them and ask forgiveness for them and consult with them about the matter.

Scholars say that Allah commanded His Prophet ﷺ to do these things in a specific order. First He commanded him to pardon them for what was due to him in particular. Once he had done this, He commanded him to ask forgiveness for what they owed to Allah. Then when they were in this degree they were worthy of being consulted about matters.

Linguists say that consultation (istishārah) is derived from a verb which means ‘to train an animal to run and other things.’ Mishwār is a place where animals are made to run. Mashūr and mushtār are those who gather honey from its hives. ‘Adī ibn Zayd said:

The Shaykh gave him permission to listen and for hadiths like white honey (mushār).

Ibn ‘Atīyyah said, ‘Shūrā (consultation) is one of the principles of the Sharī‘ah and a firmly established ruling. Anyone who does not consult the people of knowledge and dīn should be dismissed. There is no disagreement concerning that. Allah praises the believers when He says: “They manage their affairs by mutual consultation.” (42:38) A bedouin said, “I have never been cheated, allowing my people to be cheated.” “How is that?” he was asked. He replied, “I do not do anything until I consult them.” Ibn Khuwayzimandād said, ‘It is mandatory for rulers to consult scholars about things they do not know and matters of the dīn which are unclear to them, as it is also mandatory for army leaders in matters connected to warfare, for important people in matters connected to public welfare, and for notable scholars, ministers and governors in matters connected to the best interests of the land and its government.’ It used to be said, ‘The one who consults never regrets it,’ as it also said, ‘The one who prides himself on his own opinion is misguided.’

Consult with them about the matter.

This indicates the permissibility of ijtihād in deciding matters and taking other people’s opinions into account when that is allowed by revelation. Allah permitted His Messenger ﷺ to do that. The people of interpretation disagree about the meaning of Allah commanding His Prophet ﷺ to consult his Companions. One group say that it was simply about military tactics, to encourage them, and raise their standing and draw them to their dīn. Allah has no need of anyone's opinion concerning His revelation. This is related from Qatādah, ar-Rabīʿ, Ibn Ishāq and ash-Shāfiʿī. Ash-Shāfiʿī said that it is on the same line as the words, 'Consult the virgin' which is meant to set her heart at ease, but it is not that it is actually mandatory.

Muqātil, Qatādah and ar-Rabīʿ said that when the Arab leaders were not consulted, it was upsetting for them, and so Allah commanded His Prophet ﷺ to consult them about the matter out of kindness to them, to assuage their rancour and to elevate them. When he consulted them, they recognised the honour he showed them.

Others say that this is about things concerning which there is no revelation. Al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī and aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk said, 'Allah did not command his Prophet ﷺ to consult out of any need for their opinion, but to instruct them in the virtue of consultation and so that his community would follow it after him.' The reading if Ibn 'Abbās has 'fi ba'di-l-amr' (some of the matter). Excellent are the words of a poet:

Consult your friend regarding what is hidden and abstruse.

Accept the advice of a gracious counselor.

Allah instructed His Prophet to do that when He said, "Consult with them" and "trust".

It is reported in the Muṣannaf of Abū Dāwūd from Abū Hurayrah that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, 'The one consulted is trusted.'

Scholars say that if someone is consulted about legal rulings, he should have knowledge of the dīn. That is rarely found in other than someone of intelligence. Al-Ḥasan said, 'The dīn of a person is not complete as long as his intellect is not complete.' When someone like this is consulted and strives in righteousness and makes an effort and there is an error in what he indicates, then he is not blameworthy. Al-Khaṭṭābī and others said that.

The description of the one consulted in matters of this world should be that he is intelligent, experienced and friendly to the one who consults him. He said:

Consult your truthful friend about any unclear, hidden matter.

Another said:

If the door to a matter is difficult of access for you, then consult someone intelligent and do not disobey him.

Shūrā is a blessing. The Prophet ﷺ said, ‘The one who consults does not regret and the one who does istikhārah is not disappointed.’ Sahl ibn Sa’d as-Sā’idī reported that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘No one is ever made wretched by consultation nor made happy by being satisfied with his own opinion.’ One of them said, ‘Consult someone who is experienced in matters. He will give you his opinion based on what usually happens to him, and you take it free of charge.’ ‘Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb made the appointment of a khalīfah, which is the greatest of matters, a matter of counsel.

Al-Bukhārī said, ‘The rulers after the Prophet ﷺ used to consult the trustworthy people of knowledge in allowable matters in order to adopt the easiest of them.’ Sufyān ath-Thawrī said, ‘Let the people you consult be people of taqwā and trust and those who fear Allah Almighty.’ Al-Ḥasan said, ‘By Allah, a people do not consult one another without being guided to the best of what is with them.’ It is reported from ‘Alī that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘There are no people who have a council and someone named Aḥmad or Muḥammad attends it and they admit him to it, but that it is good for them.’

Shūrā is based on differences of opinion and the person who consults is looking into those differences and trying to ascertain which is the closest possible position to the Book and the Sunnah. When Allah guides him to whatever He wishes, then he should resolve firmly on it and carry it out, trusting in it, since this is the aim of ijtihad. This is what Allah commanded the Prophet ﷺ to do in this ayah.

Then when you have reached a firm decision, put your trust in Allah.

Qatādah said, ‘Allah Almighty commanded His Prophet ﷺ that, when he reached a firm decision, he should act on it and trust in Allah, not in the advice he had been given. Resolving on a firm decision is the correct thing to do. Following opinion rather than firm resolve is only based on the decision of those who strive among the bold Arabs. It is as is said:

“When he aspires, he has resolve firmly before him and sets aside any mention of outcomes.

He only consults himself in his opinion and is only content with handle of the sword as companion.”

An-Naqqāsh said, ‘Resolve is the intention to carry something out. Ḥazm (determination) is putting a ḥā’ in place of the ‘ayn (‘azm) in resolve. Ibn ‘Aṭīyyah said, ‘This is an error. ‘Azm is the intention to carry out something. Allah says: “Consult with them about the matter. Then when you have reached a firm decision...”.’ Consultation and that which has the same meaning amounts to resolve. The Arabs say, ‘I will be firm if I resolve.’

Ja‘far aṣ-Ṣādiq and Jābir ibn Zayd recited ‘‘azamtu’, ‘When I have decided,’ attributing the resolve to Allah Himself by His guidance and granting success as when He said: ‘You did not throw when you threw. It was Allah who threw.’ (8:17) Thus the words mean: ‘When I have resolved for you, given you success and guided you, then put your trust in Allah.’ The rest recite ‘‘azaymta’, meaning ‘when you have decided.’

Al-Muhallab said, ‘The Prophet ﷺ accepted this and said, “It is not proper for a Prophet who has donned armour on behalf of His community to take it off until Allah decides.” It means that when he has made a decision, he should not turn away from it because that would be contrary to the trust in Allah which Allah stipulated should accompany resolve. He put on his armour when it was suggested by those whom Allah would honour with martyrdom to go forth with him. They were the righteous believers who had missed Badr. They said, “Messenger of Allah, lead us out against our enemies!”

‘The Prophet ﷺ had indicated that they should stay and that was also the view of ‘Abdullāh ibn Ubayy. He said, “Messenger of Allah, stay and do not lead the people out to them. If they stay, they will stay in a bad situation. If they come against us in Madīnah, we will fight them in the courtyards and alleyways and the women and children will throw stones at them from the walls. By Allah, we have never fought an enemy in this city without defeating them and we have never gone out to an enemy without their defeating us.” Others rejected this view and kept urging the people and calling for battle. The Prophet ﷺ prayed Jumu‘ah and went into his house afterwards and donned his armour. Then those people regretted that and said, “We forced the Messenger of Allah.” When he came out to them in his armour, they said, “Messenger of Allah, stay if you wish. We do not want to force you.” Then the Prophet ﷺ said, “It is not proper for a Prophet who has donned armour on behalf of His community to take it off until he fights.”’

Allah loves those who put their trust in Him.

Tawakkul is reliance on Allah while displaying lack of power. The noun is tuklān. One says, ‘ittakaltu ‘alayhi’ (I relied on him). Its root is ‘iwta-kaltu’ and the wāw has been changed to a yā’ because of the kasrah before it. Then the tā’ has replaced it and assimilated into the tā’ of Form VIII. One also uses Form II and says, ‘wakkaltu bi.’ The noun is wikālah or wakālah.

Scholars disagree about tawakkul. A group of Sufis say that the only ones entitled to it are those whose hearts are not mixed with fear of other than Allah, not of wild animals or anything else, and until they give up seeking for provision since Allah has guaranteed it.

The position of most fuqahā' was already mentioned (3:122). It is sound as we made clear. Mūsā and Hārūn experienced fear since Allah said to them: 'Have no fear,' (20:67-68) and Ibrāhīm is mentioned as fearing the angels when they came to him. (11:70) If Ibrāhīm the Friend and Mūsā the One-spoken-to, can show fear, that is enough evidence for us, and it is more likely that others will be fearful. This idea will be further explained.

إِنْ يَهْرُوكُمْ اللَّهُ فَلَا غَالِبَ لَكُمْ وَإِنْ يَخُدُّ لَكُمْ فَمَنْ ذَا الَّذِي يَصْرُكُكُمْ مِنْ
بَعْدِهِ وَعَلَى اللَّهِ فَلْيَتَوَكَّلِ الْمُؤْمِنُونَ ﴿١٥٦﴾

160 If Allah helps you, no one can vanquish you. If He forsakes you, who can help you after that? So the believers should put their trust in Allah.

If you rely on Him and trust in Him, He will help you and defend you against your enemies and you will not be overcome. If He were to forsake you, then no one could help you. The one forsaken is the one who is not helped as He says: 'If He forsakes you...' Forsaking (khidhlān) is absence of help and someone who is makhdhūl is abandoned and of no concern. A gazelle which abandons (khadhalat) its fellow females and stands over its calf in the field is called khadhūl. Ṭarafah said:

Isolated (khadhūl), grazing in a dense grove,
Eating the edges of the fruit of the arak, adorned.

He also said:

She looked at you with the eye of a girl.
She has left (khadhalat) her fellow does for her calf.

It is said that there is some reversal because she is makhdhūlah when she is forsaken. Takhādhala describes legs when they become weak.

[Al-A'shā] said:

The leg is weak (khadhūl) without being lame. A leg that is khadhulah is one that continues to be weak. Allah knows best.

وَمَا كَانَ لِنَبِيٍّ أَنْ يَكْفُرَ وَمَنْ يَكْفُرْ يَأْتِ بِمَا عَلَّ يَوْمَ الْقِيَامَةِ ثُمَّ نُوفِي
كُلُّ نَفْسٍ مَّا كَسَبَتْ وَهُمْ لَا يُظْلَمُونَ ﴿٥١﴾

161 No Prophet would ever be guilty of misappropriation. Those who misappropriate will arrive on the Day of Rising with what they have misappropriated. Then every self will be paid in full for what it earned. They will not be wronged.

When the archers left their positions at Uḥud out of fear that the other Muslims would seize all the booty and not leave anything for them, Allah made it clear that the Prophet ﷺ would not be unjust in the distribution and they did not have the right to loot.

Aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk said, ‘The reason is that on one of his expeditions the Messenger of Allah ﷺ sent out scouts and they took booty before they came to him. He divided the spoils among the people, but not the scouts and Allah revealed in criticism: “No Prophet would ever be guilty of misappropriation,” by allotting to some and not others.’ Something similar is related from Ibn ‘Abbās, ‘Ikrimah, Ibn Jubayr and others. They said that it was revealed because a piece of red velvet was missing from the booty at Badr. One of those with the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘Perhaps the Prophet ﷺ took it,’ and this was revealed. Abū Dāwūd and at-Tirmidhī transmitted it. He said that it is a gharīb ḥasan hadith. Ibn ‘Aṭīyah said, ‘It is said that this was spoken by the believers, who saw no harm in that. It is said that it was the hypocrites. It is also related that it was a sword which was missing.’ This is based on reading: ‘yaghulla’.

Abū Ṣakhr related from Muḥammad ibn Ka‘b: “No Prophet would ever be guilty of misappropriation” means that no Prophet would conceal something of the Book of Allah.’ It is said that the lām is one that indicates a transfer. It is also recited as yughalla. Ibn as-Sikkīt said, ‘We have only heard ghalla used about booty. And it is recited as “yaghulla” and “yughalla”. The first means to act falsely and the second is that acting thus is falsely attributed to him. The verb means to take something secretly.’

Ibn ‘Arafah said that misappropriation is called ghulūl because the hands are prevented (maghlūlah) from doing that. Abū ‘Ubayd said that ghulūl is only used in reference to booty. He said that he did not think that it is used for treachery or malice. It is, however, clear that aghalla is part of treachery, ghalla yaghillu is part of malice, and ghalla yaghullu is part of misappropriation of booty. The verb is also used of a camel that cannot quench its thirst. It is also used for being treacherous as in the poem by an-Namir:

May Allah repay Ḥamzah ibn Nawfal from us with the repayment of a traitor (mughill) false to his trust.

We find in a hadith, ‘There should be no treachery (ighlāl) and no theft.’ It is said, ‘No bribery.’ Shurayḥ said, ‘There is no liability for a borrower unless he is treacherous (mughill).’ The Prophet ﷺ said, ‘There are three to whom the heart of a believer is not treacherous...’ If the word is read with a fathah, then it is about rancour.

The verb ghalla can be either transitive or intransitive. ‘Ghalla-l-mafāwiz’ means ‘he entered the midst of the deserts.’ The verb is used for water running between trees. Linguistically, it is to take something from the booty while concealing it from one’s companions. The verb taghalghala is used for water running in between the trees. Ghalal is the water flowing at the roots of trees because it is concealed by the trees. It is as is said:

The torrents played with it and its water disappeared amid the trees, stopping at the roots of the castor-oil plant.

Ghilālah is an undergarment. Ghāll is depressed land with trees in it.

Places where the trees called Salam and Ṭalḥ grow are called ghāll. It is also the name of a plant. The plural is ghullān.

Some people say that ‘yughalla’ means that a ghāll exists. According to this interpretation, the reading is based on the meaning of ‘yaghulla’. According to most scholars, the meaning of ‘yughalla’ is that no one should accuse him of misappropriation in the booty.

The āyah forbids people to misappropriate booty and threatens those who do that. That should not be done to anyone, and it is worse still when applied to the Prophet ﷺ. He is singled out for mention because treachery towards him is a greater sin because wrong actions in his presence are magnified since it is mandatory to respect him. The rulers follow the command of the Prophet ﷺ and so they have their portion of respect. It is said that it means that no Prophet has ever misappropriated and so what is meant by the sentence is not a prohibition, but a report.

Those who misappropriate will arrive on the Day of Rising with what they have misappropriated.

He will bear it on his back and shoulder, being punished by carrying it and its weight, terrified by its voice and displaying his treachery before witnesses. This is the disgrace which Allah will inflict on the misappropriator similar to what He will do to the traitor who will have a banner set up behind him stating the extent of his treachery. Allah assigned punishments according to what human beings know and understand. Do you not see what a poet said?

Do you name me? Woe to you! Have you heard of the banner of treachery regarding her raised in the gathering?

The Arabs used to raise banners because of treachery and similarly a criminal would be paraded with his crime.

In Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim, Abū Hurayrah said, ‘The Messenger of Allah ﷺ stood among us one day and mentioned ghulūl and how terrible it was and then said, “I should not like to see any of you come on the Day of Resurrection, carrying round his neck a camel that will be grunting. Such a man will say, ‘Messenger of Allah, help me!’ I will say, ‘I can do nothing for you. I conveyed the Message to you.’ I should not like to see any of you come on the Day of Resurrection, carrying round his neck a horse that will be neighing. Such a man will say, ‘Messenger of Allah, help me!’ I will say, ‘I can do nothing for you. I conveyed the Message to you.’ I should not like to see any of you come on the Day of Resurrection, carrying round his neck a sheep that will be bleating. Such a man will say, ‘Messenger of Allah, help me!’ I will say, ‘I can do nothing for you. I conveyed the Message to you.’ I should not like to see any of you come on the Day of Resurrection, carrying round his neck a soul that will be shouting. Such a man will say, ‘Messenger of Allah, help me!’ I will say, ‘I can do nothing for you. I conveyed the Message to you.’ I should not like to see any of you come on the Day of Resurrection, carrying round his neck rags that will be fluttering. Such a man will say, ‘Messenger of Allah, help me!’ I will say, ‘I can do nothing for you. I conveyed the Message to you.’ I should not like to see any of you come on the Day of Resurrection, carrying round his neck gold and silver. Such a man will say, ‘Messenger of Allah, help me!’ I will say, ‘I can do nothing for you. I conveyed the Message to you.’”

Abū Dāwūd related that Samurah ibn Jundub said, ‘When the Messenger of Allah ﷺ gained some booty, he commanded Bilāl to make an announcement among the people and they would bring their booty, and then he would take the fifth and divide it. A day after the announcement a man brought a halter of hair and said, “Messenger of Allah, this is part of what we got in the booty.” He asked, “Did you hear Bilāl call out three times?” “Yes,” he replied. He asked, “What kept you from bringing it?” He made some excuse and the Prophet ﷺ said, “No, you will bring it on the Day of Rising.

I will not accept it from you.””

Some scholars say that it means that the person will be given the burden of that on the Day of Rising. It is as Allah says in another āyah: ‘They will bear their burdens on their backs. How evil is what they bear!’ (8:30) It is said that the report conveys the great seriousness of the matter. It means that on the Day of Rising a person will come and Allah will make his situation known, just as it would be known if he were carrying a grunting camel or a neighing horse on his back. This is making it metaphorical and not actual. When, however, words can be actual or metaphorical, the actual is the basis, as we read in the books of fundamental principles. The Prophet ﷺ was informing about the reality. [As the proverb goes,] ‘There is no perfume after ‘Arūs,’ [meaning that there is no glossing after the fact.]

It is said that if someone misappropriates something in this world, its form will appear to him on the Day of Rising in the Fire, and he will be told to go down and get it. When he goes down to it, it will continue to drop until it reaches the bottom of Hell. It will continue like that for as long as Allah wishes. It is said the words ‘arrive with what he has misappropriated’ means that that treachery and misappropriation will testify against him on the Day of Rising.

Scholars say that ghulūl is one of the great wrong actions on the strength of this āyah and the hadith already mentioned by Abū Hurayrah about a person carrying it on their neck. The Prophet ﷺ also said about Mid‘am, ‘No! By the One who has my self in his hand! The cloak which he took from the spoils on the Day of Khaybar before they were distributed will blaze with fire on him.’ When the people heard that, a man brought a sandal-strap – or two sandal-straps – to the Messenger of Allah ﷺ. The Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘A sandal-strap – or two sandal-straps – of fire!’ That is transmitted in the Muwattā’. The fact that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘By the One Who has my self in His hand’ and did not pray over the one who committed ghulūl is evidence of its gravity. It is one of the rights of people for which there must be retaliation in good and bad actions. Then the person is left to Allah's will. His words, 'A sandal-strap – or two sandal-straps – of fire' is like his words ﷺ, 'Bring the needle and thread.' This indicates that it is not lawful to take anything, great or small, from the booty before it is distributed.

The only exceptions that are agreed upon is food eaten, firewood and game caught in enemy territory. Az-Zuhrī reported that food can only be taken in enemy territory with the permission of the leader. This is baseless since traditions contradict it. Al-Ḥasan said, 'When the Companions of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ conquered a city or fortress, they ate from the pottage, flour, ghee and honey.' Ibrāhīm said that they may eat and fodder animals in enemy territory before the fifth is taken. 'Aṭā' also said that people on an expedition can eat ghee, honey and food they take and the rest must be handed over to the leader. This is the position of the majority of scholars.

This hadith is evidence for the fact that the baggage of the misappropriator is not burned because the Messenger of Allah ﷺ did not burn the baggage of the man who had taken the cloak nor that of the other man over whom he did not pray. If he had burned it, that would have been transmitted as an obligation. As for the hadith related from 'Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb saying that the Prophet ﷺ said, 'If you find a man who has misappropriated, burn his baggage and beat him,' which is reported by Abū Dāwūd and at-Tirmidhī from Ṣāliḥ ibn Muḥammad ibn Zā'idah, it is weak and not used as evidence. At-Tirmidhī said, 'I asked Muḥammad (meaning al-Bukhārī) about this hadith and he said, 'This is related by Ṣāliḥ ibn Muḥammad who is Abū Wāqid al-Laythī. His hadiths are munkar.'

Abū Dāwūd also related that he said, 'We went on an expedition with al-Walīd ibn Hishām and were accompanied by Sālim ibn

‘Abdullāh ibn ‘Umar and ‘Umar ibn ‘Abd al-‘Azīz. A man took some goods from the booty and Ibn Hishām commanded that his baggage be burned. He was paraded about and not given a share of the booty.’ Abū Dāwūd said, ‘This is the sounder of the two hadiths.’

It is related from ‘Amr ibn Shu‘ayb from his father from his grandfather that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ, Abū Bakr and ‘Umar burned the baggage of misappropriators and beat them. Abū Dāwūd said, ‘Alī ibn Baḥr added in it from al-Walīd (whom I have not heard of), “they denied him his share.”’ Abū ‘Umar said, ‘Some of those who related this hadith said, “His head is cut off and his baggage is burned.”’ This hadith goes back to Ṣāliḥ ibn Muḥammad who is not considered to be authoritative. It is confirmed that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘A Muslim’s blood is only lawful for one of three reasons.’ So, on this basis, there can be no execution for stealing from the booty.

Ibn Jurayj related from Abu-z-Zubayr from Jābir that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘There is no hand amputation in the case of someone who is treacherous, someone who loots or someone who snatches.’ This contradicts the hadith of Ṣāliḥ ibn Muḥammad and has a stronger isnād. A misappropriator is treacherous both linguistically and in the Sharī‘ah. If amputation is forbidden, then it is even more appropriate that execution would be as well. Aṭ-Ṭaḥāwī said, ‘If this hadith of Ṣāliḥ is sound, then it may have been at a time when there were punishments for crimes of property, as with the person who refused to pay zakāt indicated by the words: ‘I will take it along with half of his property, one of the firm commands of Allah Almighty.’ It is as Abū Hurayrah said about a lost camel that was concealed: ‘Its indemnity is owed and its like along with it.’ It is as ‘Abdullāh ibn ‘Amr ibn al-‘Āṣ said about hanging dates: ‘Its indemnity is twice the amount and some lashes as a deterring punishment.’ All of this is abrogated. Allah knows best.

If a man commits this crime and the object is found, it is taken from him and he is disciplined and punished. Mālik, ash-Shāfi‘ī, Abū Ḥanīfah and their people, and al-Layth say that his baggage is not burned. Ash-Shāfi‘ī, al-Layth and Dāwūd say that if he knows of the prohibition, he is punished. Al-Awzā‘ī said that all his baggage is burned except for his weapons, the clothes he is wearing and his saddle, but his mount is not taken from him and what he stole is not burned. This is the position of Aḥmad and Ishāq. Al-Ḥasan said that but excluded animals or a copy of the Qur’an.

Ibn Khuwayzimandād said that it is reported that Abū Bakr and ‘Umar burned the baggage of people who misappropriated and beat them. Ibn ‘Abd al-Barr said that those who said that the saddle and baggage of misappropriators are burned include Makḥūl and Sa‘īd ibn ‘Abd al-‘Azīz. Their evidence is the hadith reported, but in our view a hadith does not oblige violation of vested rights nor carrying out a judgment when there are stronger traditions than it. What Mālik and his followers believed regarding this question is sounder in respect of investigation and sound tradition. Allah knows best.

Mālik’s school does not differ about physical punishment. As for property, it is said that what when a dhimmī sells wine to a Muslim, the wine he sold to a Muslim is poured out and the price taken from the dhimmī as a punishment so that he does not sell wine to other Muslims. Thus financial penalties are permitted. ‘Umar poured out milk diluted with water.

Scholars agree that misappropriators must return all they took to the one in charge of the division before people separate if they can do that. If they do it, that is their repentance and requital of their wrong action. They disagree about what they do if the army has separated and they cannot reach the leader. A group of the people of knowledge say that they must give a fifth to the ruler and the rest as sadaqah. This is the position of az-Zuhrī, Mālik, al-Awzā‘ī, al-Layth and ath-Thawrī. It is also related from ‘Ubādah ibn aṣ-Ṣāmit, Mu‘āwiyah and al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī and is similar to the position of Ibn Mas‘ūd and Ibn ‘Abbās because they thought that they should give it away as ṣadaqah, and that is also the school of Aḥmad ibn Ḥanbal. Ash-Shāfi‘ī says that they cannot give away someone else’s property as ṣadaqah.’

Abū ‘Umar said, ‘I consider this to be the case when the owners or the heirs no longer exist. If none of them exist, then ash-Shāfi‘ī does not dislike ṣadaqah in that case, Allah willing. They agree that a found object can be given as ṣadaqah after it has been announced and not claimed. If the owner arrives after that, then he has a choice between a reward or liability. The same principle applies to misappropriated property. Success is by Allah.

The fact that there is liability for misappropriation indicates that those who take booty share equally in the booty and it is not lawful for anyone to be preferred in part of it over someone else. There is agreement that if someone steals some of it, he should be disciplined, as we already stated.

If someone has sexual intercourse with a slavegirl or steals a share, scholars disagree about carrying out the ḥadd punishment on him. One group think that there should be no amputation in this case.

Gifts to governors are equivalent to misappropriation. The disgrace of that in the Next World will be the same as that of the misappropriator. In the Sunan, Abū Dāwūd, and Muslim in the Ṣaḥīḥ, report from Abū Ḥumayd as-Sā‘idī that: ‘The Prophet ﷺ appointed a man called Ibn al-Lutbiyyah from Azd to collect the zakāt. When he arrived back, he said, “This is for you and this was given as a gift to me.” The Prophet ﷺ stood on the minbar, praised and glorified Allah and then said, “I appointed one of your men to be in charge of an activity for which Allah has made me responsible, and then he came and said, ‘This is for you and this was given as a gift to me.’ Why did he not sit in the house of his father or mother until his gift came to him if he is speaking the truth? By Allah, none of you will take anything without right but that he will meet Allah Almighty carrying it on the Day of Rising, a camel which is grumbling, or a cow which is mooing, or a sheep which is bleating.” Then he raised his hands until the whites of his armpits could be seen, and said, “O Allah! Have I conveyed it?” three times.’ Abū Dāwūd reported from Buraydah that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘If we appoint someone to a post and we pay him a wage, anything he takes after that is ghulūl.’

It is also related that Abū Mas‘ūd al-Anṣārī said, ‘The Messenger of Allah ﷺ sent me as a collector and said, “Go, Abū Mas‘ūd, and I should not like to see you come on the Day of Rising with one of the zakāt camels grumbling on your back, saying, ‘You have misappropriated me.” When I did not go, he said, “I will not force you.”’

These hadiths specify what Abū Dāwūd related from al-Mustawrid ibn Shaddād who said, ‘I heard the Messenger of Allah ﷺ say, “Whoever is an agent for us should acquire a wife. If he does not have a servant, he should acquire a servant. If he does not have a house, he should acquire a house.”’ Abū Bakr said, ‘I was told that the Prophet ﷺ said, “Whoever takes other than that is a thieving misappropriator.”’

Another aspect of ghulūl is keeping back books from their people, and other things are included as well. Az-Zuhrī said, ‘Beware of ghulūl in books.’ He was asked what that was and replied, ‘Keeping them from their people.’ It is said that it can mean to conceal from people something of revelation out of desire, fear or flattery. That is when people disliked something in the Qur’an that criticised their religion and abused their gods. They asked for it to be concealed. Muḥammad ibn Bashshār said that. What we began with is the position of the majority.

أَقْبَنَ بَيْنَ رِضْوَانِ اللَّهِ كَهْنُ بَاءَ يَسْتَعِطُّ مِنَ اللَّهِ وَمَأْوِيَهُ جَهَنَّمُ وَيَبْسُ
 الْمَصِيرُ ﴿٣٥﴾ هُمْ دَرَجَاتٌ عِنْدَ اللَّهِ وَاللَّهُ بِصِيرَتِكُمْ يَعْمَلُونَ ﴿٣٦﴾

162 Is someone who pursues the pleasure of Allah the same as someone who incurs displeasure from Allah and whose refuge is Hell? What an evil destination! 163
They have different ranks with Allah. Allah sees what they do.

The one who follows the pleasure of Allah is the one who abandons ghulūl and is steadfast in jihād. The one who incurs His displeasure is the one who espouses disbelief, ghulūl, or not following the Prophet ﷺ in battle. Such a person will go to the Fire if he does not repent or Allah does not pardon him. It is an evil place to return to. ‘Pleasure’ is read as both riḍwān and ruḍwān, like ‘udwān and ‘idwān.

They have different ranks with Allah.

The one who gains Allah’s pleasure is not like the one who incurs His displeasure. It is said that their ranks vary with Allah. Whoever gains His pleasure will have honour and immense reward and the one who incurs His displeasure will have abasement and painful punishment. It means that they will have different ranks, or be arranged in different ranks, or will be in different ranks, or will possess different ranks.

The People of the Fire also have different ranks, as in the words, ‘I found him in the depths of the Fire and brought him out to the shallows.’ A believer is not the same as an unbeliever in rank, and then the believers differ from one another, some having higher ranks than others, as is the case with the unbelievers. Darajah is a rank. Darj is to go through rank after rank. The stations in the Fire are referred to as ‘darakāt’ as Allah says: ‘The hypocrites are in the lowest level of the Fire.’ (4:145) Those who do not misappropriate will have ranks (darajāt) in the Garden, and those who do so will have levels (darakāt) in the Fire. Abū ‘Ubaydah said that Hell has levels (adrāk), each of which is a darak or dark. That refers to descending levels while darajāt refers to ascending ones.

لَقَدْ مَنَّ اللَّهُ عَلَى الْمُؤْمِنِينَ إِذْ بَعَثَ فِيهِمْ رَسُولًا مِّنْ أَنفُسِهِمْ يَتْلُوا
عَلَيْهِمْ آيَاتِهِ وَيُزَكِّيهِمْ وَيُعَلِّمُهُمُ الْكِتَابَ وَالْحِكْمَةَ وَإِن كَانُوا مِن قَبْلُ
لَآيَ ضَالِّينَ ﴿١٦٤﴾

164 Allah showed great kindness to the believers when He sent a Messenger to them from among themselves to recite His Signs to them and purify them and teach them the Book and Wisdom, even though before that they were clearly misguided.

Allah made it clear that He has given them a great favour by sending Muḥammad ﷺ to them. Several things are said about the meaning of the kindness (minnah) referred to here. One is that ‘from among themselves,’ means he is a human being like them. Since he showed definitive evidence and is a human being like them, they knew that that was from Allah. It is said that it is because he is one of them and so they are honoured by him ﷺ and that is the favour. It is said that he is one of them so that they know his condition and nothing of his path is hidden from them. Since his place was among them, it would be more fitting for them to fight for him and not retreat from him. There is an irregular reading which has ‘min anfasihim,’ meaning ‘from the noblest of them’ because he is from the Banū Hāshim and the Banū Hāshim are the best of Quraysh, and Quraysh are the best of the Arabs, and the Arabs are better than anyone else.

It is said that although ‘believers’ is general, its meaning here is particular to the Arabs because there is no Arab tribe which he is not descended from and they have lineage related to him, except for the Banū Taghlib who were Christians until Allah purified them of that. This interpretation is further elaborated by Allah’s words: ‘It is He who raised up among the unlettered people a Messenger from them.’ (62:2) from Yaḥyā ibn Ma‘īn from Hishām ibn Yūsuf from ‘Abdullāh ibn Sulaymān an-Nawfalī from az-Zuhrī from ‘Urwah that ‘Ā’ishah said, ‘Allah showed great kindness to the believers when He sent a Messenger to them from among themselves.’ She said, ‘This is particular to the Arabs.’ Others have said that Allah means all believers here and ‘from among themselves’ means that he is one of them and a human being like them, but he was singled out for the Revelation. This is the meaning of Allah’s words: ‘A Messenger has come to you from among yourselves.’ (9:128) The believers are singled out because they benefit from it. The favour to them is therefore greater.

‘Yatlū’ is in the accusative to describe the Messenger. It means that he recites. Tilāwah is recitation. ‘Before that’ means that before Muḥammad ﷺ they were in clear misguidance. It is said that ‘in’ means mā and the lām in the predicate means ‘illā’. It is like the phrase ‘even though before this you were astray’ (2:198), meaning that previously they were only among those who were misguided. This is the school of the Kufans. The meaning of this āyah was already discussed in al-Baqarah.

أَوْلَمَّا أَصَبْتُمْ مِصْيبَةً قَدْ أَصَبْتُمْ مِثْلَهَا قُلْتُمْ وَأَنْزَلَ اللَّهُ عَلَيْنَا الْقُرْآنَ فَأَلْهُمْنَا قُلْ هُوَ مِنْ عِنْدِ أَنْفُسِكُمْ وَإِنَّ اللَّهَ عَلَىٰ كُلِّ شَيْءٍ قَدِيرٌ ﴿١٣٠﴾

165 Why is it that when a calamity happens to you, when you have already inflicted twice as much, you say, ‘How could this possibly happen?’ Say, ‘It has come from your own selves.’ Allah has power over all things.

The alif at the beginning denotes a question and the wāw adds it to what comes before it. The ‘calamity’ referred to is their defeat at Uḥud and the words ‘you already inflicted twice as much’ refer to Badr. There they killed seventy and took seventy captive. A captive is like someone killed because he can be killed by his captor. You defeated them at Badr and at the beginning of Uḥud and killed about twenty of them then. You killed them in two battles and they afflicted you at Uḥud.

You say, ‘How could this possibly happen?’

‘How could we suffer this defeat and killing when we are fighting in the Way of Allah and are Muslims, and the Prophet and revelation are among us, and they are idolaters?’

Say, ‘It has come from your own selves.’

This refers to the disobedience of the archers. There are no people who obey their Prophet in war without being victorious because when they obey, they are the Party of Allah, and the Party of Allah are necessarily the victors.

Qatādah and ar-Rabī‘ ibn Anas said, ‘Allah means their asking the Prophet ﷺ to go out when he wanted to remain in Madīnah and the interpretation of the dream of armour being a fortress.’

‘Alī ibn Abī Tālib ؑ said, ‘It is their choosing ransom at Badr instead of killing.’ They were told, ‘If you let the captives be ransomed, an equal number of you will be killed.’ The Prophet ﷺ said about the captives at Badr, ‘You can kill them if you wish or, if you wish, let them be ransomed and enjoy the ransom, and then a like number of you will be martyred.’ The last of the seventy was Thābit ibn Qays who was in the Battle of Yamāmah. According to the first two views, ‘from your own selves’ refers to your wrong actions. According to the last view, it is your choice.

وَمَا أَصَابَكُمْ يَوْمَ الْتَقَى الْجَمْعَيْنِ فِإِذَنْ إِنَّهُ وَلِيَعْلَمَ الْمُؤْمِنِينَ ﴿١٦٦﴾ وَلِيَعْلَمَ الَّذِينَ

166 What assailed you on the day the two armies met was by Allah’s permission, so that He would know the believers, 167 and so that He would know the hypocrites. They were told, ‘Come and fight in the Way of Allah or at least help defend us.’ They said, ‘If we knew that there would be a fight, we would certainly follow you.’ They were closer to unbelief that day than to belief, saying with their mouths what was not in their hearts. And Allah knows best what they are hiding.

What assailed you on the day the two armies met was by Allah’s permission, so that He would know the believers

The ‘day’ here is Uḥud, and it refers to the killing, wounding and defeat that took place there. ‘By Allah’s permission’ means ‘with His knowledge’ or ‘by His decision and decree’. Al-Qaffāl said, ‘By leaving you and them, not that He willed that.’ This is the Mu‘tazilite interpretation. The fā’ is added because mā means ‘which’ here. That which assailed them when the two armies met was by Allah’s permission, and so it is like a precondition as Sibawayh said.

so that He would know the believers and so that He would know the hypocrites.

‘Knowing’ the believers and the hypocrites means to distinguish between them or to reveal them. It is said that it means to show the faith of the believers by their firmness in fighting and to show the disbelief of hypocrites by showing their abuse so that they will know that.

They were told, ‘Come and fight in the Way of Allah or at least help defend us.’

‘They were told’: the hypocrites here mean ‘Abdullāh ibn Ubayy and his people who ceased to help the Prophet ﷺ. They numbered 300. ‘Abdullāh ibn ‘Amr ibn Ḥarām al-Anṣārī went after them and said to them, ‘Fear Allah and do not abandon your Prophet! Fight in the Way of Allah or defend!’ Ibn Ubayy said to him, ‘I do not think that there will be fighting. If we knew that there would be fighting, we would be with you.’ When ‘Abdullāh despaired of them, he said, ‘Go, enemies of Allah. Allah and His Messenger have no need of you!’ He went with the Prophet ﷺ and was martyred.

People disagree about the meaning of ‘defend’ here. As-Suddī, Ibn Jurayj and others said, ‘Make our numbers seem larger even if you do not fight with us.’ That is defence against the enemy and deterrence. Making numbers seem larger deters the enemy.

Anas ibn Mālīk said, ‘At the battle of al-Qādisiyyah, I saw ‘Abdullāh ibn Umm Maktūm wearing armour whose ends were dragging. He had a black banner in his hand. He was asked, “Did not Allah excuse you [from fighting]?” [He was blind.] He said, “Indeed, but I want to increase the numbers of the believers with myself.”’ It is related that he said, ‘So how is my increasing the numbers in the Cause of Allah!’ Abū ‘Awn al-Anṣārī said, ‘The meaning of “defend” is “to take up position (rābitū)”.’ This is close to the first meaning as a murābiṭ must be a defender because if it had not been for the stationing of the murābitūn at the borders, the enemy would have entered.

Some commentators believe that the words of ‘Abdullāh ibn ‘Amr, ‘Defend’ were a summons to fight because he called them to fight in the Way of Allah and so that the word of Allah be uppermost. When he saw that they were not following that, he turned his face from them to shame them and show his disdain. Do you not see that Quzmān said, ‘By Allah, I only fought for the honour of my people!’ And do you not see that one of the Anṣār said on the day of the battle of Uḥud when he saw that Quraysh had released their animals in the fields of the canal, ‘Are we going to let them graze in the fields of the Banū Qaylah without us fighting?’ That means: ‘You are not fighting for the Cause of Allah. You are just fighting for yourselves and your territory.’

They were closer to unbelief that day than to belief.

Their state was evident and the veils covering them ripped apart and their hypocrisy disclosed to those who thought they were Muslims. So they were closer to disbelief in their outward state, even though they were actually unbelievers anyway.

The words ‘saying with their mouths what was not in their hearts’ means that they were making a show of faith but concealing disbelief. The word ‘mouths’ stresses that.

الَّذِينَ قَالُوا لِإِخْوَانِهِمْ وَقَعَدُوا لَوْ أَطَاعُونَا مَا قُتِلُوا قُلْ فَادْرَأْ
عَنْ أَنْفُسِكُمُ الْمَوْتَ إِنْ كُنْتُمْ صَادِقِينَ ﴿١٦٨﴾

168 They are those who said of their brothers, when they themselves had stayed behind, ‘If they had only obeyed us, they would not have been killed.’ Say, ‘Then ward off death from yourselves if you are telling the truth.’

They are those who said of their brothers, when they themselves had stayed behind,

‘They are those who said of their brothers,’ means ‘on behalf of their brothers’. They were the martyrs of Khazraj who had been killed. They were their brothers in lineage and proximity, but not in the dīn. They said of these martyrs, ‘If they had stayed in Madīnah, they would not have been killed.’ It is said that ‘Abdullāh ibn Ubayy and his fellow hypocrites said about them: ‘If those who were killed had obeyed us, they would not have been killed.’ So ‘obeyed us’ means by not going out against Quraysh. ‘They stayed behind’ means ‘They said this and sat by themselves, not going out on jihād.’ Allah then answered them.

Say, ‘Then ward off death from yourselves if you are telling the truth.’

This means: ‘Say to them, Muḥammad: “If you are speaking the truth, then avert death from yourselves.”’ The word dar’ means defence. This makes it clear that there is no defence against the Decree. A person who is killed can only be killed at the end of his life-span. What Allah knows and reports will be must happen. It is said that on that day seventy hypocrites died. Abu-l-Layth as-Samarqandī said, ‘I heard one of the commentators in Samarqand say, “On the day this āyah was revealed, seventy hypocrites died.”’

وَلَا تَحْسَبَنَّ الَّذِينَ قُتِلُوا فِي سَبِيلِ اللَّهِ أَمْوَاتًا بَلْ أَحْيَاءٌ عِنْدَ رَبِّهِمْ
يُرْزَقُونَ ﴿١٦٩﴾ فَرِحِينَ بِمَاءِ الْيَهُودِ اللَّهُ مِنْ فَضْلِهِ وَيَسْتَبْشِرُونَ بِالَّذِينَ
لَمْ يَلْحَقُوا بِهِمْ مِنْ خَلْفِهِمْ أَلا تَخَافُ عَلَيْهِمْ وَلَا هُمْ يَحْزَنُونَ ﴿١٧٠﴾

169 Do not suppose that those killed in the Way of Allah are dead. No indeed! They are alive and well provided for in the very presence of their Lord, 170 delighting in the favour Allah has bestowed on them, rejoicing over those they left behind who have not yet joined them, feeling no fear and knowing no sorrow,

When Allah made it clear that what happened at Uḥud was a test to distinguish the hypocrites from the truthful, He made it clear that the one who did not flee and was killed enjoyed honour and life with Him. The āyah is about the martyrs of Uḥud. It is also said that it is about martyrs of Bi'r Ma'ūnah or that it is general to all martyrs.

We find in the Muṣannaf of Abū Dāwūd, that Ibn 'Abbās reported that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, 'When your brothers were struck down at Uḥud, Allah placed their spirits in the mouths of green birds which go to the rivers of the Garden, eating from their fruits and returning to gold lamps hanging in the shadow of the Throne. When they found their delightful food and drink and resting-places, they said, "Who will convey to our brothers from us that we are alive and well provided for in the Garden so that they do not turn from doing jihād and do not flinch in battle?" Allah said, "I will convey it for you." and then Allah revealed, "Do not suppose..."

Baqī ibn Mukhallad related that Jābir said, "The Messenger of Allah ﷺ met me and said, "Jābir, why do I see you downcast and worried?" I replied, "Messenger of Allah, my father was martyred and left dependents and he had debts." He said, "Shall I give you the good news about what your father has received from Allah?" "Yes, indeed," I replied. He said, "Allah has given life to your father and spoken to him directly – and He speaks to no one except from behind a veil – and said to him, ‘My slave, wish and I will give to you.’ He said, ‘Lord, return me to the world so that I can be killed for You a second time.’ So the Lord said, ‘It has already been decided by Me that people do not return to it.’ He said, ‘Lord, then convey to those after me.’ So Allah revealed, ‘Do not suppose...’” It is transmitted by Ibn Mājah in the Sunan and at-Tirmidhī in his Jāmi‘ and he said that it is a ḥasan gharīb hadith.

Wakī‘ related from Sālīm ibn al-Aftās that Sa‘īd ibn Jubayr said, ‘When Ḥamzah ibn ‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib and Muṣ‘ab ibn ‘Umayr were struck down and saw the good they had been given, they said, “Would that our brothers knew the good with which we have been provided so that it would increase their desire for jihād!” Allah Almighty said, “I will convey it to them from you,” and He revealed this.’

Abu-ḍ-Ḍuḥā said, ‘This āyah was revealed about the people of Uḥud in particular.’ The first hadith indicates that this view is sound. Some of them said that it was revealed about the martyrs of Badr. They were fourteen men: eight of the Anṣār and six of the Muhājirūn. It is also said that it was revealed about the martyrs of the Bi‘r Ma‘ūnah whose story is well known. Muḥammad ibn Iṣḥāq and others mentioned it. Others said that when the relatives of the martyrs obtained blessings and happiness, they were filled with regret and said, ‘We are in blessing and happiness while our fathers, sons and brothers are in the grave.’ So Allah revealed this āyah to console them and tell them about the state of those who had been killed.

Generally speaking, even though it is possible for revelation to have a specific cause, Allah reports in it that martyrs are alive in the Garden and provided for, and it is not impossible that, while they have died and their bodies are in the earth, their spirits are still alive, like those of all the believers. They are given provision in the Garden at the moment of their death and so it is as if their life in this world was continuing.

Scholars disagree about this. The majority take the position we mentioned and say that their life is real. Some say that their spirits are returned to them in their graves and they enjoy bliss, in the same way that the unbelievers are revived in their graves and are punished.

Mujāhid said, ‘They are provided with the fruits of the Garden,’ in other words they experience its scent while not actually being in it. Other people say that the ayah is metaphorical and it means that Allah has judged that they will be blessed in the Garden and so it is praise for them. That is like when you say, ‘So-and-so is not dead,’ meaning that his renown lives on. It is said:

The death of someone godfearing is life without annihilation.

Some people die among people and yet they remain alive.

It means that they continue to be remembered with excellent praise.

Others say that their spirits are in the mouths of green birds and they are provided for in the Garden, eating and enjoying bliss. This is the sound position because the sound transmission about it is that it is actual and the hadith of Ibn ‘Abbās removes any dispute. The same is true of the hadith of Ibn Mas‘ūd that Muslim transmitted. We have further explained the states of the dead and the Next World in Kitāb at-Tadhkirah. Praise be to Allah.

There we mentioned how the martyrs are and the fact that they have different states. As for the interpretation of the martyrs being ‘alive’ meaning that they will be brought back to life here, this is unlikely and is refuted by the Qur’an and Sunnah. Allah’s word ‘alive’ indicates their everlasting life and only those who are alive are provided for. It is said that every year the reward of an expedition is written for them and they share in the reward of every jihād after them until the Day of Rising because they made jihād a sunnah. It is like Allah’s words: ‘So We decreed for the tribe of Israel that if someone kills another person...’ (5:32) That will be dealt with in that sūrah, Allah willing.

It is said that their spirits bow and prostrate under the Throne until the Day of Rising just as the souls of living believers who spend the night in wudū’ also do. It is said that it is said because a martyr does not decay in the grave and the earth does not consume him. We mentioned this idea in at-Tadhkirah. The earth does not consume Prophets, martyrs, scholars, mu’adhdhins whose wage is with Allah and those who know the Qur’an.

Since a martyr is adjudged to be alive, there is no prayer said over him, as is the ruling of someone physically alive. Scholars disagree about washing martyrs and praying over them. Mālik, ash-Shāfi‘ī Abū Ḥanīfah and ath-Thawrī believe that all martyrs should be washed and prayed over, except for those killed in actual battle against the enemy, based on the hadith of Jābir in which the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘Bury them in their blood,’ i.e. at Uḥud they were not washed. Al-Bukhārī related it.

Abū Dāwūd related that Ibn ‘Abbās said, ‘The Messenger of Allah ﷺ commanded that those killed at Uḥud should have their weapons and armour removed from them and be buried in their blood and clothing.’ That is the position of Aḥmad, Ishāq, al-Awzā‘ī, Dāwūd, a group of the fuqahā’ and People of Hadith of the cities and Ibn ‘Ulayyah. Sa‘īd ibn al-Musayyab and al-Ḥasan said that they should be washed. One of them said that the martyrs of Uḥud were not washed because they were so many and the situation distracted them from doing that.

Abū ‘Umar says that no one takes the position of Sa‘īd and al-Ḥasan among the fuqahā’ except for ‘Ubaydullāh ibn al-Ḥasan al-‘Anbārī. What they mentioned about them being distracted from doing it is not a valid reason because each of them had relatives who could wash them and see to them. The reason – and Allah knows best – is, as in the hadith: ‘It will be like the scent of musk on the Day of Rising.’ So it is clear that the reason is not as some of them said about them being distracted from doing it and there is no place for analogy and investigation in this matter. It is simply a question of following the tradition about those killed at Uḥud not being washed.

One of the later scholars who took the position of al-Ḥasan argued, using the words of the Prophet ﷺ about the martyrs of Uḥud, ‘I will be a witness for these people on the Day of Rising.’ He said that this indicates that they are special and others do not share with them in that. Abū ‘Umar said that this is aberrant and the position that they are not washed is more appropriate since that was confirmed from the Prophet ﷺ about those killed at Uḥud and others. Abū Dāwud related that Jābir said, ‘A man was hit by an arrow in his chest or his throat and died. He was buried in his clothes as he was. He said, “We are with the Messenger of Allah ﷺ.”’

As for praying over them, scholars also disagree about that. Mālik, al-Layth, ash-Shāfi‘ī, Aḥmad and Dāwūd believe that the prayer should not be performed over them, based on the hadith of Jābir which states that two of the dead of Uḥud were buried in the same cloth. It was asked, ‘Which of them knew the most Qur’an?’ One of them was indicated and he was put first in the grave. Then he ﷺ said, ‘I will be a witness for these people on the Day of Rising.’ He commanded that they should be buried in their blood and not washed or prayed over. The fuqahā’ of Kufa, Basra and Syria say that the prayer is said over them and they use as evidence mursal hadiths about the Prophet ﷺ performing the prayer over Ḥamzah. Scholars agree, however, that if someone is removed alive from the battlefield and does not die in the battle, but dies later, the prayer is performed over him, as ‘Umar did.

They disagree about someone killed unjustly, like those killed by Khārījites, highwaymen and the like. Abū Ḥanīfah and ath-Thawrī said that anyone killed unjustly is not washed, but the prayer is said over him and over every martyr, and that is the position of most Iraqis, and they cite hadiths in support of this. They related by various paths that Zayd ibn Ṣūḥān, who was killed in the Battle of the Camel, said, ‘Do not remove my garment nor wash away my blood.’

It is confirmed that ‘Ammār ibn Yāsir said something similar. ‘Ammār was killed at the Battle of Ṣiffīn and ‘Alī did not wash him. Ash-Shāfi‘ī has two positions: one is that they are washed like all the dead except those who are actually killed in battle. This is the position of Mālīk. Mālīk said that those killed by the unbelievers who die in battle are not washed. The one killed by unbelievers outside of battle is washed and prayed over, and this is the position of Aḥmad ibn Ḥanbal. The other position of ash-Shāfi‘ī is that those killed by rebels are not washed. The position of Mālīk is sounder. Washing the dead is confirmed by consensus and transmitted from Kufa. So it is mandatory to wash every dead person except for those excluded by consensus or a firm sunnah. Success is by Allah.

If the enemy surprises people in their camp and some of them are killed, is the ruling about them the same as someone killed in battle or the normal ruling of someone who has died? This question arose for us in Cordoba when the enemy attacked by surprise on the third morning of Ramadan 627 AH. Some were killed and some were captured. My father was among those who were killed. I asked our Shaykh, Abu Ja‘far Aḥmad, known as Abū Ḥujjah, about this. He said, ‘Wash him and pray over him. Your father was not killed in battle in the ranks.’ Then I asked our Shaykh Rabi‘ ibn ‘Abd ar-Raḥmān ibn Aḥmad ibn Rabi‘ ibn Ubayy and he said that his ruling is that of someone killed in battle. Then I asked the Qāḍī Abu-l-Ḥasan ‘Alī ibn Qitrāl, while a group of fuqahā’ were around him. They said, ‘Wash him, shroud him and pray over him.’ I did that. After that I found the question in at-Tabaṣṣur by Abu-l-Ḥasan al-Lakhmī and others. If I had found that before, I would not have washed him and I would have buried him in his blood in his clothes.

This āyah indicates the immense reward for being killed in the Way of Allah and martyrdom in respect of it so that it expiates wrong actions, as the Prophet ﷺ stated: ‘Being killed in the way of Allah expiates everything except debt. That is what Jibrīl told me.’ Our scholars say that the mention of debts alludes also to other rights for which one is responsible, like usurpation, taking property wrongfully, murder and deliberate injury and other matters which entail responsibility. None of that is forgiven by jihād, and there is requital in respect of all of that in the form of good actions and bad actions, as reported in the sound Sunnah.

‘Abdullāh ibn Unays reported that he heard the Messenger of Allah ﷺ say, ‘Allah will gather the slaves – or people (Hammām is unsure of the word used) – naked, uncircumcised, bare.’ He was asked what that was and he answered, ‘They will have nothing with them. A voice will call to them which will be heard by all, far and near: “I am the King. I am the Judge. None of the people of the Garden should enter the Garden while one of the people of the Fire is seeking requital of an injustice from him, and none of the people of the Fire should enter the Fire while one of the people of the Garden is seeking requital of an injustice from him, even a slap.”’ They asked, ‘How will we be able to do that when we will come barefoot, naked and uncircumcised?’ He replied, ‘It will be with good actions and wrong actions.’ Al-Ḥārith ibn Usāmah transmitted it.

It is also reported in Muslim from Abū Hurayrah that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘Do you know who is the true bankrupt?’ They replied, ‘The bankrupt is the person who has neither money nor goods.’ He said, ‘The bankrupt person of my community is the one who performs the prayer, fasts and pays zakāt, but insults this person, slanders that one, consumes the property of this person, sheds the blood of that one, and strikes this one. Some will be given some of his good deeds and others will be given some of his good deeds. If his good deeds are exhausted before he has given everyone their due, some of their wrong actions will be taken and cast on him and then he will be cast into the Fire.’ He ﷺ also said, ‘By the One who has my self in His hand, if a man is killed in the Way of Allah and then is brought to life and killed again and then brought to life and killed again, and owes a debt, he will not enter the Garden until his debt is settled.’ Abū Hurayrah reported that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘The soul of the believer is suspended as long as he owes a debt.’ Aḥmad ibn Zuhayr said, ‘Yaḥyā ibn Ma‘īn was asked about this hadith and said that it is sound.

If it is said, ‘This indicates that some martyrs will not enter the Garden when they are killed and their spirits are not in the mouths of birds as was mentioned and they are not in their graves, so where then are they?’ We reply that it is reported that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘The spirits of martyrs are at a river at the door of the Garden called Bāriq. Their provision is brought out to them from the Garden morning and evening.’ Perhaps it is them, and Allah knows best. This is like what Imām Abū Muḥammad ibn ‘Aṭīyyah said. He said, ‘Those have different degrees and states, but all of them are provided for.’

Imām Abū ‘Abdullāh Muḥammad ibn Yazīd ibn Mājah al-Qazwīnī has in his Sunan from Sulaym ibn ‘Āmir who heard Abū Umāmah say that he heard the Messenger of Allah ﷺ say, ‘A martyr at sea is like two martyrs on land and someone who suffers from seasickness is like someone stained in his own blood on land. The time between one wave and the next is like being cut off from this world in obeying Allah. Allah Almighty has appointed the Angel of Death to take all souls except for those of martyrs at sea: Allah Almighty Himself sees to taking their souls. The martyr on land is forgiven all wrong actions except for debts while the martyr at sea is forgiven all wrong actions and debts as well.’

The debt which holds a person back from the Garden, and Allah knows best, is when he left enough to settle the debt but did not mention it in his will, or which he could have paid but did not, or which he incurred in extravagance and stupidity and died before repaying. As for someone who incurred the debt out of his obligation to support his dependents or because of hardship, and died without leaving enough to pay it, Allah will not hold him back from the Garden, Allah willing, because it is the duty of the ruler to pay his debt for him, either from the zakāt, from the share of the debtors, or from the booty. The Prophet ﷺ said, ‘If anyone leaves a debt or loss, it is up to Allah and His Messenger. Whoever leaves property, it is for his heirs.’ We have further explained this in a chapter in Kitāb at-Tadhkirah. Praise be to Allah.

well provided for in the presence of their Lord, delighting in the favour Allah has bestowed on them,

There is an elision here which implies, ‘in the honour of their Lord’. The word ‘inda’ necessarily indicates proximity. Here it denotes honour. The verb ‘provided for’ has its normal meaning. Some people say that the life referred to is that of being remembered and they are given beautiful praise. The first view is that it is actual and real.

It is said that when the spirits rove in that state, they perceive the scents, fragrance, blessing and delight of the Garden appropriate for spirits, but which act as provision and stimulation for them. As for physical pleasures, when those spirits are returned to their bodies, they will enjoy the full bliss prepared for them. This is a sound statement and it is a sort of metaphor. It agrees with what we have reported. Allah grants success.

The verb ‘delighting’ is a ḥāl ‘circumstantial expression’ of what is implied in ‘well-provided for’. It is also possible that ‘delighting’ is an adjective stemming from the earlier word ‘alive’. ‘Delight’ is joy and the ‘favour’ is the bliss mentioned in this āyah. Ibn as-Samayfa’ recited ‘fāriḥūna’ with an alif. They are two dialectical forms, like fariḥ and rejoicing over those they left behind who have not yet joined them.

Those who have not joined them in favour, even though they have favour. The word ‘rejoicing’ comes from basharah (skin) because when a man is happy, the effect of joy shows in his face. As-Suddī said, ‘Martyrs will be given a book which mentions those of their brothers they have preceded and they will be delighted as people in this world rejoice when someone who has been away returns.’

Qatādah, Ibn Jurayj, ar-Rabī‘ and others said that they rejoice by saying, ‘Our brothers we left in this world are fighting in the Way of Allah with their Lord. They will be martyred and obtain an honour like ours.’ So they delight in that.

It is said that the indication of the good news for those who have not yet joined them refers to all the believers, but when they see the reward of Allah there is certainty that the dīn of Islam is the Truth for which Allah has rewarded them and so they rejoice in the favour that Allah has given them. They rejoice for the believers because ‘they will feel no fear and know no sorrow’. Az-Zajjāj and Ibn Fūrak believed this.

يَسْتَبَشِرُونَ بِعِيقَةِ مَرَأَتِهِ وَفَضْلِ وَأَنَّ اللَّهَ لَا يُضِيعُ أَجْرَ الْمُؤْمِنِينَ ﴿٧٠﴾

171 rejoicing in blessings and favour from Allah and that Allah does not let the wage of the believers go to waste.

They are rejoicing in obtaining the Garden from Allah or in forgiveness from Allah. ‘Favour’ is extra clarification since favour is a part of blessing and indicates its great expanse and that it is not like the blessings of this world. It is said that favour comes after blessing by way of stress. At-Tirmidhī reports from al-Miqdām ibn Ma’dikarib that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘The martyr has six distinguishing features with Allah. [Some variants have seven.] Allah forgives him immediately, he sees his seat in the Garden, he is protected from the punishment of the grave, he is safe from the greatest fear, a ruby crown of gravity will be placed on his head which is better than this world and everything in it, he will be married to seventy-two houris, and he will intercede for seventy of his relatives.’ This is a sound ḥasan gharīb hadith. This is the explanation of blessing and favour, and there are many traditions about that.

Mujāhid said, ‘Swords are the keys to the Garden.’ It is related that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘Allah Almighty honoured the martyrs with five marks of honour with which He did not honour any of the Prophets nor me. One of them is that all Prophets have their souls taken by the Angel of Death who is the one who will take my soul. Allah is the One who takes the souls of the martyrs by His power however He wishes and the Angel of Death has no power over their souls. The second is that all the Prophets are washed after death and I will be washed after death. The martyrs are not washed and they have no need for the water of this world. The third is that all the Prophets are shrouded and I will be shrouded. The martyrs are not shrouded, but buried in their clothes. The fourth is that when the Prophets die, they are called dead and when I die, I will be called dead. The martyrs are not called dead. The fifth is that the Prophets are given their intercession on the Day of Rising and my intercession will be on the Day of Rising. The martyrs intercede every day for those they intercede for.’

Al-Kisā’ī recited ‘inna-llāha’ and the rest have it as ‘anna’. If someone recites it as ‘anna’, it means ‘rejoicing in blessing from Allah and rejoicing in the fact that Allah will not let the wage of the believers go to waste.’ If it is recited with ‘inna’, then it is for the inceptive. Its proof is in the reading of Ibn Mas‘ūd: ‘Allahu’.

الَّذِينَ آمَنُوا بِاللهِ وَالرَّسُولِ مِنْ بَعْدِ مَا أَصَابَهُمُ الْقَرْحُ لِلَّذِينَ أَحْسَنُوا
 مِنْهُمْ وَاتَّقُوا أَجْرَ عَظِيمٍ ﴿١٧٦﴾

172 Those who did good and were godfearing, among those who responded to Allah and the Messenger after the wound had been inflicted, will have an immense reward:

‘Those’ is in the nominative for the inceptive whose predicate is ‘after the wound had been inflicted’. It can also be in the position of the genitive as an appositive for ‘believers’ or for ‘who have not yet joined them’. ‘Istajābū’ means ‘respond’, and the sīn and tā’ are redundant. [VERSE]

In the two Ṣaḥīḥ Collections, ‘Urwah ibn az-Zubayr said, “Ā’ishah said to me, “Your father is one of those who responded to Allah and the Messenger after they had been wounded.” Ā’ishah said, “Nephew, your fathers (meaning az-Zubayr and Abū Bakr) are among those who responded to Allah and the Messenger after they were wounded.” She continued, “When the idolaters left Uḥud and the Prophet ﷺ and his Companions had suffered the injuries they suffered, they feared that they would return, so he ﷺ said, ‘Who will volunteer to go to those so that they know that we have strength?’ Abū Bakr and az-Zubayr went out with seventy men after the people. They heard them and departed by the favour of Allah.”

Ā’ishah indicated what happened in the expedition of Ḥamrā’ al-Asad which is about eight miles from Madīnah. That was on the Sunday, the second day after Uḥud. The Messenger of Allah ﷺ called on the people to pursue the idolaters. He said, ‘Only those who were with us yesterday will go with us.’ So two hundred of the believers went with him. We find in al-Bukhārī: ‘He asked, “Who will go after them?” He selected seventy men from them. Abū Bakr and az-Zubayr were among them. They reached Ḥamrā’ al-Asad, meaning to frighten the enemy. Some of them were seriously wounded and could not walk or ride, and were carried. All of that was to obey the command of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ and out of desire for jihād.’

It is said that the āyah was revealed about two men of the Banū ‘Abd al-Ashhal who were seriously wounded, one leaning on the other. They went out with the Prophet ﷺ. When they reached Ḥamrā’ al-Asad, Nu‘aym ibn Mas‘ūd met them and told them that Abū Sufyan ibn Ḥarb and the Quraysh with him had gathered under their banner to return to Madīnah and eradicate its people. They said what Allah tells us: ‘Allah is enough for us and the Best of Guardians.’ When Quraysh gathered like that, Ma‘bad al-Khuzā‘ī went to them. Khuzā‘ah were allies of the Prophet ﷺ. When he saw the state of the Companions of the Prophet ﷺ and saw the resolve of Quraysh to return and eradicate the people of Madina, he was alarmed by that and his faithfulness to the Prophet ﷺ and His Companions led him to alarm Quraysh, so he said to them, ‘I have left Muḥammad and his Companions at Ḥamrā’ al-Asad in a large army. He has gathered those who stayed behind and they are coming against you. Save yourselves! Save yourselves! I forbid you to do that! By Allah, what I saw of them led me to compose some verses of poetry!’ ‘What are they?’ he was asked. He said:

My horse almost fell at the rumble when the earth streamed with swarms of steeds.
Gallop with noble lions astride them, not feeble in the fight, firm in the saddle, fully armed.
I continued to run, thinking the ground itself was moving,
when they brought a leader who is never deserted.
I said, ‘Woe to Ibn Ḥarb in your encounter when the land is surging with horses!’
I warn the people of the Ḥaram clearly, speaking to every wise and sensible man among them,
Of the army of Aḥmad, not some contemptible troop, and my warning should not be described as hearsay.

That made Abū Sufyan and those with him turn back. Allah cast fear into their hearts and they returned to Makkah swiftly in fear, and the Prophet ﷺ returned victorious to Madīnah with his Companions as Allah says: ‘So they returned with blessings and bounty from Allah and no evil touched them.’ That means that there was no fighting or terror.

Jābir ibn ‘Abdullāh asked for permission from the Prophet ﷺ to go out with him and he gave him permission. Allah had told them of the immense reward that this group would have, and the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘It refers to this expedition.’ This is the commentary of the majority on this āyah.

Mujāhid and ‘Ikrimah have an aberrant view and say that this āyah is connected to the two after it and it is about the Prophet ﷺ going out to Lesser Badr. He went out for the appointment he made with Abū Sufyan at Uḥud when he said, ‘Our meeting is Badr next year.’ The Prophet ﷺ said, ‘Say: “Yes.”’ So the Prophet ﷺ set out for Badr where there was a great market and gave his Companions some dirhams. He approached Badr and Nu‘aym ibn Mas‘ūd al-Ashjā‘ī came to him and told him that Quraysh had gathered and were coming to fight them. The Muslims were alarmed at that, but they said: ‘Allah is enough for us and the best of Guardians.’ They were determined and went to Badr and did not find anyone except the market. They bought some condiments and traded with their dirhams and returned safely and with a profit, as Allah says: ‘They returned with blessings and bounty from Allah.’ (3:174) This means the profit from their trade. Allah knows best.

الَّذِينَ قَالَ لَهُمُ النَّاسُ إِنَّ النَّاسَ قَدْ جَمَعُوا لَكُمْ فَاخْشَوْهُمْ
فَزَادَهُمْ إِيمَانًا وَقَالُوا حَسْبُنَا اللَّهُ وَنِعْمَ الْوَكِيلُ ﴿١٧٤﴾

173 those to whom people said, ‘The people have gathered against you, so fear them.’ But that merely increased their belief and they said, ‘Allah is enough for us and the Best of Guardians.'

There is disagreement about who is meant by 'those to whom people said'. Mujāhid, Muqātil, 'Ikrimah and al-Kalbī said that this refers to Nu'aym ibn Mas'ūd al-Ashjā'ī. The expression is general but its meaning is particular. A similar usage is seen in 'Do they in fact envy other people' (4:54) when Muḥammad ﷺ is meant. As-Suddī said that it was a bedouin who was given a wage for doing that.

Ibn Ishāq and a group said that 'people' here refers to a troop of the 'Abd al-Qays who passed by Abū Sufyān who sent them to the Muslims to impede them. It is said that the 'people' referred to are the hypocrites. As-Suddī said, 'When the Prophet ﷺ and his Companions prepared to go out to Lesser Badr for the appointment with Abū Sufyān, the hypocrites came to them and said, 'We are your friends. We forbade you to go out to them and you disobeyed us and they fought you and won. If you go to them, none of you will return.' They replied, 'Allah is enough for us and the Best of Guardians.'

Abū Ma'shar said, 'Some of Hudhayl came to Madīnah from Tihāmah and the Companions asked them about Abū Sufyān and they said. "They have gathered many troops against you, so fear them and be on guard against them. You have no power to resist them.'" According to these statements, the word 'people' means troops. Allah knows best.

But that merely increased their belief

The words of the people increased their belief, meaning their confirmation and certainty in their dīn, helping them in strength, boldness, and readiness. So according to this, the increase of belief lies in actions. People disagree about increase and decrease in belief. Scholars disagree about the increase and decrease in actions, taking different positions. One creedal position regarding this is that belief itself is one thing and affirmation (taṣdīq) is another thing. Together they form a single whole which does not increase once it is obtained, and of which nothing remains when it vanishes. So there is only increase and decrease in things connected to it rather than belief itself.

Another group of scholars believe that belief increases and decreases according to the actions which issue from it. This applies especially to many of the scholars who apply the term ‘belief’ to acts of obedience, going by the words of the Prophet ﷺ: ‘Belief has over seventy branches. The best of which is the words: “There is no god but Allah,” and the least of which is removing an obstruction from the road.’ At-Tirmidhī transmitted it. Muslim added, ‘Modesty is a branch of belief.’ We find in the hadith of ‘Alī, ‘Belief appears like a white spot in the heart. Whenever belief increases, the spot increases.’ Al-Aṣma‘ī said that the word for ‘spot’, ‘lumzah’, is like a speck which is white. For instance a horse is ‘almaz’ when it has some whiteness on its lower lip. Hadith scholars have ‘lamzah’, but in Arabic it is lumzah.

This is evidence against those who deny that belief increases and decreases. Do you not see that he said, ‘Whenever belief increases, the spot increases until the entire heart is white’? It is the same with hypocrisy. It appears as a black spot in the heart. Whenever hypocrisy increases, the heart blackens until it becomes entirely black.

Some of them said that faith is non-essential, not being fixed for two moments at a time, and it comes to the Prophets and righteous in an uninterrupted sequence. It increases by the frequency of its arrival in the heart of the believer and the constancy of its presence there. It decreases by consecutive periods of negligence in the heart of the believer. Abu-l-Ma‘ālī indicated this. This understanding is found in the hadith of intercession, transmitted by Abū Sa‘īd al-Khudrī in Muslim: ‘The believers say, “Our Lord, they used to fast with us and pray and make ḥajj” They will be told, “Go and bring out those you know. It is forbidden for the Fire to touch their faces.” They will bring out many people, some of whom are in the Fire up to the middle of their thighs and some who are in it up to their knees. Then they will say, “Our Lord, not one of those You commanded us to bring out remains in it.” He will say, “Return and take out of it anyone in whose heart you find good equal to the weight of one dinar.” They will bring out many people and then they will say, “Our Lord, we have not left in it anyone You commanded us to bring out.” Then He will say, “Return and take out of it anyone in whose heart you find good equal to the weight of half a dinar.” They will bring out many people and then they will say, “Our Lord, we have not left in it anyone You commanded us to bring out.” Then He will say, “Return and take out of it anyone in whose heart you find even an atom’s weight of good.”

It is said that what is meant in the hadith are actions of the heart, such as intention, sincerity, fear, counsel and the like. That is called ‘belief’ since they are located in belief or indicate it. This is the linguistic usage in Arabic. They call something by the name of the thing that it is near it or is a result of it. The evidence for this interpretation is what the Shāfi‘is say in reference to the time after all those with an atom’s weight of good are removed from the Fire, when [as it says in the hadith] they said, ‘We have not left any good in it at all,’ even though Allah will later remove from it a lot of people who simply said, ‘There is no god but Allah.’ They are believers, and if they had not been believers, He would not have removed them from it.

If the first thing on which a likeness is based does not exist, then it cannot be subject to increase or decrease. That [increase/decrease] is determined in respect of movement. When Allah created a single knowledge and then created a similar knowledge or knowledges of known things along with it, then the first knowledge is increased. If Allah makes those similar knowledges cease to exist, then knowledge decreases, meaning that increase is removed. That is also the case when He creates a movement and creates concomitant movements.

Some scholars believe that the increase and decrease of belief is by way of proofs and so as a person increases in proofs they are said to increase in belief. That is why, according to one position, the Prophets are superior to others. They know about belief from many more angles than most people do. This position, however, does not follow what the āyah implies since it is not conceivable that there be an increase in belief through proofs in this instance.

Some people believe that belief increased through the revelation of obligations and reports in the period of the Prophet ﷺ and in learning of them after having been ignorant of them. This does constitute a kind of increase of belief and would make increase metaphorical. From this point of view, decrease is inconceivable, and this is in respect of knowledge. Allah knows best.

Allah is enough for us and the Best of Guardians.

‘Enough’ (ḥasb) is derived from aḥsāb which is sufficiency. A poet says:

She killed our house with curds and ghee.

It is enough for you in being sated and quenched.

Al-Bukhārī reported from Ibn ‘Abbās that this is also what Ibrāhīm said when he was thrown into the fire and Muḥammad ﷺ said it when people told him, ‘The people have gathered against you.’ Allah knows best.

فَأَنْفَكُوا بِعَمَّةٍ مِنْ اللَّهِ وَفَضْلٍ لَمْ يَنْسَهُمْ سَوْءٌ وَاتَّبَعُوا رِضْوَانَ اللَّهِ وَاللَّهُ
ذُو فَضْلٍ عَظِيمٍ ﴿١٧٤﴾

174 So they returned with blessings and bounty from Allah and no evil touched them. They pursued the pleasure of Allah. Allah’s favour is indeed immense.

Our scholars say that when they entrusted their affairs to Allah and relied with their hearts on Him, He repaid them with four things: blessing, favour, averting evil and following His pleasure, and so He was pleased with them and they with Him.

إِنَّمَا ذَلِكُمُ الشَّيْطَانُ يُخَوِّفُ أَوْلِيَاءَهُ، فَلَا تَخَافُوهُمُ وَخَافُوا إِن كُنتُمْ
 مُؤْمِنِينَ ﴿١٧﴾

175 It was only Shayṭān frightening you through his friends. But do not fear them – fear Me if you are believers.

Ibn ‘Abbās and others said, ‘The meaning is “by means of his friends”, in other words he frightens the believers by means of the unbelievers.’ The genitive particle is omitted and the verb connected to the noun which is why it is in the accusative, as we also see in 18:2. He alarmed the believers by means of the unbelievers. As-Suddī and al-Ḥasan said, ‘He frightened them through the hypocrites to make them not fight the idolaters.’ As for the friends of Allah, they are not frightened when he tries to alarm them.

It is said that what is meant is that a human shayṭān, either Nu‘aym ibn Mas‘ūd or someone else, alarmed them with the number of the unbelievers. ‘But do not fear them,’ means do not fear the unbelievers mentioned earlier, or it refers to the friends if you say that it means that Shayṭān makes his friends alarm you.

Allah says ‘fear Me’ in respect of doing what He commands if you believe in His promise. The word ‘fear’ (khawf) in Arabic means dread. Khāwafahu fa-khāfahu is to vie to see which of them would have a greater fear of the other. Khawfā’ is a waterless desert and a camel which is khawfa’ is one with mange. Khāfah is like a leather bag used for collecting honey.

Sahl ibn ‘Abdullāh said, ‘Some of the truly sincere gathered to Ibrāhīm the Friend and asked, “What is fear?” He replied, “Not feeling safe until you reach the place of safety.” Sahl also said, ‘Whenever ar-Rabī‘ ibn Khaytham passed by Bukayr, he used to faint. ‘Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib was told about that and said, “When that happens to him, inform me.” That happened and they told him and he went to his hand inside his shirt and found his heart beating rapidly. He said, “I testify that this is the most fearful of the people of your time.”

The one who fears Allah fears that He will punish him, either in this world or the Next. That is why it is said that the fearful person is not the one who weeps and wipes his eyes; the fearful person is rather the one who abandons that for which he fears he will be punished. Allah has made it obligatory on His slaves to fear Him. He says: ‘Fear Me if you are believers.’ He praises the believers for having fear: ‘They fear their Lord above them.’ (16:50) The people of subtle indications say many things about fear which connect with what we have mentioned. Abū ‘Alī ad-Daqqāq said, ‘I visited Abū Bakr ibn Fūrak when he was ill. When he saw me, he wept and I said to him, “May Allah restore you and heal you.” He said to him, “Do you think that I am afraid of death? I am afraid of what comes after death.”’

We find in the Sunan of Ibn Mājah that Abū Dharr reported that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘I see what you do not see and I hear what you do not hear. Heaven moans and it has the right to moan. There is no place in it the width of four fingers without an angel placing his brow on it, prostrating to Allah Almighty. By Allah, if you knew what I know, you would laugh little and weep much and you would not enjoy women on your beds and you would go out to the streets seeking the help of Allah Almighty. I wish that I were a felled tree.’ At-Tirmidhī transmitted it and said that it is a ḥasan gharīb hadith. It is related by another path that ‘I wish that I were a felled tree’ were Abu Dharr’s words. Allah knows best.

وَلَا يُجِزِيكَ الَّذِينَ يُسْرِعُونَ فِي الْكُفْرِ إِنَّهُمْ لَنْ يَضُرُّوا اللَّهَ شَيْئًا يُرِيدُ اللَّهُ
أَلَّا يُجْعَلَ لَهُمْ حِطًّا فِي الْآخِرَةِ وَهُمْ عَذَابٌ عَظِيمٌ ﴿١٧٦﴾

176 Do not let those who rush headlong into unbelief sadden you. They do not harm Allah in any way. Allah desires to assign no portion to them in the Next World. They will have a terrible punishment.

Do not let those who rush headlong into unbelief sadden you.

These are people who became Muslim and then apostatised out of fear of the idolaters. The Prophet ﷺ was saddened about them and Allah revealed this. Al-Kalbī said that it means the hypocrites and Jewish leaders who concealed the description of Prophet ﷺ in their Books and so this was revealed. It is said that it refers to the People of the Book when they did not believe. That was hard on the Messenger of Allah ﷺ because the people looked to them and said that they were the People of the Book and that if he what he said had been true, they would have followed him. So this was revealed.

Nāfi‘ reads this as ‘yuhẓinuka’ (Form IV, to make sad) as he does throughout the Qur’an except in al-Anbiyā’ (21:103) where he has ‘yahẓunuka’. Abū Ja‘far has the opposite. Ibn Muḥayṣin recited in all ‘yuhẓinuka’ while the rest read it ‘yahẓunika’. They are two dialects: ḥazana, yahẓunu, and aḥzana, which is a rare dialectical form, but, according to an-Naḥḥās, the first is the more eloquent of the two. A poet said about aḥzana:

My companions have gone, and the houses sadden me.

Most recite ‘rush’ as ‘yusāri‘ūna’ and Ṭalḥah recited ‘yusri‘ūna’.

Ad-Daḥḥāk said that they are the unbelievers of Quraysh and others say that they are the hypocrites. It is said that it is those mentioned before, and it is said that it is all unbelievers and their rushing into disbelief to work against Muḥammad ﷺ.

Al-Qushayrī said, ‘Sorrow over the disbelief of the unbeliever is a type of obedience, but the Prophet ﷺ had excessive sorrow over the disbelief of his people and was forbidden that: ‘So do not let yourself waste away out of regret for them.’ (35:8) and ‘Perhaps you may destroy yourself with grief, chasing after them, if they do not believe in these words.’ (18:6)

They do not harm Allah in any way.

They will not diminish the kingdom of Allah and His power in any way by their disbelief. It is related by Abū Dharr that the Prophet ﷺ said in what He related from what Allah the Blessed and Almighty said: ‘O My slaves! I have forbidden injustice to Myself and I have made it unlawful between you, so do not wrong one another. O My slaves! All of you are misguided except those that I guide, so seek My guidance and I will guide you. O My slaves! All of you are hungry except those that I feed so ask me for food and I will feed you. O My slaves! All of you are naked except those that I clothe so ask me for clothing and I will clothe you. O My slaves! You make mistakes by night and by day and I forgive all wrong actions so ask for My forgiveness and I will forgive you. O My slaves! You will never attain to My harm so as to be able to harm Me and you will never attain to My benefit so as to be able benefit Me. O My slaves! If the first and last of you, all the jinn and all the men among you, possessed the heart of the most godfearing man among you, that would not increase My kingdom in any way. O My slaves! If the first and last of you, all the jinn and all the men among you, possessed the heart of the most evil man among you, that would not decrease My kingdom in any way. O My slaves! If the first and last of you, all the jinn and all the men among you, were to stand in a single place and ask of Me, I could give to every man what he asks without that decreasing what I have any more than a needle when it enters the sea. O My slaves! It is your actions for which I call you to account and then repay you in full. So anyone who finds good should praise Allah and anyone who finds something else should blame none but himself.’ It is transmitted by Muslim in the Ṣaḥīḥ, at-Tirmidhī and others. It is an immense hadith. It is said that the meaning is: ‘You will not harm the friends of Allah when they relinquish their help since Allah is their Helper.’

Allah desires to assign no portion to them in the Next World.

Ḥazz (portion) is a share and fortune. You say that someone is more fortunate (aḥazz) than another and he is maḥzūz or fortunate. The plural of hazz is ahāzz. Abū Zayd said that a man who is described as hazīz is fortunate since he has a portion of provision. The verb hazza is to be fortunate in something. Sometimes the plural is ahuzz. Allah means that He will not assign them a portion in the Garden. This is a text which illustrates that good and evil are subject to Allah’s will.

وَالَّذِينَ اشْتَرُوا الْكُفْرَ بِالْإِيمَانِ لَنْ يَضُرُّوا اللَّهَ شَيْئًا وَهُمْ عَذَابُ الْعَمِّ ۝

177 Those who sell belief for unbelief do not harm Allah in any way.

Those who sell belief for disbelief were already mentioned in al-Baqarah. ‘They do not harm Allah in any way’ is repetition for stress. It is said that part of bad management is to exchange belief for disbelief and sell the one for the other. ‘Shay’ is in the accusative in both places since it is in the position of a verbal noun. It is as if Allah were saying: they will not harm Allah either a little or a lot. It can also be in the accusative by the elision of an implied bā’, as if He were saying: it will not harm Allah at all.

وَلَا يَحْسِبَنَّ الَّذِينَ كَفَرُوا أَنَّمَا نُضِلُّهُمْ حَتَّىٰ لَا تَفْهَمُوهُمُ إِنَّمَا نُضِلُّهُمْ لِيُزَادُوا فِي آثَمَاتِهِمْ ۝

178 Those who disbelieve should not imagine that the extra time We grant to them is good for them. We only allow them more time so they will increase in evildoing. They will have a humiliating punishment.

This refers to His granting them a long life and luxury. It means: ‘Those who alarm the Muslims should not imagine that Allah does not have the power to destroy them. They are given a long life so that they can disobey Allah, not because it is good for them.’ It is said to mean: ‘The extra time We have given them in the form of the victory at Uḥud is not good for them. That is just in order to increase their punishment.’

It is related that Ibn Mas‘ūd said, ‘There is no one, either good or bad, but that death is not better for him. If he is good, Allah says: “What is with Allah is better for those who are truly good” (3:198), and if he is bad, Allah says: “We only allow them more time so they will increase in evildoing.”

Ibn ‘Āmir and ‘Āṣim read ‘imagine’ as ‘yaḥsibanna’ whereas Ḥamzah reads it as ‘taḥsabanna’ and the rest read it as ‘yaḥsabanna’. If it is read with yā, ‘those’ is the subject and it means, ‘the unbelievers should not imagine,’ and ‘the extra time We grant to them’ takes the place of two objects and ‘mā’ means ‘which’ and the pronoun is elided. ‘Better’ is the predicate of ‘anna’, and it is also possible to assume that ‘mā’ and the verb are verbal nouns and implies: ‘those who disbelieve should not imagine that Our granting them a deferral is good for them’.

If it is read with a tā, then the subject is the second person, who is Muḥammad ﷺ, and ‘those’ is in the accusative based on the first object of ‘imagine’ and what follows it is an appositive for ‘those’ and takes the place of two objects as it would do if it were an appositive. It is not proper for ‘an’ and what follows it to be a second object of ‘imagine’ because the second object in this area is the first in meaning because ‘ḥasiba’ and its sisters are added to the inchoative and the predicate, meaning ‘you should not imagine that the extra time We grant them is good.’ This is the view of az-Zajjāj.

Abū ‘Alī said, ‘If this is sound, then “good” would be in the accusative because “anna” would become an appositive for “those who disbelieve”, and so it would be as if Allah were saying, “Do not imagine that the deferral of those who disbelieve is good for them.” So His word “good” is the second object of “imagine”. It is not permitted to recite it with tā unless it is “inna” with a kasrah and “good” is in the accusative. That is not related from Ḥamzah. The reading from Ḥamzah has a tā’ and so this reading is not sound.’

Al-Farrā’ and al-Kisā’ī said, ‘The reading of Ḥamzah is permitted for repetition. It implies: “Do not imagine that those who disbelieve, do not imagine that the deferral We grant them is good.” So “anna” takes the place of two objects by the second “imagine”. It acts as a second object of the first “imagine”.’ Al-Qushayrī said, ‘This is close to what az-Zajjāj mentioned about the claim of the appositive, and the reading is sound and Abū ‘Alī aimed to be harsh to az-Zajjāj.’ An-Naḥḥās said, ‘Abū Ḥātim claimed the recitation by Ḥamzah here and in 3:180 is poor Arabic. This is not permitted and a group corroborate him in that.’

Yahyā ibn Watthāb recited ‘innamā’ and ‘inna’, both with a kasrah. Abū Ja‘far said, ‘Yahyā’s reading is good.’ Abū Ḥātim said, ‘I heard al-Akhfash mentioned that the kasrah of “inna” is used by the Qadariyyah as an argument and they make it entail a change in word order: “Those who disbelieve should not imagine that We give them more time so that they can increase in evildoing. Giving them a deferral is good for them.”’ He said, ‘I saw in a copy of the Qur’an in the General Mosque in which a mode (ḥarf) had been added which said: “innāmā numlī lahum [li-yazdādū] imānan.” Ya‘qūb al-Qārī’ looked at it and the incorrect usage was clear and he scratched it out.’

This āyah is a text invalidating the position of the Qadariyyah because it reports that Allah extends their lives so that their unbelief will increase by their committing acts of disobedience to Allah and this occurs sequentially in the heart as is clear in respect of its opposite which is belief. Ibn ‘Abbās said, ‘There is no one who is pious or impious but that death is better for him.’ Then he recited: ‘We only allow them more time so that they will increase in evildoing’ and he recited: ‘What is with Allah is better for those who are truly good.’ (3:198) Razīn transmitted it.

مَا كَانَ اللَّهُ لِيَذَرَ الْمُؤْمِنِينَ عَلَى مَا أَنْتُمْ عَلَيْهِ حَتَّى يَمِيزَ الْخَبِيثَ مِنَ الطَّيِّبِ
 وَمَا كَانَ اللَّهُ لِيُطْلِعَكُمْ عَلَى الْغَيْبِ وَلَكِنَّ اللَّهَ يَجْتَسِبُ مِنْ رُسُلِهِ مَنْ
 يَشَاءُ قَدْ آمَنُوا بِاللَّهِ وَرُسُلِهِ وَلَئِنْ تَوَلَّوْا فَسَوْفَ يَكْفُرُ الْكُفْرُ أَجْرًا
 عَظِيمًا ﴿١٧٩﴾

179 Allah will only leave the believers in the position you now are in so that He can sift out the rotten from the good. Allah has not given you access to the Unseen. But Allah chooses those of His Messengers whom He wills. So believe in Allah and His Messengers. If you believe and are godfearing you will have an immense reward.

Allah will only leave the believers in the position you now are in so that He can sift out the rotten from the good. Allah has not given you access to the Unseen.

Abu-l-‘Āliyah said, ‘The believers asked to be given a sign by which a believer could be distinguished from a hypocrite and so Allah revealed: “Allah will only leave the believers in the position you now are in ...” There is disagreement about who is addressed by this āyah. Ibn ‘Abbās, aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk, Muqātil, al-Kalbī and most commentators say that it is addressed to the unbelievers and hypocrites, implying, ‘Allah would not leave the believers in the position you are in of disbelief, hypocrisy and enmity to the Prophet ﷺ.’

Al-Kalbī said, ‘Some Quraysh from the people of Makkah said to the Prophet ﷺ, “You claim that one of our men is in the Fire. If he leaves our dīn and follows yours, you say that he is one of the people of the Garden. So tell us who this one is. Tell us which of us will come to you and who will not come.” So Allah revealed: “Allah will only leave the believers in the position you now are in” of disbelief and hypocrisy “so that He can sift out the rotten from the good.”

It is said that it is addressed to the idolaters and that what is meant by the ‘believers’ are those still to be born who will believe, meaning that Allah would not leave children who will believe in the shirk you espouse until He has distinguished between you and them. If this is true, then 'Allah has not given' is a new sentence. That is the position of Ibn 'Abbās and most commentators.

It is said that it is addressed to the believers, i.e. 'Allah would not leave you, O believers, in the position you are in where the believer is muddled with the hypocrites until he sifts you out through trial and responsibility so that you will recognise the rotten hypocrite from the good believer.' The two groups were sifted at Uḥud. This is the position of most of the people of meanings.

This is addressed to the believers, meaning, 'Allah would not single out the hypocrites for you so that you recognise them, but He helps you in that through responsibility and trial.' That was made clear at Uḥud. The hypocrites stayed behind and displayed malice. 'You did not know this Unseen reality before this happened. Now Allah has acquainted Muḥammad ﷺ with that.'

It is said that the words 'give you access' mean Allah would not inform you of what will happen with them, and so this would be connected to what was before and is not a new sentence. That is because when the unbelievers said, 'Why has nothing been revealed to us?' Allah said: 'Allah has not given you access to the Unseen,' in other words to the one whom [they think] deserves Prophethood so that revelation would be by their choice.

Allah chooses whomever He wishes to receive access to His Unseen. The verb for 'giving access' is ṭala'a and ittala'a which is transitive. The verb used for 'sifting out' is recited as 'yumayyizu' from Form II. It is also recited like that in al-Anfāl and it is the reading of Ḥamzah. The rest have yamīzu from Form I of māza, yamīzu. One says, 'miztu' to separate one part of a thing from another, with the verbal noun mayz, and Form II with the verbal noun tamyīz. Abū Mu'ādh said, "'Miztu'ash-shay" means "I divided it into two." When it is into several parts, then you say, "mayyaztuhā tamyīzan". Similarly when you make one into two, you say, "faraqtu baynahumā". An example of that is the parting (faraq) of the hair. When you split something into several things, you say, “farraqtuhu tafriqan.” An aspect of it is sifting (imtāza) people from one another. We also see its use in the āyah: ‘It all but bursts with rage’ (67:8): ‘yakādu yatamayyaza,’ meaning almost bursts apart. We also see in a report: ‘If someone removes (māza) something harmful from the road, it is ṣadaqah for him.’

So believe in Allah and His Messengers.

It is said that when the unbelievers asked the Messenger of Allah ﷺ to make it clear to them who were believers, Allah revealed this. It means: ‘Do not be occupied with what does not concern you. Be occupied with what concerns you, which is belief.’ ‘Believe’ means to affirm the truth, not to seek for the Unseen. ‘The immense reward’ is the Garden.

It is reported that an astrologer was with al-Ḥajjāj ibn Yūsūf and al-Ḥajjāj took some pebbles in his hand and, knowing how many they were, asked the astrologer, ‘How many pebbles are in my hand?’ He guessed and was right. Al-Ḥajjāj ignored him and took some pebbles which he had not counted and asked the astrologer, ‘How many are in my hand?’ He guessed and was wrong. Then he guessed again and was wrong. He said, ‘Governor, I think that you do not know how many are in your hand.’ ‘No, I don’t’ he replied and then asked, ‘So what is the difference between this and that?’ He said, ‘You counted the first one and so it was not an unseen matter. I guessed and was right. The number this time was unknown, and so it was unseen matter and only Allah Almighty knows the Unseen.’ This will be further discussed in al-An‘ām.

وَلَا يَحْسِبَنَّ الَّذِينَ يَبْغُلُونَ بِنَاءَ آيَاتِهِمْ أَنَّ اللَّهَ مِنْ فَضْلِهِ هُوَ خَيْرٌ لَّهُمْ بَلْ هُوَ
 شَرٌّ لَهُمْ سَيُطَوَّقُونَ مَا يَخْلُقُونَ بِهِ يَوْمَ الْقِيَامَةِ وَلِلَّهِ مِيرَاثُ السَّمَاوَاتِ وَالْأَرْضِ
 وَاللَّهُ بِمَا تَعْمَلُونَ خَبِيرٌ ﴿٥٠﴾

180 Those who are tight-fisted with the bounty Allah has given them should not suppose that that is better for them. No indeed, it is worse for them! What they were tight-fisted with will be hung around their necks on the Day of Rising. Allah is the inheritor of the heavens and the earth and Allah is aware of what you do.

Those who are tight-fisted with the bounty Allah has given them should not suppose that that is better for them.

‘Those’ is in the nominative and the first object is elided. Al-Khalīl, Sībawayh and al-Farrā’ said that it means: ‘They think miserliness is better for them,’ meaning: ‘The tight-fisted should not suppose that miserliness is better for them.’ There is elision because ‘miserliness’ is indicated. This is common usage in Arabic. [POEM] As for the reading of Ḥamzah, it is very unlikely according to an-Naḥḥās. It is also possible that it means ‘Do not suppose the miserliness of the tight-fisted is better for them.’ Az-Zajjāj said, ‘It is like “Ask the town” (12:82).’ The pronoun ‘huwa’ in ‘it is better for them’ is separating according to the Basrans but is a disconnected pronoun according to the Kufans. An-Naḥḥās said that in Arabic it can be an inceptive and predicate.

It is worse for them. What they were tight-fisted with will be hung around their necks on the Day of Rising.

Miserliness is worse for them. The sīn of the future tense in ‘will be hung’ is a threat. Al-Mubarrad said that. This āyah was revealed about miserliness in respect of wealth and spending in the Way of Allah and not paying the obligatory zakāt. This is like Allah’s words: ‘They do not spend it in the way of Allah.’ (9:34) A group of interpreters, including Ibn Mas‘ūd, Ibn ‘Abbās, Abū Wā’il, Abū Mālik, as-Suddī and ash-Sha‘bī, said, ‘The meaning of “what they were tight-fisted with will be hung around their necks” is that which is reported in hadith from Abū Hurayrah in which the Prophet ﷺ said, “If someone is given wealth by Allah and does not pay the zakāt due on it, on the Day of Rising it will take on the likeness of [a poisonous snake] with two spots which will coil about his neck under his ears on the Day of Rising, saying, 'I am your wealth. I am your treasure.'" Then he recited this āyah.⁷ An-Nasā'ī transmitted it.

Ibn Mājah transmitted from Ibn Mas'ūd that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, 'If someone does not pay the zakāt due on his wealth, on the Day of Rising it will take on the likeness of [a poisonous snake] with two spots which will coil about his neck.' He said, 'Then the Prophet ﷺ recited an āyah confirming this in the Book of Allah Almighty: "Those who are tight-fisted with the bounty Allah has given them should not suppose that that is better for them."' It is reported from the Prophet ﷺ: 'There is no one who has a relative who comes to him and asks him for some of the surplus wealth he has and then he is miserly towards him, but that on the Day of Rising a serpent of fire will be brought to him, smacking its lips, and wrapped around his neck.'

Ibn 'Abbās said, 'This āyah was revealed about the People of the Book and their miserliness in clarifying what they knew about Muḥammad ﷺ.' Mujāhid and a group of the people of knowledge said that. According to this interpretation, the words 'hung about their necks' indicate the punishment for their miserliness. It comes from ṭāqah (ability) as the Almighty says: 'For those who are able to fast' (2:184), but this is not part of ability. Ibrāhīm an-Nakha'ī said that on the Day of Rising Allah will give them a collar of fire. This coincides with the first interpretation which is the view of as-Suddī. It is said that their actions will cling to them as a collar clings to the neck. The ring of a dove is used metaphorically to denote this adhesion. Allah Almighty says: 'We have hastened the destiny of every man around his neck.' (17:13) An example illustrating this is found in the words of 'Abdullāh ibn Jaḥsh to Abū Sufyān:

Convey to Abū Sufyan that he will come to regret the outcome of a matter.

You sold the house of your cousin to settle the debt you owed.

Your ally by Allah, the Lord of people, swears a strong oath:

Take it! Take it! Your treachery will cling to you like the ring of a dove!

This follows the second interpretation. Linguistically, bukhl (miserliness) is that person withholds a right he owes to another. The one who withholds what he is not obliged to give is not a miser because he is not censured for that. The people of the Hijaz say: yabkhlūna, bakhulū while the rest of the Arabs say: yabkhalūna, bakhilū. An-Naḥḥās related that.

An example of the result of miserliness is what is related of the Prophet ﷺ saying to the Anṣār, ‘Who is your master?’ They answered, ‘Al-Jadd ibn Qays in spite of his miserliness.’ He said, ‘What illness could be worse than miserliness?’ ‘How is that, Messenger of Allah?’ they asked. He said ﷺ, ‘A people lived by the coast and, because of their miserliness, disliked guests staying there. They said, “Let our men be far from the women so that the men can use the distance of the women as an excuse for not receiving guests and the women can use the distance of the men as an excuse.” They did that for a long time and so the men became involved with one another and the women with one another.’ Al-Māwardī mentioned it in Kitāb adab ad-dunyā wa’ d-dīn. Allah knows best.

There is disagreement about whether miserliness (bukhl) and avarice (shahh) are the same thing. It is said that miserliness is refusing to give what you have and avarice is desiring to obtain what you do not have. Avarice is miserliness coupled with greed. That is sound based on what Muslim transmits from Jābir ibn ‘Abdullāh that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘Beware of injustice. Injustice will be darkness on the Day of Rising. Beware of avarice. Avarice destroyed those before you and prompted them to shed each other’s blood and make lawful what was unlawful.’ This refutes the idea of miserliness being refusing to give what is obligatory and avarice being refusing to give what is recommended, because if avarice had been refusing to give what is recommended, it would not have merited such a severe threat and strong censure about being the destruction of this world and the Next. This is supported by what an-Nasā'ī reported from Abū Hurayrah who reported that the Prophet ﷺ said, 'Dust in the Way of Allah will never be joined with the smoke of Hellfire in the nostrils of a Muslim man. Avarice and belief are never joined together in the heart of a Muslim man.' This indicates that avarice is more strongly censured than miserliness although there is something reported which indicates that they are the same: the words of the Prophet ﷺ who was asked, 'Is the believer miserly?' 'No,' he replied. Al-Māwardī related in Kitāb adab ad-dunyā wa'd-dīn that the Prophet ﷺ asked the Anṣār, 'Who is your master?' They answered, 'Al-Jadd ibn Qays in spite of his miserliness.'

Allah is the inheritor of the heavens and the earth.

Allah tells us about His going on and the eternal nature of His Kingdom and that He is after time as He was before time, free of any need of the universe. He will inherit the earth after the annihilation of His creation and departure of their kingdoms when there is no one left to claim their wealth. This is a reference to customary practice in human inheritance and this is not what actually happens because the heir is the one who inherits what he did not own before whereas Allah is, in any case, the Owner of the heavens and the earth and what is between them, the heavens and what is in them, and the earth and what is in it. Property and wealth are in reality merely loaned to their owners in this world and, when they die, return to their original Owner. It is also like the āyah: 'It is We who will inherit the earth and all those on it.' (19:40) In both āyahs Allah Almighty commanded His servants to spend and not to be miserly before they die and leave that to be inherited by Allah Almighty. They only benefit from what they spend.

لَقَدْ سَمِعَ اللَّهُ قَوْلَ الَّذِينَ قَالُوا إِنَّ اللَّهَ فَقِيرٌ وَنَحْنُ أَغْنِيَاءُ سَنَكْتُبُ مَا قَالُوا وَقَتْلَهُمُ
 الْأَنْبِيَاءَ بِغَيْرِ حَقٍّ وَنَسُؤُهُمْ دُفُونًا عَذَابَ الْخَيْرِينَ ﴿١٨١﴾ ذَلِكَ بِمَا قَدَّمْتُمْ
 أَيْدِيَكُمْ وَأَنَّ اللَّهَ لَيْسَ بِظَالِمٍ لِّلْعَالَمِينَ ﴿١٨٢﴾

181 Allah has heard the words of those who say, ‘Allah is poor and we are rich.’ We will write down what they said and their killing of the Prophets without any right to do so and We will say, ‘Taste the punishment of the Burning.’ 182 That is on account of what you did. Allah does not wrong His slaves.

Allah has heard the words of those who say, ‘Allah is poor and we are rich.’

Allah mentions here the ugly words of the unbelievers, especially the Jews. Commentators say that when Allah revealed: ‘Is there anyone who will make Allah a generous loan?’ (2:245), some of the Jews, including Ḥuyayy ibn Akḥṭab according to al-Ḥasan, and Finḥāṣ ibn ‘Āzūrā’ according to ‘Ikrimah and others, said, ‘Allah is poor and we are rich since He borrows from us.’ They said this to confuse those who were weak, not because they believed it, because they were People of the Book. But in saying this they asserted disbelief because they wanted to cause doubt in the weak among them and among the believers and to deny the Prophet ﷺ. ‘He is poor according to what Muḥammad ﷺ says, since He borrows from us.’

We will write down what they said

This means ‘We will repay them for it.’ It is said, ‘We will record it in the records of their deeds,’ in other words command the Guardian Angels to confirm what they said on the Day of Rising when they read what is in these books so that it will be evidence against them. It is like Allah’s words: ‘We are writing it down.’ (21:94) It is said that what is meant by writing is remembering, meaning ‘We will remember what they said and repay them.’ The mā in ‘mā qālū’ is in the accusative by the action of ‘write’. Al-A‘mash and Ḥamzah recite ‘sa-yuktabu’ (‘what they said will be written down’) and so mā is a passive subject. Ḥamzah thought that based on the reading of Ibn Mas‘ūd: ‘yuqālu’ (it will be said).

their killing of the Prophets without any right to do so.

We will also record their killing of the Prophets, in other words their approval of their being killed. What is being referred to is their ancestors killing of the Prophets, but they were pleased with that and so it was also ascribed to them. A man commended the killing of ‘Uthmān in the presence of ash-Sha‘bī and ash-Sha‘bī told him, ‘You have shared in his murder.’ He made approval tantamount to actual killing.

This is a very serious matter since approval of disobedience is also disobedience. Abū Dāwūd reported from al-‘Urs ibn ‘Umayra al-Kindī that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘When you do something wrong on the earth, those who witness but dislike it – or object to it – are like the one who is absent from it. Those who are absent from it but approve of it are like those who are present.’ This is a text. The meaning of the expression ‘without any right’ was discussed in al-Baqarah.

We will say, ‘Taste the punishment of the Burning.’

This will be said to them in Hellfire, or at their deaths, or at the Reckoning. The words are spoken by Allah or by the angels. The reading of Ibn Mas‘ūd is ‘yuqālu’. ‘Burning’ is a name for the blazing of the Fire. The ‘Fire’ includes that which is actually blazing and that which is not.

That is on account of what you did. (lit. ‘what your hands sent ahead)

That punishment is for your prior wrong actions. The use of the word ‘hands’ here indicates their personally undertaking the action since it ascribes it directly to the person doing it. An action can be ascribed to a person when he orders it to be done as in 28:4. The root of ‘aydikum’ is ‘aydyukum’ and the ḍammah is elided because it is heavy. Allah knows best.

الَّذِينَ قَالُوا إِنَّ اللَّهَ عٰهَدَ إِلَيْنَا آلا نُوْمِنَ لِرَسُولٍ حَتَّىٰ يَأْتِيَنَا بِقُرْبَانٍ
تَأْكُلُهُ النَّارُ قُلْ قَدْ جَاءَكُمْ رَسُولٌ مِّن قَبْلِي بِالْبَيِّنَاتِ وَبِالذِّكْرِ فَلَمَّا
فَلِمَ قَتَلْتُمُوهُمْ إِنْ كُنْتُمْ صٰدِقِينَ ﴿١٨٣﴾ فَإِنْ كَذَّبُوكَ فَقَدْ كَذَّبَ رَسُولٌ
مِّن قَبْلِكَ جَاءَ وَبِالْبَيِّنَاتِ وَالزُّبُرِ وَالْكِتَابِ الْمُنِيرِ ﴿١٨٤﴾

183 Those who say, ‘Allah has made a contract with us that we should not believe in any Messenger until he brings us a sacrifice consumed by fire.’ Say, ‘Messengers came to you before me with the Clear Signs and with what you say. So why did you kill them if you are telling the truth?’ 184 If they deny you, Messengers before you were also denied, who brought the Clear Signs and written texts and the illuminating Book.

Those who say, ‘Allah has made a contract with us that we should not believe in any Messenger until he brings us a sacrifice consumed by fire.’

‘Those’ is in the genitive as an appositive for ‘those who say’ in the previous āyah or as an adjective of ‘slaves’ or the predicate of an inceptive meaning: ‘they are those who say’.

Al-Kalbī and others said that it was revealed about Ka‘b ibn al-Ashraf, Mālik ibn aṣ-Ṣayf, Wahb ibn Yahūdḥā, Finḥāṣ ibn ‘Āzūrā’ and a group who came to the Prophet ﷺ and said to him, ‘So you claim that Allah has sent you to us when He revealed to us a Book in which He made a contract with us that we should not believe in any Messenger until he brings us a sacrifice consumed by fire. If you bring that, then we will believe you.’ Then Allah revealed this. It is said that this is in the Torah, but the Word was complete when both the Messiah and Muḥammad came to them. When they came to them, then they should believe in them without such a sacrifice.

It is said that the matter of that kind of sacrifice was established until it was abrogated by ‘Īsā. Among them, a Prophet used to sacrifice and pray. A roaring smokeless white fire would descend and consume the sacrifice. This is what the Jews claimed, while concealing its abrogation. In holding to this, they were harassing the Prophet ﷺ. The miracles of the Prophet ﷺ were a definitive proof to invalidate their claim. It was the same with the miracles of ‘Īsā. If his truthfulness is mandatory, then it is mandatory to affirm him. Then Allah established the proof against them.

Say, ‘Messengers came to you before me with the Clear Signs and with what you say. So why did you kill them if you are telling the truth?’

This is addressed to Muḥammad and ‘to you’ refers to the Jews. The ‘Clear Signs’ the Prophets brought them were the sacrifices, but in spite of that they killed many of them, such as Zakariyyā, Yaḥyā, Shu‘ayb, and the rest of the Prophets who were killed and not believed in. That, of course, refers to what their ancestors did.

This is the āyah which ash-Sha‘bī recited and used as evidence against the one who commended the murder of ‘Uthmān as we stated. Allah calls these Jews ‘killers’ because they approved of what their ancestors had done, even though there was about seven hundred years between them. ‘Qurbān’ (sacrifice) is a practice by which one draws near to Allah, such as ṣadaqah and other righteous actions. It has the form fu‘lān from the basis of qurbah. It can be a noun like sultān and burhān (proof), or a verbal noun like ‘udwān (aggression) and khusrān (loss). ‘Īsā ibn ‘Umar used to recite ‘qurubān’, following the ḍammah on the qāf as the plural of zulmah is zulumāt and that of hujrah is hujurāt.

If they deny you, Messengers before you were also denied, who brought the Clear Signs and written texts and the illuminating Book.

‘Clear Signs’ are proofs. ‘Zubur’ are written texts. Mazbūrah means ‘written’. ‘Zubur’ is the plural of zabūr which is a book. The root of zabara means ‘to write’. Every zabūr is a book. Imru’u-l-Qays said:

Whose are the remnants I see which grieve me, like the writing of a book (zabūr) on Yamānī bark?

‘I recognize my tazbirah’, refers to handwriting. It is also said that it is derived from zabr, meaning to chide. The verb zabara can also mean to encircle a well with stones.

Ibn ‘Āmir recited ‘bi-z-zuburi wa bi-l-kitāb’ with two extra bā’s in both words. It is like that in the Syrian copies of the Qur’an.

‘The Illuminating Book’ is a book that is clear in itself and also makes things clear, from the verb anāra, yunīru. Form II and Form X are used as well as Form IV to mean the same. Each of them is intransitive and transitive. Allah combines zabur and kitāb which mean the same. We have already mentioned the root meaning of kitāb.

كُلُّ نَفْسٍ ذَائِقَةُ الْمَوْتِ وَإِنَّمَا تُوَفَّوْنَ أَجْرَكُمْ يَوْمَ الْقِيَامَةِ فَمَنْ زُجِرَ عَنِ النَّارِ
وَأُدْخِلَ الْجَنَّةَ فَقَدْ فَازَ وَمَا الْحَيَاةُ الدُّنْيَا إِلَّا مَتَاعُ الْعُرُورِ ﴿٥١﴾

185 Every self will taste death. You will be paid your wages in full on the Day of Rising. Anyone who is distanced from the Fire and admitted to the Garden has triumphed. The life of this world is just the enjoyment of delusion.

Allah told us about the misers and their disbelief when they said, ‘Allah is poor and we are rich,’ and then commanded the believers to be steadfast in the face of their injury. In the next āyah He tells them: ‘You will be tested,’ and thus makes it clear that this world will end and not continue. The duration of this world is brief and the Day of Rising is the Day of Repayment.

Every self will taste death.

Everyone will taste death because it is unavoidable for the living as Umayyah ibn Abī’ş-Şalt said:

Whoever does not die in the bloom of life dies decrepit.

Death is a cup from which everyone must drink.

Another said:

Death is a door which everyone must enter.

Would that I knew which Abode lies beyond the door!

The general reading is 'dhā'iqatu-l-mawti' with idāfah while al-A'mash and Ibn Abī Ishāq read 'dhā'iqatun al-mawta' with tanwīn and 'mawt' in the accusative. They said that that is because it has not been tasted yet. That is because there are two types of active participle. One indicates the past and the other the future. If it is the first, then it is only in idāfah with what follows it, as when you say, 'This one hit Zayd yesterday and killed Bakr yesterday' because it acts as an inert noun, which is knowledge like 'The slave of Zayd' and 'the companion of Bakr.' [POEM] If it is the second, then it is permitted to have the genitive, accusative and tanwīn because it acts like a present verb. If the verb is not transitive, it is not transitive, like 'qā'iumun Zaydun'. If it is transitive, you make it transitive and it takes the accusative like 'Zaydun ḥārib 'Amran.' It is also permitted to elide the tanwīn and the idāfah is lighter. [POEM] We also see the same usage in 39:38.

Know that death has causes and signs. One of the signs of the death of the believers is the sweat of the brow. An-Nasā'ī reported that Buraydah heard the Messenger of Allah ﷺ say, 'The believer dies with sweat on his brow.' We explained it in at-Tadhkirah.

When he is dying, he is told to say the shahādah since the Prophet ﷺ said, 'Instruct your dying to say, "There is no god but Allah"' so that it is his last words and his life is sealed with the shahādah. It should not be repeated to him so that he does not become irritated.

It is recommended to recite Sūrat Yāsīn based on the words of the Prophet ﷺ, 'Recite Yāsīn over your dying.' Abū Dāwūd transmitted it. Al-Ajurri mentioned in the Book of Advice from Umm ad-Dardā' that the Prophet ﷺ said, 'There is no dying person who has Sūrat Yāsīn recited to him without death being easy for him.' In death the eyes follow the spirit, as is reported in Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim. Acts of worship and responsibility are removed. Rulings are then addressed to the living, some of which are not properly esteemed. His righteous brothers are informed about his death. Some people dislike that and say that it is tantamount to a death announcement which is disliked. The first view is sounder and we have elucidated it elsewhere. Another thing that is done is preparation of the dead person by washing and burial of them before any putrefaction occurs. The Prophet ﷺ said to some people who delayed burying their dead, ‘Hurry to bury your dead’ and he said ﷺ, ‘Hurry to perform the funeral prayer.’

It is sunnah for the Muslims to wash all their dead except for martyrs. It is said that it is mandatory to wash them as well as Qāḍī ‘Abd al-Wahhāb said. The first is the position of the Book. There are scholars who hold both views. The reason for the disagreement is what the Prophet ﷺ said to Umm ‘Aṭīyyah about washing his daughter Zaynab, as in Muslim, or Umm Kulthūm as in Abū Dāwūd: ‘Wash her three or five or more if you think that is necessary.’ That is the basis of scholars for washing the dead. It is said that what is meant is the command to wash and it is said that what is meant is clarification of the ruling about washing and that it is mandatory. It is said that what is meant is instructing how that washing should be done and there is nothing in it which indicates that it is mandatory. They said that this is indicated by his words ﷺ, ‘if you think’. This would imply that the literal meaning is not a mandatory command because it is left to their view. They are told, ‘This is highly unlikely because the words “if you think” refer to a command, not to understanding. There is merely choice concerning the number of times.’

There is no disagreement that washing the dead is prescribed and acting on it is the Sharī‘ah. It is not abandoned. It is done like the ghusl for janābah. The dead person is not washed more than seven times by consensus as Abū ‘Umar related. If something emerges from the corpse after the seventh time, only the place of emergence is washed. The ruling is the same as that of someone in janābah when he breaks wudū’ after his ghusl.

The dead person is shrouded after they are washed. Shrouding is mandatory according to the generality of the Muslims. If they have money, the cost of the shroud is taken from the main part of their wealth according to most scholars, except for Ṭāwus who says that it is taken from the remaining third of their wealth, large or small. If the deceased was someone who had to be supported in his life – by a master, if it is a slave, or by a father, husband or son in other cases – there is agreement that, in the case of a slave, the master must pay, but there is disagreement about the husband, father and son. If there is no one, then it is up to the Muslim Treasury or the community of Muslims as a whole to provide what is needed.

The specific individual obligation is that the private parts must be covered. If more is available, but not enough to cover the entire body, then the head and face are covered as well to honour the face and cover the good features which will change. The basis for this is the story of Muṣ‘ab ibn ‘Umayr. He left a mantle after the Battle of Uḥud. When his head was covered, his feet showed, and when his feet were covered, his head showed. The Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘Put it over his head and cover his feet with idhkhir-herb.’ Muslim transmitted it.

Most scholars recommend an odd number of cloths in shrouding, but all of them agree that there is no definitive number. White is recommended. The Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘Wear white. It is the best of your garments. Shroud your dead in it.’ Abū Dāwūd transmitted it. The Prophet ﷺ was shrouded in three white Saḥūlī cotton cloths. It is permitted to use other than white for shrouds unless it is silk.

The stinginess of heirs regarding shrouding is settled for them by stipulating the same sort of clothing used for Jumu'ah and for Īds. The Prophet ﷺ said, 'When one of you shrouds his brother, he should shroud him well.' Muslim transmitted it. That is unless the dead person has left instructions to use something inferior to that. If he leaves instructions for something more extravagant, it is said that such excess is void, and it is also said that it is paid for from the third he is allowed to use for legacies. The first view is sounder since Allah says: 'Do not be extravagant.' (6:141) Abū Bakr said, 'It is for pus.'

When the washing and shrouding is finished, the deceased is placed on their bier and the men carry him. The ruling is to carry the bier quickly since the Prophet ﷺ said, 'Go briskly with the bier. If the dead is righteous, it is good that you are bringing him to. If he is other than that, it is evil that you are removing from your shoulders.' It is not as the ignorant do today by walking slowly and stopping time after time, and reciting the Qur'an with melodies and other things which are not lawful to do as the Egyptians do with their dead.

An-Nasā'ī related from Muḥammad ibn 'Abd al-A'lā from Khālid from 'Uyaynah ibn 'Abd ar-Raḥman that his father, 'Abd ar-Raḥman, said, 'I saw the funeral of 'Abd ar-Raḥman ibn Samurah. Ziyād was walking in front of the bier. Some men from family and clients of 'Abd ar-Raḥman began to get in front of the bier and walk backwards, saying, "Slowly! Slowly! May Allah bless you!" They went at a snail's pace until we were on part of the Mirbad road where we met Abū Bakrah on a mule. When he saw what they were doing, he attacked them with his mule and brought his whip down on them. He said, "Stop it! By the One who honoured the face of Abu-l-Qāsim ﷺ, when we were with the Messenger of Allah ﷺ, we went very quickly with it!" The people were glad.' Abū Mājidah related that Ibn Mas'ūd said, 'We asked our Prophet ﷺ about how to walk with the bier and he said, "Less than trotting. If it is good, he is hastened to it. If it is other than that, then may the people of the Fire be far away!”

Abū ‘Umar said, ‘The majority of scholars agree that what is meant by going quickly is faster than sedately. They preferred going quickly to going slowly. It is disliked to go so quickly as to impose difficulty on any weak people who are following.’ Ibrāhīm an-Nakha‘ī said, ‘Go slightly slowly but do not creep slowly like the Jews and Christians.’ Some people interpreted the ‘going quickly’ mentioned in the hadith of Abū Hurayah as hastening the burial, not the manner of walking. That is of no import because of what we have mentioned. Success is by Allah.

The prayer over the deceased is a general obligation like jihād. This is the common position of the schools of the scholars, Mālik and others, since the Prophet ﷺ said about the Negus, ‘Stand and do the prayer for him.’ Aṣḡagh, however, said that it is sunnah and related that from Mālik. This will be further discussed in at-Tawbah.

It is mandatory to bury the deceased in the earth and cover them since the Almighty says: ‘Then Allah sent a crow which scratched at the earth to show him how to conceal his brother’s corpse.’ (5:31) The ruling concerning digging the grave, what is recommended in it and how to place the dead in it will be mentioned in another place. The ruling concerning building a mosque over graves will be mentioned in al-Kahf.

These are rulings about the dead and what is obliged for the living. ‘Aishah said that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘Do not curse the dead. They have gone ahead to what they sent forward.’ Muslim transmitted it. We find in the Sunan of an-Nasā‘ī: ‘Someone who had died was spoken ill of in the presence of the Prophet ﷺ and he said, “Only speak well of the dead.”’

You will be paid your wages in full on the Day of Rising.

The wage of the believer is the reward and the wage of the unbeliever is punishment. Blessing and trial in this world are not counted as a reward and payment because they are subject to annihilation.

Anyone who is distanced from the Fire and admitted to the Garden has triumphed.

He has 'triumphed' because he has obtained what he hoped for and was saved from what he feared. Al-A'mash related from Zayd ibn Wahb from 'Abd ar-Raḥmān ibn 'Abd Rabb al-Ka'bah from 'Abdullāh ibn 'Amr that the Prophet ﷺ said, 'Anyone who desires to be far from the Fire and to enter the Garden should have death come to him while he is testifying that there is no god but Allah and Muhammad is the Messenger of Allah, and he should give people what he must give them.' Abū Hurayrah related that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, 'A whip-sized space in the Garden is better than this world and everything in it. Recite if you wish: "Anyone who is distanced from the Fire and admitted to the Garden has triumphed."'

The life of this world is just the enjoyment of delusion.

This means that it deludes and deceives the believer so that he thinks it will last for a long time while in fact it is quickly passing. Enjoyment refers to articles that are enjoyed and used, such as an axe, pot and bowl. Then it is removed and does not last. That is what most commentators say. Al-Ḥasan said, 'It is like the green of plants and the games of girls which have no result.' Qatādah said, 'It is abandoned enjoyment which is about to vanish. So a person must take what he can from this enjoyment by obeying Allah.' A poet spoke excellent words about this:

It is the abode of harm and annoyance, the abode of passing away and the abode of vicissitudes.

Even if you were to obtain it lock, stock and barrel, you would still die without getting what you desire of it.

Ghurūr is delusion while gharār is shayṭān who deludes people by making them hope and giving them false promises. Ibn 'Arafah said, 'Delusion is things you see that have an outward appearance that you love while their inward is disliked or unknown.’ Shayṭān is the Deluder because he moves people to what their lower selves love while what is behind it is harmful for them. Illustrating this is a sale that is ‘gharār’ (entailing risk). Outwardly it is uncertain and what is inside it is unknown.

لَتَبْلَوْنَ فِي أَمْوَالِكُمْ وَأَنْفُسِكُمْ وَلَتَسْمَعَنَّ مِنَ الَّذِينَ أُوتُوا الْكِتَابَ مِنْ
 قَبْلِكُمْ وَمِنَ الَّذِينَ أَشْرَكُوا أَذًى كَثِيرًا وَإِنْ تَصْبِرُوا وَتَتَّقُوا فَإِنَّ ذَلِكَ مِنْ
 عَزْمِ الْأُمُورِ ﴿١٨٦﴾

186 You will be tested in your wealth and in yourselves and you will hear many abusive words from those given the Book before you and from those who are idolaters.
 But if you are steadfast and godfearing, that is the most resolute course to take.

This is addressed to the Prophet ﷺ and His Community. It means: ‘You will be tested and tried in your wealth by hardships and loss, through spending in the Cause of Allah and all the obligations of the Shari‘ah.’ Testing in selves is through death, illness and loss of loved ones. He mentions wealth first because there are many afflictions in it.

In connection with the verb ‘you may hear’, if it is asked why the wāw is kept in ‘la-tublawūnna’ (tested) when it is elided in ‘wala-tasma‘unna’, the answer is that the wāw in ‘la-tublawūnna’ has a fathah before it and so it takes a vowel because of two silent letters meeting, and the dammah is singled out because it is the wāw of the plural and it is not permitted to elide it because nothing before it indicates it. It is elided in ‘wala-tasma‘unna’ because what is before it indicates it. It is not permitted for the wāw to have a hamzah in ‘la-tublawūnna’ because its vowel is accidental [not permanent].’ An-Naḥḥās and others said that. One says for the masculine singular ‘la-tublayanna’, for the dual ‘la-tublayānna’ and for the plural ‘la-tublawunna’.

The reason for this āyah being revealed was that Abū Bakr heard a Jew say, ‘Allah is poor and we are rich’ to refute the Qur’an and make light of it when Allah revealed: ‘Is there anyone who will make Allah a generous loan?’ (2:245) He slapped him and the Jew complained about him to the Prophet ﷺ and this was revealed. ‘Ikrimah said that the speaker was Finḥāṣ.

Az-Zuhrī said that it was revealed because of Ka’b ibn al-Ashraf, a poet, who used to satirise the Prophet ﷺ and His Companions; the Qurayshī unbelievers had incited him to do so. He abused the Muslim women to the point that eventually the Messenger of Allah ﷺ sent Muḥammad ibn Maslamah and his comrades to kill him. This is known in the Sīrah and sound reports. Other things are said as well.

When the Prophet ﷺ came to Madīnah, there were Jews and idolaters there, and he and his Companions endured much verbal abuse. The Ṣaḥīḥ collections report that once, when the Prophet ﷺ was on a donkey, he passed by Ibn Ubayy and called him to Allah. He retorted, ‘If what you say is true, do not annoy us with it in our gatherings! Return to your mount and just speak to whoever comes to you.’ Ibn Ubayy covered his nose so that the dust raised by the donkey would not touch him. Ibn Rawāḥah exclaimed, ‘Indeed, Messenger of Allah! Bring it to us in our gatherings. We like that!’ The idolaters around Ibn Ubayy and the Muslims abused one another. The Prophet ﷺ kept on calming them down until they were quiet. Then he went to Sa’d ibn ‘Ubādah to visit him since he was ill and said, ‘Did you hear what so-and-so said?’ Sa’d said, ‘Pardon him and overlook it. By the One who sent down the Book on you, Allah has brought us the truth which He sent down on you at the very time that the people of this little town had agreed to crown him and bind his head with a (royal) turban. When Allah stopped that happening by the truth which Allah gave you, he was vexed on that account. That is why he did what you saw.’ The Messenger of Allah ﷺ pardoned him and then this was revealed.

It is said that this was before fighting was revealed and Allah recommended His slaves have steadfastness and taqwā and reported that that is the most resolute course to take. This is found in al-Bukhārī. ‘The most resolute course to take’ is the strongest and firmest.

It more evident that it is not abrogated. Argument should always be conducted in the best way and courtesy is always recommended. The Prophet ﷺ used to make peace with the Jews, flatter them and overlook the hypocrites. This is clear.

وَإِذْ أَخَذَ اللَّهُ مِيثَاقَ الَّذِينَ أُوتُوا الْكِتَابَ لَتُبَيِّنُنَّهُ لِلنَّاسِ وَلَا تَكْتُمُونَهُ
فَنَبَذُوهُ وَرَاءَ ظُهُورِهِمْ وَاشْتَرَوْا بِهِ تَمَتُّعًا قَلِيلًا قَلِيلًا فَيَسَّ مَائِشَتْرُونَ ﴿١٥٨﴾

187 Allah made a covenant with those given the Book:

‘You must make it clear to people and not conceal it.’

But they toss it in disdain behind their backs and sell it for a paltry price. What an evil sale they make!

Allah made a covenant with those given the Book.

This is connected to the previous mention of the Jews. They were commanded to believe in Muḥammad ﷺ and to make his business clear, but they concealed it. So the āyah rebukes them. Then this is also a general report to them and others.

Al-Ḥasan and Qatādah said, ‘This is about everyone who is given knowledge of the Book. Whoever knows something should teach it. Beware of concealing knowledge. That is destruction.’ Muḥammad ibn Ka‘b said, ‘It is not lawful for a scholar to remain silent with his knowledge nor for someone ignorant to remain silent about his ignorance. Allah says: “Allah made a covenant with those given the Book” and “Ask the People of the Reminder if you do not know.” (16:42)’

Abū Hurayrah said, ‘If Allah had not criticised the People of the Book for not doing so, I would not have transmitted anything to you.’ Then he recited this āyah. Al-Ḥasan ibn ‘Umārah said, ‘I went to az-Zuhrī after he had stopped transmitting hadith and I found him at his door. I said, “Will you transmit to me?” He replied, “Do you not know that I have stopped transmitting hadith?” I said, “You will relate to me or I will relate to you.” He said, “Relate to me.” I said, “Al-Ḥakam ibn ‘Uyaynah related to me from Yaḥyā ibn al-Jazzār that he heard ‘Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib say, ‘Allah did not impose on the ignorant to learn until he imposed on scholars to teach.’” Then he related forty hadiths to me.’

You must make it clear to people and not conceal it.

It is said that the masculine pronoun ‘it’ can refer to Muḥammad ﷺ (meaning ‘You must make ‘him’ clear’), and it is said that it refers to the Book. This would include clarifying the actions of the Prophet ﷺ because he is mentioned in the Book. ‘Not conceal it’ is grammatically adverbial. Abū ‘Amr, ‘Āṣim in the variant of Abū Bakr and the people of Makkah have ‘li-tubayyinunnahu’ in the second person while the rest have it with yā’ (li-yubayyinunnahu) because they are not present. (‘It must be made clear.’)

Ibn ‘Abbās recited ‘mithāqa’n-nabiyyina’ (a covenant with the Prophets), and so His words, ‘toss it’ refer to the people to whom the Prophets made things clear. The reading of Ibn Mas‘ūd is ‘la-tubayyinūnahu’ without the heavy nūn.

But they toss it in disdain behind their backs and sell it for a paltry price.

The word nabdh means casting aside as in: ‘something to cast disdainfully behind your backs’ (11:92), and it was explained in al-Baqarah. The expression ‘behind their backs’ stresses the tossing aside, as we see in ‘cast disdainfully behind your backs.’ (11:92).

لَا يَحْسِبَنَّ الَّذِينَ يَفْرَحُونَ بِمَا آتَوْا وَيُحِبُّونَ أَنْ يُخَذُوا بِمَنَافِعِهَا لَمْ يَفْعَلُوا فَلَا تَحْسِبَنَّاهُمْ
بِمَنَافِعِهِمْ مِنَ الْعَذَابِ وَأَلَسَّ عَذَابُ الْيَوْمِ

188 Those who exult in what they have done and love to be praised for what they have not done should not suppose that they have escaped the punishment. They will have a painful punishment.

That is because they stayed behind the expeditions and brought the Prophet ﷺ their excuses. It is confirmed in the Ṣaḥīḥ collections from Abū Saʿīd al-Khudrī that when the Messenger of Allah ﷺ went on an expedition, some of the hypocrites stayed behind and exulted in doing that. When the Prophet ﷺ returned, they offered their excuses and oaths and wanted to be praised for what they had done, and this was revealed.

Also in the two Ṣaḥīḥ collections, Marwān said to his doorman, ‘Go to Rāfi‘ ibn ‘Abbās and tell him, “If every man of us who exults in what he had done and loves to be praised for what he has not done is going to be punished, then we will all be punished.” Ibn ‘Abbās said, “What do you have to do with this āyah! This āyah was revealed about the People of the Book.” Then he recited: “Allah made a covenant with those given the Book. You must make it clear to people and not conceal it” and “Those who exult in what they have done and love to be praised for what they have not done.” Ibn ‘Abbās said, “The Prophet ﷺ asked them about something and they concealed it from him and told him something else. They left and reported what they had told him about what he asked them and wanted to be praised for that and exulted at their concealment of what he had asked them about.”

Muḥammad ibn Ka‘b al-Qurazī said, ‘It was revealed about some scholars of the tribe of Israel who concealed the truth and gave to kings knowledge which supported their falsehoods. “They sold it for a small price,” in other words, for what the kings of this world gave them. So Allah said to His Prophet ﷺ: “Those who exult in what they have done ...” and told him that they would have painful punishment for their corrupting the dīn for the slaves of Allah.’

Aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk said, ‘The Jews used to say to the kings, “We find in our Book that Allah will send a Prophet at the end of time to seal Prophethood.” Then when Allah sent him and the kings asked them, “Is this the one you find in their Book?”, the Jews, desiring the wealth of the kings, replied, “It is not him.” So the kings gave them treasures. Then Allah told them: “Those who exult in what they have done...” by way of lying to the kings to take the goods of this world “...should not suppose...” The first hadith is contrary to the second one. It is possible that there were two reasons for its revelation since they occurred at the same time and it answers both. Allah knows best.

they love to be praised for what they have not done

They seek praise. Marwān’s words, ‘If every man of us who exults in what he has done...’ indicate that the generality has a specific form and ‘those’ is part of it. This is definite in the case of those who understand that from the Qur’an and Sunnah.

If the āyah is about the People of the Book and not about the hypocrites who stayed behind, it is because they said, ‘We are following the dīn of Ibrāhīm’ but they were not following his dīn, and they used to say, ‘We are the people of prayer, fasting and Scripture,’ desiring to be praised for that.

Nāfi’, Ibn ‘Āmir, Ibn Kathīr and Abū ‘Amr read it as ‘They should not suppose’ (yaḥsabanna or yaḥsibanna), meaning ‘those who exult should not suppose that they have escaped the punishment.’ It is said that the first object is elided, which is ‘themselves’ and the second is ‘escaped’. The Kufans read it with tā’ meaning, ‘You should not suppose (taḥsabanna), O Muḥammad, that those who exult have escaped the punishment.’ The second ‘suppose’ is for stress. Its first object is ‘hum’ and the second is elided. The fā’ at the beginning is a conjunction or redundant in replacing the second object by the first.

Aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk and ‘Īsā ibn ‘Umar recite it with a tā’ and a ḍammah on the bā’: ‘taḥsabunnahum’. So it is addressed to Muḥammad ﷺ and his Companions. Mujāhid, Ibn Kathīr, Abū ‘Amr and Yaḥyā ibn Ya‘mur recite it with a yā’ and a ḍammah on the bā’, reporting about those who exult, i.e. ‘those who exult should not suppose’. ‘Escape’ is the second object and ‘suppose’ is for stress. It is said that ‘those’ is the subject of ‘suppose’ and its two objects are elided... (more grammatical discussion).

Most of the seven readers and others recite ‘ataw’ with a short alif, indicating the lying and concealment they have done.’ Marwān ibn al-Ḥakam, al-A‘mash and Ibrāhīm an-Nakha‘ī recite ‘ātaw’ with maddah which means ‘give’. Sa‘īd ibn Jubayr recited ‘ūtū’ without naming the subject, i.e. ‘they are given’.

Mafāzah (escape) is deliverance. It is form mafalah from the verb fāza, yafūzu to be saved. It means that they will not be saved (fā’izūn). A place of fear is called mafāzah for luck. Al-Aṣmā‘ī said that. It is said that it is because of it is a place where the desert is crossed (tafwiẓ) where destruction is likely. The Arabs use fawwaza’ for a man when he dies. Tha‘lab said, ‘I related to Ibn al-A‘rābī what al-Aṣmā‘ī had said and he said, “He erred. Abu-I-Makārim said that it is called mafāzah because the one who crosses it wins (fāza).”’ Al-Aṣmā‘ī said that someone who has been stung is called ‘healthy’ for luck. Ibn al-A‘rābī said that it is because he will recover when he is afflicted. It is said that one should not suppose that they are in a place far from the punishment because success is a long way away from what is disliked. Allah knows best.

وَاللَّهُ مُلْكُ السَّمَاوَاتِ وَالْأَرْضِ وَاللَّهُ عَلَىٰ كُلِّ شَيْءٍ قَدِيرٌ ﴿٢٠٩﴾

189 The kingdom of the heavens and earth belongs to Allah. Allah has power over all things.

This is an argument against those who say, ‘Allah is poor and we are rich’ and refutes them. It is said that it means: ‘Do not suppose that those who exult will be saved from the punishment. Everything belongs to Allah and is subject to His power.’ So it is added to the first statement. It means that they will not be saved from His punishment. He will seize them whenever He wishes. The expression ‘Allah has power over all things’ was explained in al-Baqarah.

190 In the creation of the heavens and the earth, and the alternation of night and day, there are Signs for people with intelligence: 191 those who remember Allah, standing, sitting and lying on their sides, and reflect on the creation of the heavens and the earth: 'Our Lord,
 You have not created this for nothing. Glory be to You!
 So safeguard us from the punishment of the Fire. 192
 Our Lord, those You cast into the Fire, You have indeed disgraced. The wrongdoers will have no helpers. 193
 Our Lord, we heard a caller calling us to belief: 'Believe in your Lord!', and we believed. Our Lord, forgive us our wrong actions, erase our bad actions from us and take us back to You with those who are truly good. 194 Our Lord, give us what You promised us through Your Messengers, and do not disgrace us on the Day of Rising. You do not break Your promise.’ 195 Their Lord responds to them: ‘I will not let the deeds of any doer among you go to waste, male or female – you are both the same in that respect. Those who made hijrah and were driven from their homes and suffered harm in My Way and fought and were killed, I will erase their bad actions from them and admit them into Gardens with rivers flowing under them, as a reward from Allah. The best of all rewards is with Allah.’ 196 Do not be deceived by the fact that those who disbelieve move freely about the earth. 197 A brief enjoyment; then their shelter will be Hell. What an evil resting-place! 198 But those who have taqwā of their Lord will have Gardens with rivers flowing under them, remaining in them timelessly, for ever: hospitality from Allah. What is with Allah is better for those who are truly good. 199 Among the people of the Book there are some who believe in Allah and in what has been sent down to you and what was sent down to them, and who are humble before Allah. They do not sell Allah’s Signs for a paltry price. Such people will have their reward with their Lord. And Allah is swift at reckoning. 200 You who believe, be steadfast; be supreme in steadfastness; be firm on the battlefield; and have taqwa of Allah; so that hopefully you will be successful.

In the creation of the heavens and the earth

This was already discussed in al-Baqarah. Allah concludes this sūrah with the command to look and deduce from His signs since they only come from the Living, Self-Subsistent, All-Powerful, Pure, Peace, who is free from the needs of created existence, so that their faith is based on certainty, not blind imitation.

Signs for people with intelligence

This means those who use their intellects to reflect on evidence. It is related that ‘Ā’ishah said, ‘When this āyah was revealed to the Prophet ﷺ, he rose and prayed. Then Bilāl came to give the adhān for the prayer and he recited it weeping. He said, “Messenger of Allah, why do you weep when Allah has forgiven you your past and any future errors?” He answered, “Bilāl, am I not a grateful slave?” Then Allah revealed this and he ﷺ said, “Woe to those who recite it without reflecting on it!””

Scholars say that it is recommended for someone who wakes up from sleep to wipe his face and recite these ten āyahs in imitation of the Prophet ﷺ. That is confirmed in the Ṣaḥīḥ collections and elsewhere. Then he should pray what is prescribed for him and combine reflection and action, and the best action will be made clear in this āyah. It is related from Abū Hurayrah that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ used to recite these ten āyahs every night. Abū Naṣr al-Wā’ilī as-Sijistānī transmitted it in Kitāb al-Inābah from Sulaymān ibn Mūsā from Muẓāhir ibn Aslam al-Makhzūmī from al-Maqburī from Abū Hurayrah. It was already mentioned at the beginning of the sūrah that ‘Uthmān said, ‘If someone recites the end of Āl ‘Imrān in the night, prayer during the whole night will be recorded for him.’

Those who remember Allah, standing, sitting and lying on their sides.

Allah mentioned the three postures which human beings necessarily adopt in most of their affairs and so it is as if it covers all their time. ‘Ā’ishah said, ‘The Messenger of Allah ﷺ used to remember Allah at all times.’ Muslim transmitted it. That would include when he was in the lavatory and other places.

Scholars disagree about this. ‘Abdullāh ibn ‘Amr, Ibn Sīrīn and an-Nakha'ī allow it, and Ibn 'Abbās, 'Aṭā' and ash-Sha'bī dislike it. The first position is sounder because of the general nature of the text of the āyah and hadith. An-Nakha'ī said, 'There is nothing wrong in remembering Allah in the lavatory. It is taken up,' meaning recorded by by the angels and written in their books. The evidence for that is Allah's words: 'He does not utter a single word, without a watcher by him, pen in hand' (50:18) and: 'Standing over you are guardians, noble, recording.' (82:10) That is because Allah commanded His slaves to remember Him in every state without exception. He says: 'Remember Allah much' (33:41), 'Remember Me – I will remember you' (2:152) and 'We will not let the wage of good-doers go to waste.' (18:30) So it is universal. The person who remembers Allah Almighty in all his states is rewarded, Allah willing.

Abū Nu'aym mentioned from Abū Bakr ibn Mālīk from 'Abdullāh ibn Aḥmad ibn Ḥanbal from his father from Wakī' from Sufyān from 'Aṭā' ibn Abī Marwān from his father that Ka'b al-Aḥbar said, 'Mūsā ﷺ said, "O Lord, are You near so that I can speak intimately with You, or far, so that I must call out to You?" He said, "Mūsā, I sit with the one who remembers me." He said, "O Lord, what if we are in a situation in which we consider You too majestic and great to be remembered there?" "And what is what?" He asked. He said, "In a state of major impurity (janābah) or in the lavatory." He said, "Mūsā, remember Me in every situation."

The dislike of that is either because of thinking that remembering Allah is too great to be done in places where He should not be remembered, as it is disliked to recite the Qur'an in the bath-house, or because it forces the noble scribes to remain in a place of filth and impurity to record what was said. Allah knows best.

'Standing, sitting' is in the accusative for the ḥāl and 'on their sides' is also in the accusative for the ḥāl and means lying down, as in Allah's words: 'he calls on Us, lying on his side or sitting down or standing up.' (10:12) This means that he calls on Him lying on his side.

A group of commentators, al-Ḥasan and others, think that the words from ‘those who remember Allah’ are about the prayer, meaning that people must not fail to do it and should perform it in whatever state is possible. If someone has an excuse, then he can pray sitting down or lying down. According to Ibn Mas‘ūd, that is reflected in this āyah as will be made clear.

If the āyah is about the prayer, the fiqh is that a person prays it standing. If he cannot do that, then sitting, and if he cannot manage that, then lying down. This is as it is confirmed from ‘Imrān ibn Ḥuṣayn that Abu-l-Bawāsīr asked the Prophet ﷺ about the prayer. He said, ‘Pray standing. If you cannot, then sitting. If you cannot, then lying down.’ The imāms transmitted it. The Prophet ﷺ prayed nāfilah prayers sitting down a year before he died as we find in Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim. An-Nasā’ī related that ‘Ā’ishah said, ‘I saw the Messenger of Allah ﷺ praying cross-legged.’ Abū ‘Abd ar-Raḥmān said, ‘I do not know of anyone who relates this hadith other than Abū Dāwud al-Ḥafārī, who is trustworthy. I can only think that this hadith is an error.’ Allah knows best.

Scholars disagree about how a person who is ill should pray and how they should sit. Ibn ‘Abd al-Ḥakam related from Mālīk that they sit cross-legged in the standing portions. Al-Buwayṭī mentioned that from ash-Shāfi‘ī. When they want to prostrate, they do as much as they are able to. That is also the position of ath-Thawrī, al-Layth, Aḥmad, Ishāq, Abū Yūsuf and Muḥammad. In the transmission of al-Muzanī, ash-Shāfi‘ī said that they should sit in the prayer as they normally would in the tashahhud. This is related from Mālīk and his people. The first is the well-known position and it is the apparent view of the Mudawwanah. Abū Ḥanīfah and Zafar said that they sit as he would for tashahhud and that is how they do rukū‘ and prostration as well.

If they cannot sit, then they can choose whether to pray on their side or their back. This is the position in the Mudawwanah. Ibn Ḥabīb related from Ibn al-Qāsim that they should pray on their backs. If they cannot do that, then on their right side, and finally on their left side. The book of Ibn al-Mawwāz has the opposite: they should pray on their right side. If they cannot do that, then on their left side. And if they cannot do that, then on their backs. Saḥnūn said that they should pray on their right side, in the same way as people are placed in their grave, then on their back, then on their left side. Mālīk and Abū Ḥanīfah said, ‘When someone prays lying down, their feet should be towards qiblah.’ Ash-Shāfi‘ī and ath-Thawrī said that they pray on their side with their face towards qiblah.

If someone regains their strength after illness during the prayer, Ibn al-Qāsim said that they should stand for the rest of the prayer and build on what they have done. That is the position of ash-Shāfi‘ī, Zafar and aṭ-Ṭabarī. Abū Ḥanīfah and his two companions said that if someone prays one rak‘ah lying down and then recovers, they should start the prayer again. If they were sitting and bow and prostrate and then recover, they build on what they have done according to Abū Ḥanīfah, but not according to Muḥammad. Abū Ḥanīfah and his people said that if someone starts the prayer standing and reaches a point where they can only indicate the movements, they build on what they have done. That is related from Abū Yūsuf. Mālīk said about a sick person who cannot bow or prostrate, but is able to stand and sit, that they pray standing and indicate bowing, and when they want to prostrate, they should sit and indicate prostration. That is the position of Abū Yūsuf and analogous to the position of ash-Shāfi‘ī. Abū Ḥanīfah and his people said that they should pray sitting.

As for the prayer of a healthy person not standing, it is related from the hadith of ‘Imrān ibn Ḥuṣayn that the prayer of a healthy person lying down is worth half that of one sitting down. Abū ‘Umar said that the majority of the people of knowledge do not permit nāfilah prayers lying down when someone is able to sit or stand. It is a hadith which is only related by Ḥusayn the Teacher, who is Ḥusayn ibn Dhakwān, from ‘Abdullāh ibn Buraydah from ‘Imrān ibn Ḥuṣayn. There is disagreement about its isnād as well as its text from Ḥusayn which means that one should hesitate about it. If it is sound, I do not know its true import. If one of the people of knowledge permits the performance of nāfilah prayers while lying down for someone able to sit or stand, then that is the meaning of this addition in the report. It is an argument for those who believe that to be the case. If they agree that it is disliked to perform nāfilah prayers while lying down in the case of someone able to sit or stand, then this hadith of Ḥusayn is either an error or abrogated.

It is said that what is meant by the āyah is that those who deduce evidence from the creation of the heaven and the earth say that that which changes must have a Changer, and that Changer must have the power to achieve it in perfection. He can send Messengers. If He sends a Messenger whose truthfulness is indicated by a single miracle, then no one has an excuse. Those people remember Allah in every state. Allah knows best.

reflect on the creation of the heavens and the earth.

We have explained the meaning of ‘remember’, which is either with the tongue or in prayer. Then Allah adds another form of worship to it: reflection on the power of Allah and His creation and the lessons to be gained from that so as to increase insight.

Every thing contains a sign of Him which indicates that He is One

It is said that ‘reflect’ is added to the ḥāl. It is also said that it is separate. The first view is more likely.

Reflection is that the heart returns to something. One says tafakkara, and a man who is fikkīr reflects often. The Prophet ﷺ passed by some people who were reflecting on Allah and said, ‘Reflect on creation. Do not reflect on the Creator. You will not be able to value Him properly.’ Reflection, consideration and expanding the mind is with respect to creatures, as Allah says here. It is related that Sufyān ath-Thawrī prayed two rak‘ahs at the Maqām and then raised his head towards heaven. When he saw the stars, he fainted. He used to urinate blood on account of the depth of his sorrow and reflection.

Abū Hurayrah reported that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘Once, while a man was lying on his bed, he lifted his head, looked at the stars and the sky and said, “I testify that you have a Lord and a Creator. O Allah, forgive me.” Allah looked at him and forgave him.’ He ﷺ said, ‘There is no act of worship like reflection.’ It is related that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘An hour of reflection is better than a year of worship.’ Ibn al-Qāsim reported that Mālik said, ‘Umm ‘d-Dardā’ was asked, “What did Abu-d-Dardā’ mostly do?” She said, “He mostly reflected.”’ He was asked, ‘Do you think that reflection is best of actions?’ ‘Yes,’ he replied, ‘It is certainty.’ Ibn al-Musayyab was asked about prayers between Zuhr and ‘Ashr and he said, ‘This is not worship. Worship is scrupulousness about what Allah has forbidden and reflecting on the command of Allah.’ Al-Ḥasan said, ‘Reflecting for an hour is better than praying all night.’ Ibn ‘Abbās and Abu-d-Dardā’ said that. Al-Ḥasan said, ‘Reflection is the mirror of the believer in which he sees his good actions and bad actions reflected.’

Part of that on which one should reflect are the terrors of the Next World, the Gathering, the Garden and its bliss, and the Fire and its punishment. It is related that Abū Sulaymān ad-Dārānī took a mug of water to do wuḍū’ for the night prayer. He had a guest. The guest saw him put a finger in the handle of the mug and then he stopped, reflecting, until dawn. He said to him, ‘What is this, Abū Sulaymān?’ He said, ‘When I put my finger in the mug’s handle, I thought about the words of Allah Almighty: “When they have shackles and chains around their necks and are dragged along the ground” (40:71), and I reflected on my state and how I would meet the shackles when they are placed on my neck on the Day of Rising. I continued doing that until morning.’ Ibn ‘Aṭīyyah observed, ‘This is extreme fear, and the best of matters is the middle one. The scholars of this community do not commend this course. Studying knowledge of the Book of Allah and the meanings of the Sunna of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ for someone who understands and hopes to benefit is better than this.’

Ibn al-‘Arabī said, ‘Scholars disagree about which of the two actions is better: reflection or the prayer. The Sufis believe that reflection is better. It results in gnosis, which is the best of stations. The fuqahā’ believe that the prayer is better since its encouragement is reported in hadiths.’ We find in the two Ṣaḥīḥ collections that Ibn ‘Abbās spent the night with his aunt, Maymūnah. He said, ‘The Messenger of Allah ﷺ got up and wiped the sleep from his face. Then he recited the final ten āyahs of Sūrat Āl ‘Imrān. He went to a waterskin which was hanging and did wuḍū’ quickly and then prayed thirteen rak‘ahs.’ Look at how he combined the two: he reflected on creatures and then turned to the prayer. This is the sunnah on which he relied. As for the method of those Sufis who say you should reflect day and night, month after month without break, that is far from what is correct, inappropriate and not following the sunnah.

Ibn ‘Aṭīyyah said, ‘My father, may Allah be pleased with him, reported to me that one of the scholars of the east said, “I used to spend the night in Al-Aqdām Mosque in Egypt. I prayed ‘Ishā’ and saw a man lying down wrapped up in a garment in his cloak until morning. We prayed that night and stayed awake. When the iqāmah for the Ṣubḥ prayer was given, he got up and faced the qiblah and prayed with the people. I thought that he was terribly impudent to pray without doing wuḍū’. When the prayer was over, he went out and I followed him to admonish him. When I was close to him, I heard him recite:

‘An enwrapped body is absent present, a heart which is aware, a silent invoker.

Constricted in the unseen worlds, expanded – that is the state of the gnostic invoker.

I spent the night as the brother of thought, and so for the whole of the night he is awake asleep.”

Then I knew that he was one of those who worship by reflection and I left him.’

Our Lord, You have not created this for nothing. Glory be to You!

They say, ‘You did not create this in vain or as a jest. You created this as evidence of Your wisdom and power.’ The bāṭil is that which vanishes and departs. Labīd said:

Everything except Allah is false.

The word ‘for nothing’ is in the accusative because it is the adjective of an elided verbal noun, meaning ‘a vain creation’. It is said that it is in the accusative based on the removal of the genitive, meaning ‘You did not create it for what is in vain. It is said that it is based on a second object and ‘created’ means ‘make.’

As for the expression ‘Glory be to You!’ Mūsā ibn Ṭalḥa reports that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ was asked about the meaning of ‘Glory be to Allah.’ He said, ‘It means: to free Allah from every kind of evil.’ This was already explained adequately in al-Baqarah.

So safeguard us from the punishment of the Fire.

‘Protect us from its punishment.’ This has already been discussed.

Our Lord, those You cast into the Fire, You have indeed disgraced.

It is said that they are disgraced and sent far away. Al-Mufaḍḍal said that it means that they are destroyed, and he recited:

Allah disgraces those who worship the cross and bear the habits of monks.

It is said to imply distance and hatred. The verb means to put far away and hate. Ibn as-Sakīt said that khizy is when someone falls into trial. The people of threat hold to this āyah and say, ‘Anyone who enters the Fire cannot be a believer because Allah would not disgrace the believers (cf. 66:8).’ This is refuted since there are proofs that someone who commits a major wrong action is still a believer as we will mention.

What is meant here then is those who will be in the Fire forever, as Anas ibn Mālik said. Sa‘īd ibn al-Musayyab said that the āyah deals with those who will never leave the Fire and that is why He says: ‘The wrongdoers will have no helpers.’ These are the unbelievers.

The people of meanings said that disgrace can mean shame, and one says khaziya, yakhzā, khazāyah for being ashamed, and the shamed is khazyān. Dhu-r-Rummah said:

Shame reached him in his excursion from ropes, disordered by anger.

So the believers will be ashamed about entering the Fire with the people of other religions until they are brought out from it. Disgrace for the unbelievers is their destruction in it without death. The believers will die and leave it, as is confirmed in the sound sunnah reported from Abū Sa‘īd al-Khudrī in Muslim.

Our Lord, we heard a caller calling us to belief: ‘Believe in your Lord!’, and we believed.

That is Muḥammad ﷺ. Ibn Mas‘ūd, Ibn ‘Abbās and most commentators said that. Qatādah and Muḥammad ibn Ka‘b al-Qurazī said, ‘It is the Qur’an.’ Not all of them heard the Messenger of Allah ﷺ. The evidence for this is the fact that Allah reports that the believing jinn said: ‘We have heard a most amazing Recitation. It leads to right guidance.’ (72:1-2) The first group answered that if someone hears the Qur’an, it is as if he has met the Prophet ﷺ. This is a sound concept. ‘An’ in ‘Believe in’ is in the accusative by the elided genitive participle, i.e. ‘bi-anna āminū’. There is a change in the normal order and it means: ‘We heard a caller to belief calling.’ Abū ‘Ubaydah said that. The lām in the āyah means ‘ilā’ (to) as is found frequently in other āyahs like 99:5 and 7:43. It is also said that it means ‘for the sake of’, meaning ‘so that we believe’.

Our Lord, forgive us our wrong actions and erase our bad actions from us.

The repetition is for stress in the supplication, as both expressions have the same meaning of covering. In the words ‘Take us back to You with those who are truly good’ the ‘truly good’ are the Prophets. The root of barr has to do with amplitude, and the one who is ‘truly good’ (barr) is the one who goes to great lengths in obeying Allah and receives ample mercy from Allah.

Our Lord, give us what You promised us through Your Messengers.

This means on the tongues of Your Messengers, like ‘ask the town’ (12:82). Al-A‘mash and az-Zuhī recited ‘ruslika’ with lightening. It is said that it is a reference to the Prophets and angels asking for forgiveness for the believers and the angels asking forgiveness for those on the earth. There is also Nūḥ’s supplication for the believers, that of Ibrāhīm, and the Prophet ﷺ praying for forgiveness for his community.

and do not disgrace us on the Day of Rising.

This means ‘Do not punish or destroy us or disgrace us. Do not abase us, distance us from You or hate us on the Day of Rising.’

You do not break Your promise.

There are three aspects to the meaning of Allah not breaking His promise. The first is that Allah has promised the Garden to those who believe and they asked to be among those who were promised that without disgrace and punishment. The second is that they asked this as an act of worship and humility. Supplication is the core of worship. This is like Allah’s words: ‘Say: “Lord, judge us with truth!”’ (21:112) when He only ever judges with the truth. The third is that they asked to be given their promised victory against their enemy immediately because it directly refers to the Companions of the Prophet ﷺ and they asked for that in order to exalt the dīn. Allah knows best.

Anas ibn Mālik reported that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘When Allah promises someone a reward for an action, He makes him accomplish it as mercy from Him. If he promises punishment for an action, then the person has a choice regarding it.’ The Arabs censure failing to keep a promise but praise failing to follow through on a threat. One of them said:

My nephew does not fear my attack as long as I live and so does not hide out of fear of the threatener.

When I threaten or promise, I do not follow through on my threat but I fulfil my promise.

Their Lord responds to them:

He answers them. Al-Ḥasan said, ‘They continue to say, “Our Lord, Our Lord,” until He answers them.’ Ja’far aṣ-Ṣādiq said, ‘If someone says five times, “Our Lord,” Allah will save him from what he fears and give him what he wants.’ He was asked, ‘How is that?’ He replied, ‘Recite if you wish, “those who remember Allah” to “You do not break Your promise.” (3:191-194)’

Their Lord responds to them: ‘I will not let the deeds of any doer among you go to waste, male or female –

‘Isā ibn ‘Umar recited ‘innī’ instead of ‘annī’. Al-Ḥakīm Abū ‘Abdullāh related that Umm Salamah said, ‘Messenger of Allah, why do I not hear Allah mention women in the hijrah at all?’ Then Allah revealed: ‘Their Lord responds to them “I will not let the deeds of any doer among you go to waste, male or female.”’ At-Tirmidhī transmitted it.

‘Min’ in the sentence is for stress because it is preceded by a negative particle. The Kufans, however, say that it is explanatory and cannot be elided because it is included for the meaning which is not sound without it. It can be elided when it is stress for denial.

you are both the same in that respect.

This is an inceptive and predicate. It means: your dīn is the same. It is said that you (meaning male and female) are both the same with respect to reward, judgments, help and the like. Aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk said, ‘Your men are like your women in respect of obedience, and your women are like your men in respect of obedience.’ This is similar to the phrase: ‘The men and women of the believers are friends of one another.’ (9:71) When it is said, ‘So-and-so is from me (minnī),’ it means: ‘He has my position and my character.’

Those who made hijrah and were driven from their homes and suffered harm in My Way and fought and were killed.

‘Those who made hijrah’ are those who left their homes and came to Madīnah ‘and were driven from their homes’ in obedience to Allah Almighty. ‘They fought’ My enemies and ‘were killed’ in My Way (qāṭalū wa qūtilū). Ibn Kathīr and Ibn ‘Āmir have ‘qāṭalū wa qattalū’ which is for stress. Al-A‘mash recited ‘qūtilū wa qāṭalū,’ meaning ‘fight My enemies and are killed in My path.’

It is said that the word ‘qad’ is elided in the words, meaning ‘They were killed and they fought (qad qāṭilū). [POEM ON USAGE] It is said: those of them who remained fought. The Arabs say, ‘We fought the Banū Tamīm and some of them were killed.’ Imru’u-l-Qays said:

If you kill us, we will kill you.

‘Umar ibn ‘Abd al-‘Azīz recited ‘qatalū wa qūtilū’ without alif.

I will erase their bad actions from them

I will veil them from them in the Next World and will not rebuke them on account of them nor punish them for them because the reward is affirmed for those people. According to the Basrans, ‘thawāb’ is a verbal noun of stress because the words ‘I will admit them into Gardens with rivers flowing under them’ mean, ‘I will give them a reward.’ Al-Kisā’ī said that it is accusative for the disjunctive. Al-Farrā’ said that it is explanatory. They will be given an excellent recompense. [GRAMMATICAL EXEGESIS]

Do not be deceived by the fact that those who disbelieve move freely about the earth.

It is said that this is addressed to the Prophet ﷺ while the Community is meant. It is said that it is addressed to all. That is because the Muslims said, ‘The unbelievers trade, have wealth and are able to travel about in the land while we are dying from hunger,’ and so it was revealed: ‘Do not be deceived by the apparent safety of the unbelievers in their moving about in their journeys.’

A brief enjoyment; then their shelter will be Hell.

The words ‘A brief enjoyment’ mean that they will only move about freely for a brief time and the benefit of that is only a very temporary one. Ya‘qūb recited ‘yaghurranka’. [POEM] It is similar to: ‘Do not let their free movement about the earth deceive you.’ (40:4) It is called ‘brief’ because it is passing. Everything which is passing, even if it is a lot, is actually little. We find in the Ṣaḥīḥ of at-Tirmidhī that al-Mustawrid reported that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘This world in comparison with the Next World is like putting your finger in the sea and seeing what comes back on it.’

What an evil resting-place!

The ‘resting-place’ is evil for them because of their unbelief. It is what Allah has prepared for them in the Fire. Some find evidence in this āyah and ones like it: ‘Those who disbelieve should not imagine that the extra time We grant to them is good for them.’ (3:178). ‘I will give them more time. My strategy is sure.’ (7:183) ‘Do they imagine that, in the wealth and children We extend to them...’ (23:55) and ‘We will lead them, step by step, into destruction from where they do not know.’ (7:182), and say that these āyahs are evidence that the unbelievers are not in fact blessed in this world because the reality of blessing is free from the taint of both immediate and later harm. The blessing of the unbelievers is mixed with pain and punishment. So it is like someone who is given honey mixed with poison. Even if he enjoys eating it, it is not called a blessing because it will kill him. A group of scholars believe this. It is the position of Abu-l-Ḥasan al-Ash‘arī.

A group of them, including Qāḍī Abū Bakr, the Sword of the Sunnah and Tongue of the Ummah, believe that Allah actually does bless them in this world. They say, ‘The root of blessing (ni‘mah) is na‘mah, which is a comfortable life,’ and we find this linguistically used in the Qur’an: ‘What comfort and ease (na‘mah) they delighted in!’ (44:27) One says that the flour is fine (nā‘im) when it is very finely milled. This is sound and there is further evidence for it in that Allah obliges the unbelievers to be grateful as is it obliged on all of those subject to responsibility. He says: ‘Remember the blessings of Allah’ (7:74) and ‘thank Allah.’ (2:182) Thankfulness is only for blessing. He says: ‘And do good as Allah has been good to you’ (28:77), and this was addressed to Qārūn. He says: ‘Allah makes a likeness of a city which was safe and at peace’ (16:112). So Allah reports that He blessed them with worldly blessings and they were ungrateful for them. He says: ‘They acknowledge Allah’s blessing and then deny it’ (16:83) and ‘Mankind! remember Allah’s blessing upon you.’ (35:3) This is universal and includes the unbelievers and others.

When poisoned food is offered to someone, that is a kindness to him in that situation, since they are not made to swallow pure poison, but it is mixed with something sweet. So it is not unlikely for it to be said, ‘He has blessed him.’ If this is the case, then there are two types of blessings: a beneficial blessing and an averting blessing. A beneficial blessing is any kind of pleasure someone is given. An averting blessing is one that averts from them any type of disaster. According to this view, Allah does give blessings to the unbelievers. They do not disagree that Allah does not give them the blessing of the dīn. Praise be to Allah.

But those who have taqwā of their Lord will have gardens with rivers flowing under them

This concludes the negation of the unbelievers and their benefit of moving freely about the land. It is, however, the godfearing who will have the greatest and everlasting benefit. The word ‘But’ is in the position of the nominative by the inceptive. Yazīd ibn al-Qa‘qā‘ recited ‘lakinna’.

hospitality from Allah.

Nuzul is like thawāb according to the Basrans. Al-Kisā‘ī said that it is a verbal noun, and al-Farrā’ said that it is explanatory. Al-Ḥasan and an-Nakha‘ī recited ‘nuzl’, finding two dammahs heavy. The rest have it as nuzul. The meaning of nuzul is hospitality prepared for a guest. Nazīl is a guest. A poet says:

The guest of a people has the greatest right and the right of Allah in respect of the guest’s right.

The plural is anzāl. The portion of a guest (nazīl) is brought together. Nuzl is a lot of food served to the guest as is nazal.

Perhaps the specific meaning of hospitality here, and Allah knows best, is what appears in Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim from Thawbān, the client of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ, in the story about a rabbi who asked the Prophet ﷺ, ‘Where will people be on the day the earth is changed to other than the earth and heavens?’ He replied ﷺ, ‘They will be in the darkness before the bridge.’ He asked, ‘Who will be the first person to cross?’ He replied ﷺ, ‘The poor Muhājirūn.’ The Jew asked, ‘What will be their hospitality they enter the Garden?’ He answered ﷺ, ‘The lobe of the liver of the whale.’ He asked, ‘And what will be their food after it?’ He replied ﷺ, ‘The oxen of the Garden will be slaughtered for them and they will eat from the best of them.’ He asked, ‘What will be their drink?’ He replied ﷺ, ‘It will be from a spring there called Salsabīl.’

Linguists say that tuhfah (hospitality) in the hadith are fruits that one presents (athafa) and tuhaf is the best of something. This corresponds to what we mentioned about hospitality. Allah knows best. ‘The lobe of the liver’ is a piece like a finger. Al-Harawī said that ‘hospitality from Allah’ means a reward. It is said that it means provision.

The expression ‘What is with Allah is better for those who are truly good,’ means that it is better than what the unbelievers have in this world. Allah knows best.

Among the people of the Book there are some who believe in Allah and in what has been sent down to you and what was sent down to them, Jābir ibn ‘Abdullāh, Anas, Ibn ‘Abbās, Qatādah and al-Ḥasan said that this was revealed about the Negus. That was because when he died, Jibrīl announced his death to the Messenger of Allah ﷺ and the Prophet ﷺ told his Companions, ‘Stand and pray for your brother the Negus.’ They remarked to one another, ‘He commands us to pray for one of the Abyssinian barbarians!’ Then Allah revealed this.

Aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk said that the words ‘what has been sent down to you’ refer to the Qur’an and the words ‘and what was sent down to them’ refer to the Torah and Gospel. We find in the Revelation: ‘They will be given their reward twice over.’ (28:54) We find in Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim, ‘Three will be given their reward twice over.’ A man of the People of the Book is mentioned who believes in his own Prophet and then meets the Prophet ﷺ and believes in him, follows him and affirms him. He will have two rewards. This was already mentioned in al-Baqarah. Mujāhid, Ibn Jurayj and Ibn Zayd said that it was revealed about all the believers of the People of the Book. It is general and the Negus is one of them. His name was Aṣḥamah which means gift.

and who are humble before Allah.

This means humble and abased. It is in the accusative for the ḥāl modifying what is implied in ‘believe’, and it is said that it is modifying the pronoun in ‘to them’ or ‘to you’. The āyah contains clarification.

You who believe, be steadfast.

Allah ends the sūrah with the directives that this tenth āyah contains which include victory over the enemy in this world and success in obtaining the bliss of the Next World. So He encourages steadfastness in obedience and against one's appetites. Ṣabr means constraint, and was already discussed in al-Baqarah.

Be supreme in steadfastness.

This is ṣābara, and it is said that it means steadfastness against the enemy, as Zayd ibn Aslam stated. Al-Ḥasan said that it is being steadfast in the five prayers. It is said that it is being constant in opposing the appetites of the nafs. 'Aṭā' and al-Qurazī said, 'Wait patiently for what you are promised,' in other words do not despair, but wait for relief. The Prophet ﷺ said, 'Waiting for relief with patience is worship.' Abū 'Umar preferred this. The first is the position of the majority. 'Antarah said:

I have not seen any living person as steadfast we are,

Nor any who struggled against the like of those we struggled against.

He means that they were steadfast against the enemy in war as we were steadfast, and displayed neither cowardice nor treachery.

Struggling (mukāfajah) is face-to-face combat. That is why they disagree about the meaning of 'rābiṭū' in 'be firm on the battlefield.' Most of the Community say that it means: 'line up horses against the enemy,' implying link them up as your enemies do, and that is seen in the words of the Almighty: 'with all the firepower and cavalry you can muster.' (8:60)

In the Muwattā' Zayd ibn Aslam reports: "Ubayda ibn al-Jarrāḥ wrote to 'Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb mentioning to him the great array of Byzantine troops and the anxiety they were causing him. 'Umar wrote to him, "Whatever hardship befalls a believing slave, Allah will make an opening for him after it, and a hardship will not overcome two eases. Allah says in His Book: 'You who believe, be steadfast; be supreme in steadfastness; be firm on the battlefield; and have taqwa of Allah; so that hopefully you will be successful.'"

Abū Salamah ibn ‘Abd ar-Raḥmān said, ‘This āyah is about waiting for the prayer after the prayer. There was no expedition in the time of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ in which horses were tied up.’ Abū ‘Abdullāh al-Ḥakam related it in his Ṣaḥīḥ. Abū Salamah used as evidence the words of Prophet ﷺ: ‘Shall I direct you to something by which Allah will wipe out wrong actions and raise up degrees? Doing wuḍū’ thoroughly, even in times of difficulty, taking many steps to the mosque and waiting for the prayer after praying the previous one. That is ribāṭ,’ three times. Mālik related it.

Ibn ‘Aṭīyah said, ‘The sound position is that ribāṭ is perseverance in the Way of Allah.’ Its root meaning is the tying up of horses. Then anyone who devoted himself to defending one of the frontiers of Islam was called a murābiṭ, whether he was mounted or on foot. It is derived from rabt (tying up). The Prophet ﷺ said, ‘That is your ribāṭ.’ It resembles ribāṭ in the Way of Allah. This sort of usage is common as in the hadith: ‘The strong person is not the one who throws people down. The strong person is the one who controls himself when he is angry.’

The first, which is the linguistic meaning, is not contestable. Al-Khalīl ibn Aḥmad, one of the imāms of linguistics, says, ‘Ribāṭ is clinging to the frontiers and being constant in the prayer.’ Therefore, waiting for the prayer is a true linguistic meaning of ribāṭ, as the Prophet ﷺ said. Moreover, there is what ash-Shaybānī observed about it. Water can be described as ‘mutarābiṭ,’ meaning remaining in one place and not leaving it. Ibn Fāris related it. That is demanded by the transitive nature of ribāṭ linguistically. Murābiṭah in Arabic denotes a contract regarding something, so that it does not peter out, and so it refers to something in which one is steadfast. So the heart is bound by good intention and the body by obedience. One of the most important aspects of this is lining up horses in the Way of Allah, as in the text of the Qur’an, ‘with cavalry’ (8:60), but it also includes binding the self to performing the prayers as the Prophet ﷺ said, as related by Abu Hurayrah, Jābir and ‘Alī.

According to the fuqahā, a murābiṭ in the Way of Allah is someone who goes to one of the frontiers to bind himself there for a time. Muḥammad ibn al-Mawwāz says that. As for those who live at the frontiers who prosper and earn there, they are not murābiṭūn even if they are defenders. Ibn ‘Aṭiyyah said that.

Ibn Khuwayzimandād said, ‘There are two situations with respect to ribāṭ. One is that someone is secure and defended at the frontier. In that case it is permitted to live there with one’s wife and children. If it is not safe, a man is permitted to stay there himself, if he is one of the people of fighting, but may not move his wife and children there to expose them to the enemy, since they might be captured and enslaved.’ Allah knows best.

Many hadiths have come about the excellence of ribāṭ. They include what al-Bukhārī reported from Sahl ibn Sa‘d as-Sā‘idī in which the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘Manning the frontier (ribāṭ) for one day in the way of Allah is better than this world and everything in it.’ In Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim, Salmān reported that he heard the Messenger of Allah ﷺ say, ‘Fighting on the front line (ribāṭ) for a day and a night is better than fasting and praying at night for a month. If a man dies doing it, the actions which he used normally to do go on accruing for him and his provision is bestowed on him and he will be safe from the trials of the grave.’ Abū Dāwūd reports from Faḍālah ibn ‘Ubayd that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘The actions of every dead person are sealed except for the murābiṭ in the Way of Allah. His actions will go on increasing until the Day of Rising and he will be safe from the trials of the grave.’

These hadiths provide evidence that ribāṭ is the best of actions whose reward continues after death, as in the hadith reported from al-‘Alā’ ibn ‘Abd ar-Raḥmān from his father from Abū Hurayrah in which the Prophet ﷺ said: ‘When a man dies, his actions are cut off except for three: an on-going sadaqah, knowledge which brought benefit and a virtuous son who makes supplication for him.’ This is a sound hadith in the transmission of Muslim. On-going ṣadaqah, beneficial knowledge, and a righteous son who makes supplication for his parents end when the ṣadaqah runs out, the knowledge is lost or the son dies, but the reward of ribāṭ goes on being multiplied until the Day of Rising because the only meaning of growth is multiplication. It does not depend on a cause so that it would cease when that cause disappears. Instead, it is a favour from Allah that will continue until the Day of Rising.

This is due to the fact that no actions of piety are possible except when there is security from the enemy and the territory of the dīn and hallmarks of Islam are protected. For this reason ribāṭ continues to enjoy a reward which comes from all other righteous actions that are performed. Ibn Mājah transmitted with a sound isnād from Abū Hurayrah that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘If someone dies as a murābiṭ in the Cause of Allah, he will be given the reward for the righteous actions he did, given his provision, and receive security from the Tempter and Allah will resurrect him on the Day of Rising safe from alarm.’ This hadith has a second qualification, which is death while a murābiṭ. Allah knows best.

It is related that ‘Uthmān ibn ‘Affān heard the Messenger of Allah ﷺ say, ‘Fighting on the frontier (ribāṭ) in the way of Allah is better than a thousand years of fasting and prayer at night.’ Ubayy ibn Ka‘b reported that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘Ribāṭ for a day in the Way of Allah during Ramaḍān in the exposed areas of the Muslims, in anticipation of the reward, has a greater reward with Allah and repayment from Him than the worship of fasting and night prayers for a thousand years. If Allah returns him safe to his family, no evil deed will be written against him for a thousand years, his good actions are written for him, and the reward of ribāṭ will continue for him until the Day of Rising.’ This hadith indicates that ribāṭ in the month of Ramaḍān will bring him an abiding reward, even if he does not die while engaged in it. Allah knows best. Anas ibn Mālik said that he heard the Messenger of Allah ﷺ say, ‘A night spent on guard in the Way of Allah is better than a man praying and fasting in his family for a thousand years. The year is three hundred and sixty days, and every day is like a thousand years.’

It is reported that waiting for the prayer after the prayer is ribāṭ. So the one who waits for the prayer also has that excellence, Allah willing. Al-Ḥāfiẓ Abū Nu‘aym related from Sulaymān ibn Aḥmad from ‘Alī ibn ‘Abd al-‘Azīz from Ḥajjāj ibn al-Minhāl, and from Abū Bakr ibn Mālik from ‘Abdullāh ibn Aḥmad ibn Ḥanbal from his father from al-Ḥusayn ibn Mūsā from Ḥammād ibn Salamah from Thābit al-Bunānī from Abū Ayyūb al-Azdī from Nawf al-Bikālī that ‘Abdullāh ibn ‘Amr said, ‘The Prophet ﷺ prayed maghrib one day and we prayed with him. Some people left and some stayed behind. The Messenger of Allah ﷺ came before the people had called the ‘Ishā’ prayer. He came to the people who were there, raised his fingers indicating twenty-seven, and pointed to the sky. His garment exposed his knees while he was saying, “Good news, company of Muslims! Your Lord has opened one of the gates of heaven to boast of you to the angels, saying, ‘Look at My slaves who have finished one obligation and are waiting for another.’”’ Ḥammād ibn Salamah related from ‘Alī ibn Zayd from Muṭarrif ibn ‘Abdullāh from both Nawf and ‘Abdullāh, the sons of ‘Amr, from Nawf from the Torah, and ‘Abdullāh ibn ‘Amr related it from the Prophet ﷺ.

Have taqwā of Allah.

Allah never commands jihād without emphasising the need for taqwā.

so that hopefully you will be successful.

So that you will have the success you hope for. Here ‘la‘alla’ means ‘so that’. Success is going-on. All of this was discussed fully in al-Baqarah. Praise be to Allah.

4. SŪRAT AN-NISĀ' – WOMEN

This is a Madinan sūrah except for one āyah which was revealed in Makkah in the year of the Conquest about ‘Uthmān ibn Ṭalḥah al-Ḥajabī: ‘Allah commands you to return to their owners the things you hold on trust.’ (4:58). An-Naqqāsh said that it was said that it was revealed during the Prophet’s hijrah from Makkah to Madīnah. Some people say that since Allah says, ‘O mankind’ it means that it was revealed in Makkah. ‘Alqamah and others said that, and so it seems that the beginning is Makkan and what is revealed after the Hijrah is Madinan. An-Naḥḥās said that it is all Makkan.

The first position is sounder because we find in Ṣaḥīḥ Bukhārī that ‘Ā’ishah said, ‘Sūrat an-Nisā’ was only revealed while I was with the Messenger of Allah ﷺ,’ meaning married to him. There is no disagreement that Prophet ﷺ married ‘Ā’ishah in Madīnah. Whoever examines its rulings will realise that there is no doubt that it is Madinan. As for the expression ‘O mankind’ making it Makkan, this is not sound. Al-Baqarah is Madinan, but ‘O mankind’ occurs twice in it. Allah knows best.

يَا أَيُّهَا النَّاسُ اتَّقُوا رَبَّكُمُ الَّذِي خَلَقَكُمْ مِنْ نَفْسٍ وَاحِدَةٍ وَخَلَقَ مِنْهَا
رَوْحَهَا وَتَسَاءَلُونَ اللَّهَ نَسَاءَلُونَ بِهِ
وَالْأَرْحَامَ إِنَّ اللَّهَ كَانَ عَلَيْكُمْ رَقِيبًا ۝

1 O mankind, have taqwā of your Lord who created you from a single self and created its mate from it and then disseminated many men and women from the two of them. Have taqwā of Allah in whose name you make demands on one another and also in respect of your families. Allah watches over you continually.

O mankind, have taqwā of your Lord who created you

We already discussed the derivation of the terms ‘mankind’, ‘taqwā’, ‘Lord’, ‘creation’, ‘mate’ and ‘dissemination’ in al-Baqarah.

The āyah calls attention to the Creator.

The adjective ‘single’ (wāḥidah) is in the feminine, because the word nafs is feminine, even if it denotes the masculine. Linguistically, one could use the masculine since Ādam is meant, as Mujāhid and Qatādah said, and that is found in the reading of Ibn Abī ‘Ablah which has ‘wāḥid’. The verb ‘baththa’ (disseminate) means to separate and spread out over the earth, as we see in ‘spread-out rugs’ (88:16). ‘The two of them’ are Ādam and Ḥawwā’. Mujāhid said that Ḥawwā’ was created from the rib of Ādam, as in the hadith, ‘Woman was created from a crooked rib’ as we mentioned in al-Baqarah.

and then disseminated many men and women from the two of them.

Their descendants are of two categories. This means that the hermaphrodite is not a separate category, but has an actuality that refers to both categories. Such a person is a human being and must be connected to one sex or another as was already mentioned in al-Baqarah.

Have taqwā of Allah in whose name you make demands on one another and also in respect of your families

The repetition of ‘have taqwa’ is for stress and notification to the selves of those who are commanded. The word ‘whose’ is in the accusative as an adjective and ‘families’ is added. The sentence means: ‘Fear Allah lest you disobey Him and fear cutting off kin.’

The people of Madīnah read this as ‘tassā’alūna’, assimilating the tā’ into the sīn while the Kufans read it ‘tasā’alūna’ because the meaning is known. Ibrāhīm an-Nakha’ī, Qatādah, al-A‘mash and Ḥamzah read ‘al-arḥāmi’ in the genitive. Grammarians have discussed this. The leaders of the Basrans said that it is ungrammatical and it is not lawful to recite it like that. The Kufans said that it is ugly and do not add anything to this without mentioning the reason for it. An-Naḥḥās said, ‘as far as I know.’ Sībawayh said, ‘It is not added to something implied in the genitive because it is in the position of tanwīn which is not added to it.’

One group say that it is added to something indicated. They used to make demands in that way. A man would say, ‘I ask you by Allah and kinship.’ That is how it is explained by al-Ḥasan, an-Nakha‘ī and Mujāhid. It is a sound position with respect to the matter as will be explained.

Some people, including az-Zajjāj, said that it is weak. They said, ‘It is ugly to add the substantive noun to the pronoun in the genitive unless what is in the genitive is in the substantive form, as in Allah’s words: ‘We caused the earth to swallow both him and his house.’ (28:81) It is ugly to say, ‘I passed by him and Zayd(in).’ Az-Zajjāj said that al-Māzinī said that it is because the coupled word and its antecedent are equal partners and either of them can take the place of the other.’ As it is not permitted to say, ‘I passed by Zayd and you (ka),’ it is not permitted to say, ‘I passed by you (bika) and Zayd.’ Sibawayh said that he considers it ugly and only permitted in poetry.

[POEMS]

In Kitāb at-tadhkirah al-mahdiyyah, al-Fārisī says that Abu-l-‘Abbās al-Mubbarad said, ‘If you pray behind an imam who recites “mā antum bi-musrikhiyy” (14:22) and this as “tasā’alūna bihi wa-l-arḥāmi”, take your sandals and leave.’

Az-Zajjāj said, ‘In addition to being weak and ugly in Arabic, the reading of Ḥamzah is an serious error in respect of the principles of the dīn because the Prophet ﷺ said, “Do not swear by your fathers.” If it is not permitted to swear by other than Allah, how can it be permitted to swear by kinship? I also saw that Ismā‘īl ibn Ishāq believed that swearing by other than Allah is something terrible and that one should only swear by Allah.’

An-Naḥḥās said, ‘Some of them say that “al-arḥāmi” as an oath is an error both in grammar and meaning because the hadith from the Prophet ﷺ indicates that it should be in the accusative (al-arḥāma), and it is related that Jarīr said, “We were with the Prophet ﷺ when some people of Muḍar came who were naked and barefoot. I saw the expression on the face of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ change because of what he saw of their dire poverty. Then he prayed Zuhr and addressed the people and quoted this āyah.” Then he said, “One man gave a dinar in ṣadaqah, another a dirham and yet another a ṣā’ of dates.” So the reason that it is in the accusative is because it is encouraging maintaining ties of kinship. It is also sound that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘Whoever swears should swear by Allah or be silent.’ This refutes the one who says: ‘I ask you by Allah and my kin.’ Abū Ishāq said that it means ‘by which you demand your rights.’ There is also no sense to the genitive here. This is what I know about the position of language scholars who forbid reciting it as ‘al-arḥāmi’ in the genitive. Ibn ‘Aṭīyah preferred that.

Imām Abū Naṣr ‘Abd ar-Raḥīm ibn ‘Abd al-Karīm al-Qushayrī rejected that, saying, ‘Such words are rejected by the imams of the dīn because the readings of the imams of recitation are confirmed from the Prophet ﷺ by multiple transmissions which are known. Whoever rejects that, rejects the Prophet ﷺ and finds the recitation ugly. This is a position which one should be aware of and wary about. One should not follow the imams of language and grammar in it. Arabic is learned from the Prophet ﷺ and no one doubts his eloquence.’

As for what is mentioned about the hadith, it is debatable because the Prophet ﷺ said to Abu-l-‘Usharā’, “By your father, stabbing it in the thigh is sufficient.” It is prohibited to swear an oath by other than Allah. This is entreating someone by the right of kinship, and it is not forbidden.’

Al-Qushayrī said, ‘It is said that this is an adjuration by kinship, meaning “Have taqwā of Allah and the right of kinship.” It is like when you say, “Do that, by your father’s right.” Revelation has, “By the star,” ‘By the Mount,” “By the fig” and so forth. This is unnatural.’ In fact, this is not unnatural, because it is not unlikely that ‘al-arḥām’ is like this. Swearing by that is as Allah swears by that which He has created and which indicates His oneness and power for stress. Allah knows best. Allah can swear by whatever He wishes, forbid whatever He wishes and allow whatever He wishes. So this can be an oath, as the Arabs swear by kinship. It is sound that the bā' is meant and elided as we see in poems [POEMS]

‘Abdullāh ibn Yazīd recited ‘al-arḥāmu’ in the nominative as the inceptive and the predicate is implied. It implies: ‘And relatives are family with whom ties are maintained.’ It is also possible that it is instigation because the Arabs put that in the nominative. [POEM] It is also said that it is in the accusative added to ‘bihi’ because its position is accusative. [POEM] They used to say, ‘I ask you by Allah and by kinship.’ What is most apparent is that it is in the accusative by an implied verb as we already mentioned.

The religion agrees that it is mandatory to maintain ties of kinship and that it is forbidden to cut them off. It is confirmed that when Asmā’ asked the Prophet ﷺ, ‘Shall I give to my mother?’ he replied, ‘Yes, give to your mother,’ and he commanded her to maintain her tie of kinship although her mother was an unbeliever. So it includes within the favour even giving to an unbeliever. This is such that Abū Ḥanīfah and his people said that relatives inherit from one another if there are no paternal kin (‘aṣabah) or prescribed shares.

One should buy and free relatives who are slaves. That is supported by what Abū Dāwūd related that the Prophet ﷺ said: ‘If someone comes into possession of a maḥram relative, then he is free.’ That is the position of most of the people of knowledge, and is related from ‘Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb and ‘Abdullāh ibn Mas‘ūd and it is not known that any of the Companions objected to it. It is the position of al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī, Jābir ibn Zayd, ‘Aṭā’, ash-Sha‘bī and az-Zuhrī. That is the view taken by ath-Thawrī, Aḥmad and Ishāq. Our scholars have three positions. One is that it is specific to fathers and grandfathers. The second that it applies to both sides, meaning siblings, and the third is like what Abū Ḥanīfah says about it applying to any relatives. Ash-Shāfi'ī said that someone is only obliged to free children and parents, but not siblings or any other relatives.

The sound position is the first one based on the hadith which we mentioned and which was transmitted by at-Tirmidhī and an-Nasā'ī. The best of its paths is that which is in an-Nasā'ī which he related from Ḍamrah from Sufyān from 'Abdullāh ibn Dīnār from Ibn 'Umar that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, 'If someone comes into possession of a mahram relative, he must free him.' This is a firm hadith transmitted from one reputable transmitter to another and there is no criticism of it by any of the imams for any reason which would demand that it be abandoned, other than the fact that an-Nasā'ī said at the end of it that it is a munkar hadith. Others said that he alone has Ḍamrah and this is the meaning of munkar and shādhdh in the terminology of hadith scholars. Ḍamrah is reputable and trustworthy. When someone trustworthy is the only one with a hadith, that does not impair it. Allah knows best. They disagree about whether this applies to milk relatives. Most say that it does not and the hadith does not demand that. Qāḍī Sharīk said that he must emancipate them.

The literalists and some mutakallimūn believe that a son is not forced to free his father if he owns him. Their argument is based on the hadith in which the Prophet ﷺ said, 'A child cannot repay his parent unless he finds him a slave and buys him and sets him free.' They said that if it is valid to buy him, ownership is confirmed and an owner has free disposal of his property.

This is ignorance of the goals (maqāṣid) of the Sharī'ah on their part. Allah Almighty says: 'you should show kindness to your parents.' (17:23) So He connects worship of Him to kindness to parents in respect of obligation. It is not part of kindness for a son to allow his parent to remain his property and to be subject to his authority. Therefore he is obliged to free him either because of his ownership and acting by the hadith, or for the sake of being kind to him, acting by the āyah. According to the majority, the hadith applies when the son has the means to free his father by buying him and the Shari‘ah applies emancipation to him as coming from him.

The disagreement of scholars is about who is set free when he or she is owned. The reason for the first position is what we mentioned from the Book and the Sunnah. The reason for the second view is the connection of close kinship to the father which is mentioned in the hadith, not the closeness of a man to his son so that it is applied to the father. A brother is close to him in that respect because of the connection by paternity. He says, ‘I am your father’s son.’ The reason for third view is connected to the hadith of Ḍamrah. Allah knows best.

Al-arḥām: raḥim is the name for all relatives without difference between maḥram or non-maḥram. Abū Ḥanīfah thinks that the maḥram relationship prevents taking a gift back, while it is permitted to take it back in the case of cousins even if severance exists when there is kinship. That is why inheritance, guardianship and other rulings are connected to it. The quality of being maḥram is additional to the text of the Book, and is not relied on. They also think that it is abrogated, especially when it indicates the cause of severance. It is allowed in respect of cousins. Allah knows best.

Allah watches over you continually.

He is Watcher, meaning Guardian, according to Ibn ‘Abbās and Mujāhid. Ibn Zayd says a Knower. It is said that Raqīb means Guardian, and it is one of the attributes of Allah Almighty. Ar-Raqīb is the One who guards and watches. The verb is raqaba. Marqab is a high place which overlooks the area where the Watcher is. Raqīb is also the third share of the seven parts, and it is said that it is a type of snake. So it is a word with different meanings, and Allah knows best.

وَأَتُوا الَّذِينَ آمَنُوا لَمْ يَلْبَسُوا الْحَائِثَ وَالطَّيِّبَ وَلَا تَأْكُلُوا
 أَمْوَالَهُمْ إِلَىٰ أَمْوَالِهِمْ إِنَّهُ كَانَ حُوبًا كَثِيرًا ۝

2 Give orphans their property, and do not substitute bad things for good. Do not assimilate their property into your own. Doing that is a serious crime.

Give orphans their property,

‘Orphans’ means those who were orphans. It is like Allah’s words: ‘The magicians threw themselves down in prostration’ (7:120) when there was no longer any magic in them when they prostrated. Similarly, although an adult is not actually considered ‘an orphan’, the Prophet ﷺ was nevertheless called ‘the orphan of Abū Ṭālib’ based on what had previously been the case. The verb ‘ātū’ means ‘give’ and ‘itā’ is giving. ‘Atw’ is a gift. Abū Zayd said that a bribe is a gift (itāwah). The word ‘orphan’ only applies to someone who has not yet reached maturity as mentioned in al-Baqarah.

This āyah is addressed to guardians and executors. According to Muqātil and al-Kalbī it was revealed about a man of Ghaṭafān who had a lot of property belonging to a nephew who was an orphan. When the orphan came of age, he asked for his property and the uncle refused to hand it over, and this was revealed. The uncle said, ‘We seek refuge with Allah from serious crime!’ and he returned the property. The Prophet ﷺ said, ‘Whoever is protected from the avarice of his nafs and returns it, will alight in his house,’ referring to the Garden. When the lad took the money, he spent it in the Way of Allah, and the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘The wage is confirmed and the burden remains.’ He was asked, ‘How is that, the Messenger of Allah?’ He said, ‘The wage is established for the lad and the sin remains for his father,’ because he was an idolater.

There are two aspects to giving orphans their property. One is that their guardian gives them their food and clothing as long he is in that position, since that is not possible for someone who does not have full control, such as a child or an adult fool. The second is to give them money when they are capable. That is when they are tested and sensible. So the term ‘orphan’ is metaphorical since it no longer applies to someone like that. It means the one who was an orphan. It is continuing to keep the name as in the words: 'The magicians fell down in prostration' (26:46), which means those who had been magicians, and just as the Prophet ﷺ was called 'the orphan of Abū Ṭālib'. When a guardian realises that his charges are properly responsible, it is forbidden for him to withhold their money. Abū Ḥanīfah said, 'When someone is twenty-five, they are given their money in any case.'

Allah did not mention in this āyah about being aware of sensibleness (rushd). He mentioned it later: 'Keep a close check on orphans until they reach a marriageable age, then if you perceive that they have sound judgment, hand over their property to them.' (4:6) Abū Bakr ar-Rāzī al-Ḥanafī says in Ahkām al-Qur'an: 'Since good judgment is not made a condition in one place, while it is in another, it should not be applied to both situations. So when someone is twenty-five and is a fool, and good sense is not discerned in him, his money must still be given to him. If he is younger than that, then it is not mandatory, based on the two āyahs.' Abū Ḥanīfah said, 'It is possible that someone can be a grandfather before they reach sound judgment. If they can be a grandfather, how is it sound to give them money on account of being an orphan and in the name of an orphan? Is that not extremely unlikely?'

Ibn 'Arabī refuted this as being baseless, especially on the basis that he sees that such payments cannot be confirmed by analogy. They must be derived from texts and no texts exist regarding this matter. What the scholars say about being debarred will be discussed later, Allah willing.

Do not substitute bad things for good.

So do not exchange a fat sheep of the orphan's property for a thin one, nor a good dirham for an adulterated one. In the Jāhiliyyah, due to lack of dīn, people did not refrain from consuming the property of orphans. They would take what was good from the property of orphans and replace it with bad property of their own and say, 'A name for a name and capital for capital.' Allah forbade that. This is the position of Sa'īd ibn al-Musayyab, az-Zuhrī, as-Suddī, and aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk. It is the literal meaning of the āyah.

It is said that the meaning is: 'Do not consume the property of orphans which is unlawful for you and therefore bad, claiming that it is good and your own property.' Mujāhid, Abū Šāliḥ and Bādhān said, 'Do not hasten to consume any bad things in their property and claim it is good and lawful provision.'

Ibn Zayd that in the Jāhiliyyah they did not allow women and children to inherit. The eldest would take the legacy. 'Aṭā' said, 'Do not take profit from an orphan in your care when he is young and naïve.' These two positions are outside the apparent meaning of the āyah. The verb tabaddala is to exchange one thing for another in its place. The grammatical term appositive (badal) comes from this verb.

Do not assimilate their property into your own.

Mujāhid said, 'This āyah forbids mixing property when spending. The Arabs used to mix their expenses with those of orphans and then were forbidden to do that. Then it was abrogated by the āyah in al-Baqarah: 'If you mix your property with theirs, they are your brothers.' (2:220) Ibn Fūrak said that al-Ḥasan said, 'People interpret this āyah as being a prohibition against mixing property, and so they avoided it and then the āyah in al-Baqarah made things easier for them.'

A group of later scholars said that 'ilā' means 'with'. It is like His words, 'be helpers of (ilā) Allah'. (61:14). [POEM] Others say that it has its normal meaning of 'to' which conveys ascription, implying, 'Do not add their property to yours in consumption.' So they were forbidden to think of the property of orphans as being like their own property over whose use and consumption they had full control.

Doing that is a serious crime.

The word 'that' refers to assimilating property. Consuming the property of orphans is great wrong action, according to Ibn 'Abbās, al-Ḥasan and others. ‘Crime’ (ḥūb) is derived from the verb hāba, meaning to commit a wrong action. The root of the verb comes from chiding a camel. A sin is called ḥūb because a person is chided about it and encouraged to refrain from it. One says in supplication, ‘O Allah, forgive my sin (ḥūb)!’

Ḥūbah is also a need as we see in the supplication, ‘I present my need (ḥūbah) to You!’ Ḥūb is alienation, as we see from the words of the Prophet ﷺ, ‘Umm Ya‘qūb’s divorce is on account of alienation.’ There are a couple of dialectal forms: ḥūb, which is the common reading and the dialect of Hijaz; hawb, as decided by al-Ḥasan which al-Akhfash says is the dialect of Tamīm and Muqātil says is the dialect of Abyssinia. Ḥūb is a verbal noun as is ḥiyābah. Ubayy ibn Ka‘b recited ‘ḥāb’ as a verbal noun. Ḥaw‘ab is a wide place and also means water. One says, ‘Alḥaqa-llāhu bihi-l-ḥawbah’ (May Allah bring poverty on him). Ḥībah is a state. The origin of the yā’ is wāw. Form V of the verb, taḥawwaba, means to worship and remove ḥūb from oneself. The verb also means expressing sorrow and crying out loudly, as when chiding. Taḥawwaba is also to cry out from pain. Ṭufayl said:

Taste as we tasted a morning burned by rage in our livers and grief (taḥawwab).’

3 If you are afraid of not behaving justly towards orphans, then marry other permissible women, two, three or four. But if you are afraid of not treating them equally, then only one, or those you own as slaves. That makes it more likely that you will not be unfair.

If you are afraid of not behaving justly towards orphans,

If you are afraid that you will not be fair in respect of their dowries and in spending on them, then marry other women. The Imāms agree that ‘Urwah ibn az-Zubayr reported that ‘Ā’ishah said about this āyah, ‘Nephew, this refers to an orphan girl who is in the care of her guardian and is his partner in his property; he likes both her property and her beauty and so he wants to marry her without being fair with respect to her bride-price, not giving her the like of what someone else would give her. They were forbidden to marry them unless they were fair to them and gave them the highest customary bride-price. They were commanded to marry women other than them who were lawful to them.’

Ibn Khuwayzimandād said, ‘This is why it is permitted for an executor to buy and sell using the property of the orphan as long as it does not entail gifts. A person can examine what his guardian buys or sells for him, and the ruler can oversee that. No one can oversee a father as long as there is not gift giving in which case, that should be overseen by the ruler.’ This was discussed in al-Baqarah.

Ad-Daḥḥāk, al-Ḥasan and others say that the āyah abrogates what existed in the Jāhiliyyah and the beginning of Islam, when a man would marry however many free women he wished. This āyah restricts him to four. Ibn ‘Abbās, Ibn Jubayr and others said that it means: if you fear you will not be fair to orphans, then also fear about women, because they used to refrain from injustice to orphans, but not women.

Khawf (fear) is one of the words that can have opposite meanings. ‘Be afraid’ can mean ‘feel certain’ or ‘think it probable’. For that reason scholars disagree about the meaning of ‘fear’ in this context. Abū ‘Ubaydah said that it means if you are certain. Others say that it means you think it probable, and Ibn ‘Aṭīyah said that this is what skilled scholars prefer, and so it has the normal meaning of thinking probable rather than of being certain. So it means if someone thinks it probable he will not be fair to the orphan girl, he should turn away from marrying her.

The verb aqṣaṭa means ‘to be fair’. Qasata means to act unjustly and wrong someone. The Almighty says: ‘The unjust (qāsiṭūn) will be fuel for the Fire.’ (72:15) The Prophet ﷺ said, ‘Those who are just (muqsiṭūn) in the dīn will be on minbars of light on the Day of Rising.’ Ibn Waththāb and an-Nakha‘ī recited ‘taqṣiṭū’ from qasata with the implied additional ‘lā’. It is as if Allah were saying, ‘If you do, you will be unfair.’

then marry other permissible women, two, three or four.

How can mā be used for human beings when it is normally used for non-sentient things? There are five answers to this objection. One is that man and mā are interchangeable as we see in other āyahs like 91:5 and 24:45. Here it is used for women, who are sentient beings. Ibn Abī ‘Ablah recited ‘man’. The second is the view of the Basrans that mā can be used in an adjectival way for anything. So it means to marry lawful women. What Allah forbade is not good (tayyib). The third is the idea that mā here is adverbial, meaning ‘as long as you think it good to marry.’ Ibn ‘Aṭiyyah says that this is weak. The fourth is al-Farrā’s view that it is used as a verbal noun, but an-Naḥḥās said, ‘This is very unlikely indeed. It is not sound. Marry a good woman.’ Al-Jawharī said, ‘The verb for to be good is tāba, yaṭību, ṭaybah, tatyāb. The fifth is that what is meant here is the contract, i.e. ‘marry in a wholesome manner.’ The reading of Ibn Abī ‘Ablah rejects these three latter views.

Abū ‘Amr ibn al-‘Alā’ related that when the people of Makkah heard thunder, they would say, ‘Glory be to the One (mā) whom the clouds glorify!’ using mā. This is also seen in other similar expressions. All of those concerned with knowledge agree that Allah’s words: ‘If you are afraid of not behaving justly towards orphans’ does not convey the idea that someone who does not fear being unfair towards orphans should marry more than someone who is afraid of being unfair. It indicates that the āyah was revealed in response to those who feared that and that its ruling is more universal than that.

Abū Ḥanīfah connects this āyah to the permission to marry an orphan girl before she comes of age. He says that she is only an orphan before she comes of age since, once she was of age, she would be able to agree to a lowering of her dowry and is no longer called ‘orphan’. There is no consensus on this. Mālik, ash-Shāfi‘ī and the main body of scholars believe that marriage is not permitted until she comes of age and gives her consent, as Allah says: ‘They will ask you for a fatwā about women.’ (4:127). The word ‘women’ (nisā’) is used for adult women as ‘rijāl’ is used for adult men. Neither ‘man’ nor ‘woman’ is used of a child. ‘Women’ is used with ‘orphans’ in that āyah and means ‘orphans’ is in this āyah as ‘Ā’ishah said. Adult women orphans are included in the āyah. An adult orphan woman may only be married with her permission and a child may not be married because she cannot give her permission.

This is like what is related from by ad-Dāraquṭnī from Muḥammad ibn Ishāq from Nāfi‘ that Ibn ‘Umar said, ‘My uncle, Qudāmah ibn Maz‘ūn, married me to his niece, the daughter of his brother, ‘Uthmān ibn Maz‘ūn. Al-Mughīrah ibn Shu‘bah went to her mother and desired her on account of her wealth and proposed to her. The case was presented to the Prophet ﷺ. Qudāmah said, “Messenger of Allah, she is my niece and I am her father’s executor and I have not short-changed her. I gave her in marriage to one whose excellence and kinship I know.” The Messenger of Allah ﷺ said to him, “She is an orphan, and an orphan is more entitled to dispose of her own affair.” She was removed from me and al-Mughīrah ibn Shu‘bah married her.’ Ad-Dāraquṭnī said, ‘Muḥammad ibn Ishāq did not hear it from Nāfi‘, but heard it from ‘Umar ibn Ḥusayn from Nāfi‘.’

Ibn Abī Dhi‘b related from ‘Umar ibn Ḥusayn from Nāfi‘ from ‘Abdullāh ibn ‘Umar that he married the daughter of his maternal uncle, ‘Uthmān ibn Maz‘ūn, and her mother went to the Messenger of Allah ﷺ and said, ‘My daughter dislikes that,’ and the Messenger of Allah ﷻ commanded that she be separated from him. He said, ‘Do not give an orphan in marriage until you ask for her consent. If she is silent, that constitutes her permission.’ After ‘Abdullāh she was married to al-Mughīrah ibn Shu‘bah.

This refutes the position of Abū Ḥanīfah that a girl does not require a walī when she reaches adulthood, based on his position that a walī is not a precondition for a valid marriage. This was already discussed in al-Baqarah. There is no sense in their claim that this hadith is based on her not being an adult since he said, ‘with her permission’ without mentioning her being an orphan. Allah knows best.

‘Ā’ishah’s explanation of this the āyah provides understanding of what Mālik said about appropriate dowries and his referring to it when the dowry is disordered and cheating occurs regarding its amount. The appropriate dowry must be known for every group of people according to their circumstances. Mālik said, ‘People have marriage customs which they know and recognise,’ referring to dowries and equivalence.

Mālik was asked about a man who gave his wealthy daughter in marriage to a poor cousin of his despite her mother’s objection. He said, ‘I do not think that she has any say regarding that. She can argue about it until it is evident that that is the view that the father has taken and then the mother’s objection is ignored.’ It is permitted for a girl who is not an orphan to be married with the minimum dowry for a woman of her class because the āyah is about orphans. This leads us to understand that it is different for those who are not orphans.

When an orphan girl comes of age and her guardian is fair in respect of her dowry, he can marry her as was explained by ‘Ā’ishah. Abū Ḥanīfah, al-Awzā’ī, ath-Thawrī and Abū Thawr said that, and among the Tābi‘ūn, al-Ḥasan and Rabī‘a said it as did al-Layth. Zafar and ash-Shāfi‘ī said, ‘It is not permitted to marry her without the permission of the ruler or unless the marriage is authorised by another relative who is closer to her or has the same level of kinship. As for him being both the husband and the one who gives in marriage, that is not allowed. Evidence for this is found in the hadith of the Prophet ﷺ, “There is no marriage without a wālī and two just witnesses.” So there are necessarily a certain number of people: the one who marries, the one who gives in marriage and the witnesses. If someone combines two roles, then one of the number is lacking.’ A third view is that she entrusts her affair to a man to give her in marriage. This is related from al-Mughīrah ibn Shu‘bah. It is the position of Aḥmad, and Ibn al-Mundhir mentioned it.

‘Permissible women’ means those who are lawful for you, as al-Ḥasan, Ibn Jubayr and others said. It is sufficient in this respect to mention those whom one is permitted to marry because there are many categories of women who are forbidden. Ibn Abī Ishāq, al-Jahḍarī and Hamzah recited ‘tāba’ with imālaha. We find in the Qur’an of Ubayy ‘tība’ with yā. This is evidence of imālah.

Using the word ‘women’ indicates that it is adult women who are meant. The root of nisā’ is niswah and niswah has no singular. The noun for one woman is ‘imra’ah’. ‘Two, three or four’ is an appositive for mā. It is indefinite and undeclined and so it is an equivalent in description as Abū ‘Alī said. Aṭ-Ṭabarī said that they are definite like a noun because the alif-lām is added. It is in the position of ‘Umar in being definite. Al-Kūfī said that. Az-Zajjāj said that this is an error.

It is said that it is not inflected because it diverts from the expression. Uḥād diverts from wāḥid wāḥid, mathnā from ithnayn ithnayn, thulāth from thalāthah, thalātah, rubā’ from arba’ah arba’ah. There are two dialectical forms of each: fu’āl and maf’al. It is said: uḥād and mawḥad, thunā’ and mathnā, thulāth and mathlath, and rubā’ and marba’. That continues to ma’shar and ‘ushār. Abū Ishāq ath-Tha‘labī related a third dialectical possibility: uḥud, thunā, thuluth and rubā’, like ‘Umar and Zufar. That is how an-Nakha‘ī recites it in this āyah. Al-

Mahdawī related from an-Nakha‘ī and Ibn Waththāb ‘thulāth and rubā‘ without alif in rubā‘. It is shortened from rubā‘. [POEM] Ath-Tha‘labī said, ‘This form does not go beyond four except in a verse of al-Kumayt where he uses “ushār” for “ashrah.”’

Ibn ad-Dahhān said, ‘Some of them stop on what is heard, which is uḥād to rubā‘. The verse is not considered since it is aberrant. Abū ‘Amr ibn al-Ḥājib said, ‘It is said: uḥād and mawḥad, thunā‘ and mathnā, thulāth and mathlath, and rubā‘ and marba‘. Is it said going up to nine or not? There is disagreement about that, and the soundest view is that it is not confirmed.’ Al-Bukhārī has a text about that in the Ṣaḥīḥ.

That diverts from its meaning. It is not used in a place where the numbers are used unless it is diverted. You say, ‘Two and three came to me’ as ‘ithnān and thalāthah’ and it is not permitted to say, ‘mathnā and thulāth’ unless it is preceded by a plural. Where that happens it is used as a ḥāl as here in the āyah. It is an adjective. These numbers being used adjectivally is clear in His words in 35:1 which describe wings. It is in the indefinite. [POEM+BIT MORE ON THIS]

Know that this does not indicate that nine is permissible as is said by someone with little grasp of the Book and the Sunnah. He turns away from the position of the early members of this Community. If someone says that the ‘wāw’ is used to add the numbers up and supports that by saying that the Prophet ﷺ had nine wives and was married to all of them, this amounts to ignorance. The Rāfiḍites and some of the literalists take this position and make mathnā the same as ‘two’ (ithnayn) and do the same with thulāth and rubā‘. Some of the literalists have an even more repugnant position and say that it is permitted to have eighteen, taking the view that the form gives repetition and the wāw addition. So mathnā is two-two, and the same with the rest of the numbers. This is all ignorance of the language and the Sunnah and is contrary to the consensus of the community since it is not heard that any of the Companions or Ṭābi‘ūn married more than four.

It is transmitted by Mālik in the Muwattā' and by an-Nasā'ī and ad-Dāraqūṭnī that the Prophet ﷺ said to Ghaylān ibn Umayyah ath-Thaqafī, when he became Muslim and had eleven wives, 'Choose four of them and divorce the rest.' Abū Dāwud reported that al-Ḥārith ibn Qays said, 'I became Muslim and had eight wives. I mentioned that to the Prophet ﷺ and he said, "Choose four of them."' Muqātil said, 'Al-Ḥārith ibn Qays had eight free wives. When this āyah was revealed, the Messenger of Allah ﷺ commanded him to divorce four and keep four.' He is sometimes called Qays ibn al-Ḥārith, but what is correct is that he was al-Ḥārith ibn Qays al-Asadī as Abū Dāwud said. That is also how it is related by Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥasan in his as-Siyar al-Kabīr: it is Ḥārith ibn Qays. He is known by the fuqahā'. As for what the Prophet ﷺ was permitted in that regard, that was one of his special prerogatives and will be dealt with in Sūrat al-Aḥzāb.

We have already mentioned their statement that the wāw is combining and what was said about that. Allah Almighty addressed the Arabs with the most eloquent language. The Arabs would not abandon saying 'nine' for saying 'two and three and four.' So it is ugly for someone to say, 'Give him four, six, eight' rather than 'eighteen'. The wāw in this place is an appositive which means: 'marry three rather than two' and 'four rather than three'. That is why they are joined with wāw and not 'aw' (or). If He had said 'aw', it would be permitted for the one with two not to have three or the one with three not to have four.

As for their statement that mathnā demands ithnān, thulāth demands thalāthah and rabā' demands arba'ah, this is arbitrary and scholars of language do not agree with them. It is ignorance on their part. Others are also ignorant of the fact that mathnā demands two-two, thulāth three-three, and rubā' four-four. They do not know that ithnayn-ithmayn, thalāth-thalāth, and arba'ah-arba'ah is confined to numbers, and mathnā, thulāth and rubā‘ are different. For Arabs, the diverted numbers have a further meaning that is not in the root. That is because when one says, ‘The horses came mathnā’ by that you mean two by two, in other words that they came in pairs. Al-Jawharī said, ‘The same is true of all diverted numbers.’

Someone else said that if you describe people coming mathnā, thulāth or uhād or ‘ushār, it means they came to you, two by two, three by three, one by one or ten by ten. This meaning is not in the root because when you say that people came to me three (thalāthah) by three or ten (‘ashrah) by ten, you count the number of the people with your words, thalāthah and ‘ashrah. When you say rubā‘ and thunā‘, you do not count their number. You mean that they came to you four by four or two by two. The numbers, large or small, make no difference in this context. So their confining each form to less than what it demands is arbitrary.

Muslim scholars disagree about someone who marries a fifth wife when already married to four. Mālik and ash-Shāfi‘ī said that the ḥadd is inflicted on him if he did it knowingly. That is the position of Abū Thawr. Az-Zuhrī said that he is stoned if he did that knowingly, but if he was ignorant of the prohibition, he receives the lesser ḥadd, which is flogging. The woman receives her dowry and they are divorced and may not ever re-marry. One group said that there is no ḥadd punishment in respect of any of that. That is the view of An-Nu‘mān.

Ya‘qūb and Muḥammad said that there is a ḥadd for a forbidden woman, but no other marriage: that is like when someone marries a Magian, marries five women in one contract, contracts a mut‘ah (temporary marriage), marries without witnesses, or marries a slave-girl without the permission of her owner. Abū Thawr said, ‘When he knows that that it is not lawful, he receives the ḥadd punishment for any of those things, except for a marriage without witnesses [and marrying a Magian].’

A third view is that of an-Nakha‘ī who said that if someone marries a fifth woman deliberately before the end of the ‘iddah of one of his four wives, he is given a hundred lashes, but not exiled. These are the fatwas of our scholars about marrying a fifth wife according to what Ibn al-Mundhir mentioned. The same holds true for more than that.

Az-Zubayr ibn Bakkār related from Ibrāhīm al-Ḥizāmī that Muḥammad ibn Ma‘n al-Ghifārī said, ‘A woman came to ‘Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb and said, “Amīr al-Mu‘minīn, my husband fasts in the day and prays at night and I do not like to complain when he is obeying Allah.” He said to her, “Your husband is an excellent husband.” She kept repeating it and he gave the same reply. Ka‘b al-Asadī said to him, “Amīr al-Mu‘minīn, this woman is complaining about her husband’s distancing her from his bed.” ‘Umar said, “As you have understood her words, decide between them.” Ka‘b said, “Bring your husband.” He was brought and told that his wife had complained about him. He asked, “Is it about food or drink?” “No,” he said. The woman said:

“O Qāḍī who is wisely guided,
the mosque has diverted my friend from my bed.

His worship has made him ascetic regarding my bed.

Therefore, Ka‘b, make a decision and do not hesitate.

He does not sleep day or night,
so I do not praise him respecting women.”

Her husband said:

“I have been made ascetic in her bed and cavorting.

I am a man who has been distracted by what has been revealed in Sūrat an-Naḥl and the Seven Long Ones.

The Book of Allah contains that which alarms and causes fear.”

Ka‘b said:

“O man, she has a right which you owe her.

Her share is one fourth for the person who understands.

Give her that and abandon your defects.”

Then he said, “Allah Almighty has made two, three and four women lawful for you. So that would be three nights and days in which you can worship your Lord.” ‘Umar said, “By Allah, I do not know which of the things you did is more extraordinary! Is it your grasp of their situation or your ruling regarding them? Go – I have appointed you Qāḍī of Basra.””

Abū Hudbah Ibrāhīm ibn Hudbah related that Anas ibn Mālik said, ‘A woman went to the Prophet ﷺ to ask for help with her husband. She said, “I do not have what women normally have. My husband fasts constantly.” He said, “You have a day and he has a day. One day for worship and one day for the wife.”’

But if you are afraid of not treating them equally, then only one,

Aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk and others said that this refers to inclination, love, sexual intercourse, company and division between multiple wives. So more than one is forbidden if that will lead to loss of fairness in division and keeping company. That indicates the mandatory nature of good company, and Allah knows best.

It is recited as ‘wāḥidatun’ in the nominative which implies, ‘One is enough.’ It is also recited in the accusative which implies the verb: ‘marry one’.

or those you own as slaves.

This means slave-girls. It indicates that if a man fears that he will not be fair to one, then he should have slave-girls. This provides evidence that the right to sexual intercourse with the slave-girl is by virtue of ownership and is not part of marital division because the words of the āyah makes all ownership the same. That negates any right of a slave-girl to sexual intercourse or to a share in the division of time. Nonetheless, it is a duty for the owner to be a good owner and to be kind to slaves.

Allah ascribes ownership to the right hand (literally ‘what your right hands own’) for praise. The right hand is singled out for good qualities. Do you not see that it is the spending hand? It is as the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘until his left hand does not know what his right hand spends.’ It is the hand used for making contracts. The right hand receives the banners of glory as he says:

When a banner for glory is raised, the Arabs take it with the right hand.

That makes it more likely that you will not be unfair.

That is closer to not inclining away from the truth and being unfair, as Ibn ‘Abbās, Mujāhid and others said. The verb ‘āla is used of someone who is unfair and biased. They say that the arrow deviated (‘āla) from the target. Ibn ‘Umar said that it is used for being unfair in weight or measure. A poet said:

They said, ‘We have followed the Messenger of Allah.’”

Then they discard the Messenger’s words and are unfair (‘ālū) in the balance.

Abū Ṭālib said:

A true balance does not cheat a single grain.

It itself bears witness that it is not unfair (‘ā’il).

The verb can also mean ‘to become poor’ as Allah says, ‘If you fear impoverishment (‘aylah).’ (9:27) A poet says:

A poor man does not know when he will become wealthy and the wealthy does not know when he will become indigent (ya‘īlu).

The singular for indigent is ‘ā’il and the plural is ‘aylah. ‘aylah and ‘ālah mean poverty. The verb can also mean to impose a burden and to make something momentous.

Ash-Shāfi‘ī said that the āyah means: ‘it is more likely that you will not have a large number of dependants,’ which is another meaning of the verb, but ath-Tha‘labī says that no one else says this. The verb for that a‘āla (Form IV).

Ibn al-‘Arabī claims that there are only seven meanings for ‘āla and no more. It can mean: to incline towards, to increase, to be unjust, to become poor, to burden (as Ibn Darīd says), to undertake the burden of dependants, as the Prophet ﷺ says, ‘begin with dependants’, and to overpower, as one says, “‘āla ṣabrihī”, ‘his patience was overcome’. One uses the verb a‘āla to describe a man with many dependants. Using ‘āla to describe having many dependants is not sound.

As for the statement of ath-Tha‘labī that no one else says that, ad-Dāraquṭnī reported it in his Sunan from Zayd ibn Aslam. It is the position of Jābir ibn Zayd. These are two imams from among the Muslim scholars and imams who preceded ash-Shāfi‘ī. As for what Ibn al-‘Arabī mentioned about their number and lack of soundness, that itself is not sound. We mentioned that a matter can be ‘momentous’ (‘āla), and al-Jawharī related that. Al-Harawī said in Gharīb: ‘Abū Bakr said, ‘It is said that a man acts unjustly in the land.’ Al-Aḥmar said that the verb can mean that something renders a person powerless. Al-Kisā‘ī, Abū ‘Umar ad-Dūrī and Ibn al-A‘rābī mentioned the meaning of having numerous dependants. Abu-l-Ḥasan ‘Alī ibn Ḥamzah al-Kisā‘ī said that the Arabs used ‘āla and a‘lā for having numerous dependants. Abū Ḥātim said, ‘Ash-Shāfi‘ī had greater knowledge of the Arabic language than us. Perhaps it is a dialect.’ Ath-Tha‘labī the commentator related that his teacher Abu-l-Qāsim ibn Ḥabīb said, ‘I asked Abū ‘Umar ad-Dūrī about this. He is an unimpeachable master of language. He said that it is a dialect of Ḥimyar and quoted a verse for evidence.’ [POEM] Abū ‘Amr ibn al-‘Alā’ said, ‘There are so many prominent Arabs that I fear to take ungrammatical Arabic.’ Ṭalḥab ibn Muṣarrif recited ‘allā ta‘lū’ which is the evidence of ash-Shāfi‘ī.

Ibn ‘Aṭīyyah said, ‘Az-Zajjāj and others rejected the interpretation that ‘āla is from ‘iyāl since Allah Almighty allowed many concubines and that entails many dependants. So how can it be closer to not having many dependants?’ This objection is not valid because concubines are part of property which can be disposed of by selling. Those dependants (‘iyāl) which diminish are free women with obligatory rights. Ibn al-A‘rābī related that the Arabs use the verb ‘āla of a man with many dependants.

This āyah is connected to someone who permits a slave to marry four wives since Allah did not specify in the āyah whether the stipulation applies to slaves or just free men. This is the position of Dāwud and aṭ-Ṭabarī, and it is known from Mālik, and his final position is what is in the Muwattā’. It is also related from Ibn al-Qāsim and Ashhab. Ibn al-Mawwāz mentioned that Ibn Wahb reported that Mālik said that a slave may only marry two wives, and that is position of al-Layth.

Abū ‘Umar said, ‘Ash-Shāfi‘ī, Abū Ḥanīfah and their people, ath-Thawrī and al-Layth ibn Sa’d said that a slave may not marry more than two wives. Aḥmad and Ishāq said that. It is related that ‘Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb, ‘Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib and ‘Abd ar-Raḥmān ibn ‘Awf said that a slave may not marry more than two. I do not know of anyone among the Companions who disagreed with that. It is the position of ash-Sha‘bī, ‘Aṭā’, Ibn Sīrīn, al-Ḥakam, Ibrāhīm and Ḥammād.’ The argument for this position is a sound analogy with divorce and ḥadd punishment. All say that his ḥadd is half that of a free man, his divorce is twice, his ilā’ is two months and the like of similar rulings. Therefore it is not unlikely for there to be a reduction in respect of marrying four wives. Allah knows best.

4 Give women their dowries as an outright gift. But if they are happy to give you some of it, consume it with pleasure and goodwill.

Give women their dowries as an outright gift.

Ṣaduqāt (dowries) is the plural of ṣaduqah. Al-Akhfash said, ‘The Banū Tamīm say “ṣudqah” and “ṣudqāt”. The dāl can have a fathah or a sukūn.’ Al-Māzinī said that it is called ṣidāq, not ṣadāq. Ya‘qūb and Aḥmad ibn Yaḥyā said that an-Naḥḥās said that it is ṣadāq.

Husbands are addressed in this āyah, according to Qatādah, Ibn Zayd and Ibn Jurayj. Allah commanded them to give their dowries as gifts to their spouses. It is said that it is addressed to guardians, according to Abū Ṣāliḥ. The guardian would take the woman’s dowry and not give her any of it. They were forbidden to do that and commanded to hand it over to them. We find in the transmission of al-Kalbī: ‘In the Jāhiliyyah, when a guardian gave a woman in marriage and she was with him in the same clan, he would not give her any of her dowry. If she was outside it, he would take her on a camel to her husband and not give her anything except that camel and so this āyah was revealed: “Give women their dowries as an outright gift.”’ Al-Mu‘tamir ibn Sulaymān reported that his father said, ‘A Ḥaḍramawī claimed that what was meant by the āyah was those who practised the shighār marriage (exchanging women without dowries) and they were commanded to give them dowries. The first view is the more likely. The pronouns are the same and refer to husbands. They are those who are meant in these āyahs. It is mandatory for the pronouns to be in harmony.

This āyah indicates that a dowry is mandatory for a woman, and it is agreed upon and there is no disagreement except for what is related from one of the people of knowledge among the people of Iraq, that when a master marries his slave to his slave-girl, then there is no dowry obliged. This is not right because this āyah is not restricted in its command here and elsewhere (4:25). Scholars agree that there is no maximum to the dowry and disagree about its minimum, as will be dealt with later. (4:20)

Most recite ‘ṣaduqātihinna’. Qatādah recited ‘ṣudqātihinna’ and an-Nakha‘ī and Ibn Waththāb recited ‘ṣuduqatahunna’.

‘An outright gift’ is nihlah or nūhlah. They are two dialectical forms. Its root means a gift. Ṣadāq is a gift from Allah to the woman and it is said that nihlah is given willingly with no dispute on the part of the husband. Qatādah said that ‘nihlah’ means ‘mandatory’. Ibn Jurayj and Ibn Zayd said, ‘a specified obligation’. Abū ‘Ubayd said that it must be known and specified. Az-Zajjāj said, ‘a religious obligation’. Nihlah also means a religion. You say, ‘This is his religion (nihlah).’ This is good inasmuch as it is addressed to the guardians who used to take it in the Jāhiliyyah so that a woman said about her husband:

He does not take the gift from his daughters.

She meant that he did not do what others did. Allah wrested it from them and commanded that it be given to women.

‘Nihlah’ is in the accusative as a ḥāl modifying an implied verb. It implies: ‘Give them a gift.’ It is said that it is in the accusative for explanation, and it is said that it is a verbal noun in the position of a ḥāl.

But if they are happy to give you some of it,

This is addressed to husbands. The fact that it is general is evidence that it is permitted for a woman, virgin or non-virgin, to give her dowry to her husband, and that is the position of the majority of the fuqaha. Mālik forbids a gift from a virgin to her husband and assigns that to the guardian even though she is the owner.

Al-Farrā’ claimed that it is addressed to the guardians because they would take the dowry and not give the woman any of it. They are not permitted to do that unless the woman is happy about it. The first position is sounder because the guardians were not mentioned.

The pronoun ‘it’ refers to the dowry. That is what ‘Ikrimah and others said. The reason that the āyah was revealed was that it was mentioned that some people avoided taking any of what they had given their wives. Then this was revealed.

Scholars agree that when a woman who has charge of herself gives her dowry to husband, that is carried out and she cannot take it back – except for Shurayh who thinks she can. He used this āyah as evidence and said that if she asks for it back, then she is not happy about it. Ibn ‘Arabī says that this is baseless because she was happy when it happened and it is like consuming something. Once it is consumed, it is gone. ‘Make use of’ is literally ‘eat’, but does not mean actual ‘eating’, but alludes to making something lawful. This is clear.

If a woman stipulates as a condition in the marriage contract that her husband may not marry another wife and for that provision she reduces some of her dowry, and then he does marry another wife, according to Ibn al-Qāsim she has nothing because it was an unacceptable condition, as occurred when the owners of Barīrah stipulated that they would have her walā’ if ‘Ā’ishah bought and freed her. The Prophet ﷺ validated the contract but not the condition. Here the reduction of the dowry is sound but not it being connected to not marrying another wife. Ibn ‘Abd al-Ḥakam said if the proper dowry for a woman of her class, or more than that, remains, then she does not demand anything from him. If she reduces something of her proper dowry and he marries another wife, then she can demand the full dowry of a woman of her class from him because he agreed to the stipulation and took recompense for it. Therefore, it is mandatory for it to be taken from him and he must fulfill it since the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘Believers abide by their conditions.’

This āyah is evidence that emancipation is not considered to be a dowry because it is not wealth since the wife cannot give it nor the husband consume it. This is the position of Mālik, Abū Ḥanīfah, Zafar, ash-Shaybānī and ash-Shāfi‘ī. Aḥmad ibn Ḥanbal, Ishaq and Ya‘qub say that it can be a dowry, based on the hadith related by the imams about Ṣafīyyah when the Prophet ﷺ freed her and made her being freed her dowry. It is related from Anas that he did that. He is also the one who relates the hadith about Ṣafīyyah. The first group say that there is no argument in the hadith about Ṣafīyyah because the Prophet ﷺ had the prerogative to marry without a dowry. He wanted to marry Zaynab and she was unlawful to Zayd. He married her without a walī or a dowry. Therefore, this is not evidence. Allah knows best.

It is said that the word 'naḥsan' is in the accusative for clarification. Sībawayh and the Kufans do not permit putting something that is in the accusative for clarification first. Al-Māzinī and Abu-l-'Abbās al-Mubarrad permit that when the regent is a verb. [POEM] An example of this in the Revelation is the phrase: 'with downcast eyes, emerging' (54:7). The people of Sībawayh said that 'naḥsan' is in the accusative by an implied verb. It implies: 'I mean personally.' It is not in the accusative for distinction. If that is the case, there is no argument regarding it. [POEM] All agree that it is not permitted to put that which is distinguishing first when the regent is not inflected.

What is meant by the verb 'kulū' here is not literally 'eating', but permission for whatever manner it is consumed. That is what is meant by His words in the following āyah: 'People who consume the property or orphans wrongfully' (4:10). What is meant is not actually eating, although eating is the most complete form of enjoyment of wealth which can be designated by the word 'eating'. It is similar to Allah's words: 'When you are called to the prayer on the Day of Jumu'ah, hasten to the remembrance of Allah and abandon trade.' (62:9) It is not just trade that is being indicated here; what is meant is anything that distracts one from remembering Allah, such as marriage and other things. Trade is mentioned because it is the principal thing that distracts one from remembering Allah in this context.

The words 'pleasure and goodwill' are in the accusative as an adverbial ḥāl describing ‘it’. It is said that it describes something elided, such as a pleasant consumption with goodwill. Hana’a, yahna’u is used for food and drink delighting a person. Something agreeable is described as hanī’. Han’ua is used for being wholesome. The verbal noun is han’ or hin’. All that is consumed without difficulty or toil is with pleasure (hanī’). Hanī’ is an active participle from hanu’a like zarīf from zarf. The verb is hani’a, yahna’u with the noun hani’. One says of food being enjoyed and digested, ‘hana’a and mara’a’. If hana’a is not mentioned but amwā’a is, then it means ‘digested’. Abu-l-‘Abbās said that Ibn al-A‘rābī had the verb with a middle kasrah, but it is uncommon. It is said that hanī’ means with no sin and marī’ means with no illness. Kuthayyir said:

May you enjoy it (hanī’an marī’an) without an illness mixed in, for a might which does not make our honour fair game.

A man visited ‘Alqamah while he was eating something which his wife had given him from her dowry. He said to him, ‘Eat from that which is pleasure and good will.’

It is said that hanī’ means that which good and allowed and which does not disturb anything and marī’ is that which has a praised outcome and will not injure or harm. It is also said: ‘they do not fear any demand for it in this world or come-back in the Next World.’ This is indicated by what Ibn ‘Abbās reported that the Prophet ﷺ said about this: ‘It is when she gives her husband a gift voluntarily without compulsion. It does not imply any power over you and Allah will not take you to task for it in the Next World.’ It is related that ‘Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib said, ‘When one of you has an illness, he should ask his wife for a dirham of her dowry and buy honey with it and drink it with rainwater and by that Allah will join for him what is pleasure and goodwill with blessed water.’ Allah knows best.

وَلَا تُؤْتُوا السُّفَهَاءَ أَمْوَالَكُمُ الَّتِي جَعَلَ اللَّهُ لَكُمْ قِيَمًا وَارزُقُوهُمْ

5 Do not hand over to the incompetent any property of theirs for which Allah has made you responsible, but provide for them and clothe them out of it, and speak to them correctly and courteously.

Do not hand over to the incompetent any property of theirs

When Allah commanded that orphans be given their property, and dowries be given to wives, He made it clear that it is not permitted to give minors or the incompetent their property. The āyah indicates affirmation of the need to have an executor, guardian, and custodian for orphans.

The people of knowledge agree that it is permitted to give the role of guardianship to a free, trustworthy, upright Muslim. They disagree about free women, but most say that it is permitted. Aḥmad deduces evidence in the fact that ‘Umar made Ḥafṣah an executrix. It is related that ‘Aṭā’ ibn Abī Rabāḥ said about a man who made his wife his executrix, ‘A woman may not be an executrix. If someone does that, the duty is transferred to a man of her people.’

They also disagree about slaves having the right of guardianship. Ash-Shāfi‘ī, Abū Thawr, Muḥammad and Ya‘qūb forbade it, and Mālīk, al-Awzā‘ī and Ibn ‘Abd al-Ḥakam allowed it. It is the position of an-Nakha‘ī who made his slave an executor. This was already adequately discussed in al-Baqarah.

The linguistic meaning of ‘incompetent’ was mentioned in al-Baqarah. Scholars disagree about who the incompetent are. Sālīm al-Afṭas reported from Sa‘īd ibn Jubayr that they are orphans who are not given their property. An-Naḥḥās said that this is the best of what has been said about this āyah. Ismā‘īl ibn Abī Khālīd related that Abū Mālīk said that they are young children who are not given their wealth lest they waste it and remain penniless. Sufyān related from Ḥumayd al-A‘raj that Mujāhid said that they are women. An-Naḥḥās and others said that this is not sound, even linguistically, as the word sufahā’ is used and the Arabs use safā’ih or safihāt for women. It is said: ‘Do not give your wealth in a qirāḍ or to an agent who is not good in commerce.’ It is related that ‘Umar said, ‘Whoever does not understand should not trade in our market.’ This is based on Allah’s words: ‘Do not hand over to the incompetent any property of theirs.’ This means those who are ignorant of rulings, and it is said that means the unbelievers, which is why scholars dislike Muslims entrusting a dhimmī with buying and selling or giving him a qirāḍ investment.

Abū Mūsā al-Ash‘arī said, ‘The incompetent are those who must be declared legally incompetent.’ This is general. Ibn Khuwayzimandād said, ‘As for debarring the incompetent from competence, there are different cases. Some are debarred because of youth, some due to lack of good sense owing to insanity or something else, and some because of poor management of property. As for someone who is unconscious, Mālik recommended that he not be declared incompetent because that quickly departs.’

Legal incompetence is sometimes for the sake of a person himself and sometimes for the rights of others. We have mentioned those under debarment for their own sake. Those debarred for the sake of others are slaves, those in debt, those who are ill, in respect of two-thirds of their property, bankrupts, wives in respect of their husbands’ entitlements, and a virgin in respect of herself. As for children and the insane, there is no disagreement about their limitation. As for an adult, in their case it is because they do not manage their property well and are not safe from ruining their property and so they resemble a child. There is a disagreement about this that will be dealt with. There is no difference between someone destroying his property through acts of disobedience, pious deeds or permitted ones. Our people disagree if they consume their property through pious deeds. Some debar them and some do not. There is no disagreement about slaves.

What a debtor has is taken from him and given to his creditors by the consensus of the Companions. ‘Umar did that to Usayfi‘ of Juhaynah and Mālik mentioned it in the Muwattā’.

As long as a virgin is secluded she is limited in her ability to transact because she is not considered good at overseeing her affairs until she marries, mixes with people and goes out, so that she is able to discern what is harmful from what is beneficial. As for someone ignorant of legal rulings, even he is not restricted with regard to making his property grow or lack of management, he is not given his property because of his ignorance of what constitutes valid and invalid sales and what is lawful and unlawful. In the case of a woman with a husband, the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘A wife is only permitted to dispose of a third of her property.’

In the case of someone who is ignorant of legal rulings, even if he is competent with regard to growing his wealth and managing it, property is not given to him since he is ignorant of what is sound and unsound in transactions or what is unlawful and lawful. The same applies to a dhimmi both on account of his ignorance of correct sales and because it is feared that he will engage in usury, and Allah knows best.

Scholars disagree about the reason for the ascription of property to ‘you’ when it actually belongs to the incompetent. [The Arabic is literally ‘your property’.] It is said that it is ascribed to them because it is in their possession and they oversee it and so the ascription is expanded, as when Allah says: ‘greet one another’ (24:61) [The Arabic is literally ‘yourselves’] and: ‘kill yourselves’ (2:54).

It is said that it is ascribed to them because it is the same sort of property as theirs. Property is shared between creatures and moves from one hand to another and from one owner to another, meaning that it is theirs when they need it, like your property which guards your honour, protects you and exalts your worth and by which you support yourselves.

A second position is articulated by Abū Mūsā al-Ash‘arī, Ibn ‘Abbās, al-Ḥasan and Qatādah. It is that what is meant by the property of those addressed is actual. Ibn ‘Abbās said, ‘Do not give the property on which your livelihood depends to your wife and child and thus remain poor, waiting for them and what they have. You should be the one who spends on them.’ According to this, the ‘incompetent’ are women and young children. This is transmitted along with the position of Mujāhid and Abū Mālīk about the incompetent.

The āyah indicates that it is permitted to limit the competence of the incompetent by the command of Allah to do that here. Allah also says: ‘If the person incurring the debt is incompetent or weak.’ (2:282) So guardianship is confirmed for the incompetent as it is for the weak. Weakness refers to children and lack of competence to adults. That is because ‘incompetent’ is a word entailing blame, and there is no blame for what someone has not earned. The pen does not record against someone who is not an adult, so they have no blame. Al-Khaṭṭābī said that.

Scholars disagree about the actions of the incompetent when they are considered to be legally incompetent. Mālīk and all his people except for Ibn al-Qāsim say that the dealings and commands of the incompetent are permitted until the ruler stops them. That is the position of ash-Shāfi‘ī and Abū Yūsuf. Ibn al-Qāsim said that their dealings are not permitted, even if the ruler does not stop them. Asbagh says that if someone’s incompetence is clear, his dealings are rejected, but if it is not evident, then his dealings are not rejected until the ruler bars him. Saḥnūn uses as evidence Mālīk words, ‘If the dealings of the incompetent had been rejected before they were deemed incompetent, there would be no need for the ruler to do that to anyone.’

There is disagreement about limiting the competence of an adult. Mālīk and the majority of fuqahā’ say that it may be done but Abū Ḥanīfah said that a sane adult cannot be declared legally incompetent unless he ruins his property. If that is the case, he is not given his property until he is twenty-five. When he is twenty-five, it is given to him in any case, whether he spoils it or not because it was kept from him for twelve years. Then he could have had a child six months later and become a father and a grandfather. He said, ‘I am embarrassed to debar someone who might be a grandfather.’ It is said that he said about the period of debarring property, that it is when it reaches the point of being spoiled, in which case it can be forbidden to hand over property out of caution.

All of this is weak both in terms of reason and tradition. Ad-Dāraquṭnī related from Muḥammad ibn Aḥmad ibn al-Ḥasan aṣ-Ṣawwāf from Ḥāmid ibn Shu‘ayb from Shurayḥ ibn Yūnus from Ya‘qūb ibn Ibrāhīm, who is Qāḍī Abū Yūsuf, from Hishām ibn ‘Urwah from his father that ‘Abdullāh ibn Ja‘far went to az-Zubayr and said, ‘I have purchased such-and-such goods. ‘Alī wants to go to the Amīr al-Mu‘minīn to ask him to debar me with respect to it!’ Az-Zubayr said, ‘I am your partner in the transaction.’ ‘Alī went to ‘Uthmān and said, ‘Ibn Ja‘far purchased such-and-such goods. Debar him with respect to them.’ Az-Zubayr said, ‘I am his partner in the transaction.’ ‘Uthmān said, ‘How can I debar a man in a sale when az-Zubayr is his partner in it?’ Ya‘qūb said, ‘I adopt debarring and think it is correct. I invalidate the sale and purchase of someone debarred. I allow what he bought or sold before he was debarred.’ Ya‘qūb ibn Ibrāhīm said, ‘Abū Ḥanīfah does not debar or adopt limitation.’ The statement of ‘Uthmān, ‘How can I debar a man’, is evidence that it is permitted to debar an adult. ‘Abdullāh ibn Ja‘far was born in Abyssinia and was the first child born in Islam. He came to the Prophet ﷺ with his father in the year of Khaybar and listened to him and memorised from him. Khaybar was in 5 AH. This refutes the view of Abū Ḥanīfah. His argument will be dealt with, Allah willing.

for which Allah has made you responsible,

This means your livelihood and good state of your dīn. There are three dialectical forms of ‘which’: allatī, allatī (with kasrah) and allat (with sukūn). There are also three dialectical forms of the dual: allatāna, allatā (with the nūn elided), and allatānni. The plural will be dealt with in its place in this sūrah, Allah willing.

‘Qiyām’ and ‘qiwām’ both mean to attend to the best interests of someone. It is said that qiyām is attending to the family and qiwām is attending to the house. He is he one who puts it right. It is qiwām, the wāw has replaced the yā. The people of Madīnah read it as ‘qiyam’ without alif. Al-Kisā’ī and al-Farrā’ said that ‘qiyam’ and ‘qiwām’ both mean ‘qiyām’. They believe that it is in the accusative through being a verbal noun. It means: ‘Do not hand over to the incompetent their property which you put in order and are responsible for putting in order.’ Al-Akhfash says that it means to manage their affairs, believing that it is plural. The Basrans say that qiyam is a plural of qīmah, like dīmah and diyam, meaning that Allah has acquainted you with the value of things.’ Abū ‘Alī said that this view is wrong and said that it is a verbal noun like qiyām and qiwām. Its root is qiwam, but it is irregular in becoming a yā’ as we see in jīyād as the plural of jawād, and the like. Qiwam, qiwām and qiyām mean being in firm is rectifying the state of something and being constant in that.

Al-Ḥasan and an-Nakha’ī recited ‘allatī’ as the plural of ‘allatī’. The common reading is ‘allatī’. Al-Farrā’ said that in Arabic one usually uses allawātī for women and allatī for property as well as other things than property. An-Naḥḥās mentioned it.

but provide for them and clothe them out of it.

This means: ‘Appoint for them out of it or allot them out of it.’ This is about those that a man is obliged to support and clothe: his wife or young children. It is evidence that it is mandatory for a father to maintain his child and a husband to maintain his wife. Al-Bukhārī reports from Abū Hurayrah that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘The best sadaqah is that given by the wealthy. The upper hand is better than the lower hand. Begin with your immediate dependents. A woman says, "Either feed me or divorce me." A slave says, "Feed me and employ me." A child says, "Feed me. Who will you leave me to?" They said, 'Abū Hurayrah, did you hear this from the Messenger of Allah ﷺ?' 'No,' he said, 'this is from the bag of Abū Hurayrah!' Al-Muhallab said, 'Maintenance of one's wife and children is mandatory by consensus. This hadith is evidence for that.'

Ibn al-Mundhir said that there is disagreement about the age at which the maintenance of children ends when they have no money or work. One group say that a father should support male children until they reach puberty and girls until they marry and the marriage has been consummated. If a daughter is divorced after consummation or she is widowed, the father does not have to support her. If she is divorced before consummation, he must continue to support her.

Maintenance of grandchildren is not obligatory. This is the position of Mālik. One group say that a grandfather should maintain his grandchildren until puberty or menstruation and then does not have to maintain them after that unless they are chronically ill, and that male and female are the same in that respect if they have no property. That also applies to great grandchildren and so on, if they do not have a father who is able to provide for them. This is the position of ash-Shāfi'ī.

One group oblige maintenance for all children, including adult men and women, when they do not have adequate maintenance. This is based on the literal meaning of the words of the Prophet ﷺ to Hind: 'Take what is sufficient for you and your children in a reasonable manner.' We also find a hadith reported by Abū Hurayrah in which a child says, 'Feed me. Who will you leave me to?' It indicates that anyone who has no ability or profession may say that. However, someone who has reached puberty should not say that because they can work for themselves and earn, as indicated by the words of the Almighty: 'until they reach a marriageable age' (4:6), and He set the age of marriage as a limit for that.

The words, 'A woman says, "Either feed me or divorce me"' refute those who say that there is no divorce on account of poverty and that the woman should be patient. Maintenance is a husband's responsibility by the ruling of a judge. This is the position of 'Aṭā' and az-Zuhrī. The Kufans believe that, holding to the words of the Almighty: 'If someone is in difficult circumstances, there should be a deferral until things are easier.' (2:280) They said, 'Therefore it is obliged for her to wait until her husband is wealthier.' Allah says: 'Marry off those among you who are unmarried.' (24:22) They said, 'Here the Almighty recommends marrying off the poor, and so poverty cannot be considered a reason for divorce, since it does not forbid marriage.' They have no proof in this āyah as will be explained in the proper place. The hadith is the text for the dispute.

It is said that this is addressed to the guardians of orphans, authorising them to spend some of their wealth which is under their supervision as we already mentioned concerning the ascription of wealth. A guardian spends on the orphan according to his wealth and circumstances. If he is young and has much wealth, he procures a wet-nurse and carers for him and spends generously on him. If he is old, he allots him fine clothes, delicious food and servants. If he is less well off than that, he spends accordingly. If he has still less than that, he must provide basic food and clothing according to need. If orphans are poor without any wealth, then the ruler must support them from the Treasury. If the ruler does not do it, then the Muslims must do it based on whoever is closer to the orphan concerned. His mother is closest to him and she must nurse him and support him. Neither she nor anyone else can demand to be paid back for that. This was already mentioned in al-Baqarah (2:233).

speak to them correctly and courteously.

This means with gentle words and promises of care. There is disagreement about ma'rūf. It is said that it means to pray for them, using such words as: 'May Allah bless you and protect you,' or saying, 'I will look after you,' and similar things. It is said that it means to promise them good, telling them, 'When you are mature, we will give you your property' or a parent telling his child, 'My wealth will go to you and you, Allah willing, will own it when you are mature and know how to deal with it.'

6 Keep a close check on orphans until they reach a marriageable age, then if you perceive that they have sound judgment hand over their property to them. Do not consume it extravagantly and precipitately before they come of age. Those who are wealthy should abstain from it altogether. Those who are poor should use it sensibly and correctly. When you hand over their property to them ensure that there are witnesses on their behalf. Allah suffices as a Reckoner.

Keep a close check on orphans until they reach a marriageable age,

This means to test and ascertain their state. This is addressed to everyone in explaining how to give them their property. It is said that it was revealed about Thābit ibn Rifā'ah and his uncle. Rifā'ah died leaving a child who was a minor. His uncle Thābit went to the Prophet ﷺ and said, 'My nephew is an orphan in my care. What is lawful for me of his property and when should I hand it over to him?' So Allah revealed this āyah.

Scholars disagree about the meaning of ‘keeping a close check’. It is said that a guardian should assess the character of the orphan in his care and listen to his desires, thereby obtaining knowledge of his excellence and of his ability or inability to deal with his his property in his own best interests. If he is good in this respect, scholars and others say that there is no harm in giving him some of his money which he can dispose of. If it grows and he attends to it well, he passes the test and then the guardian must hand over all of his property to him. If he is a poor manager, then the guardian should keep hold of his property. No one says that if the child is tested and found to have good judgment, guardianship is automatically removed and his guardian must give him his money and allow him to deal with it since the Almighty says: ‘until they reach a marriageable age.’

A group of fuqahā’ say that the child must either be a boy or girl. If it is a boy, he is tested by being allowed to spend on the household for a month, or is given a small amount to deal with to see if he can manage it well. Nonetheless, he is overseen while doing that to ensure he does not misspend it. If he does misspend it, his guardian is not liable. When the guardian sees that he is able to act correctly, he should hand over his property to him in the presence of witnesses. If it is a girl, her guardian should give her what would normally be given to the lady of the house to manage, for instance, the spinning process and oversee the spinners in terms of buying and paying for cotton and completing the spinning process in full. If he sees that she has sound judgment, he should give her her property. Otherwise orphans should remain in care until their good judgment is ascertained. Al-Ḥasan, Mujāhid and others said that they should be tested in respect of their minds, their dīn and their ability to make their property grow.

The term ‘marriageable age’ means puberty since Allah says: ‘Once your children have reached puberty.’ (24:59) It means the age of puberty and marriage. There are five signs of puberty. Three are common to men and women and two apply to women alone, namely, menstruation and pregnancy. Scholars do not disagree that menstruation or pregnancy indicates puberty and then the obligations and rulings dependent on that are obliged for her. They disagree about the other three. As for growth of hair and age, al-Awzā'ī, ash-Shāfi'ī and Ibn Ḥanbal say that for a boy it is the age is fifteen if he has not had a wet dream. That is the position of Ibn Wahb, Asbagh, 'Abd al-Malik ibn Mājishūn, 'Umar ibn 'Abd al-'Azīz and a group of the people of Maḍīnah. Ibn al-'Arabī also preferred that. The ḥudūd and obligations are obliged in their view on someone of this age. Aṣḥab ibn al-Faraj says, 'What we say is that the age at which the ḥudūd and obligations of the dīn are imposed is fifteen. I prefer that and recommended it because it is the age at which one can participate in jihād.' His evidence is the account of Ibn 'Umar when he presented himself for the Battle of the Ditch. He was fifteen and was allowed to participate but he had not been allowed to participate at Uḥud when he was fourteen. Muslim transmitted it.

Abū 'Umar ibn 'Abd al-Barr said, 'This is when the date of someone's birth is known. If his time of birth and age is unknown, or he denies it, then one acts according to what Nāfi' related from Aslam from 'Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb. He wrote to his generals: "Only impose the jizyah on those who have started to shave." 'Uthmān said about a boy who had stolen: 'See if his pubic hair has begun to grow. If it has, then cut off his hand.' Aṭīyah al-Qurazī said, 'The Messenger of Allah ﷺ dealt with the Banū Qurayzah and, going by the judgment of Sa'd ibn Mu'ādh, killed all of them who had pubic hair and excused those whose pubic hair had not yet begun to grow. I was one of those in that category and he left me.'

Mālik, Abū Ḥanīfah and others said that there is no judgment against anyone who has not had a wet dream until they reach the age at which someone must have reached puberty. That is considered to be seventeen. Then the ḥadd punishment is imposed on them. Mālik once said that it is when the voice breaks and the nose is fully formed. In another variant from Abū Ḥanīfah, the age is nineteen, and that is what is best known. He said about a girl that she reaches puberty at seventeen, but there is some debate about this. Al-Lu'lu'ī said that the age is eighteen. Dāwud said that he does not reach the age of puberty if he does not have a wet dream, even if he is forty.

As for the growth of pubic hair, some say that that indicates puberty. That is related from Ibn al-Qāsim and Sālim. Mālik said that once and it is one of the positions of ash-Shāfi'ī. Aḥmad, Iṣḥāq and Abū Thawr also said that. It is said that it denotes puberty and it was a judgment used in regard to the unbelievers: those with pubic hair were killed and those without made captives. Ash-Shāfi'ī said this in another position which is based on the hadith of 'Aṭiyyah al-Quraẓī. A little fluff is not considered sufficient, proper hair growth is needed. Ibn al-Qāsim said, 'I heard Mālik say, "What is acted on with us is based on the hadith of 'Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb, who said: 'If the razor has been passed over him, I will impose the ḥadd punishment on him.'"' Asbagh said, 'Ibn al-Qāsim said to me, "I prefer that the ḥadd punishment should only be carried out on someone when there is both hair growth and puberty.'" Abū Ḥanīfah said that the growth of hair is means nothing and is not a sign of puberty nor proof of it.

Az-Zuhri and 'Aṭā' said that no ḥadd punishment can be imposed on anyone who has not reached puberty, and that is the position of ash-Shāfi'ī. Mālik inclined to that view once and it is held by some of his followers. Its literal meaning implies not paying attention to hair growth or age. Ibn al-'Arabī said, 'If the hadith of Ibn 'Umar is not a proof of age, then every age they mention is a false claim. The age at which the Messenger of Allah ﷺ allowed him to go is more appropriate than the age that he considered insufficient and for which there is no evidence in the Sharī‘ah. Similarly the Messenger of Allah ﷺ considered hair growth in respect of the Banū Qurayzah. Who will excuse someone for abandoning two matters which the Messenger of Allah ﷺ took into consideration and consider what the Messenger of Allah ﷺ did not consider and Allah did not appoint in the Sharī‘ah.’

Ibn al-‘Arabi says this in the context of this ayah, but the reverse in Sūrat al-Anfāl since he does not base himself on the hadith of Ibn ‘Umar, but interprets it as our scholars do. What differentiates between those who are able to fight and receive a share and those who cannot and do not receive a share is the age of fifteen. Those younger are dependents. That is what ‘Umar ibn ‘Abd al-‘Azīz understood from the hadith. Allah knows best.

then if you perceive that they have sound judgment hand over their property to them

Ānasa means to see, perceive and know. It is also used in 28:29 with that meaning. Az-Zuhrī said, ‘The Arabs say, ‘Go and look (asta’nis) if you see anyone.’ [POEM] One says ānastu, aḥsastu and wajadtu mean the same. The root is to perceive.

Most recite ‘rushd’ (sound judgment) while as-Sulamī, ‘Īsā, ath-Thaqafi and Ibn Mas‘ūd recited ‘rashad’. They are two dialectical possibilities. Scholars disagree about the interpretation of ‘rushd’. Al-Ḥasan, Qatādah and others said that it refers to soundness in both mind and dīn. Ibn ‘Abbās, as-Suddī, and ath-Thawrī said that it is about soundness of mind and preservation of property. Sa‘īd ibn Jubayr and ash-Sha‘bī said, ‘It is when a man trims his beard and shows his good sense. One does not give an orphan his property, even if he is an old man, until one discerns his good sense.’ That is like what aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk said: ‘An orphan is not given his property, even if he is a hundred years old, until it is known that he can deal properly with it.’ Mujāhid said that rushd only applies to soundness of mind.

Most scholars believe that rushd only exists after puberty and if an orphan still shows no sound judgment after puberty, even if they are old, the status of legal incompetence is not removed from them. That is the position of Mālik and others. Abū Ḥanīfah says that an adult free man cannot be declared legally incompetent after reaching puberty, even if he is the most impious and spendthrift of people, as long as he is sane. Zufar ibn al-Hudhayl also said that, and it is the position of an-Nakhā'ī. Their evidence for that is what Qatādah related from Anas about Ḥabbān ibn Munqidh. He used to sell and he was unguarded in his contracts: It was asked, 'Messenger of Allah, should he be debarred? There is weakness in his contracts.' The Prophet ﷺ summoned him and said, 'Do not sell.' He said, 'I cannot bear not to.' He told him, 'Then when you sell, say, "No cheating," and you have an option to retract for three days.' They said that because people asked for him to be declared legally incompetent due to the way he was being cheated in transactions and the Prophet ﷺ did not do that, that it confirms that making adult people legally incompetent is not permitted. There is no proof in that because it was a special case as we explained in al-Baqarah. Other people are not subject to it.

Ash-Shāfi'ī says that if someone ruins his property and his dīn, or his property but not his dīn, he should be declared legally incompetent. If he ruins his dīn and puts his property in order, there are two possibilities. One is that he is declared legally incompetent, which is what is preferred by al-'Abbās ibn Shurayḥ. The other is that he is not, and that is preferred by Iṣḥāq al-Marwazī, and it is the most apparent position of the school of ash-Shāfi'ī. Ath-Tha'labī said, 'What we mentioned about making a simpleton legally incompetent was the position of 'Uthmān, 'Alī, az-Zubayr, 'Ā'ishah, Ibn 'Abbās, and 'Abdullāh ibn Ja'far among the Companions, and Shurayḥ among the Tābi'ūn. Among the fuqahā', it is the position of Mālik and the people of Madīnah, al-Awzā'ī and the people of Syria, Abū Yūsuf, Muḥammad, Aḥmad, Ishāq and Abū Thawr. Ath-Tha‘labī said, ‘Our fellows claim that there is consensus in respect of it.’

The upshot of all this is that you should know that there are two preconditions for handing over property: ascertainment of good judgment and puberty. If there is one but not the other, it is not permitted to hand property over. That is the testing ordered by the āyah. It is transmitted by Ibn al-Qāsim, Ashhab, and Ibn Wahb from Mālik. It is the position of the fuqahā’ with the exception of Abū Ḥanīfah, Zafar and an-Nakha‘ī, who remove this stipulation when the person concerned reaches the age of twenty-five. Abū Ḥanīfah said that that is because he might be a grandfather. This indicates the weakness of his position, and the argument of Abū Bakr ar-Rāzī in Aḥkām al-Qur’ān, which makes use of it, is weak regarding the two āyahs, as was already mentioned. It comes under the principle of the unrestricted (mutlaq) and restricted (muqayyad), and the people of uṣūl agree that the unrestricted returns to what is restricted. What is the point of saying he might be a grandfather when he is not one? However, in the case of a girl, our scholars stipulate consummation of marriage as well as puberty.

Then there is the test of good judgment. Abū Ḥanīfah and ash-Shāfi‘ī thought that both male and female should be tested, whereas our scholars differentiate between them and say that girls differ from boys since they are confined and not concerned with business and do not go out because they are unmarried. That is why one waits for a girl to be married and so all the goals are focused in that. A male is different in that he deals with matters and meets with people from the beginning of his development until he reaches puberty and so he has experience and his mind is completely formed at puberty. Therefore, the goal is achieved in his respect. What ash-Shāfi‘ī said is more correct. Sexual intercourse with actual penetration cannot be said to increase her good judgment when she is already aware of all her affairs and goals and does not squander her money.

Then our scholars continue and add, 'Her marriage with her husband must be consummated and followed by a lapse of time in which in which she gains practical experience.' Ibn al-'Arabī said, 'Our scholars have many positions about how long that should be. Some say five, six or seven years for a woman with a father. They set one year after consummation for an orphan girl without a father or guardian and make it perpetual for one with a guardian until her good judgment is confirmed. There is no evidence for any of this. The stipulation of years in respect of a woman with a father is harsh and, even harsher than it, is a year for an orphan. And as for the continuation of denial of legal competence for a woman with a guardian until her good judgment is clear, the guardian brings her out of it or a judge does so. So it goes by the literal text of the Qur'an. It is all subject to this āyah.' 'Good judgment' is considered, but ascertainment of it varies according to different circumstances of the one ascertaining it. He recognises it and avoids being arbitrary when there is no evidence for it.

They disagree about the actions of a woman with a father during that period. It is said that what she does can be revoked as long as she is considered legally incompetent but that what she does after that is allowed. Some say that what she does in that period is subject to being revoked unless it is clear that it is correct, and what she does after that is assumed to be carried out unless it is clearly a matter of incompetence.

They disagree about giving property to a person who is legally incompetent and whether that requires the permission of the ruler. One group say that the case must be presented to the ruler and the person's good judgment confirmed with him, and then they may be given their property. Another group say that the matter is left to the discretion of the guardian without having to be taken before the ruler. Ibn 'Aṭīyah said that the correct position is that the guardians of our time must present the case to the ruler and confirm the person's good judgment in his presence. That is because guardians may contrive to have a child deemed to be competent when someone who is incompetent would not be responsible for his dealings because of his incompetence and lack of good judgment at that time.

When property is handed over on the basis of a person having good judgment and then they revert to incompetence by displaying extravagance and lack of management, we think that they are again deemed to be legally incompetent. That is one of two positions of ash-Shāfi'ī. Abū Ḥanīfah disagrees on the basis that the person concerned is an adult, and his responsibility in cases of retaliation and hudūd is accepted. Our evidence is the words in the āyah: 'Do not hand over to the incompetent any property of theirs for which Allah has made you responsible' (4:5) and 'If the person incurring the debt is incompetent or weak or unable to dictate, then his guardian should dictate to him justly.' (2:282) Allah did not make a distinction between the person who is legally incompetent being incompetent or having that happen to him in general.

It is permitted for guardians to deal with an orphan's property as a father would – with respect to trade and buying and selling. He must pay the zakāt due on their property, be it on money, crops, livestock or fiṭrah, and any fines for damages, maintenance of parents and all statutory rights. They are permitted to arrange a marriage for them, pay the dowry for them, buy them a slavegirl and attend to what is generally considered their best interests. If they settle some of their debts and leave others, that is permitted. If the remainder of their property is used up, the remaining creditors can do nothing against the guardian or those whose debts have been settled. If the creditors take all of an orphan's property and then other creditors come and he knew about that debt, or the deceased had acknowledged the debt, then the guardian is liable and he can go back to the first creditors to demand a redistribution. If he did not know about that, and the deceased had not acknowledged it, then the guardian owes nothing. If he pays a creditor without witnesses, he is liable. If there were witnesses and a long time has passed and the witnesses have died, he owes nothing. This was already discussed in al-Baqarah (2:220) in the rulings concerning the executor with respect to spending and other things.

Do not consume it extravagantly and precipitately before they come of age.

This does not mean that consuming it without extravagance is permitted. What is meant is: ‘Do not consume it. That is extravagance.’ Allah forbade guardians to consume orphans’ property other than what is permissible and necessary as will be explained. Isrāf is extravagance and excessiveness. It was already mentioned in Āl ‘Imrān. Saraf is error in spending as the poet said:

They gave a hundred camels, eight men driving them.

Their gift contained no favour requiring recompense nor error in the gift.

It means that they did not miss the proper amount for the gift. Another said:

Their speaker spoke when the horses trampled them,
‘You overdid it.’ We answered, ‘We are extravagant.’

An-Naḍr ibn Shumayl said that saraf is squandering and negligence. Isrāf will be further explained in al-An‘ām, Allah willing.

‘Precipitately’ means before they grow up and become adult. It means to rush to something. It means: ‘Do not avail yourself of the property of the one who is legally incompetent and in your care and consume it, saying, “I will take it before he is an adult so that he will not have sound judgment and take it.”’ Ibn ‘Abbās and others said that.

Those who are wealthy should abstain from it altogether.

Allah makes it clear what is lawful for them of this property and commanded that someone who is wealthy should refrain from it while He permits a poor guardian to consume from the property of the charge in a correct manner. Iffah (the root of ista'ffā) means to abstain from what is not lawful or proper. To abstain from something is to abandon doing it. Allah says: 'Those who cannot find the means to marry should be abstinent (la-yasta'fiy).' (24:33) Iffah is to refrain from everything that is not lawful and which one should not do. Abū Dāwud related from Ḥusayn al-Mu'allim from 'Amr ibn Shu'ayb from his father from his grandfather that a man went to the Prophet ﷺ and said, 'I am poor and have nothing and I am also the guardian of an orphan.' He said, 'Use your orphan's property but not extravagantly or precipitately or in an attempt to enrich yourself.'

Those who are poor should use it sensibly and correctly.

Scholars disagree about who is addressed by this āyah. We find in Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim that 'Ā'ishah said about the phrase 'Those who are poor should use it sensibly and correctly': 'It was revealed about an orphan's guardian who maintains him and attends him. When he is in need, he can use some of it.' One variant has, 'Correctly according to the amount of his property.'

Some say that what is meant is the orphan himself – when he is wealthy, he is generous to his guardian and refrains from his property. If he is poor, he spends on him accordingly. That was stated by Rabī'ah and Yaḥyā ibn Sa'īd. The first is the sound position of the majority because the orphan is not instructed to spend because he is a child and legally incompetent. Allah knows best.

Most disagree about what consuming correctly is. Some say that it is borrowing when in need and settling the debt when wealthy. That was stated by 'Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb, Ibn 'Abbās, 'Abīdah, Ibn Jubayr, Ash-Sha'bī, Mujāhid and Abu-l-'Āliyah. It is the position of al-Awzā'ī. A guardian should not borrow more than he needs. 'Umar said, 'In relation to the property of Allah I put myself in the position of a guardian in relation to an orphan's property. If I am wealthy, I abstain. If I am in need, I consume correctly. Then when I am wealthy again, I repay it.' 'Abdullāh ibn al-Mubārak related from Abu-l-'Āliyah that the words 'those who are poor should use it sensibly and correctly' refer to taking a loan. Then he recited the rest of the āyah.

A second position related by Ibrāhīm, 'Aṭā', al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī, an-Nakha'ī, and Qatādah is that a poor guardian does not have to pay back what he uses when it is consumed correctly because that is the right of supervision. The fuqahā' take that position. Al-Ḥasan said, 'It is food from Allah for him.' That consists of consuming what will satisfy his hunger and wearing what will clothe his nakedness. He may not wear fine cotton or robes. The proof of the soundness of this position is the consensus of the Community that a ruler who oversees the Muslims is not indebted for what he consumes correctly because Allah Almighty has allotted him his share in the property of Allah. They have no argument in the words of 'Umar, 'When I am wealthy, I repay it,' even if it is sound.

It is related from Ibn 'Abbās, Abu-l-'Āliyah, and ash-Sha'bī that consuming correctly refers to things like using milk from herds, employing slaves and riding animals when the capital is not harmed, applying tar to mangy animals, looking for lost animals, plastering water-basins and harvesting dates. As for the sources of wealth and capital, a guardian may not take that. This is all transmitted with the position of the fuqahā' that a guardian may take a wage for his work. A group said that and that that is what is correct and he does not have to pay it back. Taking more than that is forbidden.

Al-Ḥasan ibn Ṣāliḥ ibn Ḥayy made a distinction between a guardian appointed by the father and a guardian appointed by a judge. A guardian appointed by the father can consume correctly while one appointed by a judge is not permitted to touch the property in any way. This is a third position.

There is a fourth position related from Mujāhid who said that a guardian may not take a loan or anything else and he believes that the āyah is abrogated by the words of Allah: ‘O you who believe, do not consume one another’s property by false means, but only by means of mutually agreed trade.’ (4:29) This is not commerce. Zayd ibn Aslam said that the āyah is abrogated by Allah’s words: ‘People who consume the property of orphans wrongfully’ (4:10). Bishr ibn al-Walīd reported that Abū Yūsuf said, ‘I do not know. Perhaps this āyah was abrogated by: “O you who believe, do not consume one another’s property by false means, but only by means of mutually agreed trade.” (4:29)’

A fifth position distinguishes between being at home and being on a journey. On this understanding a guardian is barred from using an orphan’s property when he is resident within in a city, but when he needs to travel for the orphan’s sake, he can take what he needs but should not trade. Abū Ḥanīfah and his people said that.

A sixth position espoused by Abū Qilābah is that he may consume in a correct manner from any income. As for the capital, he may not take any of it, as a loan or otherwise.

A seventh position, related by ‘Ikrimah from Ibn ‘Abbās, is that he may use the property when he is compelled by dire need. Ash-Sha‘bī said, ‘Then it is like blood and pork which someone in dire need may consume.’ An-Naḥḥās said that this makes no sense because in extreme need the same ruling applies to all property, not just the orphan’s.

Ibn ‘Abbās and an-Nakha‘ī also said that what is meant is the guardian consuming correctly from his own property so that he has no need of the orphan’s property. Someone wealthy refrains because of his wealth and someone poor stints himself so that he has no need of the orphan’s property. This is the best of what is related about the commentary on the āyah because other people’s property is sacrosanct. None of it is open to use unless there is an absolute pressing need.

At-Ṭabarī preferred this position in Ahkām al-Qurʿān. He said, ‘Some of the early people imagined that the ruling of this āyah is that a guardian has general permission to consume the property of a child to an extent which does not reach extravagance. That is contrary to what Allah Almighty commands when He says: “Do not consume one another’s property by false means, but only by means of mutually agreed trade.” This is not possible in respect of an orphan’s property. Allah’s words: “Those who are wealthy should abstain from it altogether,” refer to consuming his own property rather than that of the orphan. It means: “Do not consume orphans’ property together with your own property,” in other words confine yourself to using your own property. This is indicated by the words of Allah: “Do not assimilate their property into your own. Doing that is a serious crime.” (4:2) And it is made clear by His words: “Those who are wealthy should abstain from it altogether. Those who are poor should use it sensibly and correctly.” It is confined to sufficiency so that he does not need to consume the orphan’s property. This is the full meaning of the āyah.’

We found that āyahs of judgment forbid the consumption of another person’s property without their consent, especially that of an orphan. We found that this āyah is susceptible to various interpretations. It can make specific what is obliged by the āyahs of judgment. Those who support the position of the early people say that qādīs take a wage because of their work for the Muslims. Is not a guardian in the same position when he works for an orphan? So why would he not take a wage for the work he does? They should be told that they must know that none of the early people permitted a guardian to take any of a child’s property when the guardian is wealthy. This is not the case with a qādī. That is the difference between the two cases. Furthermore, the position taken by the fuqahāʾ, qādīs and caliphs was that attending to the affairs of Islam does not entitle them to your property. Allah assigned unclaimed lost property to various categories, one of which are qāḍīs. A guardian would be taking for his work some of the property of a particular person without their consent. His work is unknown and his wage unknown. That is far from constituting entitlement.

Our Shaykh, Imām Abu-l-‘Abbās said, ‘If the estate of the orphan is very large and requires a lot of attention on the part of the guardian, which distracts him from his needs and concerns, then a wage for his work is allotted to him. If it is insignificant and does not distract him from his needs and concerns, he should not consume any of it, although it is recommended for him to have a small drink of milk and eat a little food and ghee, without causing harm or taking a lot of it. That is according to custom.’ Our Shaykh said, ‘The mention of a wage and taking a small amount of dates and milk is confined to an appropriate amount. That is a correct application of the āyah.’ Allah knows best. It is better, however, to be cautious.

As for what a qāḍī takes for dividing inheritance and is called a fee, I do not know of any justification for it and it is not lawful. That falls under the generality of Allah’s words: ‘People who consume the property of orphans wrongfully consume nothing in their bellies except fire.’ (4:10)

When you hand over their property to them ensure that there are witnesses on their behalf.

Allah commands the presence of witnesses to ensure the preservation of the property and remove any suspicion. A group of scholars say that this testimony is recommended and that the statement of a guardian is accepted because he is a trustee. Another group say that it is obligatory, which conforms with the literal meaning of the āyah, and that the guardian is not a trustee, making his statement accepted on that basis. He is in the position of an agent (wakīl) when he claims that he has returned what he was given or entrusted with and he is a trustee of the father: his statement is not accepted against another’s. Do you not see that if an agent claims that he gave Zayd what he was commanded to, based on his integrity, his statement requires confirmatory evidence? The same applies to guardians.

‘Umar ibn al-Khattāb and Ibn Jubayr said that there should be witnesses to an affluent guardian repaying what he borrowed of an orphan’s property in a state of need. ‘Abīdah said, ‘The āyah is evidence that it is obligatory for a guardian to repay what he consumes. It means: when you borrow or consume, call witnesses to confirm your debt.’

The sound position is that the expression is general and includes this and other things. What is meant is having witnesses to anything you spend so that if there is a dispute, there can then be clear evidence. Any property which is taken on trust with witnesses is only discharged when there are witnesses to its return, based on the words of Allah. When it was given without witnesses, then there is no need for witnesses as to its return. Allah knows best.

As a guardian must preserve an orphan’s property and make it productive, so he must also care for the child physically. Property is preserved by keeping safe and the body is cared for by teaching. This was discussed in al-Baqarah. It is related that a man asked the Prophet ﷺ, ‘I have an orphan in my care. Can I consume some of his property?’ He answered, ‘Yes, but not in order to enrich yourself or to protect your property with his.’ He said, ‘Messenger of Allah, can I beat him?’ He answered, ‘Only as you would your own child.’ Ibn al-‘Arabī said, ‘It has no confirmed isnād, but there is no one who inclines away from it.’

Allah suffices as a Reckoner.

Allah is a sufficient reckoner of our actions and repays us for them. This is a threat to anyone who refuses to discharge a right. The bā’ is redundant and is in the position of the nominative.

لِّلرِّجَالِ نَصِيبٌ مِّمَّا تَرَكَ الْوَالِدَانِ وَالْأَقْرَبُونَ وَلِلنِّسَاءِ نَصِيبٌ مِّمَّا تَرَكَ
 الْوَالِدَانِ وَالْأَقْرَبُونَ مِمَّا قَلَّ مِنْهُ أَوْ كَثُرَ نَصِيبًا مَّفْرُوضًا ﴿٥﴾

7 Men receive a share of what their parents and relatives leave and women receive a share of what their parents and relatives leave, a fixed share, no matter whether it is a little or a lot.

After mentioning orphans, Allah then deals with inheritance. The āyah was revealed about Aws ibn Thābit al-Anṣārī. He died and left a wife called Umm Kuḥḥah and three daughters by her. Two men, Suwayd and ‘Arfajah, who were the sons of the uncle of the deceased and his executors, came and took his property without giving his wife and daughters anything. In the Jāhiliyyah women and children, even boys, did not inherit. They said, ‘It is only given when someone can fight on horseback, use a spear or a sword and get booty.’ Umm Kuḥḥah mentioned that to the Messenger of Allah ﷺ and he summoned them. They said, ‘Messenger of Allah, her children do not ride a horse, carry a sword nor wound the enemy.’ He said, ‘Leave me until I see what Allah tells me about them.’ Then this was revealed to refute them, invalidate their statement and remove their ignorance. Young heirs are more entitled to the property than adults since they are unable to transact and attend to their own affairs and so the ruling was reversed and the assumptions of the two men refuted. They erred in their ideas and conduct.

Our scholars say that there are three benefits in this āyah. One is clarification of the cause of inheritance, which is kinship. The second is the general nature of kinship, close and distant. The third is the general statement about the obligatory shares, which is further clarified in the Āyat of Inheritance. This āyah prepares the way for the ruling and nullifies the false view.

It is confirmed that when Abū Talḥah gave his property at Bayruḥā’ as ṣadaqah and mentioned that to the Prophet ﷺ, he told him, ‘Give it to your poor relatives,’ and he gave it to Ḥassān and Ubayy. Anas said, ‘They were closer to him than me.’ Abū Dāwud said that he heard Muḥammad ibn ‘Abdullāh al-Anṣārī say, ‘Abū Talḥah al-Anṣārī was Zayd ibn Sahl ibn al-Aswad ibn Ḥarām ibn ‘Amr ibn Zayd Manāh ibn ‘Amr ibn Mālīk ibn an-Najjār. He and Ḥassān ibn Thābit ibn al-Mundhir ibn Ḥarām shared a common great-grandfather: Ḥarām. Ubayy was Ubayy ibn Ka‘b ibn Ways ibn ‘Ubayd ibn Zayd ibn Mu‘āwiyah ibn ‘Amr ibn Mālīk ibn an-Najjār.’ Al-Anṣārī said, ‘There were six ancestors between Abū Talḥah and Ubayy.’ He said that ‘Amr ibn Mālīk was a common ancestor of Ḥassān, Ubayy ibn Ka‘b and Abū Talḥah. Abū ‘Umar said, ‘This demands that kinship goes as far as this level. What is closer than that is even more properly referred to as kinship.

a fixed share, no matter whether it is a little or a lot.

Allah affirmed that daughters have a share in inheritance but did not specify how much. So the Prophet ﷺ sent word to Suwayd and ‘Arfajah not to divide up the property of Aws. Allah had allotted Aws’s daughters a share but had not revealed the amount. So they were to wait until Allah revealed that. When āyahs 11-13 were revealed, he told them, ‘Give Umm Kuḥḥah an eighth of what Aws left and give his daughters two-thirds and you have the rest.’

Our scholars use this as evidence for including in the division things which would be altered by the shares such as bath-houses, threshing floors and houses, whose benefits would be nullified if the shares in them were confirmed. Mālīk said, ‘They are divided, even if none of them has a useful share since Allah says: “a fixed share, no matter whether it is a little or a lot.”’ That is the position of Ibn Kinānah, and ash-Shāfi‘ī states that and it is similar to the position of Abu Ḥanīfah. Abu Ḥanīfah said about a small house shared between two people, when one of them asks for the division and his fellow inheritor refuses, that it is divided.’

Ibn Abī Laylā said, ‘If there are those whose share is not useful, there is no division.’ Any division which causes harm to one person rather than another is not executed. That is the position of Abū Thawr. Ibn al-Mundhir said that is the sounder of the two views. Ibn al-‘Arabī mentioned this as being related by Ibn al-Qāsim from Mālik. Ibn al-Qāsim said, ‘I think that houses, dwellings and bath-houses that cannot be divided up, and other things whose division would cause harm and are not used when divided, should be sold and there is no pre-emption in it since the Prophet ﷺ said, “There is pre-emption in all undemarcated property. When there are clear boundaries, there is no pre-emption.”’ This is the evidence provided by the hadith.

Part of the argument for this position is what ad-Dāraquṭnī reports from Ibn Jurayj from Siddīq ibn Mūsā from Muḥammad ibn Abī Bakr from his father, Abū Bakr, that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘There is no division for the people of inheritance except in respect of things that will support division.’ Abū ‘Ubayd said, ‘This is when a man dies and leaves something which, if divided among his heirs, will entail harm to all or some.’ He said that such things are not divided. Examples might be a gem, a bath-house, a shawl and similar things. Allah says: ‘...making sure that no one’s rights are prejudiced.’ (4:12) So He rejects causing harm. Similarly the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘There is no harm nor repayment of harm.’

While the āyah does not specify division, it does insist on the obligation of the share and portion to both adult and child, whether it is a little or a lot, to refute the practice of the Jāhiliyyah. Allah says: ‘Men have a portion’ and ‘women have a portion’ (4:32), and this is very clear. Extracting the portion is based on another argument, and that is that the heir says, ‘I am entitled to a share by the words of Allah, so give it to me.’ His co-inheritor says, ‘As for it belonging only to you, that is not possible because that would lead to harm to both you and me by destroying the property, changing its condition and lowering its value.’ So something else is preferred [in this instance]. What is most apparent is that the [physical division to obtain the] share is cancelled when doing so would invalidate benefit and depreciate the value of property. Allah is the One Who grants success.

‘A fixed share’ is similar to the words, ‘a mandatory portion’ and ‘necessary right’. It is a noun with the meaning of a verbal noun which is why it is in the accusative. Az-Zajjāj said that it is in the accusative for the ḥāl and means: ‘Those have shares in the obligatory dividing up.’ Al-Akhfash said, ‘Allah appoints that as a share for them.’ Mafrūd is decreed and mandatory.

وَإِذَا حَضَرَ الْقِسْمَةَ أُولُو الْقُرْبَىٰ وَالْيَتَامَىٰ وَالْمَسْكِينُ فَأَرْزُقُوهُمْ
مِنْهُ وَقُولُوا لَهُمْ قَوْلًا مَعْرُوفًا ﴿٥﴾

8 If other relatives or orphans or poor people attend the sharing-out, provide for them out of it and speak to them correctly and courteously.

Allah makes it clear here that if someone not entitled to any inheritance attends the division, and is a relative, orphan, or poor person who does not inherit, they should be honoured and not deprived if there is a lot of wealth, and given an apology if it is land or only a little which does not allow for gifts. There is, however, a great reward for a gift from a little, one dirham takes precedence over 100,000.

The āyah, according to this position, is one of judgment. Ibn ‘Abbās said that, and a group of the Tābi‘ūn followed his opinion: ‘Urwah ibn az-Zubayr and others. Abū Mūsā al-Ash‘arī commanded it. It is related from Ibn ‘Abbās that it is abrogated by the words of Allah: ‘Allah instructs you regarding your children: A male receives the same as the share of two females.’ (4:11) Sa‘īd ibn al-Musayyab said that it was abrogated by the Āyat of Inheritance and bequest. Among those who said that it was abrogated were Abū Mālīk, ‘Ikrimah and aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk.

The first is sounder. It explains the entitlement of heirs to their shares and recommends sharing with those who are present who have no share. Ibn Jubayr said, ‘People waste this āyah.’ Al-Ḥasan said, ‘Rather people are avaricious.’ In al-Bukhārī Ibn ‘Abbās says about this āyah: ‘It is one of judgment and not abrogated.’ One variant has: ‘Some people claim that this āyah is abrogated. No, by Allah, its not abrogated! But it is one of the things that are made light of.’

There are two categories of guardians (walī): those who inherit, and those are the ones who give, and those who do not, and this is the one who speaks correctly and says, ‘I do not have anything to give you.’

Ibn ‘Abbās said, ‘During the division to heirs, the believers are commanded to give to relatives, orphans and poor from the bequest. If there is no bequest, they are given to from the inheritance.’ An-Naḥḥās said, ‘This is the best of what is said about the āyah: that it is recommendation and encouragement to do good and to thank Allah.’

One group said, ‘This giving is mandatory as an obligation. The heirs should give to these categories what they are happy to give, such as tools, used garments and small things.’ Ibn ‘Aṭīyyah and al-Qushayrī related this position. The sound position is, however, that it is recommended because, if it had been an obligation, it would be an entitlement to what is left and the sharing out of the legacy would be by one aspect that is known and another that is unknown, and that is contrary to wisdom and would cause division and dissension.

One party believes that those addressed by the āyah are those who divide their property in a will, not the heirs. That is related from Ibn ‘Abbās, Sa‘īd ibn al-Musayyab and Ibn Zayd. If a sick person wants to divide his property by a will, and there are those present who do not inherit, he should not deprive them. This, and Allah knows best, was revealed when a will was obligatory and the āyah of inheritance had not yet been revealed. The sound view is the first one. It is relied on.

When the heir is a child who is not able to dispose of his property, one group say that the guardian of the child should give some of the property as is fitting. It is said that he should not give but should say to those who are present, ‘I cannot do anything with this property. It belongs to an orphan. When he comes of age, inform him of your right.’ This is the commonly accepted position, and this is also when the testator does not make any bequest to him. If he does make a bequest, then he is given what he left him.

‘Abīdah and Muhammad ibn Sirin thought that the providing referred to in this āyah means to prepare food for them to eat, and they did that by slaughtering a sheep from the estate. ‘Abīdah said, ‘If it had not been for this āyah, I would have done this from my own property.’ Qatādah reported that Yaḥyā ibn Ya‘mar said, ‘Three verses of judgment have been abandoned by people. This āyah, the āyah of asking permission before entering: “O you who believe! Those you own as slaves should ask your permission...” (24:58), and the instruction in: “O mankind! We created you from a male and female...”(49:13)’

The pronoun in ‘out of it (minhu)’ refers to the division (qismah) since it has the meaning of property and inheritance. We also see it in the phrase ‘produced it (hā) from his brother’s bag’ (12:76), in reference to ṣuwā‘ (goblet) which is masculine. Another example of that usage is seen in the words of the Prophet ﷺ, ‘Fear the supplication (da‘wah) of the wronged. There is no veil between it (baynahu) and Allah.’ So it is in the masculine with the meaning of ‘du‘ā’. That is also like his words ﷺ to Suwayd ibn Ṭāriq al-Ju‘fī when he asked him about wine, ‘It is not a remedy, but rather an illness,’ and he repeated the pronoun meaning an alcoholic drink. There are many examples of this.

The verb for ‘share out’ is qāsama, taqāsama and iqtasama. The noun is qismah which is feminine, and qasm is the verbal noun. ‘I divided (qasamtū) and the thing was divided (inqasama). The place is maqsim, like majlis. Time divided them (taqassama) and so they were divided (taqassamū). Taqṣīm is separation. Allah knows best.

Speak to them correctly and courteously.

Saʿīd ibn Jubayr said that what should be said is, ‘Take, may you be blessed in it.’ It is said to be that a person says when they give, ‘I wish it could be more.’ It is said that there is no need for an excuse when giving, but if the distributor does not give anything to them, he should speak courteously and offer some excuse.

وَلْيَخْشَ الَّذِينَ لَوْ تَرَكَوْا مِنْ خَلْفِهِمْ ذُرِّيَّةً ضِعْفًا خَافُوا عَلَيْهِمْ فَلْيَتَّقُوا
اللَّهَ وَلْيَقُولُوا قَوْلًا سَدِيدًا ۝

9 People should show concern in the same way that they would fear for small children if they were to die leaving them behind. They should have taqwā of Allah and say words that are appropriate.

People should show concern in the same way that they would fear for small children if they were to die leaving them behind.

The alif is omitted from ‘show concern’ (wa-l-yakhsha) to indicate the imperative. Sibawayh said that it is not permitted to imply the imperative lām, based on analogy with the genitive particles except for the demands of poetry. The Kufans permit it. [POEM] The object of yakhsha is elided since the words indicate it. ‘Fear’ is the apodosis of ‘law’ and implies: ‘If they would leave them behind, they would fear.’ It is permitted to elide the lām in the apodosis of ‘law’.

Scholars disagree about the interpretation of this āyah. One group say that this is admonition to guardians, meaning ‘Behave towards orphans as you would want your children to be treated after your death.’ Ibn ‘Abbās said that. This is why Allah says: ‘People who consume the property of orphans wrongfully...’ (4:10)

Another group say that what is meant is all people. They are commanded to fear Allah in dealing with orphans and other people’s children, even if they are not in their care. This instruction is reinforced by calling their attention to the way each of them would want his child to be treated after his death. Related to this is what ash-Shaybānī said: ‘We were at Constantinople with the army of Maslamah ibn ‘Abd al-Malik, and one day we sat in a group of the people of knowledge, including Ibn ad-Daylamī. We discussed the terrors at the end of time and I said to him, “Abū Bishr! I do not want to have a child.” He said to me, “It is not up to you. There is no soul which Allah has decreed will emerge from a man but that it will emerge, whether he wants that or not. But if you want to be reassured about them, fear Allah in the way you treat others.”’ Then he recited the āyah. One variant has: ‘Shall I direct you to something by doing which Allah will deliver you from it, and if you leave a child or children, Allah will preserve them for you?’ ‘Yes, indeed!’ was the reply, and he recited this āyah.

This understanding is related by Muḥammad ibn Ka‘b al-Quraḏī from Abū Hurayrah who said that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘Whoever gives good ṣadaqah will cross the Sirāt. If anyone looks after the needs of a widow, Allah will replace him in those he leaves behind.’

A third position is taken by a group of commentators. This is when those present with a man who is dying at the time he is making his will say, ‘Allah will provide for your child. Look to yourself. Bequeath your property in the Way of Allah. Give ṣadaqah and set slaves free,’ until he has given the bulk of his property away, and that harms his heirs. People were forbidden to do that. So it is as if the āyah was saying to them, ‘As you would fear for your heirs and descendants after you, so fear for the heirs of others and do not impel someone to squander his property.’ Ibn ‘Abbās, Qatādah, as-Suddī, Ibn Jubayr, aḏ-Ḍaḥḥak and Jubayr said this. Sa‘īd ibn Jubayr related that Ibn ‘Abbās said, ‘When a man attends the making of a will, he should not say, “Will away your property. Allah will provide for your child.” Rather he should say, “Advance for yourself and leave something for your child.” That is the import of Allah’s words: “They should have taqwā of Allah.”’

Miqsam and Ḥaḍramī said, ‘It was revealed about the opposite of this. It is that those present tell the dying person, “Keep it for your heirs and leave it to your children. There is no one more entitled to your property than your children.” They prevent him from making bequests, and that harms relatives and those entitled to a bequest. They are told, “As you fear for your descendants and want people to be good to them, so speak correctly to the poor and orphans and fear Allah in respect of harming them.”’

Both these last two views are based on the time when making a will was obligatory before the Āyat of Inheritance was revealed, as Sa‘īd ibn Jubayr and Ibn al-Musayyab said. Ibn ‘Aṭīyyah said, ‘These two views are not mutually exclusive. Rather people fall into two categories. One view is proper for one of them and the other view for the second category. That is that if a man is leaving his heirs independently wealthy, then it is good to recommend him to make bequests and it is possible for him to send ahead [as sadaqa] something for himself. But if he is leaving weak, neglected, poor heirs, then it is good to recommend that he leave what he has to them and be cautious. His reward in doing that is like his reward in respect of giving to the poor. What one takes account of is weakness and one must make it one’s guiding principle.’

This distinction is sound since the Prophet ﷺ said to Sa‘d, ‘It is better for you to leave your heirs wealthy than to leave them poor and dependent on people.’ If someone has no children, or he is independently wealthy, inheriting his wealth from his father, then he is its trustee. In such a case, when a person has old wealth in his possession such that he will not spend it on those after him in a proper manner, then it is a burden for him.

and say words that are appropriate.

‘Appropriate’ (sadīd) means ‘just and correct words.’ This means: ‘Direct the ill person to pay the obligatory dues from his property and then to will to his relatives an amount which will not harm his young heirs.’ It is said that it means: Speak fair words to the dying, which entails instructing them to say, ‘There is no god but Allah.’ You do not command him to say that, but say it yourself in such a way that the person can hear it. The Prophet ﷺ said, ‘Encourage your dying to say: “There is no god but Allah.”’ He did not say, ‘Command them’ because such a command might anger the person, making him refuse. It is said that what is meant is the orphan: ‘Do not chide him or make light of him.’

إِنَّ الَّذِينَ يَأْكُلُونَ أَمْوَالَ الْيَتَامَىٰ ظُلْمًا إِنَّمَا يَأْكُلُونَ فِي بُطُونِهِمْ

10 People who consume the property of orphans wrongfully consume nothing in their bellies except fire.

They will roast in a Searing Blaze.

People who consume the property of orphans wrongfully

It is related that this was revealed about a man of Ghaṭafān called Mirthad ibn Zayd. He was in charge of the property of his nephew, who was an orphan, and consumed it. Then Allah revealed this about him. Muqāṭal ibn Ḥayyān said that. That is why a group said that what is meant here are trustees who consume what they are not permitted to consume of the property of orphans in their care. Ibn Zayd said, ‘It was revealed about the unbelievers who did not allow women or children to inherit.’

Consuming in all its aspects is called ‘eating’ because it uses property up, and ‘bellies’ are mentioned to make their wrongdoing clear and show the ugliness of doing this which is contrary to noble character. What is consumed is called fire because that is what it leads to. That usage is the same as that found in Allah’s words: ‘I dreamt that I was pressing wine’ (12:36) which means, in this context, grapes. It is said that ‘fire’ means ‘the unlawful’ here because the unlawful makes the Fire mandatory. That is why Allah called it this.

Abū Sa‘īd al-Khudrī said, ‘The Prophet ﷺ related about his Night

Journey, “I saw some people with lips like those of camels. Someone would take hold of their lips and put a rock of fire in their mouths which then emerged from their rear. I asked, ‘Jibrīl, who are they?’ He replied, ‘They are those who wrongfully consumed the property of orphans.’”

The Book and Sunnah indicate that consuming the property of orphans is one of the major wrong actions. The Prophet ﷺ said, ‘Avoid the seven deadly ones,’ and he mentioned consuming orphans’ property among them.

They will roast in a Searing Blaze.

Ibn ‘Āmir and ‘Āṣim in the transmission of Ibn ‘Abbās recited ‘sa-yuṣṣlana’ in the passive instead of ‘sa-yaṣṣlana’ from the verb aṣṣlā, to roast. Allah says: ‘I will roast (sa-uṣṣlihi) him in Saqar.’ (74:26) Abū Ḥaywah recited ‘sa-yuṣṣallawna’ in Form II as we see in 69:31. That can mean time after time. Taṣallā is to warm with fire. A poet said:

You warmed the heat of their war as someone chilled is warmed from the cold

The rest recite ‘sa-yaṣṣlana’ from ṣalā with the nouns ṣallā and ṣilā. Allah says: ‘in which only the most wretched with roast.’ (92:15) Ṣalā’ is to heat by proximity to the fire or actually bring in direct contact with it. Saṣṣir are burning coals.

This is one of the āyahs of threat but there is no evidence in it for anyone who says that wrong actions make someone an unbeliever. What the people of the Sunnah believe is that the threat will be carried out on some rebellious Muslims who will be burned and die, as opposed to the people of the Fire who do not die and do not live. This seems to be an attempt to combine the Book and the Sunnah since there is some disparity. By His will Allah will remove from the Fire whomever He wills. Allah says: ‘Allah does not forgive partners being attributed to Him but He forgives whomever He wills for anything apart from that.’ (4:47) That is the upshot with everything said to you on this theme.

Muslim related in his Ṣaḥīḥ from Abū Hurayrah that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘As for the people of the Fire who are truly its people, they will not die in it or live, but some people will be burned by the Fire for their wrong actions (or errors). Allah will make them die until they are charcoal and then permission for intercession will be granted. They will be brought in groups and cast up on the banks of the rivers of the Garden. Then it will be said, “People of the Garden, pour on them!” They will pour [water] on them and they will grow like seeds grow in what is carried by the flood.” A man from among the people said, ‘It seems that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ has herded animals in the desert.’

11 Allah instructs you regarding your children: A male receives the same as the share of two females. If there are more than two daughters they receive two-thirds of what you leave. If she is one on her own she receives a half. Each of your parents receives a sixth of what you leave if you have children. If you are childless and your heirs are your parents your mother receives a third. If you have brothers or sisters your mother receives a sixth, after any bequest you make or any debts. With regard to your fathers and your sons, you do not know which of them is going to benefit you more. These are obligatory shares from Allah. Allah is All-Knowing, All-Wise. 12 You receive half of what your wives leave if they are childless. If they have children you receive a quarter of what they leave after any bequest they make or any debts. They receive a quarter of what you leave if you are childless. If you have children they receive an eighth of what you leave after any bequest you make or any debts. If a man or woman has no direct heirs, but has a brother or sister, each of them receives a sixth. If there are more than that they share in a third after any bequest you make or any debts, making sure that no one's rights are prejudiced. This is an instruction from Allah. Allah is All-Knowing, All-Forbearing. 13 These are Allah's limits. As for those who obey Allah and His Messenger, We will admit them into Gardens with rivers flowing under them, remaining in them timelessly, for ever. That is the Great Victory. 14 As for those who disobey Allah and His Messenger and overstep His limits, We will admit them into a Fire, remaining in it timelessly, for ever. They will have a humiliating punishment.

Allah instructs you regarding your children:

In this āyah Allah clarifies what is undefined in His words: 'Men have a portion...' (4:32) This indicates that it is permitted to delay clarification of a matter beyond the moment of the question about it. This āyah is one of the pillars of the dīn and underpinnings of judgments and one of the matrix āyahs of the Qur'an. Shares of inheritance are so important that they constitute a third or a half of knowledge. It is the first knowledge which will be taken from people and forgotten. Ad-Dāraqūṭnī reported from Abū Hurayrah that the Prophet ﷺ said, 'Learn the shares of inheritance and teach them to people. It is half of knowledge and the first thing which will be forgotten. It is the first thing which will be removed from my community.' He also related from 'Abdullāh ibn Mas'ūd that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, 'Learn the Qur'an and teach it to people. Learn the shares of inheritance and teach them to people. Learn knowledge and teach it to people. I am a man who will be taken. Knowledge will be taken and seditions will appear. It will be such that two will dispute their share and not find anyone to decide between them.'

This being confirmed, know that the knowledge of shares of inheritance constituted the bulk of the knowledge of the Companions and was an important topic of discussion, but people have lost it. Muṭarrif related from Mālik that ‘Abdullāh ibn Mas‘ūd said, ‘If someone does not learn the shares, divorce and ḥajj, how does he differ from the people of the desert?’ Ibn Wahb reported that Mālik said, ‘I heard Rabī‘ah say, “If someone learns the shares of inheritance without learning them from the Qur’an, he is quick to forget them.”’ Mālik added, ‘He spoke the truth.’ Abū Dāwūd and ad-Dāraquṭnī related from ‘Abdullāh ibn ‘Amr ibn al-‘Āṣ that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘Knowledge consists of three things, and what is other than them is extra: an āyah of judgment, a confirmed sunnah and a just share.’ Abū Sulaymān al-Khaṭṭābī said, ‘The āyah of judgment is the Book of Allah, and mastery is stipulated in it because some āyahs are abrogated and not acted on and one must act on what supersedes them. A confirmed sunnah is what is established as coming from the Messenger of Allah ﷺ. A just share can be interpreted in two ways. One is that someone is just in the division and fair in the portions and shares mentioned in the Book and Sunnah. The other is that it is derived from the Book and Sunnah and what is like them.’

‘Ikrimah related: ‘Ibn ‘Abbās sent to Zayd ibn Thābit to ask him about a woman who died leaving a husband and parents. He said, “The husband receives half, and the mother has a third of what is left.” He asked, “Do you find it in the Book or is that your opinion?” He replied, “It is my opinion. I do not prefer a mother to a father.”’ Abū Sulaymān said, ‘This is part of balancing the share when there is no text concerning it. It is based on the interpretation of the text: “If your heirs are your parents, your mother receives a third.” When the share of a mother is a third, the rest, which is two-thirds, goes to the father. The half left of the property after the husband’s share is analogous to property when there is no child or anyone with a share along with the parents. So the remaining half is divided into three: one share for the mother and two shares for the father. This is a fairer division than giving the mother a third of all the property and the father what remains, which is a sixth, thereby preferring her to him, which is not the basic rule in inheritance. It is fairer than what Ibn ‘Abbās believed about giving a full third to the mother and thereby diminishing the right of the father to a sixth. Most fuqahā’ abandon his position for that of Zayd.’

Abū ‘Umar said, ‘Abdullāh ibn ‘Abbās said about a case when there is a husband and both parents that the husband receives a half, the mother a third of the total and the father receives the rest. He said that in the case where there is a wife and both parents that the wife receives a quarter, the mother a third of the total and the father receives the rest. This was the position of Qāḍī Shurayḥ, Muḥammad ibn Sīrīn and Dāwud ibn ‘Alī, and a group, including Abu-l-Ḥasan Muḥammad ibn ‘Abdullāh al-Faraḍī al-Miṣrī, known as Ibn al-Labbān, about both cases. He claimed that it is analogous to the view of ‘Alī about a mushtarikah case. He said elsewhere that he related it from ‘Alī.’

Abū ‘Umar said, ‘What is well known and famous from ‘Alī, Zayd, ‘Abdullāh and the rest of the Companions and most scholars is what Mālik wrote. Part of their argument against Ibn ‘Abbās is that when the parents are among the heirs, others do not share with them. The mother has a third and the father two-thirds. That is the same when they share in the half left by a husband: she has a third and he has two-thirds of it. This is sound in investigation and analogy.’

There are various transmissions about the reason for the revelation of the Āyah of Shares of Inheritance. At-Tirmidhī, Abū Dāwūd, Ibn Mājah, and ad-Dāraquṭnī reported from Jābir ibn ‘Abdullāh that the wife of Sa’d ibn ar-Rabī’ said, ‘Messenger of Allah, Sa’d has died and left two daughters and a brother. His brother came and took what Sa’d left. Women are married on account of their property.’ He did not answer her in that gathering. Then she came to him and said, ‘Messenger of Allah, what about the daughters of Sa’d?’ He said, ‘Summon his brother to me.’ He came to him and the Prophet ﷺ told him, ‘Give his daughters two-thirds, his wife an eighth, and you have the rest.’ That is how Abū Dāwud has it. At-Tirmidhī and others have: ‘The Āyah of Inheritance was revealed,’ and he said that this is a sound hadith.

Jābir also reports, ‘The Messenger of Allah ﷺ and Abū Bakr came walking to visit me among the Banū Salimah when I was ill and unconscious. He ﷺ performed wuḍū’ and then poured his wuḍū’ water over me. I regained consciousness and said, “Messenger of Allah, who will inherit from me as I have no direct heirs?” Then the Āyahs of the Shares of Inheritance were revealed.’ It is in the Ṣaḥīḥ Collections. At-Tirmidhī transmitted it and has in it: ‘I said, “Prophet of Allah, how should I distribute my wealth among my children?” He did not give me any answer at all. Then it was revealed: “Allah instructs you regarding your children...” He said that it is a sound ḥasan hadith.

We find in al-Bukhārī from Ibn ‘Abbās that the āyah was revealed concerning the property of children and the bequest to the parents. That was abrogated by these āyahs. Muqātil and al-Kalbī said that it was revealed about Umm Kuḥḥah, as we mentioned earlier. As-Suddī said that it was revealed because of the daughter of ‘Abd ar-Raḥmān ibn Thābit, the brother of Ḥassān ibn Thābit. It is said that in the Jāhiliyyah they only allowed those who could fight in battle to inherit and then this was revealed to make it clear that every child and old person had a share. It may have been an answer to all the cases mentioned which is why its revelation was delayed. Allah knows best.

Aṭ-Ṭabarī said, ‘There are some traditions related about not allowing children to inherit, which remained at the beginning of Islam until they were abrogated by this āyah. We do not believe that that was part of the Sharī‘ah. Indeed, the opposite is established.

This āyah was revealed about the heirs of Sa‘d ibn ar-Rabī‘ or the heirs of Thābit ibn Qays ibn Shammās. The first is sounder according to the people of transmission. The Messenger of Allah ﷺ cancelled inheritance for the paternal uncle. If that had been confirmed before in our Sharī‘ah, he would not have cancelled it. It was also not confirmed in our Sharī‘ah that a child was not given a share until he could fight on horseback and defend the tribe.’

That is what Qāḍī Abū Bakr ibn al-‘Arabī said: ‘The revelation of this āyah indicates that it was based on something new. In the beginning of Islam, there was no law based on how property was inherited in the Jāhiliyyah. It was silent about it which amounts to affirmation because if there had been a confirmed law about it, then the Prophet ﷺ would not have judged that the uncle of the two girls had to return any of their property because, when rulings have been delivered and then abrogation comes afterwards, that has an effect in the future and does not undo what happened in the past. Injustice was removed.’

The Shāfi‘īs say that the words of Allah: ‘Allah instructs you regarding your children...’ is literally about children. As for the grandchildren, they are included by extension. When someone swears that he has no children and he does have a grandchild, he does not break his oath. When he makes a bequest to a certain child, that does not include that child’s child. Abū Ḥanīfah said that the grandchild is included when the child no longer exists.

Ibn al-Mundhir said that according to the literal meaning of the āyah, it would give obligatory inheritance rights to all children, believers or unbelievers. It is confirmed that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘An unbeliever does not inherit from a Muslim.’ It is known that it means only some children because a Muslim does not inherit from an unbeliever or vice versa based on the literal meaning of the hadith.

When Allah says: ‘your children,’ He includes in that captives in the hands of the unbelievers. They inherit as long as they are known to be Muslim and alive. That is the position of all the people of knowledge except an-Nakha'ī who says that captives do not inherit. If someone is not known to be alive, their ruling is that of someone absent. The legacy of the Prophet ﷺ is not included in the generality because he said, 'We do not leave inheritance. What we leave is sadaqah.' That will be explained in Sūrat Maryam, Allah willing. Similarly, the ruling does not include someone who murders his father, grandfather, brother or uncle by the consensus of the Community. A murderer does not inherit anything from the property of the one he killed nor any of his blood-money as was explained in al-Baqarah.

If the killing is accidental, the killer does not inherit from the blood-money, but does inherit from the estate, according to Mālik, but not according to ash-Shāfi'ī, Aḥmad, Sufyān and the People of Opinion as already explained in al-Baqarah. The position of Mālik is sounder. That is the position of Ishāq and Abū Thawr as well as Sa'īd ibn al-Musayyab, 'Aṭā' ibn Rabāḥ, Mujāhid, az-Zuhrī, al-Awzā'ī, and Ibn al-Mundhir, because the inheritance of the heir is confirmed by Allah in His Book and there is no exception to it except by Sunnah or consensus. Any disagreement regarding it is referred to the apparent meaning of the āyahs which deal with inheritance.

Know that in the beginning of Islam entitlement to inheritance came by various means, among them alliance, emigration and treaty. Then all that was abrogated in this sūrah when Allah says: 'We have appointed heirs for everything.' (4:33)

Scholars agree that when there is someone who has a fixed share along with the children of the deceased person, he is given it. In respect of the rest of the property a male has the portion of two females since the Prophet ﷺ said, 'Give the shares to their people.' This means the shares designated in the Book of Allah, which are six: a half, a quarter, an eighth, two-thirds, a third and a sixth. Five have a half share: the daughter, son's daughter, full sister, paternal sister and husband. All of that is when they have no one to exclude them. A quarter is for the husband when there is exclusion, and for wives when there is no exclusion. An eighth is for wives when there is exclusion. Four have two-thirds: two or more daughters, a son's daughters, full sisters or paternal sisters. All of that is when there is no exclusion.

A third is for the mother when there are no children or the children of the son, and fewer than two or more brothers and sisters, and for two or more the mother's children. This is a third of the total property. As for the third of what remains, that is for the mother in the case of a spouse and both parents. The mother has a third of what remains, as has already been explained. In the case of a grandfather when there are brothers, when there is someone with a share with them, he has a third of what remains. Seven have a sixth: parents and a grandfather when there is a child and grandchild, grandmother, or grandmothers when there are more than one, granddaughters by a son when there is a daughter, paternal sisters when there are full sisters, and a child, male or female, of the mother. All these shares are taken from the Book of Allah except for the grandmother which is taken from the Sunnah.

There are three things which make these shares obligatory: established lineage, contracted marriage, and the walā' of emancipation. The three can be combined, as when someone is the husband of a woman, her emancipator (mawlā) and a son of her paternal uncle. There can also be only two of them, as when someone is a woman's husband and her emancipator (mawlā), or her husband and the son of her paternal uncle. Then he inherits by two paths and has all the property if he is the only heir: half by being her husband and half on the basis of the walā' or by lineage. A similar case is when a woman is a man's daughter and his emancipator (mawlā); she also receives all of the estate when she is the only heir: half by lineage and half by the walā'.

Inheritance only takes place after any debts have been paid and any bequests made. When someone dies, specific rights are paid from his estate, then what is needed for his shroud and burial, then his debts in order, then the third for bequests and what is like that in order, and the rest is inheritance for the heirs, who are seventeen in total. Ten are men: son, grandson – however far removed – father, grandfather – however far removed – brother, brother's son, paternal uncle, and his son, husband, and male mawla. The seven women are: daughter, son's daughter – however far removed – mother, grandmother – however far removed – sister, wife, and female mawla. An excellent man put them in order, saying:

If you want to count all the heirs, both male and female,
They are ten men and seven women.

I have counted them in order: the son, the son's son, the paternal uncle's son,

The father who is in the rank, the grandfather, before the close brother,

The son of the closest brother, indeed, the uncle, the husband, the mawla and then the mother.

The son's daughter after her, the daughter, the wife, the grandmother and the sister.

And the female mawla. Take that number exactly.

'Your children' includes all your children, whether present or in the womb, near or far removed, male and female, except for unbelievers. Some say that it is actually about the near, and by extension about the far removed. Some say that it is actually about all of them because it comes from 'birth', although they inherit according to nearness. Allah says: 'O sons of Ādam' (7:26) and the Prophet ﷺ said, 'I am the master of the sons of Ādam.' He ﷺ also said, 'Sons of Ismā'īl, shoot! Your father was an archer.'

However, it is generally applied to those who are specifically close to one in reality. If there is a direct male child, then the son's son gets nothing. This is agreed on by the people of knowledge. If there is no male child, but there are male grandchildren, one begins with the actual daughters and they are given the two-thirds and then the remaining third is given to the grandchildren if they are equal in closeness to the deceased, or if the male is further removed than the daughters, since the male has the share of two females. This is the position of Mālik, ash-Shāfi'ī, and the People of Opinion. It is stated by the majority of the people of knowledge among the Companions, Tābi'ūn and those after them except for something which is related from Ibn Mas'ūd who said that if there is a male grandchild opposite a granddaughter, he precludes her. If he is further away in lineage, he does not. In that he took account of the words of Allah: 'If there are more than two daughters they receive two-thirds of what you leave.' Even if there are many, He did not assign them more than two-thirds.

Ibn al-'Arabī also gave an opinion based on this distinction from Ibn Mas'ūd. Ibn al-Mundhir and al-Bājī mentioned that he said that what is left after the daughters inherit goes to the sons of the son rather than the daughters of the son, and there is no distinction. Ibn al-Mundhir related it from Abū Thawr. Abū 'Umar related the like of it and said, 'Ibn Mas'ūd disagreed with that and said, 'When daughters take the two-thirds, the remaining third goes to the sons of the son rather than their sisters and rather than those closer and further than them of the daughters of the son.' This is the position of Abū Thawr and Dāwud ibn 'Alī. The like of it is related from 'Alqamah. The argument of those who take this position is found in the hadith of Ibn 'Abbās who reported that the Prophet ﷺ said, 'Divide the property between the people of obligatory shares according to the Book of Allah. What remains of the shares goes to the closest male relative.’ Al-Bukhārī, Muslim and others transmitted it.

Part of the majority argument are the words of Allah: ‘Allah instructs you regarding your children: a male receives the same as the share of two females’ because the child of a child is also considered a child. From the standpoint of reflection and analogy, whoever is deemed to be ‘aṣabah in his degree in respect of the entire property must also be ‘aṣabah in any excess property, like immediate children. Therefore, it is mandatory that the son’s son shares with the son of his sister, as the direct son shares with his sister. As for the argument of Abū Thawr and Dāwud that as the son’s daughter does not inherit anything of the excess after the two-thirds, she is alone and so her brother does not make her one of the ‘aṣabah, the answer is that when her brother is with her, she is strengthened by him and becomes one of the ‘aṣabah with him. The apparent meaning of: ‘Allah instructs you regarding your children’ is that she is one of the children.

If there are more than two daughters they receive two-thirds of what you leave.

Allah obliged a half share for one daughter, and two-thirds for more than two, and so, if there are just two, they are not given a specified share in the Book. Scholars discussed the evidence about whether they are given two-thirds. It is said that this is the consensus but that is rejected because the sound view from Ibn ‘Abbās is that two daughters are given a half because of this āyah. It is said that they are given two-thirds by analogy with two sisters as Allah says at the end of the sūrah: ‘...he has a sister and she has a half of what he leaves’ (4:186) and ‘...if they are two, they have two-thirds of what he leaves.’ So two daughters are connected to two sisters in sharing in two-thirds, and if there are more sisters than two, they are connected to the daughters and share in two-thirds. This is countered by the fact that it is a text about sisters.

It is said that the āyah indicates that two daughters receive two-thirds. That is since when there is one with her brother, she has a third when she is alone, we know that two have two-thirds. This is the position of Qādī Ismā‘īl and Abu-l-‘Abbās al-Mubarrad. An-Naḥḥās says that this argument is erroneous because the disagreement is about two daughters, not one. His opponents would say, ‘Then if there are daughters and a son, the daughters receive a half.’ This is evidence that this is their share.

It is said that the word ‘fawq’ (more) is redundant, and the actual meaning is ‘if they are two.’ Grammatically, this is like Allah’s words: ‘Strike (above) the necks’ (6:12), which actually means ‘the necks’ themselves. This position is refuted by an-Naḥḥās and Ibn ‘Aṭīyyah because it is not permitted for prepositions and nouns to be meaningless in Arabic. Ibn ‘Aṭīyyah said, ‘That is because His words, “Strike (above) the necks” is a matter of eloquence and “fawq” here is not redundant. Rather it makes the meaning precise because striking the neck must be above the neck joint and below the brain as Darīd ibn aṣ-Ṣimah said, “Lower than the brain and above the joint. That is how I strike the necks of heroes.”’

The strongest argument for two daughters receiving two-thirds is the sound hadith related about the reason for its revelation. The dialect of the people of the Hijaz and the Banū Asad is thuluth and rubu‘ up to ten. The dialect of the Banū Tamīm and Rabī‘ah is thulth, and so on up to ten. [BIT MORE]

If she is one on her own she receives a half.

Nāfi‘ and the people of Madīnah read the word ‘one’ (wāḥidatun) in the nominative meaning ‘it has happened and occurred’ and so it is a full kāna. [POEM] The rest read it as ‘wāḥidatan’ in the accusative. An-Naḥḥās said that it is a good reading, meaning if she is left [as a sole daughter] or born [as a sole daughter].

If there are daughters of the son with daughters and the daughters are two or more, they exclude the daughters of the son from inheriting because they have no access to inheritance by any share other than that of the two-thirds. If there is no daughter, then the daughter or daughters of the son inherit with the daughter to complete the two-thirds. They take the place of the other daughters, just as the sons of son take the place of the sons in exclusion and inheritance. In the absence of any of them who are entitled to the sixth, it then goes to the son's daughter. She is more entitled to the sixth than the full sister according to the majority of fuqahā' among the Companions and Tābi'ūn, except for what is related from Abū Mūsā and Sulaymān ibn Abī Rabī'ah that the daughter has a half, the sister the other half, and the son's daughter nothing.

There is a sound transmission from Abū Mūsā that he retracted that. We find in al-Bukhārī from Ādam from Shu'bah from Abū Qays that Huzayl ibn Shurahbīl said, 'Abū Mūsā was asked about a daughter, a son's daughter and a sister. He said, "A daughter receives a half. A sister receives a half. If you go to Ibn Mas'ūd, he will corroborate me." Ibn Mas'ūd was asked and was told of what Abū Mūsā said. He said, "I would then be misguided and not one of the guided. I give the decision which the Prophet ﷺ gave. A daughter has a half and a daughter of a son has a sixth which completes two-thirds, and what is left is for the sister." Then I went to Abū Mūsā and told him what Ibn Mas'ud had said, and he said, "Do not ask me as long as this scholar is among you.""

If there is a son with the son's daughter or daughters who is at the same level as them or less in the 'asabah, then the second half is shared between them, the male having the share of two females, differing from Ibn Mas'ūd. Then the immediate daughters, or immediate daughters and sons' daughters take the full two-thirds. The same is said about full sisters and paternal siblings: the paternal sister and mother have a half, and the rest goes to the brothers and sisters as long as the individual share is not more than a sixth. If it is more than a sixth, then they are given the full two-thirds, but no more than that. Abū Thawr said that.

If a man dies and leaves a pregnant wife, the property is held in hand until the sex of the child is clear. The people of knowledge agree that when a man dies while his wife is pregnant, the child in her womb inherits and is inherited from if it is born alive and cries. They all say that if it is born dead, it does not inherit. If it is born alive and does not cry, one group say that it has no inheritance, even if it moves or sneezes. This is the position of Mālik, al-Qāsim ibn Muḥammad, Ibn Sīrīn, ash-Sha‘bī, az-Zuhrī and Qatādah. Another group said, ‘If life is recognised by movement, crying, suckling, or breathing, then the rulings concerning it follow those of the living.’ That is the view of ash-Shāfi‘ī, Sufyan ath-Thawrī and al-Awzā‘ī. Ibn al-Mundhir said, ‘What ash-Shāfi‘ī said is open to debate although the report in fact precludes it. The Prophet ﷺ said, “There is no child born but that Shayṭān pricks it and so it cries at the prick of Shayṭān except for the son of Maryam and his mother.”’ This is a report, and there is no abrogation in respect of a report.

If one of the children is a hermaphrodite, scholars agree that the inheritance is determined by how the child urinates. If it is like a male, then he receives the inheritance of a male. If it is like a female, then it is the inheritance of a female. Ibn al-Mundhir said that he did not record anything about this from Mālik. Ibn al-Qāsim said that he was too in awe of Mālik to ask him about it. If the individual urinates in both ways, then one considers how urination begins. Sa‘īd ibn al-Musayyab, Aḥmad and Ishāq said that. That is also related from the People of Opinion. Qatādah related that Sa‘īd ibn al-Musayyab said that a hermaphrodite inherits according to how they urinate, and that if they urinate in both ways, it is according to which manner is first.

If they urinate in both ways at the same time, then it is half that of a male and half that of a female. Ya‘qūb and Muḥammad said that they inherit according to which manner produces the most urine.

That is related from al-Awzā'ī. An-Nu'mān said, 'When a baby urinates in both ways together, it is problematic. I do not know which of them predominates.' It is related that he hesitated about a person when they are like that. It is related that he said, 'When things are unclear, they are given the smaller of the two shares.'

Yaḥyā ibn Ādam said, 'When someone urinates like a man and menstruates like a woman, they inherit according to their manner of urination because we find in a tradition, "He inherits according to his urination."' Ash-Shāfi'ī said, 'When someone urinates from both places and one has no precedence over the other, then they are problematic and receive the inheritance of a female. The rest is held between them and the other heirs until the business is clear or they come to an agreement.' Abū Thawr said that. Ash-Sha'bī said, 'Such a person is given half the inheritance of a male and half that of a female.' Al-Awzā'ī said that, and it is the position of the Māliki school.

Ibn Shās said in Jawāhir ath-Thamīnah 'alā madhhab Mālik 'ālim al-Madīnah: 'Someone is considered to be a hermaphrodite when they have two sets of genitals – those of a female and those of a male – and urinate from both. Ruling about them is given on the basis of how they urinate. If they urinate in both ways, then it is more frequent of them. When they are both equal, one considers which starts first. If they both start at the same time, one considers the growth of a beard or size of breasts and whether they are like a woman's breasts. If someone has both, then one considers their state at puberty. If they menstruate, then the ruling is given based on that. If they only have a wet dream, then the ruling is given based on that. If both exist, then they are problematic. The same is true if someone has no genitalia and nothing specific designating either a male or a female but has a site by which they urinate. In that case one waits until puberty to see if any distinguishing sign appears. If it does not, they are problematic. Then we judge by that and they inherit half the share of a male and half that of a female.’

This is what has been mentioned about the signs of a problematic hermaphrodite. We indicated the sign in al-Baqarah and the beginning of this sūrah: one considers the ribs. That is related from ‘Alī and judgment is given on that basis. One of the excellent scholars wrote some verses on the ruling of the hermaphrodite. They begin:

One considers circumstances: breasts, beard and urination.

He says in it:

If his circumstances are equal and unclear, and signs are ambivalent,

Then his share of the inheritance of a relative is six-eighths of a share.

This is what he is entitled to because of the lack of clarity, and there is the abstention that is in it.

He should not marry as long as he lives in this world nor be given in marriage.

Then he does not have dependants nor bringing up young as men do.

All that I have mentioned in poetry was stated by the leaders of scholars.

Some people refuse to speak about it, and there is no blame in that,

Because of atrocities that may arise in discussion, and clear repulsiveness.

The ruling of the pleasing imam, ‘Alī, was already given on it

About if the person is lacking a rib. Men must follow that

In inheritance, marriage, ḥjām in ḥajj, prayer and rulings.

If she has a rib more than men, then she is female

Because women have a rib more than men. So take advantage of that.

It was missing from Ādam before on account of the creation of Ḥawwā’.

This is a true statement.

There is evidence for that in what the Messenger, peace be upon him, said.

Abu-l-Walīd ibn Rushd said, ‘Someone problematic in this way may be neither a husband nor a wife, nor a mother nor a father. It is said that they may have children from the womb and children from the back [i.e. sperm].’ Ibn Rushd said, ‘If this is sound, then the person inherits from their son by sperm with the full share of a father and from their son by the womb with the full share of a mother. This is unlikely, and Allah knows best.’ We find in the Sunan of ad-Dāraqūṭnī that Abū Hānī’ ‘Umar ibn Bashīr said, ‘Āmir ash-Sha‘bī was asked about a child who is neither male nor female who did not have what either a male or female have, and urine and faeces came from his navel. He was asked about its inheritance and ‘Āmir said that it is half the share of a male and half the share of a female.’

Each of your parents receives a sixth of what you leave if you have children.

‘Parents’ here means the parents of the deceased. This alludes to something not mentioned which is permitted linguistically. ‘Sixth’ is in the nominative by the inceptive and what is before it is its predicate. The same is true of ‘third,’ ‘half’, fourth, etc.

The word ‘parents’ is dual: the father and mother (ābah). The expression umm spares the need for ābah. Some Arabs prefer one to the other since it is easy and famous. That is heard in sound names, like calling the parents al-abwān, calling the sun and moon ‘two moons’ and night and day al-malawān. ‘The two ‘Umars’ is used for Abū Bakr and ‘Umar. They make the moon dominate the sun because it is easy to remember and ‘Umar dominate Abū Bakr because ‘Umar ruled for a long time and his time was famous. Whoever claims that it means ‘Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb and ‘Umar ibn ‘Abd al-‘Azīz has nothing to stand on because they spoke of ‘the two ‘Umars’ before they saw ‘Umar ibn ‘Abd al-‘Azīz. Ash-Shajarī said that.

The word ‘parents’ does not include grandparents here, however distant, since it is in the dual whereas further descendants are included in the word ‘children’. The fact that the word ‘parents’ is dual means cannot be universal and plural. This is not the case with ‘children’. This is proven by Allah’s words: ‘If you are childless and your heirs are your parents your mother receives a third.’ The grandmother does not receive a third by consensus and so she is definitely not part of this.

There is, however, disagreement about the grandfather. Among those who said that he is a father and excludes the brothers was Abū Bakr aṣ-Ṣiddīq. While he was alive, none of the Companions disagreed with him regarding that. They did disagree after his death. Among those who said that the grandfather was included under the word ‘father’ were Ibn ‘Abbās, ‘Abdullāh ibn az-Zubayr, ‘Ā’ishah, Mu‘ādh ibn Jabal, Ubayy ibn Ka‘b, Abu-d-Dardā’ and Abū Hurayrah. All of them made the grandfather like the father in the father’s absence and made him exclude all brothers who do not inherit anything when he is present. That was the view of ‘Aṭā’, Ṭāwus, al-Ḥasan and Qatādah. Abū Ḥanīfah, Abū Thawr and Iṣḥāq also believed that. Their argument is found in the words of the Almighty: ‘the religion of your father Ibrāhīm’ (22:78) and ‘O sons of Ādam’ (7:26) as well as the words of the Prophet ﷺ, ‘Shoot, sons of Ismā‘īl. Your father was an archer.’

‘Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib, Zayd and Ibn Mas‘ūd believed that the grandfather inherits with the brothers and there is no decrease in the third with the full brothers or the father except with those with stipulated shares. That is the position of Mālik, al-Awzā'ī, Abū Yūsuf and ash-Shāfi'ī. 'Alī made the brothers and grandfather share in a sixth and the sixth did not reduce any of the obligatory shares of others. That is the position of Ibn Abī Laylā and a group. Scholars agree that the grandfather does not inherit when the father is alive, and the son does not exclude his father. They put the grandfather in the same position as the father in respect of exclusion and inheritance when the deceased does not have a father closer than him.

Most believe that the grandfather cancels brothers in inheritance, except for what is related from ash-Sha'bī from 'Alī that he is treated like the sons of the brothers in the division. The argument of the majority is that he is a male who does not make his sister one of the 'aṣabah and so the grandfather does not have a share like the paternal uncle and son of the paternal uncle.

Ash-Sha'bī said that the first grandfather to inherit in Islam was 'Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb. A son of 'Aṣim ibn 'Umar died, leaving two brothers. 'Umar wanted to claim his property and consulted 'Alī and Zayd about that. They told him a parable about it and he said, 'Were it not that I see that you two agree, I would not think that he was my son nor I was his father.' Ad-Dāraquṭnī related from Zayd ibn Thābit that 'Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb asked permission to visit him one day and he gave it. His head was in the hand of a girl of his who was combing it. He removed his head and 'Umar told him, 'Let her comb you.' I said, 'Amīr al-Mu'minīn, if you were to send for me, I would come to you.' 'Umar said, 'I have need of you. I came to you to look into the position of a grandfather.' Zayd said, 'No, by Allah! What do you say about it?' 'Umar said, 'There is no revelation so that we could modify it one way or another. It is something based on opinion. If your opinion agrees with me I will follow it. Otherwise there is no going against you in it.'

Zayd refused to give an opinion and ‘Umar left angry, exclaiming, ‘I came to you thinking that you would relieve me!’ Then he went to him again at the same time that he had come to him the first time and kept at him until he said, ‘I will write something for you.’ So he wrote it for him on a piece of hide and he made a parable for him. The parable was a tree which grows on one trunk and branches issue from it. Then the branches produce other branches. The trunk waters the branch. If the first branch is cut off, the water reverts to another branch. If the second branch is cut off, the water reverts to the first. He took it and ‘Umar addressed the people and then read what was written on the piece of hide to them. Then he said, ‘Zayd ibn Thābit has stated a position about the grandfather and I have carried it out.’ He said that ‘Umar was the first grandfather and wanted to take all the property of his son’s son rather than his brothers. So ‘Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb divided that.

The people of knowledge agree that the grandmother has a sixth if the deceased has no mother. They agree that a mother excludes both her mother and the father’s mother. They agree that the father does not exclude the mother’s mother. They disagree about the inheritance of the grandmother when her son is alive. Some say that the grandmother does not inherit when her son is alive. That is related from Zayd ibn Thābit, ‘Uthmān and ‘Alī. It was the position of Mālik, ath-Thawrī, al-Awzā‘ī, Abū Thawr and the People of Opinion. One group said, ‘The grandmother inherits with her son.’ That is related from ‘Umar, Ibn Mas‘ūd, ‘Uthmān, ‘Alī and Abū Mūsā al-Ash‘arī, and is the position of Shurayḥ, Jābir ibn Zayd, ‘Ubaydullāh ibn al-Hasan, Shurayk, Aḥmad, Ishāq and Ibn al-Mundhir. He said, ‘As the grandfather is only excluded by the father, so the grandmother is only excluded by the mother.’ At-Tirmidhī related from ‘Abdullāh about the grandmother with the son that she was the first grandmother to whom the Messenger of Allah ﷺ gave a sixth with her son while her son was alive. Allah knows best.

Scholars disagree about the inheritance of grandmothers. Mālik said only two grandmothers inherit: the mother's mother and the father's mother and their mothers. That is what is related by Abū Thawr from ash-Shāfi'ī, and a group of Tābi'ūn said that. If there is only one, she has a sixth. If there are more and have the same closeness, the sixth is shared between them. All of this is agreed upon. If the one on the mother's side is closer, she alone has a sixth. If the one on the father's side is closer, it is shared between her and the one on the side of the mother, however far removed. Only one grandmother inherits on the mother's side and the grandmother of the mother of the father does not inherit. This is the position of Zayd ibn Thābit. It is the most confirmed of what is related on that. It is the position of Mālik and the people of Madīnah.

It is said that the grandmothers are also mothers. If there are several, the sixth is for the closer of them, as is the case when there are several fathers [including grandfathers]. The closest of them is the one most entitled to the inheritance. The same hold true for sons, brothers, sons of brothers and sons of uncles when there are several: the closest of them is the most entitled to inherit. Ibn al-Mundhir said, 'This is the sounder view, and is my position.'

Al-Awzā'ī makes three grandmothers inherit: one from the mother's side and two from the father's side. That is the position of Aḥmad ibn Ḥanbal. Ad-Dāraḥṭnī related it from the Prophet ﷺ as mursal. The opposite of that is related from Zayd ibn Thābit: three grandmothers inherit: two from the side of the mother and one from the father. 'Alī has the same position as Zayd. They both give the sixth to the closest of them, on the side of the mother or father and no one shares with her in it unless they are of the same level of closeness. That is the position of ath-Thawrī, Abū Ḥanīfah and his people, and Abū Thawr.

'Abdullāh ibn Mas'ūd and Ibn 'Abbās, however, make the four grandmothers inherit. That is the position of al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī, Muḥammad ibn Sīrīn and Jābir ibn Zayd. Ibn al-Mundhir said, 'Any grandmother connected to the deceased who has a father in her lineage between two mothers does not inherit.' The position of each of them by the people of knowledge.

Allah allotted a sixth to each of the parents of someone with children, and the male and female child are the same in that respect. If a man dies leaving a son and both parents, each of the parents has a sixth and the rest goes to the son. If he leaves a daughter and two parents, the daughter has half and the parents two-sixths and what remains goes to the ‘aṣabah, the paternal relations, since the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, 'What is left of the shares is for the male relatives of a man.' The father has rights on two sides: paternal lineage and obligatory share.

If you are childless and your heirs are your parents your mother receives a third.

When the parents are the heirs, the mother takes a third, as is indicated by Allah's words, and the rest, which is two-thirds, goes to the father. It is as when you tell two men, 'This property is shared between you,' and then you tell one of them, 'You have a third of it.' Your words have stipulated that the other has two-thirds. The strength of His words indicate that that the two are alone among people entitled to shares. There is no disagreement about this. According to this, two-thirds is a share prescribed for the father and not inasmuch as he is ‘aṣabah. Ibn al-‘Arabī mentioned that the point is to prefer the mother with a third in the absence of male children. The mother is confirmed over the share because of kinship.

This is contradictory. That exists when he is alive, so why is he denied the sixth? That which is clear is that a father is denied the sixth while he is alive out of kindness to the child and guarding his property since part of his property may be removed unjustly or that is an act of worship. That is the most appropriate thing to say. Allah is the One Who gives success.

The addition of the wāw in ‘and your heirs’ makes it clear that this is a continuing firm command. The position of the parents when they are the only heirs is like the position of two children: the male receives twice the share of a female. The father has two shares: the normal share and that of ‘aṣabah when he excludes the brothers as the child does. This is a balanced rulings and its wisdom is clear. Allah knows best.

The people of Kufa recite ‘li-immihi’ which is a dialect related by Sībawayh. Al-Kisā’ī said that it is a dialect of many of Hawāzin and Hudhayl. That is because when there is a lām with a kasrah and it is connected to a letter, they dislike having a ḍammah after a kasrah because there is no fi’ula in words. If someone has a ḍammah, he takes the root. It is also because the lām is separate and added to the noun. An-Naḥḥās said all of that.

If you have brothers or sisters your mother receives a sixth,

Brothers reduce the share of the mother from a third to a sixth. This is partial exclusion, whether the brothers are full or half brothers. They have no share. It is related from Ibn ‘Abbās that the sixth which the brothers exclude the mother from is for the brothers. He also related the like of the position of the people that it is for the father. Qatādah said that the father takes it rather than them because he provides for them and attends to their marriage and maintenance.

The people of knowledge agree that two or more siblings, male or female, full or half, reduce a mother from a third to a sixth except what is related from Ibn ‘Abbās that two brothers have the same ruling as one and less than three do not exclude the mother.

Some people believe that sisters do not reduce a mother from a third to a sixth because the Book of Allah speaks about brothers, and the strength of the inheritance of the female is not like the strength of the inheritance of the male. Aṭ-Ṭabarī says that what their position would mean is that the sisters are not included with the brothers, as sons do not include daughters. That would necessitate that a mother with one brother and a sister is not reduced from a third to a sixth, which is counter to the consensus of the Muslims. If they are meant by the āyah with the brothers, they are also meant when they are on their own.

All of them deduce that the minimum plural is two because it is adding one to another like it. Therefore, it must be a plural. Furthermore, the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘Two or more is a group.’ It is related that Sībawayh said, ‘I asked al-Khalīl about what is the best way to take the words in the dual and he said, “Two is a plural.”’ The words of the poet are sound:

Two distant barren deserts like the backs [plural] of two shields.

Al-Akhfash said:

When the two women brought us the news
They [plural] said, ‘The business is famous among us.’

Another said:

They give the greeting to wealthy people and are miserly with greeting the poor.

Is not death the same between them [dual] when they die [plural] and go to the graves?

There was a disagreement about that between ‘Uthmān and Ibn ‘Abbās. ‘Uthmān said to him, ‘Your people (meaning Quraysh) exclude her, and they are the people of eloquence and fine rhetoric.’

Some say that the minimum is three: Ibn Mas‘ūd, ash-Shāfi‘ī, Abū Ḥanīfah and others. Allah knows best.

After any bequest you make or any debts.

Ibn Kathīr, Abū ‘Amr, Ibn ‘Āmir and ‘Āṣim recite yusā and the rest have it as yusī. The readings from ‘Āṣim vary. Abū ‘Ubayd and Abū Ḥātim prefer the kasrah because the deceased was mentioned before this. Al-Akhfash said: ‘The confirmation of that is His words “yūṣīna” and “tūṣīna”.’

It may be asked, ‘What is the wisdom in mentioning bequests before debts when debts take priority by consensus?’ At-Tirmidhī related from al-Ḥārith that someone said to ‘Alī, ‘The Prophet ﷺ paid debts before bequests and confirmed bequests after debts while this mentions bequests before debts.’ He said, ‘The action regarding this according to most of the people of knowledge is that one begins with debts before bequests.’ Ad-Dāraquṭnī reported from ‘Aṣim ibn Ḍamrah from ‘Alī that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘Debts come before bequests, and an heir receives no bequest.’ Abū Ishāq al-Hamdānī related it from both of them.

There are five aspects to the answer to this. The first is that what is intended is to put these two categories before the shares of inheritance and no particular order is proposed by it. That is why bequests are put first. The second is that since a bequest is less necessary than a debt, it is put first out of concern for it, as the Almighty said about His Book: ‘which does not pass over any action, small or great.’ (18:49) The third is that bequests are put first because they often exist and so it is like it is necessary for every dead person as the Sharī‘ah has a text on it, and debts are mentioned afterwards because they are rarer and may or may not exist. So Allah begins first with what is necessary. This is strengthened by ‘or’. If there had been an order involved, He would have used the conjunction ‘and’. The fourth is that bequests are put first because they are the portion of the wretched and weak, and debts last because it is the portion of the creditor who will seek it with strength and force. The fifth is that it is because a bequest is from himself that it is put first, while a debt is confirmed, whether mentioned or not.

Since this is confirmed, ash-Shāfi‘ī added as a corollary to that the putting of debts of zakāt and hajj before the inheritance. He said, ‘When a man has been lax about his zakāt, that must be taken from his capital.’ This is evident because it is one of the religious rights and must be paid after death, like the rights of human beings, especially since zakāt is given to human beings. Abū Ḥanīfah and Mālik said, ‘If someone puts it in the will, it is paid from the third. If they are silent about it, nothing is paid.’ They said, ‘Because that might entail leaving heirs poor since the entire estate could be used up, leaving the heirs with nothing.’

With regard to your fathers and your sons, you do not know which of them is going to benefit you more.

This is in the nominative by the inceptive whose predicate is elided. ‘Your’ implies: ‘They are the ones who are given shares.’ It is said that the benefit is in this world through supplication and ṣadaqah, as is the tradition, ‘A man is elevated by the supplication of his child after him.’ We find in a sound hadith: ‘When a man dies, his actions are cut off except for three.’ Among them he mentioned a righteous child who makes supplication for him. It is said that it is in the Next World and the son may be better and can intercede for his father, as Ibn ‘Abbās and al-Ḥasan stated. Some commentators say that if the son has a higher degree than his father in the Hereafter, he asks Allah to raise him to him, and the same applies to the father. This will be explained in at-Ṭūr. It is said that it is in both this world and the Next. Ibn Zayd said that the expression implies that.

These are the obligatory shares from Allah.

‘Obligatory shares’ is the object of ‘instructs you’ or it is in the accusative because it is a verbal noun. This informs people that they are spared the effort of making bequests to relatives when they are joined in lineage, meaning that fathers and sons benefit one another in this world by means of mutual help and solace and in the Next World by means of intercession. As that is confirmed about fathers and sons, it is confirmed about all relatives.

If the division had been entrusted to individual discretion, that would oblige investigating the wealth of each and then there would no precision since the matter varies. Therefore, the Lord makes it clear that what is best for the person is that the amounts of inheritance are not left to their discretion. So Allah clarified legal amounts.

‘Allah is All-Knowing’ of the division of the shares and ‘All-Wise’ in judging their division and making it clear to people. Az-Zajjāj said, ‘He knows things before He created them and is wise in what He decrees for them and decides about them.’ Some said that Allah was and is. The report in the past regarding Him is the same as that in the future tense. The school of Sībuwayh is that they saw wisdom and knowledge and so they were told that Allah was like that and remains like that.

You receive half of what your wives leave if they are childless.

This is addressed to men. Here the word ‘childless’ refers to not having children themselves or, therefore, grandchildren, however far removed, male or female, one or more, by consensus. Scholars agree that the husband receives a half when there are no children or grandchildren. If there are children, then he receives a quarter. When there are no children, the wife inherits a quarter from her husband, and an eighth if there are children. They agree that the ruling of one, two, three or four wives is out of the quarter if there are no children and the eighth if there are. They share in that because Allah did not distinguish between one or all as He did between one daughter and one sister and the ruling of all of them.

If a man or woman has no direct heirs

The word kalālah (tr. ‘has no direct heirs’) is a verbal noun derived from takallala in reference to lineage, meaning encompassed. Crown (iklāl) comes from it as it encompasses the head. Iklāl is also one of the stations of the moon which is encompassed by the moon. The technical term kalālah is used when a man dies and has no children or parents, as is said by Abū Bakr, ‘Umar, ‘Alī and most of the people of knowledge.

Yaḥyā ibn Ādam mentioned from Sharīk, and Zuhayr and Abu-l-Aḥwaṣ from Abū Ishāq that Sulaymān ibn ‘Ubayd said, ‘I have not seen anyone who did not agree that the person who dies without father or child is kalālah.’ That is what was stated by the author of Kitāb al-‘Ayn, Abū Maṣṣūr al-Lughawī, Ibn ‘Arafah, al-Qutabī, Abū ‘Ubayd and Ibn al-Anbārī. The father and child are the two ends of lineage and ‘surround’ him. A meadow is ‘crowned’ (mukallalah) when it is surrounded in blossoms. They said:

His dwelling is a crowned meadow

Covered in Ayhuqān and sweet trefoil.

He means two plants. Imru ‘l-Qays said:

Companion! you see lightning and I will show you its flash like the clap of hands in the surrounding (mukallalah) clouds.

Relatives are called ‘kalālah’ because they ‘surround’ him on all sides, they not being from him nor him from them. Their surrounding him is that they are connected to him, as a desert Arab would say, ‘My wealth is great and the kalālah with loose relationship will inherit from me. Al-Farazdaq said:

You did not inherit the staff of majesty through kalālah, but from the two sons of Manāf, ‘Abd Shams and Hāshim.

Another said:

A man’s father gives him protection, but the client of kalālah is not roused to anger.

It is also said that kalālah (not having direct heirs) is derived from kalāl, which is fatigue. So it is as inheritance goes to the heir from a distance and with toil. Al-A‘shā uses it to mean exhaustion

Abū Ḥātīm and al-Athram reported that Abū ‘Abīdah said, ‘Kalālah refers to the one who dies with no father, son or brother. The Arabs called him kalālah.’ Abū ‘Umar says that mentioning the brother is a mistake on his part. No one else mentions him as part of kalālah. It is also reported from ‘Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb that it only applies to someone with no children. That was also related from Abū Bakr, and then they both retracted it. Ibn Zayd said, ‘Kalālah describes both the living and the dead.’ ‘Aṭā’ said that kalālah is property. Ibn al-‘Arabī said that that is an unusual view with no sense whatsoever. I say that it has a meaning which was already explained by the syntax. It is reported from Ibn al-A‘rabī that kalālah are the distant sons of the paternal uncle. As-Suddī said that it is the deceased. He also mentioned the view of the majority.

These statements make its aspects clear through the syntax. Some Kufans recite ‘yūrrithu kalālatan’. Al-Ḥasan and Ayyūb recite ‘yūrrithu’ while there is disagreement from the two of them. According to these two readings, the kalālah is only the heirs or the property. That is what is related by the people who deal with meanings. The first is from warratha and the second from awratha and kalālah is the object and ‘kāna’ means ‘occurred’.

If someone recites ‘yūrrithu’, he makes kalālah mean property. It implies: ‘He inherits the legacy of the kalālah, and so it is an adjective of an elided verbal noun. Kalālah can also be a name for the heirs and the predicate of kāna. So it would imply: ‘with kalālah’. It can also be complete with the meaning of ‘occurred’ and ‘yūrrithu’ is an adjective of ‘man’ and ‘man’ is in the nominative by ‘kāna’, and kalālah is in the accusative for explanation or for the ḥāl on the basis that the kalālah is the deceased. It implies: a man allows the relatives surrounding the deceased to inherit.

Allah mentions kalālah in His Book in two places: here and at the end of the sūrah, and in neither place does He mention any heirs except brothers. As for this āyah, scholars agree that the brothers in it are the mother’s brothers since the Almighty says: ‘If there are more than that they share in a third.’ Sa’d ibn Abī Waqqāṣ recited, ‘and he has a brother or sister by his mother.’ There is no disagreement among the people of knowledge that the brothers of the father or mother are not the heirs. There is consensus that the brothers mentioned at the end of the sūrah are the siblings of the deceased by both the father and mother or by just the father going by Allah's words: 'If there are brothers and sisters, the males receive the share of two females.' (2:176) There is no disagreement that the inheritance of maternal siblings is not like that. So the two āyahs together indicate that all siblings are kalālah. Ash-Sha'bī said, 'Kalālah designates heirs other than children and parents: siblings and others of the 'aṣabah.' That is like what 'Alī, Ibn Mas'ūd, Zayd and Ibn 'Abbās said. It is the first view with which we began.

At-Ṭabarī said, 'What is correct is that kalālah are those other than parents and children who inherit from the deceased based on the sound report of Jābir who said, "I said, 'Messenger of Allah, the kalālah inherit from me. Shall I will away all of my property?' 'No,' he answered.'"

Linguists say that a male is described as kalālah and a female also as kalālah and there is no plural or dual because it is a verbal noun like wakālah, dalālah, samāḥah and shajā'ah. In 'lahu akh' the singular pronoun is repeated and not 'lahumā' in the dual. It was already mentioned that the custom in Arabic about men and women is that when the two names have been mentioned and then they are reported about and both have the same ruling, sometimes it is attributed to one of them and sometimes to both of them. You say, 'Whoever has a slave and slavegirl should be good to him, to her, to both and to them,' using any of the four pronouns. Allah says: 'Seek help in steadfastness and the prayer. It (innahā) is very hard.' (2:45) Allah also says: 'Whether rich or poor, Allah is well able to look after them (bihimā)' (4:135) in the dual. Al-Farrā; and others said that it would be permitted to say 'bihim' [in the plural].

A woman is called 'imra'ah' which is the root. The root of akh (brother) is akhw as is indicated in the dual, akhwān. It is elided from it and changed. Al-Farrā' said that the beginning of ukht (sister) has a dammah because of the elision of the wāw and there is a kasrah at the beginning of bint (daughter) because of the elision of the yā'. This elision and weakness are not based on any reference.

If there are more than that they share in a third.

This sharing demands equality between a male and female, even if they are many. When they take via the mother, there is no preference for male over female. This is consensus of the scholars. There is no place in the shares in which men and women are equal except in the inheritance of the siblings of the mother.

If a woman dies and leaves a husband, mother and brother by her mother, the husband has a half, the mother a third, and the brother a sixth. If she leaves two brothers and sisters, then the husband has a half, the mother a sixth, and brothers and sisters a third and that completes the sharing out. This is the position of most of the Companions because they reduce the mother by the brother and sister from a third to a sixth. Ibn 'Abbās does not think that there is adjustment, even if the mother is given a third. Adjustment ('awl) is mentioned elsewhere rather than here. If she leaves a husband and brothers by the mother and a brother by the father and mother, the husband gets a half and the brothers by the mother a third, and the rest goes to the full brothers.

This is in the case of those who do not have a named share. The rest goes to the paternal relatives ('aṣabah). If she leaves six brothers, this is the Ḥimāriyyah case and it is also called the shared case (mushtarikah). Some people said that the maternal brothers have a third, the husband half, and the mother a sixth, and the full siblings and paternal siblings are dropped. That is related from 'Alī, Ibn Mas'ūd, Abū Mūsā, ash-Sha'bī, Shurayk, and Yaḥyā ibn Ādam. That is the position of Aḥmad ibn Ḥanbal, and Ibn al-Mundhir preferred it, because the husband, mother and maternal brothers have named shares and nothing remains for the 'aṣabah. Some people said that the mother is one and that leaves their father like a donkey! They made them share the third. That is why this case is called the mushtarikah or Ḥimāriyyah. This is related from ‘Umar, ‘Uthmān, Ibn Mas‘ūd, Zayd ibn Thābit, Masrūq and Shurayḥ. It was stated by Mālik, ash-Shāfi‘ī and Ishāq. This case is not right when the deceased is a man.

This is the sum of the knowledge of obligatory shares which the āyah contains. Allah is the One Who gives success to guidance.

In the Jāhiliyyah, inheritance was based on maleness and strength. Men rather women inherited, and then Allah nullified this by His words: ‘men have a portion’ and ‘women have a portion’ (4:32) as was already mentioned. Also in the Jāhiliyyah and at the beginning of Islam, inheritance was by alliance. Allah says: ‘If you have a bond with people’ (4:33). Then after alliance, there was alliance by hijrah. Allah says: ‘As those who believe but have not made hijrah, you are not in any way responsible for their protection until they make hijrah.’ (8:72)

Then there was the position about relatives and their inheritance. In Sūrat an-Nūr we will discuss the inheritance of the child of a li‘ān, a bastard and a mukātib. Most scholars say that if someone who has been captured by the enemy is known to be alive, his inheritance is confirmed because he is part of the sum of Muslims subject to the rulings of Islam, although it is related that Sa‘īd ibn al-Musayyab said that someone held by the enemy does not inherit. The inheritance of an apostate was mentioned in Sūrat al-Baqarah.

making sure that no one’s rights are prejudiced.

This is in respect of the bequests, in other words without that harming the heirs. For instance, it is not appropriate for someone to put a debt in the will, that he does not owe, in order to harm the heirs. Causing harm refers to bequests and debts. In bequests, it is to make bequests of more than a third or to make a bequest to an heir. If it is more than a third, it is rejected unless the heirs allow it because it is denying them their rights, not a right of Allah. A bequest to an heir reverts to the general inheritance. Scholars agree that a bequest to an heir is not permitted. This was already mentioned in al-Baqarah. As for claiming a debt, it is affirmation in a situation in which it is not permitted, as when someone affirms in his final illness that he owes it to his heirs or a close friend. We do not think that that is permitted.

It is related that al-Ḥasan recited ‘ghayra mudārri waṣīyatin’ based on idāfah. An-Naḥḥās said, ‘Some linguistic scholars claim that this is ungrammatical because the noun of the active participle is not put into idāfah with a verbal noun. The reading is good based on an elision. It means: not prejudicing the one with a will,’ i.e. not harming his heirs in their inheritance by it.

Scholars agree that affirming a debt to other than a relative in a final illness is allowed when someone did not have the debt while healthy. If there is clear evidence of a debt being incurred while he was healthy and he affirms a debt owed to a non-relative, one group say that one begins with debts incurred while he was healthy. This is the view of an-Nakhaī and the Kufans. They said, ‘When the person settles them, the people who have been confirmed while he was ill take shares. Another group says that they are both the same when the creditor is not an heir. This is the position of ash-Shāfi‘ī, Abū Thawr, and Abū ‘Ubayd. Abū ‘Ubayd mentioned that it is the position of the people of Madīnah. He related that from al-Ḥasan.

The different aspects of harm in respect of bequests were already discussed in al-Baqarah. It is reported by Abū Dāwud from Sahr ibn Ḥawshab (who is attacked) from Abū Hurayrah that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘A man or woman may obey Allah for sixty years and then they are dying and they cause harm in their will and so the Fire becomes mandatory from them.’ Then Abū Hurayrah would recite this āyah.

Ibn ‘Abbās said that causing harm by one’s will is one of the great wrong actions, and he related that from the Prophet ﷺ. The well-known position of the school of Mālik and Ibn al-Qāsim is that the harm of someone who makes a will cannot exceed the third because that is his right to dispose of as he wishes. There is also a position in the school which is that harm is rejected. Success is by Allah.

Allah is All-Knowing, All-Forbearing.

He knows the people of inheritance and is forbearing to the people of ignorance among you. Some people recite Hakīm (wise) instead of Halīm (All-Forbearing), meaning that He is wise regarding the division of the legacy and wills.

These are Allah's limits.

‘Those’ means ‘these’, i.e. these are the rulings of Allah which He has made clear to you so that you know them and act by them.

As for those who obey Allah and His Messenger

They obey Him in respect of the division of inheritance and affirm it as Allah has commanded them. The sentence: ‘We will admit them into Gardens with rivers flowing under them’ is in the position of the accusative as an adjective of ‘Gardens’.

As for those who disobey Allah and His Messenger and overstep His limits,

They disobey Him in respect of the division of inheritance and do not distribute it and do not act by it. They ‘overstep His limits’ by opposing His command. If disobedience here means disbelief, then it is in the Fire forever. If it means a major wrong action and exceeding Allah’s commands, then it is a metaphor for a certain period, and that is a usage of khalada as one might say, ‘May Allah make his kingdom endure forever!’ Zuhayr said:

Nothing is forever except the firm mountains.

This has been discussed elsewhere.

Nāfi‘ reads this as ‘We will admit’ (nudkhillu) with the Divine ‘We’ in the two places while the rest read it as ‘He will admit’ (yudkhillu) because Allah was already mentioned. It means: Allah will admit him.

وَالَّذِي يَأْتِيَنَّ الْفَاحِشَةَ مِنْ نِسَائِكُمْ فَاسْتَشْهِدُوا عَلَيْهِنَّ أَرْبَعَةً
 مِنْكُمْ فَإِنْ شَهِدُوا فَأَمْسِكُوهُنَّ فِي الْبُيُوتِ حَتَّىٰ يَتَوَفَّيَهُنَّ
 الْمَوْتُ أَوْ يَجْعَلَ اللَّهُ لَهُنَّ سَبِيلًا ﴿١٥﴾

15 If any of your women commit fornication, four of you must be witnesses against them. If they bear witness, detain them in their homes until death releases them or Allah ordains another procedure for their case.

In this sūrah, Allah mentions being good to women and giving them their dowries and He also mentions their inheritance together with that of the men. Then He mentions being harsh to them in the case of any fornication they may commit of so that it might not be imagined that a woman be allowed to be lax where chasteness is concerned.

Allātī is the plural of allatī and it is an undefined feminine noun which is definite. It is not permitted to remove the alif-lām from it to make it indefinite and it is only complete when connected. As we already mentioned, it has three dialectical forms and a plural: allātī without the yā' but with the kasrah, allā'ī with a hamzah and keeping the yā', and allā with the hamzah elided. When you make the plural plural, you use allawātī for allātī, allawā'ī for allā'ī. It is related from them as allawātī without the yā' but with the kasrah. Ibn ash-Shajarī said that. [POEMS WITH FURTHER GRAMMATICAL EXAMPLES] Fāḥishah here means fornication. Fāḥishah is an ugly action, and it is a verbal noun like 'āqibah and 'afyah. Ibn Mas'ūd recited 'bi-l-fāḥishati'.

'Your women' means Muslim women, not those related by lineage. It explains the state of the believing women. The same usage is seen in 2:282. That is because an unbelieving woman might be connected to women of the Muslims by lineage but would not not be subject to this ruling.

four of you must be witnesses against them.

This means four Muslims. Allah requires four witnesses to fornication in order to make it hard for the claimant and to veil people. Requiring four reputable witnesses to fornication is a firm ruling in both the Gospel and the Qur'an. Allah says: 'But those who make accusations against chaste women and then do not produce four witnesses: flog them with eighty lashes.' (24:4) Here He mentions four.

Abū Dāwūd reports from Jābir ibn 'Abdullāh: 'The Jews brought a man and woman of theirs who had committed fornication. The Prophet ﷺ said, "Fetch me the most knowledgeable two men among you." They brought him the sons of Ṣūriyā and he asked, "What do you find in the Torah about the business of these two?" They said, "We find in the Torah that if four testify that they saw his penis in her vagina like a stick in a kohl bottle, then they are stoned." He asked, "What keeps you from stoning them?" They replied, "Our authority has gone and we dislike killing." So the Messenger of Allah ﷺ summoned the witnesses and they came and testified that they saw his penis in her vagina like a stick in a kohl bottle, and the Messenger of Allah ﷺ commanded that they be stoned.'

Some people say, 'The witnesses in fornication are four so that there are two witnesses against each of the two parties, as is the case in all rights, since a right is taken from each of them.' This is weak. The oath deals with property and suspicion in the qasamah, and it does not apply here. The witnesses must be male since He says, 'minkum', and there is no disagreement in the Community about that, and they must be of good character because Allah stipulates good character in sales and retraction, and this is a greater matter so it is more fitting here. This is part of applying the general to the restricted in evidence as mentioned in the fundamental principles of fiqh. They cannot be dhimīs, although judgment can be made against dhimīs. That will be discussed in al-Mā'idah. Abū Ḥanīfah added that 'four of you' is about the husband when he is one of the witnesses in slander and does not carry out the li'ān. This will be explained in an-Nūr.

If they bear witness, detain them in their homes

This was the first of the punishments for fornication. It was at the beginning of Islam. ‘Ubādah ibn aṣ-Ṣāmit, al-Ḥasan and Mujāhid said that. That lasted until it was abrogated by the punishment after it and then that was abrogated by the āyah in an-Nūr and stoning for someone previously married. One group said that the corporal punishment was first and then was abrogated by detaining but the order in recitation is different. Ibn Fūrak mentioned that. Detaining used to be in houses at the beginning of Islam before there were a lot of criminals. When they were a lot and their strength was feared, a prison was constructed for them. Ibn al-‘Arabī said that.

Scholars disagree about whether prison is a ḥadd punishment or threatening with a ḥadd. One position is that it is threatening a ḥadd and the second that that is an actual ḥadd. Ibn ‘Abbās and al-Ḥasan said that. Ibn Zayd said that they were forbidden to marry until they died as a punishment for them when they had unlawful sexual intercourse. This indicates that it was a ḥadd punishment and indeed more severe. However, that ruling ended with the punishment prescribed in the other āyah, according to the difference in the two interpretations about which was first. Both had a term in the words of the Prophet ﷺ in the hadith of ‘Ubādah ibn aṣ-Ṣāmit: ‘Take from me. Take from me. Allah has made a way for them: a hundred lashes and exile for a year for a virgin and a hundred lashes and stoning for someone previously married.’ This is like Allah’s words: ‘Fulfil the fast until the night appears.’ (2:187) When night comes, the ruling of fasting is removed; it is not abrogated. This is what is stated by accurate later scholars from among those who study fundamentals. Abrogation occurs when there are two contradictory positions which cannot be combined. It is possible to combine imprisonment and ignominy, and flogging and stoning.

Some scholars said that abuse and ignominy remain with flogging because they are not contradictory and can both be combined against the same person. There is consensus that imprisonment is abrogated. It is permissible to apply abrogation to the like of it. Allah knows best.

وَالَّذِينَ يَأْتِيهِمَا يَنْكُرُ فَأَذُوهُمْ إِنْ تَابَا وَأَصْلَحَا فَأَعْرِضُوا
عَنْهُمَا إِنَّ اللَّهَ كَانَ تَوَّابًا رَحِيمًا ﴿١٦﴾

16 If two men commit a like abomination, punish them. If they repent and reform, leave them alone. Allah is Ever-Returning, Most Merciful.

‘Two’ (alladhāni): it is the dual of alladhī. By analogy, one would say, ‘alladhayāni’ like raḥayāni, muṣṭafayāni and shajayāni. Sībawayh said that the yā’ is elided in order to differentiate between declinable nouns with nunnation and demonstrative pronouns. Abū ‘Alī said that the yā’ is elided for lightening when one is safe from confusion in alladhāni because the nūn is not elided, although the nūn of the dual in declinable nouns is elide when it is in iḍāfah in raḥayā, and muṣṭafayā. If the yā’ had been elided, it would have resembled the singular with two.

Ibn Kathīr recited ‘alladhānni’ with a doubled nūn which is the dialect of Quraysh. The reason is that the doubling takes the place of the alif of dhā as will be explained in al-Qaṣaṣ. (28:32) There is another dialect which has ‘alladhā’ with the nūn elided. This is the view of the Kufans. The Basrans said that the nūn is elided because of the length of the word when connected. Similar is the reading of ‘hadhānni’ and ‘fa-dhānnaka burhānāni’. The rest have ‘alladhāni’. Abū ‘Amr has the aberrant ‘fa-dhānnika’.

‘Two’ is in the nominative for the inceptive. Sībawayh says that it means: ‘in what is recited to you: if two men among you commit it (meaning fornication).’ The fā’ is added to ‘punish them’ because the words have the meaning of a command because when ‘alladhī’ is connected to a verb, it is possible for it to have the meaning of a precondition when nothing specific is applied to it. When a precondition is possible and nothing is defined, then it acts as a precondition and the fā' is added, and what is implied before it does not act on it, as the precondition is not affected by [what is implied or clearly stated before it. Then it is unlikely that what is implied before it acts on 'those', then the implication is not good.] The accusative is permitted when a verb is implied, and that is preferred when the words convey the meaning of a command or prohibition, like: 'Those who are with you: honour them.'

Qatādah and as-Suddī said that it means to rebuke and reproach. A group said that it is castigation and being harsh without reproach. Ibn 'Abbās said, 'It is attacking with the tongue and hitting with sandals.' An-Naḥḥās said that some people claim it is abrogated. Ibn Abī Najīḥ related that Mujāhid said that this and the previous āyah existed at the beginning and then were abrogated by the āyah in an-Nūr. An-Naḥḥās said that it more fitting that it is not abrogated and it is obliged to punish them with rebuke, saying, 'You committed this, sinned and opposed Allah's command.'

Scholars disagree about the interpretation of the prepositions 'they' (fem.) in the previous āyah and 'two' here. Mujāhid and others said that the first āyah is about women in general, muḥṣanāt or not. The second is about men in particular, and the dual makes the category of men clear, muḥṣan or not. The punishment of women is imprisonment and that of men is castigation. This is what the words demand and the words deal in full with the types of fornication. That is reinforced by what His words in the first, 'your women' and 'you' in the second. An-Naḥḥās preferred that and related it from Ibn 'Abbās.

As-Suddī, Qatādah and others said, 'The first is about muḥṣanāt women, and so includes men who are muḥṣan, and the second is about men and women who are virgins.' Ibn 'Aṭīyah said, 'According to this, the meaning is complete, although the expression of the āyah is unsettled about it.’ Aṭ-Ṭabarī preferred that but an-Naḥḥās rejected it, saying that it is unlikely that the feminine preposition would dominate the masculine.

It is said that a fornicatress is imprisoned rather than the man, but they are both castigated. Qatādah said, ‘A woman is imprisoned and both are castigated. This is because a man needs to earn and work.’ Scholars disagree about the position according to the hadith of ‘Ubādah which clarifies the rulings of fornication as we made clear. ‘Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib’s position, in which there is no dispute, was in agreement with it. He flogged Shurāḥah al-Hamdāniyyah with a hundred lashes and stoned her afterwards. He said, ‘I flogged her by the Book of Allah and stoned her by the sunnah of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ.’ Al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī, al-Ḥasan ibn Ṣāliḥ ibn Ḥayy and Ishāq said that.

A group of scholars said, ‘Someone previously married is stoned without being flogged.’ This is related from ‘Umar and is the position of az-Zuhrī, an-Nakha‘ī, Mālik, ath-Thawrī, al-Awzā‘ī, ash-Shāfi‘ī, the People of Opinion, Aḥmad and Abū Thawr, holding to the fact that the Prophet ﷺ stoned Mā‘iz and the Ghāmidīyyah woman without flogging them, and to what the Prophet ﷺ said to Unays, ‘Go to this woman and if she confesses, stone her.’ He did not mention flogging. If it had been prescribed, he would not have been silent about it. The response to that was that he was silent about it because it is confirmed by the Book of Allah. It is not impossible for him to have been silent about it since it was well known and there is a text on it in the Qur’an since Allah says: ‘A woman and a man who commit fornication: flog both of them with a hundred lashes.’ (24:2) This includes all fornicators. Allah knows best. This explains what ‘Alī did by adopting it from the caliphs and no one objected to it. The answer to this is that he acted by the abrogated and left the abrogating. This is clear.

They disagree about the exile of unmarried people in addition to flogging. The position of the majority is that they are exiled as well. The Rāshidūn caliphs, Abū Bakr, ‘Umar, ‘Uthmān and ‘Alī, said that. It is the position of ‘Aṭā’ Tāwus, Sufyān, Mālik, Ibn Abī Laylā, ash-Shāfi‘ī, Aḥmad, Ishāq and Abū Thawr. Ḥammād ibn Abī Sulaymān, Abū Ḥanīfah and Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥasan ash-Shaybānī said that it is abandoned. The evidence of the majority is the hadith of ‘Ubādah and that of Abū Hurayrah and Zayd ibn Khālīd in which the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘By the One who has my soul in His hand, I will decide between you two by the Book of Allah. Your sheep and slave-girl should be returned to you.’ He flogged his son with a hundred and exiled him for a year. The imams transmitted it.

Those who do not think that there should be exile use the hadith of Abū Hurayrah about the slave-girl in which flogging rather than exile is mentioned. ‘Abd ar-Razzāq mentioned from Ma‘mar from az-Zuhrī that Sa‘īd ibn al-Musayyab said, “Umar exiled Rabī‘ah ibn Abī Umayyah ibn Khalaf to Khaybar for drinking wine where he joined Heraclius and became a Christian. ‘Umar said, “I will not exile a Muslim after this.”” They said, ‘If exile had been a ḥadd punishment of Allah, ‘Umar would never have abandoned it. The text which is in the Book is flogging and increase beyond the text is abrogated.’

In reply to this, the hadith of Abū Hurayrah is about slave-girls, not free people. There is a sound report that ‘Abdullāh ibn ‘Umar beat his slave-girl for fornication and exiled her. As for the hadith of ‘Umar, he meant for wine, and Allah knows best, since Nāfi‘ related from Ibn ‘Umar that the Prophet ﷺ flogged and exiled as did Abū Bakr and ‘Umar. At-Tirmidhī in the Jāmi‘ and an-Nasā‘ī in the Sunan transmitted it from Abū Kurayb Muḥammad ibn al-‘Alā’ al-Hamdānī from ‘Abdullāh ibn Idrīs from ‘Ubaydullāh ibn ‘Umar from Nāfi‘. Ad-Dāraquṭnī said that ‘Abdullāh ibn Idrīs alone had it and the only reliable person who has it from him is Abū Kurayb.

Exile is reported in a sound transmission from the Prophet ﷺ, so no one can debate its validity. Whoever differs from the Sunnah argues with it. Success is by Allah.

What they said about increase over the text being abrogated is not sound. There can be an additional ruling to the basic one. There are many instances of this about things which are not in the Qur'an. This was discussed in al-Baqarah.

Those who disagree about exile do not do so about exiling free males. They disagree about exiling slaves or slave-girls. Ibn 'Umar was one of those who thought that they should be exiled: he flogged a slave-girl for fornication and exiled her to Fadak. It is the position of ash-Shāfi'ī, Abū Thawr, ath-Thawrī, aṭ-Ṭabarī and Dāwud. They disagree about ash-Shāfi'ī's position about exiling slaves. Sometimes he said that exiling slaves is subject to doing an istikhārah, sometimes he said that it is for half a year, and sometimes he said that it is a year to a different town, as aṭ-Ṭabarī said.

They have two positions about exiling slave-girls. Mālik said that men should be exiled but not women or slaves. The one who is exiled is detained in the place to which they are exiled, as from Egypt to the Hijaz, Shaghb, Aswan and the like, and from Madīnah to Khaybar and Fadak. That is what 'Umar ibn 'Abd al-'Azīz did, and 'Alī exiled people from Kufa to Basra. Ash-Shāfi'ī said that the minimum is the journey of a day and a night.

Ibn al-'Arabī said, 'The basis of exile is that the tribe of Ismā'īl agreed that someone who committed something wrong in the Ḥaram should be exiled from it and so that became a sunnah in their dīn. That is why the sunnah of the people was that when someone committed something wrong, they were exiled. That continued in the Jāhiliyyah until Islam came and then it was confirmed only in the case of fornication.'

Those who did not think that exile applied to slaves used the hadith of Abū Hurayrah as evidence. That is also because exile then becomes a punishment for the owner who is denied the use of the slave during the period of exile. That is not in keeping with the usage of the Sharī‘ah. None but the perpetrator should be punished. Allah knows best. Furthermore, Jumu‘ah, ḥajj and jihad which are Allah’s right are cancelled for him because of his master. The same is true of exile. Allah knows best.

When a woman is exiled, that could be a cause for her falling into the very thing she was expelled for, which is fornication. Exile might act as a cause of her being exposed and possibly ruin her. That was the reason for not letting her leave her house and for her praying in it being better. This restricts the generality of the hadith about exile to the aspect of welfare that is witnessed in it. It is a topic of disagreement among those who deal with uṣūl and thinkers. One group took an aberrant view and said that flogging and stoning are combined in the case of an old man while a young man is flogged. This is based on holding to the word ‘old man’ in the hadith of Zayd ibn Thābit who heard the Messenger of Allah ﷺ say, ‘When an old man and old woman fornicate, stone them completely.’ An-Nasā’ī transmitted it. This is unsound because in another hadith he called him ‘previously married (thayyib).’

If they repent and reform, leave them alone.

‘If they repent’ of fornication and ‘reform’ with respect to what they do afterwards, ‘leave them alone,’ meaning do not castigate them. That was before the revelation of the ḥadd punishments. When the ḥudūd were revealed, this āyah was abrogated. What is meant by ‘leave them alone’ is not emigration but being shunned and left alone. That is abasement for them because of their disobedience and because of the ignorance in the other āyah. Allah is Ever-Turning means that He makes His slaves turn back from acts of disobedience.

إِنَّمَا التَّوْبَةُ عَلَى اللَّهِ لِلَّذِينَ يَعْمَلُونَ السُّوءَ بِجَهْلَةٍ ثُمَّ يُتُوبُونَ مِنْ

17 Allah only accepts the repentance of those who do evil in ignorance and then quickly repent after doing it. Allah turns towards such people. Allah is All-Knowing, All-Wise. 18 There is no repentance for people who persist in doing evil until death comes to them and who then say, ‘Now I repent,’ nor for people who die unbelievers. We have prepared for them a painful punishment.

Allah only accepts the repentance of those who do evil in ignorance

This ayah is general to all who commit a wrong action. It is also said that it only applies to those who commit do evil in ignorance. Tawbah (repentance), however, is for everyone who does a wrong action. The Community agree that tawbah is obligatory for the believers since the Almighty says: ‘Turn to Allah, every one of you, O believers.’ (24:31) It rectifies a wrong action even if he does another one of a different type, which differs from the Mu‘tazilites who say that someone who does any other wrong action has not truly repented. There is no difference between one act of disobedience and another. This is the school of the people of the Sunnah.

When a person repents, Allah can accept it if he wishes or not accept it. It is not logically obligatory for Allah to accept repentance, as opponents state, because a precondition of an obligator is that it is necessarily higher than the rank of the object of the obligation. Allah created creation and is its King and the One who imposes responsibility and so cannot be described as there being anything obligatory on Him. He is exalted above that. Nonetheless He states that He fulfils His promise to accept repentance from those of His slaves who disobey when He says: 'It is He Who accepts repentance from His slaves and pardons evil acts' (42:25) and: 'Do they not know that Allah accepts repentance from His slaves' (9:104) and: 'But I am Ever-Forgiving to anyone who repents.' (20:82).

So He speaks about things which He makes obligatory on Himself while the belief is that nothing is logically obliged for him. As for what the words say, their literal expression indicates that He accepts the repentance of the one who repents. Abu-l-Ma'ālī and others said that the literal accords probability; it is not an absolute statement that Allah will accept repentance. Ibn 'Aṭīyah said, 'Abū 'l-Ma'ālī and others were opposed in their espousal of this meaning. If we assume that someone repents with sincerity and with all the preconditions necessary for it, according to Abu-l-Ma'ālī, it is only probable that his repentance be accepted. Others say that it is certain that Allah will accept it since He has reported this about Himself.' Ibn 'Aṭīyah said, 'My father inclined to this position and gave it predominance. It is also my position. Allah is too merciful to His slaves to break this promise to the one who repents, as He says: "It is He Who accepts repentance from His slaves" (42:25) and: "But I am Ever-Forgiving" (20:82).'

Since this is confirmed, know that this means that there is elision here and it is not taken literally. It means: 'It is from the bounty and mercy of Allah to His slaves.' This is similar to what the Prophet ﷺ said to Mu'ādh, 'Do you know the right that Allah's slaves have over Him?' He replied, 'Allah and His Messenger know best.' He said, 'That He admits them to the Garden.' This all means 'by His favour and mercy,' and it is a promise. The evidence is in His words: 'Allah has prescribed for himself mercy' (6:12), meaning He has promised it.

It is also said that the preposition 'alā here means 'with'. The meaning is the same. It means that Allah does not fail in His promise to accept repentance when four conditions are fulfilled:

regret in the heart, immediately abandoning the action, resolve not to return to the like of it, and that it arises from shame before Allah, not other people. If one of these conditions is lacking, then repentance is not sound. It is said that another of its conditions is admission of the wrong action and a lot of asking forgiveness. Many of the ideas and rulings about repentance were mentioned in Āl Imrān.

There is no disagreement that repentance does not rescind a ḥadd punishment. That is why our scholars said that if a male or female thief or slanderer repent but evidence against them is established, then the ḥadd punishment must still be carried out on them.

It is also said that the preposition ‘alā here means ‘from’, meaning that tawbah comes from Allah to those. Abū Bakr ibn ‘Abdūs said that. Allah knows best. Sincere repentance and the things for which repentance should be made will be discussed in at-Taḥrīm.

In the phrases ‘of those who do evil in ignorance’ and in ‘If anyone among you does evil out of ignorance’ (6:54) the word ‘evil’ includes both disbelief and disobedience. Anyone who disobeys his Lord is ignorant until he ceases his disobedience. Qatādah said, ‘The Companions of the Prophet ﷺ agreed that every act of disobedience is ignorance, whether intentional or out of ignorance.’ Ibn ‘Abbās, Qatādah, aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk, Mujāhid and as-Suddī said that. It is related that aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk and Mujāhid said that the ignorance meant here is intentional. ‘Ikrimah said, ‘All the matters of this world are ignorance,’ meaning in particular what is not obedience to Allah. This refers to the worlds of the Almighty: ‘The life of this world is merely a game and diversion.’ (47:36) Az-Zajjāj said that ‘ignorance’ here is their choosing passing pleasure over the lasting pleasure. It is said that ‘ignorance’ means not knowing the manner of punishment. Ibn Fūrak mentioned that, but Ibn ‘Aṭīyyah said it is weak and refuted.

and then quickly repent after doing it.

Ibn ‘Abbās and as-Suddī said that this means before a person’s final illness. It is related that aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk said, ‘All that occurs before death is quick.’ Abū Miljāz, aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk, ‘Ikrimah, Ibn Zayd and others said that it means before seeing the angels and drivers and before a person is overpowered. Maḥmūd al-Warrāq said some excellent verses on this:

Before you die and before tongues are stopped, send ahead hopeful repentance.

Hasten with it before breath is stopped.

It is a treasure and booty for the penitent good-doer.

Our scholars say that repentance is sound at this moment because hope still remains, and regret and resolve to reform is sound. At-Tirmidhī related from Ibn ‘Umar from the Prophet ﷺ, ‘Allah accepts the repentance of a person as long it is before the death rattle.’ He said that this is a ḥasan gharīb hadith. That is as long as his spirit has not reached his throat. So the position is where the rattle or gargling takes place as al-Harawī said.

It is also said that it means people should repent soon after the wrong action without persisting in it. It is better to do so when one is still healthy since there is then hope of performing righteous actions. The furthest distance is death. It is as is said:

[They say, ‘You are not far away’ as they are burying me.]

Where is distance except where I am.

Ṣāliḥ al-Murrī related that al-Ḥasan said, ‘Whoever faults his brother for a wrong action for which he repents to Allah, Allah will test him by it.’ Al-Ḥasan said, ‘When he fell Iblīs said, “By Your might, I will not leave the son of Ādam as long as his spirit is in his body.” Allah replied, “By My might, I will not veil repentance from the son of Ādam as long as he has not made his death rattle.”’

There is no repentance for people who persist in doing evil until death comes to them

Allah precludes those who are dying and despairing of life from being included under the judgment of repentance, as, for instance, was the case of Pharaoh when he was drowning. The faith he displayed did not help him. Repentance at that moment is of no use because it takes place after the removal of responsibility. That is what Ibn ‘Abbās, Ibn Zayd and the majority of commentators say.

As for the unbelievers who die in their disbelief, there is no possibility of repentance for them in the Next World, as Allah indicates to them when he says: ‘We have prepared for them a painful punishment,’ meaning for all eternity. Although the words indicate everyone, the punishment for the disobedient Muslim is not eternal. The same applies to all wrong actions short of disbelief. It means that repentance is possible for anyone who does evil deeds short of unbelief and then repents at death, but not for someone who is an unbeliever who repents on the Day of Rising. It is said that the evil here is unbelief and so it means: ‘There is no repentance for the unbelievers who repent at the time of death nor for those who die while they are unbelievers.’

Abu-I-‘Alīyah said, ‘The first āyah was revealed about the believers: “Allah only accepts the repentance,” and the second is about the hypocrites: “There is no repentance...”, meaning there is no acceptance of repentance from those who persist in their actions until they are dying and see the Angel of Death.’ Then his words, ‘Now I repent’ do not constitute repentance. The unbelievers will have a painful abiding punishment.

يَا أَيُّهَا الَّذِينَ آمَنُوا لَا يَحِلُّ لَكُمْ أَنْ تَرْتُوا النِّسَاءَ كَرْهًا
وَلَا تَعْضُلُوهُنَّ لِتَذْهَبُوا بِبَعْضِ مَاءِ اتِّبَتُّهُنَّ إِلَّا أَنْ يَأْتِيَنَّ بِغِيْشَةٍ
مُّبِينَةٍ ۝ وَعَاشِرُوهُنَّ بِالْمَعْرُوفِ فَإِنْ كَرِهْتُمُوهُنَّ فَعَسَى أَنْ تَكْرَهُوا

19 You who believe! it is not lawful for you to inherit women by force. Nor may you treat them harshly so that you can make off with part of what you have given them, unless they commit an act of flagrant indecency. Live together with them correctly and courteously. If you dislike them, it may well be that you dislike something in which Allah has placed a lot of good.

it is not lawful for you to inherit women by force.

This is connected to what was already mentioned about wives. What is meant is to prevent any injustice or harm to them. It is addressed to guardians. ‘An’ is in the nominative by ‘not lawful’, in other words, ‘it is not lawful for you to inherit women.’ ‘Karh’ is a verbal noun in the position of a ḥāl.

Various things are said about the reason for the revelation of this āyah. Al-Bukhārī reported about it from Ibn ‘Abbās: ‘When a man died, his guardians were entitled to his wife. If one of them wished, he could marry her, or give her in marriage or not give her in marriage. They were more entitled to her than her own family and so this āyah was revealed about that.’ Abū Dāwud transmitted it. Az-Zuhrī and Abū Mijlaz said, ‘Their custom when a man died was that when his son by another woman or the closest of his paternal relatives cast his garment on the wife, he became more entitled to her than herself and her guardians. He could marry her without any dowry other than the one she had been given by the deceased or marry her to another and take her dowry and not give her anything. If he wished, he could leave her in limbo until she ransomed herself with what she had inherited or until she died. So Allah revealed this.’ It means: ‘It is not lawful for you to inherit women from their husbands and become their husbands.’ It is said that if the heir arrived first and threw a garment on her, he was more entitled to her. If she reached her family first, then she was entitled to herself. As-Suddī said that.

It is said that if an old woman was married to a man and he desired a young woman and disliked leaving the old one because of her wealth, he would keep her and not go near her until she ransomed herself from him by her property or died so that he would inherit her wealth. This āyah was revealed and the husband ordered to divorce her if he disliked her company and not to keep her forcibly. That is the meaning of this āyah. What is meant by the āyah is to annul what they did in the Jāhiliyyah and not to treat women like property which could be inherited by men.

‘Force’ is read as karh by all except Ḥamzah and al-Kisā’ī who read it ‘kurh’. They are two dialectical forms. Al-Qutabī said that karh means force and kurh means hardship. It is said that it means doing that willingly or unwillingly.

The āyah is addressed to guardians. It is also said that it is addressed to the husbands of women when they retain them while at the same time treating them badly out of desire for their inheritance or wanting them to ransom themselves with some of their dowries. This is sounder, and preferred by Ibn ‘Aṭīyah. The proof of that is: ‘unless they commit an act of flagrant indecency.’ If they do that, then the guardian cannot keep them in order to exhaust their property: that is the consensus in the community. That is for the husband as will be explained further on.

nor may you treat them harshly

The meaning of ‘adl, which is prevention, was explained in al-Baqarah.

unless they commit an act of flagrant indecency.

People disagree about what is meant by this. Al-Ḥasan said, ‘It refers to fornication. If a virgin commits fornication, she is given a hundred lashes and exiled for a year and returns to her husband what she took from him.’ Abū Qilābah said, ‘If a man’s wife commits fornication, there is nothing wrong in harming her and constricting her until she ransoms herself.’ As-Suddī said, ‘If they do that, take their dowries.’ Ibn Sīrīn and Abū Qilābah said, ‘It is not lawful to take ransom from her unless he finds a man on her belly.’

Allah says: “unless they commit an act of flagrant indecency.” Ibn Mas‘ūd, Ibn ‘Abbās, ad-Ḍaḥḥāk and Qatādah said a flagrant act of indecency in this āyah means hatred and recalcitrance. They said, ‘When she refuses to fulfil her duties, her husband can take her property, and this is the school of Mālik.’ Ibn ‘Aṭīyyah said, ‘I do not have any text from him about the “act of flagrant indecency” referred to in the āyah.’

Some people said that fāḥishah here means foul language and bad company in respect of word and action. This is recalcitrance (nushūz). Some of the people of knowledge permit taking money from a disobedient wife in a khul‘ although he cannot exceed what he gave her since Allah says: ‘to make off with part of what you have given them.’ Mālik and another group of the people of knowledge said that a husband can take everything that a disobedient wife owns. Ibn ‘Aṭīyyah said, ‘Fornication is harder for the husband than disobedience and harm. Every fāḥishah renders taking property lawful.’

Abū ‘Umar said, ‘I consider the statement of Ibn Sīrīn and Abū Qilābah to be nothing because fāḥishah can be foul language and harm. Someone who uses foul language is called fāḥish. If an act of fāḥishah is committed, the husband can pronounce a li‘ān or simply divorce her. But he is not allowed to harm her to make her ransom herself from him with her money. I do not know of anyone who says that he can harm her and be bad to her so that she demands a khul‘ if he finds that she has fornicated – other than Abū Qilābah. Allah knows best.’

Allah says in Surah al-Baqarah: ‘If you fear that they will not remain within Allah’s limits’ (2:229). This means that in the event that there is no likelihood of the the couple maintaining good companionship and the husband respecting his wife’s rights over him and the wife respecting her husband’s rights over her: ‘There is nothing wrong in the wife ransoming herself.’ Allah also says: ‘If they are happy to give you some of it, make use of it with pleasure and goodwill.' (4:4) These āyahs give us the basic principles underlying this matter. Ibn 'Aṭā' al-Khurāsānī said, 'It used to be that if a man's wife committed adultery, he would take from her what he had given her and throw her out. That was abrogated by the ḥudūd.' A fourth position is that this means: 'unless they fornicate. If they do so, they are detained in their houses.' So this refers to the time before the abrogation and this is the same idea as the position of Ibn 'Aṭīyah. It is weak.

If we take the position that it is guardians who are addressed, then its fiqh is that, if it is proven that the guardian is unduly harsh, the Qāḍī investigates the business of a woman and her husband and he should only look at her as a father would at his daughters. If there is benefit in his preventing her marriage, he is not opposed in doing that. That is in relation to one or more marriage proposals. If it is proven that he is simply preventing her from marrying, there are two positions on it in the school of Mālīk. One is that he is like all guardians and the Qāḍī can marry off any of his daughters he wishes to, and the other is that he is not opposed in what he does.

The words 'Nor treat them harshly' can be jussive as a prohibition, and the wāw is then conjunctive, adding a sentence composed of words disconnected from the first sentence. It can also be in the accusative as joined to 'inherit' and so the wāw is shared, adding one verb to another. Ibn Mas'ūd recited 'walā taḍūlūhunna', a reading which strengthens the possibility of the accusative and the fact that it is a statement about 'adl' not being permitted.

Nāfi' and Abū 'Amr read 'clear' as 'mubayyinah' and 'mubayyanāt' in 24:34 and 46. Ibn 'Abbās reads 'mubīnah' from Form IV which is used for the thing being clear itself and for making it clear. All of these are eloquent dialectical usages.

Live together with them correctly and courteously

This means according to what Allah has commanded in terms of keeping good company. It is addressed to everyone since all keep company, whether they are husbands or guardians. The command, however, is directed particularly to husbands, as in Allah's words: 'retain them with correctness and courtesy.' (2:229) It means to give a wife full rights of dowry and maintenance and not to frown at her for no reason and to be cheerful in speech, not rude or harsh or showing inclination for another woman. 'Living together' refers to mixing together and socialising. Illustrating that are the words of Ṭarafah:

If the tract she travels in is sometimes far,

Perhaps the promise of the lover will be intimate.

He makes the lover like an associate and company. Āshara, mu'āsharah, is to consort with as ta'āshara describes people mixing together as does a'tashara.

Allah commands people to keep good company with women when a contract is made with them so that there is familiarity between them and perfect companionship. It is more calming for the self and better for life. This is a duty for the husband, but he is not obliged to make it up. One of them said, 'He should beautify himself for her as she does for him.' Yahyā ibn 'Abd ar-Raḥmān al-Ḥanẓalī said, 'I went to Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥanafīyah and he came out to me wearing a red mantle with perfume dripping from his beard. "What is this?" I asked. He replied, "This is a cloak which my wife put on me and she put perfume on me as well. They want of us what we want of them."' Ibn 'Abbās said, 'I want to adorn myself for my wife as I want my wife to adorn herself for me.' Ibn 'Aṭīyah said, 'For the meaning of the āyah, look at the words of the Prophet ﷺ, "Enjoy her even if there is some crookedness in her," meaning do not show bad companionship towards her even if she is crooked. That will produce opposition and end in a split. It is the reason for khul'.'

Scholars use the words as evidence that when one servant is not enough for a woman, her husband should provide her with servants commensurate with her social standing, as, for instance, in the case of the daughter of a caliph or king and those like them for whom one servant is not enough. That is living together correctly. Ash-Shāfi'ī and Abū Ḥanīfah said, 'He is only obliged to provide one servant. That will spare her serving herself. There is no woman in the world for whom one servant is not adequate. This is like someone who has a number of horses. He only gets the share of one horse because he can only fight on one horse.' Our scholars said, 'This is wrong because daughters of kings, who have many servants, are not satisfied by one servant because they need to have their clothes washed, their beds made and others things which require more than one.' This is clear and Allah knows best.

If you dislike them, it may well be that you dislike something in which Allah has placed a lot of good.

This dislike may come about because of ugliness or bad character that did not involve their committing an act of indecency or disobedience. In that case putting up with it is recommended. Perhaps the reason for that is that through her Allah will provide him with righteous children. This is indicated by something in Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim from Abū Hurayrah who reported that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, 'A believing man should not hate a believing woman. If he dislikes something in her character, he should be pleased with some other – or another – trait of hers.' It is said that it means that he should not hate her completely which might move him to divorce her. He should forgive her bad because of her good and overlook what he dislikes on account of what he likes. Makhūl said, 'I heard Ibn 'Umar say, "A man does the istikhārah, asking for good from Allah and He chooses for him, and then he is angry with his Lord. It is not long before he sees that in the end it is better for him.'"

Ibn al-'Arabī mentioned from Abu-l-Qāsim in Mahdia from Abu-l-Qāsim as-Sayūrī that Abū Bakr ibn 'Abd ar-Raḥmān said, 'Shaykh Abū Muḥammad ibn Abī Zayd had position and recognition with regard to knowledge and the dīn. He had a wife who was a bad companion and she was lax with respect to his rights and injured him with her tongue. People spoke to him about her and he was criticised for being patient with her. He used to say, “I am a man to whom Allah has given full blessing in the health of my body, recognition and what I own. Perhaps she was sent as a punishment for my wrong actions and I fear that if I divorce her a worse punishment may descend on me.”

Our scholars said, ‘This is evidence for the dislike of divorce even though it is permitted.’ It is related that the Prophet ﷺ said, ‘Allah does not dislike anything He has allowed except for divorce and eating. Allah dislikes full intestines.’

وَأِنْ أَرَدْتُمْ اسْتِبْدَالَ زَوْجٍ مَكَانَ زَوْجٍ وَءَأْتَيْتُمُوهُ لِاحِدٍ يُهْتَمُّ
 قِنْطَارًا فَلَا تَأْخُذُوا مِنْهُ شَيْئًا أَتَأْخُذُونَهُ بُهْتَانًا وَإِشْمًا مُّبِينًا ﴿٢٠﴾
 وَكَيْفَ تَأْخُذُونَهُ وَقَدْ أَفْضَى بَعْضُكُمْ إِلَى بَعْضٍ وَأَخَذْنَ
 مِنْكُمْ مِيثَاقًا غَلِيظًا ﴿٢١﴾

20 If you desire to exchange one wife for another and have given your original wife a large amount, do not take any of it. Would you take it by means of slander and outright crime? 21 How could you take it when you have been intimate with one another and they have made a binding contract with you?

Since the previous āyah dealt with the ruling of divorce instigated by the wife, and the husband taking property from her, Allah follows that by mentioning divorce instigated by the man. It is clear that He means divorce without there being disobedience or bad companionship and so he cannot ask her for any property.

Scholars disagree about what happens when a couple want to divorce and one of them displays bad companionship and disobedience. Mālik said that the husband can take from his wife if she instigates the divorce but does not mention [whether he can] when he instigates it. Most scholars say that that is not permitted to take money unless the disobedience is hers alone and she asks him and have given your original wife a large amount,

This āyah indicates the permission to give a large amount as a dowry because Allah would only use something permissible as an example. ‘Umar said in a speech, ‘Do not be excessive in the amount of a woman’s dowry. If she is noble in this world or in taqwā of Allah, the Messenger of Allah ﷺ would have been more entitled to that than you, and none of his wives or daughters was given a dowry of more than twelve ūqiyyahs.’ A woman got up and said, “Umar! Allah gives to us and you forbid us! Does not Allah say: “... and have given your original wife a large amount do not take any of it?”’ Umar said, ‘The woman is right and ‘Umar was wrong.’ In one variant, “Umar bowed his head and said, “Everyone has more understanding of fiqh than you, ‘Umar!’” Another has, ‘The woman is right and the man is wrong. Allah is the One from whom help is sought.’ He dropped his objection.

Abū Ḥātim al-Bustī transmitted with a sound isnād that Abu-l-‘Ajfā’ as-Sulamī said, “Umar said in a speech to the people...” as far as ‘more than twelve ūqiyyahs.’ He did not mention the woman standing up to address him. Ibn Mājah transmitted it in his Sunan from Abu-l-‘Ajfā’ and added after mentioning the ūqiyyahs continued, ‘A man may feel so burdened by his wife’s dowry that this engenders his animosity towards her and he says, “You cost me everything I own (lit. the strap of the water-skin or the sweat of the water-skin)!” I was an Arab man and did not know what was meant by the strap of the water-skin or the sweat of the water-skin.’ Al-Jawharī said that ‘strap (‘alaq) of a water-skin’ is a dialectical form of the sweat (‘araq) of a waterskin’.’ Someone else said that ‘alaq is the string which ties a water-skin. So he is saying, ‘You have cost me everything, even the string that ties the water-skin.’ ‘Araq is the liquid in a waterskin. One uses the expression in saying, ‘I tired myself out for us and imposed on myself until I sweated like a water-skin,’ meaning its flow. It is said that they used to provision themselves with water and tied it to camels to carry, and it was heavy on their backs. This explains both expressions.

Al-Aṣma'ī said, 'The sweat of a water-skin is an expression which conveys hardship. I do not know its origin.' Al-Aṣma'ī further said, 'I heard Ibn Abī Ṭarafah, one of the most eloquent men I have seen, say, "I heard our shaykhs say, 'I have met the sweat of the water-skin from so-and-so,' and he meant hardship." He quoted to me from Ibn Aḥmar:

It is not counted an insult, when her pardon
Is the sweat of the water-skin on a tired camel.

Abū 'Ubayd said, 'He means that he hears a word which angers him and is not an insult and the person is punished by it and for him it is like the sweat of a water-skin. He uses a different word for water-skin for the sake of the poem. Then he said 'a tired camel'. It is as if it means that the water-skins are hung on the camel in their journeys. This idea is like what al-Farrā' related. He claimed that in the desert on their journeys they stocked themselves with water and they would hand it on the camels and take it in turns. That entailed toil and hardship on the back. Al-Farrā' used this explanation in hanging water-skins with lām.

Some people say that it does not give permission to have excessive dowries because Allah uses the amount of a 'qinṭār' simply as an example, as if he saying, 'Even if you were to give this large amount which no one is given.' This is like the words of the Prophet ﷺ, 'Anyone who builds a mosque, even one the size of the nest of a sand grouse, Allah will build a house for him in the Garden.' It is known that there is no mosque the size of the nest of a sand grouse.

When Ibn Abī Ḥadrad came to the Prophet ﷺ to ask for his help with paying a dowry, the Prophet ﷺ asked him about it and he said that it was two hundred. The Prophet ﷺ became angry and said, 'It is as if you are cutting gold and silver from surface of al-Ḥarrah or a mountain.’ Certain people deduced from this that it is forbidden to give excessive dowries. This is not necessary. The Prophet ﷺ objected to this man, not as an objection to a large amount of dowry, but because he was poor in that state and needed to beg and ask for help. This is agreed to be disliked. ‘Umar gave Umm Kulthūm bint ‘Alī, the daughter of Fāṭimah, a dowry of 40,000 dirhams.

Abū Dāwud reported from ‘Uqbah ibn ‘Amr that the Prophet ﷺ asked a man, ‘Do you want me to marry you to so-and-so?’ ‘Yes,’ he replied. He said to the woman, ‘Do you want me to marry you to so-and-so?’ ‘Yes,’ she replied. So he married them to one another. The man consummated the marriage without allotting her a dowry and did not give her anything. He was one of those who had been at al-Ḥudaybiyah and had a share at Khaybar. When he died, he said, ‘The Messenger of Allah ﷺ married me to so-and-so and I did not allot her a dowry or give her anything. I testify that I have given her my share at Khaybar as her dowry.’ She took his share and sold it for 100,000.

Scholars agree that there is no limit on the maximum amount for a dowry because of this āyah. They disagree about its minimum. That will be discussed in āyah 24. The definition of qinṭār was mentioned in Āl ‘Imrān.

Ibn Muḥayṣin recited ‘ātaytumu-ḥdāhunna’ with the alif connected to ‘ihdāhunna’. It is a dialectical usage. [POEMS] do not take any of it.

Bakr ibn ‘Abdullāh al-Muzanī said, ‘The husband used not to take anything from the wife divorced by a khul‘ according to the words of Allah: “do not take.” Then it was abrogated by the āyah in al-Baqarah.’ Ibn Zayd and others said that it is abrogated by the words in al-Baqarah: ‘It is not lawful for you to keep anything you have given them.’ (2:229)

The sound position is that these āyahs are both āyahs of judgment and there is no abrogation or abrogated in them. They support one another. Aṭ-Ṭabarī says that it is an āyah of judgment and there is no sense to the words of Bakr. If you wish, it is about gifts, and the Prophet ﷺ allowed Thābit to take from his wife what he had given her.

How could you take it when you have been intimate with one another?

The reason for the prohibition against taking it back is that they have been intimate together. Someone said that ‘ifḍā’ (being intimate) is being with her under the same blanket, whether or not sexual intercourse took place. Al-Harawī related that and that is the position of al-Kalbī. Al-Farrā’ said that it refers to when a man has been alone with his wife and has had sexual intercourse with her. Ibn ‘Abbās, Mujāhid, as-Suddī and others said that in this āyah it means sexual intercourse. Ibn ‘Abbās said that Allah is noble and uses an allusion. The linguistic root of ifḍā’ is mixing together. A mixture is called ‘faḍā’. A poet said:

I said to her, ‘My aunt, you can have my she-camel.

It makes a mixture (faḍā) in my bag with raisins.

People who described as faḍwā are mixed together without a leader. Taking the meaning to be ‘being alone together’, even if there is no sexual intercourse, does that mean that the dowry is confirmed by that or not? Our scholars disagree about it, taking four positions: that it is confirmed by the simple fact of being alone together; that it is only confirmed by sexual intercourse; that it is confirmed by being alone in the house where a wife is given to her husband; and that there is a difference between her room and his room.

The sound position is that it is confirmed by simply being alone together. That is the position of Abū Ḥanīfah and his people. They say, ‘When he has been properly alone with her, the full dowry is obliged as well as ‘iddah, whether or not he consummates the marriage.’ That is based on what ad-Dāraquṭnī related from Thawbān that the Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, ‘Anyone who removes the veil of a woman and looks at her must pay the dowry.’ ‘Umar said, ‘When he closes the door, lowers the curtain and sees her private parts, payment of the dowry is obliged, she must observe ‘iddah and she inherits.’ ‘Alī said, ‘When he closes the door, lowers the curtain and sees her private parts, the payment of the dowry is obliged.’ Mālik said, ‘When he stays a long time with her, like a year, and they agree that there was no touching, and she asks for her full dowry, she has it.’ Ash-Shāfi‘ī said, ‘She has no ‘iddah and receives half the dowry.’ This was discussed in al-Baqarah.

they have made a binding contract with you

There are three things said about this. It is said that it is what is meant by the words of the Prophet ﷺ, ‘Fear Allah regarding women. You take them as a trust of Allah and you are allowed access to their private parts by the Word of Allah.’ ‘Ikrimah and ar-Rabī‘ said that. The second is that it refers to the words of the Almighty: ‘Wives may be retained with correctness and courtesy or released with good will.’ (2:229). Al-Ḥasan, Ibn Sīrīn, Qatādah, ad-Ḍaḥḥāk and as-Suddī said that. The third is that what is meant is a verbal contract of marriage where a man says, ‘I have married’ and ‘I have the marriage contract.’ Mujāhid and Ibn Zayd said that. Some people said that it is a child. Allah knows best.

وَلَا تَنْكِحُوا مَا نَكَحَ آبَاؤُكُمْ مِنَ النِّسَاءِ إِلَّا مَا قَدْ سَلَفَ
 إِنَّهُ كَانَ فَحِشَةً وَمَقْتًا وَسَاءَ سَبِيلًا ﴿٣١﴾

22 Do not marry any women whom your fathers married – except for what may have already taken place. That is an indecent act, a loathsome thing and an evil path.

Do not marry any women whom your fathers married

It is said that people used to marry their father’s wife with her permission after Allah revealed: ‘it is not lawful for you to inherit women by force.’ When this was revealed, it became unlawful in all cases, whether or not the marriage had been consummated, as the meaning of the term nikāḥ includes both the contract and sexual intercourse. When a father marries a woman or, indeed, has sexual intercourse with her outside marriage, she is unlawful to his son as will be explained.

In the words ‘whom your fathers married’, it said that ‘mā’ (tr. ‘whom’) here means women. It is said that it means the contract, in other words that such a marriage is void and contrary to the dīn of Allah since Allah has given judgment regarding the manner of marriage and detailed its preconditions. That is what aṭ-Ṭabarī prefers. ‘Min’ is connected to ‘marry’ and ‘mā nakaḥa’ is a verbal noun. He said that if it had meant ‘Do not marry women whom your fathers have married,’ it would be obliged to have “who” (man) and not “what” (mā). According to this, the prohibition is about marriage in the unsound manner of your fathers. The first is sounder, because ‘mā’ (what) can mean ‘man’ (who), and the Companions took it to mean that. From it is deduced the prohibition against sons marrying their fathers’ wives.

The custom of some Arab tribes was that a man’s son would marry his father’s wife. That was a binding practice among the Anṣār and permitted among Quraysh with mutual consent. ‘Amr ibn Umayyah married his father’s wife after his death and she bore him Musāfir and Abū Mu‘ayṭ, and she had Abu-l-‘Īṣ and others from Umayyah. The sons of Umayyah were both the brothers and uncles of Musāfir and Abū Mu‘ayṭ.

Another example of it is Ṣafwān ibn Umayyah ibn Khalaf who married his father’s wife, Fākhitah bint al-Aswad ibn al-Muṭṭallib ibn Asad. Umayyah was killed while married to her. Another example was Manẓūr ibn Zabbān who married Mulaykah bint Khārijah who had been married to his father, Zabbān ibn Zayyār. Another example is Ḥiṣn ibn Abī Qays who married his father’s wife, Kubaysha bint Ma‘n and al-Aswad ibn Khalaf who also married his father's wife.

Al-Ash'at ibn Sawwār said, 'Abū Qays died. He was one of the righteous men of the Anṣār. His son Qays proposed to his father's wife. She said, "I think of you as a son. I will go to the Messenger of Allah ﷺ to consult him about it," and she went to him and told him and Allah revealed this āyah.'

Some Arabs used to marry their daughters. One of them was Ḥājib ibn Zurārah who became a Magian and did this. That was mentioned by an-Naḍr ibn Shumayl in Kitāb al-Mathālib. Allah forbade the believers to follow this custom of their fathers.

except for what may have already taken place.

This is what has passed and gone. Salaf are your forefathers and relatives. This is an absolute exception, meaning 'avoid and leave what happened before.' It is said that 'except' means 'after', i.e. after what already happened. This usage is seen in Allah's words: 'They will not taste any death there – other (illā) than the first one.' (44:56) This means 'after the first death'. It is said that it means 'not what has already taken place' as in the words: 'A believer should never kill another believer unless (illā) it is by mistake,' (4:92) meaning not by mistake either. It is said that there is a change of order in the āyah and it means: 'Do not marry women your fathers married. It is indecent and an evil path, except for what already happened.'

It is said that the āyah contains an implication which means: if you do that, you will be punished for it, except for what was in the past.

That is an indecent act, a loathsome thing and an evil path.

This is a resulting grave censure which indicates that the forbidden action is very foul indeed. Abu-l-'Abbās said, 'I asked Ibn al-A'rabī about what a 'loathsome marriage' is. He answered, "It is that a man marries his father's wife when he divorces her or leaves her a widow. Such a man is called 'dayzan'."

Ibn 'Arafah said, 'When a man married his father's wife and she bore him a child, the child was called maqṭiyy.' The root of maqṭ means to be hateful from the verb, maqata, to hate. So the Arabs called a man who marries his father's wife 'maqit' (hated). Allah called this marriage 'maqt' (hateful and loathsome) since hatred is attached to the one who does it.

It is said that the meaning of the prohibition is forbidding a man from having sexual intercourse with any woman with whom his father had sexual intercourse, except for what happened in the past in the Jāhiliyyah in respect of women their fathers had fornicated with and were not actually married to. A son is permitted to marry a woman with whom his father fornicated and to have lawful sex in marriage with her. Ibn Zayd said that. He believes that the exception is connected and that it is a basic principle that fornication does not make someone unlawful as will be explained. Allah knows best.

Allah is not unaware of what you do.'](#)
 2. 100 You who believe! if you obey a group of those given the Book, they will make you revert to unbelievers after you have believed.
 3. 101 How can you disbelieve, when Allah's Signs are recited to you and the Messenger is there among you? Whoever holds fast to Allah has been guided to a straight path.
 4. 102 You who believe! have taqwā of Allah with the taqwā due to Him and do not die except as Muslims.
 5. 103 Hold fast to the rope of Allah all together, and do not separate. Remember Allah's blessing to you when you were enemies and He joined your hearts together so that you became brothers by His blessing. You were on the very brink of a pit of the Fire and He rescued you from it. In this way Allah makes His Signs clear to you, so that hopefully you will be guided.

6. 104 Let there be a community among you who call to the good, and enjoin the right, and forbid the wrong. They are the ones who have success.
7. 105 Do not be like those who split up and differed after the Clear Signs came to them. They will have a terrible punishment
8. 106 on the Day when faces are whitened and faces are blackened. As for those whose faces are blackened: ‘What! Did you disbelieve after having believed? Taste the punishment for your unbelief!’
107 As for those whose faces are whitened, they are in Allah’s mercy, remaining in it timelessly, for ever.
9. 108 These are Allah’s Signs which We recite to you with truth. Allah desires no wrong for any being.
109 Everything in the heavens and everything in the earth belongs to Allah. All matters return to Allah.
10. 110 You are the best nation ever to be produced before mankind. You enjoin the right, forbid the wrong and believe in Allah. If the People of the Book were to believe, it would be better for them. Some of them are believers but most of them are deviators.
11. 111 They will not harm you except with abusive words. If they fight you, they will turn their backs on you. Then they will not be helped.
12. 112 They will be plunged into abasement wherever they are found, unless they have a treaty with Allah and with the people. They have brought down anger from Allah upon themselves, and they have been plunged into destitution. That was because they rejected Allah's Signs and killed the Prophets without any right to do so. That was because they disobeyed and went beyond the limits. 113 They are not all the same. There is a community among the People of the Book who are upright. They recite Allah's Signs throughout the night, and they prostrate. 114 They believe in Allah and the Last Day, and enjoin the right and forbid the wrong, and compete in doing good. They are among the righteous. 115 You will not be denied the reward for any good thing you do. Allah knows those who have taqwā.

13. 116 As for those who disbelieve, their wealth and children will not help them against Allah in any way. They are the Companions of the Fire, remaining in it timelessly, forever.
14. 117 The metaphor of what they spend in their life in this world is that of a wind with an icy bite to it which strikes the crops of a people who have wronged themselves and destroys them. Allah did not wrong them; rather it was themselves they were wronging.
15. 118 You who believe, do not take any outside yourselves as intimates. They will do anything to harm you. They love what causes you distress. Hatred has appeared out of their mouths, but what their breasts hide is far worse. We have made the Signs clear to you if you use your intellect.
16. 119 There you are, loving them when they do not love you, even though you believe in all the Books. When they meet you, they say, 'We believe.' But when they leave they bite their fingers out of rage against you. Say, 'Die in your rage.' Allah knows what your hearts contain.

17. 120 If something good happens to you, it galls them. If something bad strikes you, they rejoice at it. But if you are steadfast and godfearing, their scheming will not harm you in any way. Allah encompasses what they do.
18. 121 Remember when you left your family early in the day to install the believers in their battle stations. Allah is All-Hearing, All-Knowing.
19. 122 And remember when two of your clans were on the point of losing heart and Allah was their Protector. Let the believers put their trust in Allah.
20. 123 Allah helped you at Badr when you were weak so have taqwā of Allah, so that hopefully you will be thankful. 124 And when you said to the believers, 'Is it not enough for you that your Lord reinforced you with three thousand angels, sent down?' 125 Yes indeed! But if you are steadfast and are godfearing and they come upon you suddenly, your Lord will reinforce you with five thousand angels, clearly identified.
21. 126 Allah only did this for it to be good news for you and so that your hearts might be set at rest by it (help comes from no one but Allah, the Almighty, the All-Wise) 127 and so that He might cut off a group of those who disbelieve or crush them and they might be turned back in defeat.
22. 128 You have no part in the affair. Either He will turn towards them or He will punish them, for they are wrongdoers. 129 Everything in the heavens and

- everything in the earth belongs to Allah. He forgives whoever He wills and punishes whoever He wills. Allah is Ever-Forgiving, Most Merciful.
23. 130 You who believe, do not feed on usury, multiplied and then remultiplied. Have taqwā of Allah so that hopefully you will be successful. 131 Have fear of the Fire which has been prepared for the unbelievers. 132 Obey Allah and the Messenger so that hopefully you will gain mercy.
 24. 133 Race each other to forgiveness from your Lord and a Garden as wide as the heavens and the earth, prepared for the godfearing:
 25. 134 those who give in times of both ease and hardship, those who control their rage and pardon other people – Allah loves the good-doers –
 26. 135 those who, when they act indecently or wrong themselves, remember Allah and ask forgiveness for their bad actions (and who can forgive bad actions except Allah?) and do not knowingly persist in what they were doing.
 27. 136 Their recompense is forgiveness from their Lord, and Gardens with rivers flowing under them, remaining in them timelessly, for ever. How excellent is the reward of those who act!
 28. 137 Whole societies have passed away before your time, so travel about the earth and see the final fate of the deniers.
 29. 138 This is a clear explanation for all mankind, and guidance and admonition for those who are godfearing.
 30. 139 Do not give up and do not be downhearted. You shall be uppermost if you are believers.

31. 140 If you have received a wound, they have already received a similar wound. We deal out such days to people turn by turn, so that Allah will know those who believe and can gather martyrs from among you – Allah does not love wrongdoers –
32. 141 and so that Allah can purge those who believe and wipe out the unbelievers.
33. 142 Or did you imagine that you were going to enter the Garden without Allah knowing those among you who had struggled and knowing the steadfast?
34. 143 You were longing for death before you met it. Now you have seen it with your own eyes.
35. 144 Muḥammad is only a Messenger and he has been preceded by other Messengers. If he were to die or be killed, would you turn on your heels? Those who turn on their heels do not harm Allah in any way. Allah will recompense the thankful.
36. 145 No self can die except with Allah's permission, at a predetermined time. If anyone desires the reward of this world, We will give him some of it. If anyone desires the reward of the Next World, We will give him some of it. We will recompense the thankful.
37. 146 Many a Prophet has been killed, when there were many thousands with him! They did not give up in the face of what assailed them in the Way of Allah, nor did they weaken, nor did they yield. Allah loves the steadfast. 147 All they said was, 'Our Lord, forgive us our wrong actions and any excesses we went to in what we did and make our feet firm and help us against these unbelieving people.'

38. 148 So Allah gave them the reward of this world and the best reward of the Next World. Allah loves good-doers.
39. 149 You who believe! if you obey those who disbelieve, they will turn you round on your heels and you will be transformed into losers. 150 No, Allah is your Protector. And He is the best of helpers.
40. 151 We will cast terror into the hearts of those who disbelieve because they have associated others with Allah for which He has not sent down any authority. Their shelter will be the Fire. How evil is the abode of the wrongdoers!
41. 152 Allah fulfilled His promise to you when you were slaughtering them by His permission. But then you faltered, disputing the command, and disobeyed after He showed you what you love. Among you are those who want this world and among you are those who want the Next World. Then He turned you from them in order to test you – but He has pardoned you. Allah shows favour to the believers.
42. 153 Remember when you were scrambling up the slope, refusing to turn back for anyone, and the Messenger was calling to you from the rear. Allah rewarded you with one distress in return for another so you would not feel grief for what escaped you or what assailed you. Allah is aware of what you do.
43. 154 Then He sent down to you, after the distress, security, restful sleep overtaking a group of you, whereas another group became prey to anxious thoughts, thinking other than the truth about Allah – thoughts belonging to the Time of Ignorance – saying, 'Do we have any say in the affair at all?' Say, 'The affair belongs entirely to Allah.' They are concealing things inside themselves which they do not disclose to you, saying, 'If we had only had a say in the affair, none of us would have been killed here in this place.' Say, 'Even if you had been inside your homes, those people for whom being killed was decreed would have gone out to their place of death.' So that Allah might test what is in your breasts and purge what is in your hearts. Allah knows the contents of your hearts.

44. 155 Those of you who turned their backs on the day the two armies clashed – it was Shayṭān who made them slip for what they had done. But Allah has pardoned them. Allah is Ever-Forgiving, All-Forbearing.
45. 156 You who believe! do not be like those who disbelieve and say of their brothers, when they are going on journeys or military expeditions, 'If they had only been with us, they would not have died or been killed,' so that Allah can make that anguish for them in their hearts. It is Allah Who gives life and causes to die. Allah sees what you do.
46. 157 If you are killed in the Way of Allah or if you die, forgiveness and mercy from Allah are better than anything you can acquire. 158 If you die or you are killed, it is to Allah that you will be gathered.
47. 159 It is a mercy from Allah that you were gentle with them. If you had been rough or hard of heart, they would have scattered from around you. So pardon them and ask forgiveness for them, and consult with them about the matter. Then when - you have reached a firm decision, put your trust in Allah. Allah loves those who put their trust in Him.

48. 160 If Allah helps you, no one can vanquish you. If He forsakes you, who can help you after that? So the believers should put their trust in Allah.
49. 161 No Prophet would ever be guilty of misappropriation. Those who misappropriate will arrive on the Day of Rising with what they have misappropriated. Then every self will be paid in full for what it earned. They will not be wronged.
50. 162 Is someone who pursues the pleasure of Allah the same as someone who incurs displeasure from Allah and whose refuge is Hell? What an evil destination! 163 They have different ranks with Allah. Allah sees what they do.
51. 164 Allah showed great kindness to the believers when He sent a Messenger to them from among themselves to recite His Signs to them and purify them and teach them the Book and Wisdom, even though before that they were clearly misguided.
52. 165 Why is it that when a calamity happens to you, when you have already inflicted twice as much, you say, 'How could this possibly happen?' Say, 'It has come from your own selves.' Allah has power over all things.
53. 166 What assailed you on the day the two armies met was by Allah's permission, so that He would know the believers, 167 and so that He would know the hypocrites. They were told, 'Come and fight in the Way of Allah or at least help defend us.' They said, 'If we knew that there would be a fight, we would certainly follow you.' They were closer to

- unbelief that day than to belief, saying with their mouths what was not in their hearts. And Allah knows best what they are hiding.
54. 168 They are those who said of their brothers, when they themselves had stayed behind, 'If they had only obeyed us, they would not have been killed.' Say, 'Then ward off death from yourselves if you are telling the truth.'
55. 169 Do not suppose that those killed in the Way of Allah are dead. No indeed! They are alive and well provided for in the very presence of their Lord, 170 delighting in the favour Allah has bestowed on them, rejoicing over those they left behind who have not yet joined them, feeling no fear and knowing no sorrow,
56. 171 rejoicing in blessings and favour from Allah and that Allah does not let the wage of the believers go to waste.
57. 172 Those who did good and were godfearing, among those who responded to Allah and the Messenger after the wound had been inflicted, will have an immense reward:
58. 173 those to whom people said, 'The people have gathered against you, so fear them.' But that merely increased their belief and they said, 'Allah is enough for us and the Best of Guardians.'
59. 174 So they returned with blessings and bounty from Allah and no evil touched them. They pursued the pleasure of Allah. Allah's favour is indeed immense.
60. 175 It was only Shayṭān frightening you through his friends. But do not fear them – fear Me if you are believers.

61. 176 Do not let those who rush headlong into unbelief sadden you. They do not harm Allah in any way. Allah desires to assign no portion to them in the Next World. They will have a terrible punishment.
62. 177 Those who sell belief for unbelief do not harm Allah in any way.
63. 178 Those who disbelieve should not imagine that the extra time We grant to them is good for them. We only allow them more time so they will increase in evildoing. They will have a humiliating punishment.
64. 179 Allah will only leave the believers in the position you now are in so that He can sift out the rotten from the good. Allah has not given you access to the Unseen. But Allah chooses those of His Messengers whom He wills. So believe in Allah and His Messengers. If you believe and are godfearing you will have an immense reward.
65. 180 Those who are tight-fisted with the bounty Allah has given them should not suppose that that is better for them. No indeed, it is worse for them! What they were tight-fisted with will be hung around their necks on the Day of Rising. Allah is the inheritor of the heavens and the earth and Allah is aware of what you do.
66. 181 Allah has heard the words of those who say, 'Allah is poor and we are rich.' We will write down what they said and their killing of the Prophets without any right to do so and We will say, 'Taste the

- punishment of the Burning.’ 182 That is on account of what you did. Allah does not wrong His slaves.
67. 183 Those who say, ‘Allah has made a contract with us that we should not believe in any Messenger until he brings us a sacrifice consumed by fire.’ Say, ‘Messengers came to you before me with the Clear Signs and with what you say. So why did you kill them if you are telling the truth?’ 184 If they deny you, Messengers before you were also denied, who brought the Clear Signs and written texts and the illuminating Book.
68. 185 Every self will taste death. You will be paid your wages in full on the Day of Rising. Anyone who is distanced from the Fire and admitted to the Garden has triumphed. The life of this world is just the enjoyment of delusion.
69. 186 You will be tested in your wealth and in yourselves and you will hear many abusive words from those given the Book before you and from those who are idolaters. But if you are steadfast and godfearing, that is the most resolute course to take.
70. 187 Allah made a covenant with those given the Book: ‘You must make it clear to people and not conceal it.’ But they toss it in disdain behind their backs and sell it for a paltry price. What an evil sale they make!
71. 188 Those who exult in what they have done and love to be praised for what they have not done should not suppose that they have escaped the punishment. They will have a painful punishment.
72. 189 The kingdom of the heavens and earth belongs to Allah. Allah has power over all things.

73. 190 In the creation of the heavens and the earth, and the alternation of night and day, there are Signs for people with intelligence: 191 those who remember Allah, standing, sitting and lying on their sides, and reflect on the creation of the heavens and the earth: ‘Our Lord, You have not created this for nothing. Glory be to You! So safeguard us from the punishment of the Fire. 192 Our Lord, those You cast into the Fire, You have indeed disgraced. The wrongdoers will have no helpers. 193 Our Lord, we heard a caller calling us to belief: ‘Believe in your Lord!’, and we believed. Our Lord, forgive us our wrong actions, erase our bad actions from us and take us back to You with those who are truly good. 194 Our Lord, give us what You promised us through Your Messengers, and do not disgrace us on the Day of Rising. You do not break Your promise.’ 195 Their Lord responds to them: ‘I will not let the deeds of any doer among you go to waste, male or female – you are both the same in that respect. Those who made hijrah and were driven from their homes and suffered harm in My Way and fought and were killed, I will erase their bad actions from them and admit them into Gardens with rivers flowing under them, as a reward from Allah. The best of all rewards is with Allah.’ 196 Do not be deceived by the fact that those who disbelieve move freely about the earth. 197 A brief enjoyment; then their shelter will be Hell. What an evil resting-place! 198 But those who have taqwā of their Lord will have Gardens with rivers flowing under them, remaining in them timelessly, for ever: hospitality from Allah.

What is with Allah is better for those who are truly good. 199 Among the people of the Book there are some who believe in Allah and in what has been sent down to you and what was sent down to them, and who are humble before Allah. They do not sell Allah's Signs for a paltry price. Such people will have their reward with their Lord. And Allah is swift at reckoning. 200 You who believe, be steadfast; be supreme in steadfastness; be firm on the battlefield; and have taqwa of Allah; so that hopefully you will be successful.

3. 4. Sūrat an-Nisā' – Women

1. 1 O mankind, have taqwā of your Lord who created you from a single self and created its mate from it and then disseminated many men and women from the two of them. Have taqwā of Allah in whose name you make demands on one another and also in respect of your families. Allah watches over you continually.
1. 2 Give orphans their property, and do not substitute bad things for good. Do not assimilate their property into your own. Doing that is a serious crime.
2. 3 If you are afraid of not behaving justly towards orphans, then marry other permissible women, two, three or four. But if you are afraid of not treating them equally, then only one, or those you own as slaves. That makes it more likely that you will not be unfair.
3. 4 Give women their dowries as an outright gift. But if they are happy to give you some of it, consume it with pleasure and goodwill.

4. 5 Do not hand over to the incompetent any property of theirs for which Allah has made you responsible, but provide for them and clothe them out of it, and speak to them correctly and courteously.
5. 6 Keep a close check on orphans until they reach a marriageable age, then if you perceive that they have sound judgment hand over their property to them. Do not consume it extravagantly and precipitately before they come of age. Those who are wealthy should abstain from it altogether. Those who are poor should use it sensibly and correctly. When you hand over their property to them ensure that there are witnesses on their behalf. Allah suffices as a Reckoner.
6. 7 Men receive a share of what their parents and relatives leave and women receive a share of what their parents and relatives leave, a fixed share, no matter whether it is a little or a lot.
7. 8 If other relatives or orphans or poor people attend the sharing-out, provide for them out of it and speak to them correctly and courteously.
8. 9 People should show concern in the same way that they would fear for small children if they were to die leaving them behind. They should have taqwā of Allah and say words that are appropriate.
9. 10 People who consume the property of orphans wrongfully consume nothing in their bellies except fire. They will roast in a Searing Blaze.
10. 11 Allah instructs you regarding your children: A male receives the same as the share of two females. If there are more than two daughters they receive two-thirds of what you leave. If she is one on her own she receives a half. Each of your parents receives a sixth of what you leave if you have children. If you are childless and your heirs are your parents your mother receives a third. If you have brothers or sisters your mother receives a sixth, after any bequest you make or any debts. With regard to your fathers and your sons, you do not know which of them is going to benefit you more. These are obligatory shares from Allah. Allah is All-Knowing, All-Wise. 12 You receive half of what your wives leave if they are childless. If they have children you receive a quarter of what they leave after any bequest they make or any debts. They receive a quarter of what you leave if you are childless. If you have children they receive an eighth of what you leave after any bequest you make or any debts. If a man or woman has no direct heirs, but has a brother or sister, each of them receives a sixth. If there are more than that they share in a third after any bequest you make or any debts, making sure that no one's rights are prejudiced. This is an instruction from Allah. Allah is All-Knowing, All-Forbearing. 13 These are Allah's limits. As for those who obey Allah and His Messenger, We will admit them into Gardens with rivers flowing under them, remaining in them timelessly, for ever. That is the Great Victory. 14 As for those who disobey Allah and His Messenger and overstep His limits, We will admit them into a Fire, remaining in it timelessly, for ever. They will have a humiliating punishment.

11. 15 If any of your women commit fornication, four of you must be witnesses against them. If they bear witness, detain them in their homes until death releases them or Allah ordains another procedure for their case.
12. 16 If two men commit a like abomination, punish them. If they repent and reform, leave them alone. Allah is Ever-Returning, Most Merciful.
13. 17 Allah only accepts the repentance of those who do evil in ignorance and then quickly repent after doing it. Allah turns towards such people. Allah is All-Knowing, All-Wise. 18 There is no repentance for people who persist in doing evil until death comes to them and who then say, 'Now I repent,' nor for people who die unbelievers. We have prepared for them a painful punishment.
14. 19 You who believe! it is not lawful for you to inherit women by force. Nor may you treat them harshly so that you can make off with part of what you have given them, unless they commit an act of flagrant indecency. Live together with them correctly and courteously. If you dislike them, it may well be that you dislike something in which Allah has placed a lot of good.
15. 20 If you desire to exchange one wife for another and have given your original wife a large amount, do not take any of it. Would you take it by means of slander and outright crime? 21 How could you take it when you have been intimate with one another and they have made a binding contract with you?
16. 22 Do not marry any women whom your fathers married – except for what may have already taken place. That is an indecent act, a loathsome thing and an evil path.

3. Sūrah Āl 'Imrān – The Family of 'Imrān 96 – 200	7
96 The first House established for mankind was that at Bakkah, a place of blessing and a guidance for all beings. 97 In it are Clear Signs – the Maqām of Ibrāhīm. All who enter it are safe. Ḥajj to the House is a duty owed to Allah by all mankind – those who can find a way to do it. But if anyone disbelieves, Allah is Rich Beyond Need of any being.	7
98 Say, 'People of the Book, why do you reject Allah's Signs when Allah is witness of everything you do?' 99 Say, 'People of the Book, why do you bar those who believe from the Way of Allah, desiring to make it crooked, when you yourselves are witnesses to it? Allah is not unaware of what you do.'	29
100 You who believe! if you obey a group of those given the Book, they will make you revert to unbelievers after you have believed.	30
101 How can you disbelieve, when Allah's Signs are recited to you and the Messenger is there among you? Whoever holds fast to Allah has been guided to a straight path.	31
102 You who believe! have taqwā of Allah with the taqwā due to Him and do not die except as Muslims.	32
103 Hold fast to the rope of Allah all together, and do not separate. Remember Allah's blessing to you when you were enemies and He joined your hearts together so that you became brothers by His blessing. You were on the	33

very brink of a pit of the Fire and He rescued you from it. In this way Allah makes His Signs clear to you, so that hopefully you will be guided.

104 Let there be a community among you who call to the good, and enjoin the right, and forbid the wrong. They are the ones who have success. 42

105 Do not be like those who split up and differed after the Clear Signs came to them. They will have a terrible punishment 43

106 on the Day when faces are whitened and faces are blackened. As for those whose faces are blackened: ‘What! Did you disbelieve after having believed? Taste the punishment for your unbelief!’ 107 As for those whose faces are whitened, they are in Allah’s mercy, remaining in it timelessly, for ever. 44

108 These are Allah’s Signs which We recite to you with truth. Allah desires no wrong for any being. 109 Everything in the heavens and everything in the earth belongs to Allah. All matters return to Allah. 47

110 You are the best nation ever to be produced before mankind. You enjoin the right, forbid the wrong and believe in Allah. If the People of the Book were to believe, it would be better for them. Some of them are believers but most of them are deviators. 48

111 They will not harm you except with abusive words. If they fight you, they will turn their backs on you. Then they will not be helped. 53

112 They will be plunged into abasement wherever they are found, unless they have a treaty with Allah and with the people. They have brought down anger from Allah upon themselves, and they have been plunged into 54

destitution. That was because they rejected Allah's Signs and killed the Prophets without any right to do so. That was because they disobeyed and went beyond the limits.

113 They are not all the same. There is a community among the People of the Book who are upright. They recite Allah's Signs throughout the night, and they prostrate. 114 They believe in Allah and the Last Day, and enjoin the right and forbid the wrong, and compete in doing good. They are among the righteous. 115 You will not be denied the reward for any good thing you do. Allah knows those who have taqwā.

116 As for those who disbelieve, their wealth and children will not help them against Allah in any way. They are the Companions of the Fire, remaining in it timelessly, forever. 58

117 The metaphor of what they spend in their life in this world is that of a wind with an icy bite to it which strikes the crops of a people who have wronged themselves and destroys them. Allah did not wrong them; rather it was themselves they were wronging. 58

118 You who believe, do not take any outside yourselves as intimates. They will do anything to harm you. They love what causes you distress. Hatred has appeared out of their mouths, but what their breasts hide is far worse. We have made the Signs clear to you if you use your intellect. 59

119 There you are, loving them when they do not love you, even though you believe in all the Books. When they meet you, they say, 'We believe.' But when they leave they bite their fingers out of rage against you. Say, 'Die in your rage.' Allah knows what your hearts contain. 63

120 If something good happens to you, it galls them. If 65

something bad strikes you, they rejoice at it. But if you are steadfast and godfearing, their scheming will not harm you in any way. Allah encompasses what they do.

121 Remember when you left your family early in the day to install the believers in their battle stations. Allah is All-Hearing, All-Knowing. 66

122 And remember when two of your clans were on the point of losing heart and Allah was their Protector. Let the believers put their trust in Allah. 68

123 Allah helped you at Badr when you were weak so have taqwā of Allah, so that hopefully you will be thankful. 124 And when you said to the believers, ‘Is it not enough for you that your Lord reinforced you with three thousand angels, sent down?’ 125 Yes indeed! But if you are steadfast and are godfearing and they come upon you suddenly, your Lord will reinforce you with five thousand angels, clearly identified. 74

126 Allah only did this for it to be good news for you and so that your hearts might be set at rest by it (help comes from no one but Allah, the Almighty, the All-Wise) 127 and so that He might cut off a group of those who disbelieve or crush them and they might be turned back in defeat. 83

128 You have no part in the affair. Either He will turn towards them or He will punish them, for they are wrongdoers. 129 Everything in the heavens and everything in the earth belongs to Allah. He forgives whoever He wills and punishes whoever He wills. Allah is Ever-Forgiving, Most Merciful. 85

130 You who believe, do not feed on usury, multiplied and then remultiplied. Have taqwā of Allah so that 89

- hopefully you will be successful. 131 Have fear of the Fire which has been prepared for the unbelievers. 132 Obey Allah and the Messenger so that hopefully you will gain mercy.
- 133 Race each other to forgiveness from your Lord and a Garden as wide as the heavens and the earth, prepared for the godfearing: 91
- 134 those who give in times of both ease and hardship, those who control their rage and pardon other people – Allah loves the good-doers – 94
- 135 those who, when they act indecently or wrong themselves, remember Allah and ask forgiveness for their bad actions (and who can forgive bad actions except Allah?) and do not knowingly persist in what they were doing. 98
- 136 Their recompense is forgiveness from their Lord, and Gardens with rivers flowing under them, remaining in them timelessly, for ever. How excellent is the reward of those who act! 107
- 137 Whole societies have passed away before your time, so travel about the earth and see the final fate of the deniers. 108
- 138 This is a clear explanation for all mankind, and guidance and admonition for those who are godfearing. 109
- 139 Do not give up and do not be downhearted. You shall be uppermost if you are believers. 109
- 140 If you have received a wound, they have already received a similar wound. We deal out such days to people turn by turn, so that Allah will know those who believe and can gather martyrs from among you – Allah does not love wrongdoers – 110
- 141 and so that Allah can purge those who believe and 113

wipe out the unbelievers.

142 Or did you imagine that you were going to enter the Garden without Allah knowing those among you who had struggled and knowing the steadfast? 113

143 You were longing for death before you met it. Now you have seen it with your own eyes. 114

144 Muḥammad is only a Messenger and he has been preceded by other Messengers. If he were to die or be killed, would you turn on your heels? Those who turn on their heels do not harm Allah in any way. Allah will recompense the thankful. 115

145 No self can die except with Allah's permission, at a predetermined time. If anyone desires the reward of this world, We will give him some of it. If anyone desires the reward of the Next World, We will give him some of it. We will recompense the thankful. 121

146 Many a Prophet has been killed, when there were many thousands with him! They did not give up in the face of what assailed them in the Way of Allah, nor did they weaken, nor did they yield. Allah loves the steadfast. 123

147 All they said was, 'Our Lord, forgive us our wrong actions and any excesses we went to in what we did and make our feet firm and help us against these unbelieving people.'

148 So Allah gave them the reward of this world and the best reward of the Next World. Allah loves good-doers. 127

149 You who believe! if you obey those who disbelieve, they will turn you round on your heels and you will be transformed into losers. 150 No, Allah is your Protector. And He is the best of helpers. 127

151 We will cast terror into the hearts of those who 128

disbelieve because they have associated others with Allah for which He has not sent down any authority. Their shelter will be the Fire. How evil is the abode of the wrongdoers!

152 Allah fulfilled His promise to you when you were slaughtering them by His permission. But then you faltered, disputing the command, and disobeyed after He showed you what you love. Among you are those who want this world and among you are those who want the Next World. Then He turned you from them in order to test you – but He has pardoned you. Allah shows favour to the believers. 129

153 Remember when you were scrambling up the slope, refusing to turn back for anyone, and the Messenger was calling to you from the rear. Allah rewarded you with one distress in return for another so you would not feel grief for what escaped you or what assailed you. Allah is aware of what you do. 136

154 Then He sent down to you, after the distress, security, restful sleep overtaking a group of you, whereas another group became prey to anxious thoughts, thinking other than the truth about Allah – thoughts belonging to the Time of Ignorance – saying, ‘Do we have any say in the affair at all?’ Say, ‘The affair belongs entirely to Allah.’ They are concealing things inside themselves which they do not disclose to you, saying, ‘If we had only had a say in the affair, none of us would have been killed here in this place.’ Say, ‘Even if you had been inside your homes, those people for whom being killed was decreed would have gone out to their place of death.’ So that Allah might test what is in your breasts and purge what is in your hearts. Allah knows the contents of your hearts. 139

155 Those of you who turned their backs on the day the two armies clashed – it was Shayṭān who made them slip for what they had done. But Allah has pardoned them. Allah is Ever-Forgiving, All-Forbearing. 142

156 You who believe! do not be like those who disbelieve and say of their brothers, when they are going on journeys or military expeditions, ‘If they had only been with us, they would not have died or been killed,’ so that Allah can make that anguish for them in their hearts. It is Allah Who gives life and causes to die. Allah sees what you do. 145

157 If you are killed in the Way of Allah or if you die, forgiveness and mercy from Allah are better than anything you can acquire. 158 If you die or you are killed, it is to Allah that you will be gathered. 147

159 It is a mercy from Allah that you were gentle with them. If you had been rough or hard of heart, they would have scattered from around you. So pardon them and ask forgiveness for them, and consult with them about the matter. Then when you have reached a firm decision, put your trust in Allah. Allah loves those who put their trust in Him. 148

160 If Allah helps you, no one can vanquish you. If He forsakes you, who can help you after that? So the believers should put their trust in Allah. 155

161 No Prophet would ever be guilty of misappropriation. Those who misappropriate will arrive on the Day of Rising with what they have misappropriated. Then every self will be paid in full for what it earned. They will not be wronged. 156

162 Is someone who pursues the pleasure of Allah the same as someone who incurs displeasure from Allah and 166 whose refuge is Hell? What an evil destination! 163 They have different ranks with Allah. Allah sees what they do.

164 Allah showed great kindness to the believers when He sent a Messenger to them from among themselves to recite His Signs to them and purify them and teach them 167 the Book and Wisdom, even though before that they were clearly misguided.

165 Why is it that when a calamity happens to you, when you have already inflicted twice as much, you say, 'How 168 could this possibly happen?' Say, 'It has come from your own selves.' Allah has power over all things.

166 What assailed you on the day the two armies met was by Allah's permission, so that He would know the believers, 167 and so that He would know the hypocrites.
 They were told, 'Come and fight in the Way of Allah or at least help defend us.' They said, 'If we knew that there 169 would be a fight, we would certainly follow you.' They were closer to unbelief that day than to belief, saying with their mouths what was not in their hearts. And Allah knows best what they are hiding.

168 They are those who said of their brothers, when they themselves had stayed behind, 'If they had only obeyed 172 us, they would not have been killed.' Say, 'Then ward off death from yourselves if you are telling the truth.'

169 Do not suppose that those killed in the Way of Allah are dead. No indeed! They are alive and well provided for in the very presence of their Lord, 170 delighting in the 173 favour Allah has bestowed on them, rejoicing over those they left behind who have not yet joined them, feeling no fear and knowing no sorrow,

171 rejoicing in blessings and favour from Allah and that 182

- Allah does not let the wage of the believers go to waste.
- 172 Those who did good and were godfearing, among those who responded to Allah and the Messenger after the wound had been inflicted, will have an immense reward: 184
- 173 those to whom people said, ‘The people have gathered against you, so fear them.’ But that merely increased their belief and they said, ‘Allah is enough for us and the Best of Guardians.’ 186
- 174 So they returned with blessings and bounty from Allah and no evil touched them. They pursued the pleasure of Allah. Allah’s favour is indeed immense. 190
- 175 It was only Shayṭān frightening you through his friends. But do not fear them – fear Me if you are believers. 191
- 176 Do not let those who rush headlong into unbelief sadden you. They do not harm Allah in any way. Allah desires to assign no portion to them in the Next World. They will have a terrible punishment. 192
- 177 Those who sell belief for unbelief do not harm Allah in any way. 195
- 178 Those who disbelieve should not imagine that the extra time We grant to them is good for them. We only allow them more time so they will increase in evildoing. They will have a humiliating punishment. 195
- 179 Allah will only leave the believers in the position you now are in so that He can sift out the rotten from the good. Allah has not given you access to the Unseen. But Allah chooses those of His Messengers whom He wills. So believe in Allah and His Messengers. If you believe and are godfearing you will have an immense reward. 198

180 Those who are tight-fisted with the bounty Allah has given them should not suppose that that is better for them. No indeed, it is worse for them! What they were tight-fisted with will be hung around their necks on the Day of Rising. Allah is the inheritor of the heavens and the earth and Allah is aware of what you do. 200

181 Allah has heard the words of those who say, 'Allah is poor and we are rich.' We will write down what they said and their killing of the Prophets without any right to do so and We will say, 'Taste the punishment of the Burning.' 205

182 That is on account of what you did. Allah does not wrong His slaves.

183 Those who say, 'Allah has made a contract with us that we should not believe in any Messenger until he brings us a sacrifice consumed by fire.' Say, 'Messengers came to you before me with the Clear Signs and with what you say. So why did you kill them if you are telling the truth?' 184 If they deny you, Messengers before you were also denied, who brought the Clear Signs and written texts and the illuminating Book. 207

185 Every self will taste death. You will be paid your wages in full on the Day of Rising. Anyone who is distanced from the Fire and admitted to the Garden has triumphed. The life of this world is just the enjoyment of delusion. 209

186 You will be tested in your wealth and in yourselves and you will hear many abusive words from those given the Book before you and from those who are idolaters. But if you are steadfast and godfearing, that is the most resolute course to take. 216

187 Allah made a covenant with those given the Book: 'You must make it clear to people and not conceal it.' But 218

they toss it in disdain behind their backs and sell it for a paltry price. What an evil sale they make!

188 Those who exult in what they have done and love to be praised for what they have not done should not suppose that they have escaped the punishment. They will have a painful punishment. 219

189 The kingdom of the heavens and earth belongs to Allah. Allah has power over all things. 222

190 In the creation of the heavens and the earth, and the alternation of night and day, there are Signs for people with intelligence: 191 those who remember Allah, standing, sitting and lying on their sides, and reflect on the creation of the heavens and the earth: ‘Our Lord, You have not created this for nothing. Glory be to You! So safeguard us from the punishment of the Fire. 192 Our Lord, those You cast into the Fire, You have indeed disgraced. The wrongdoers will have no helpers. 193 Our Lord, we heard a caller calling us to belief: ‘Believe in your Lord!’, and we believed. Our Lord, forgive us our wrong actions, erase our bad actions from us and take us back to You with those who are truly good. 194 Our Lord, give us what You promised us through Your Messengers, and do not disgrace us on the Day of Rising. You do not break Your promise.’ 195 Their Lord responds to them: ‘I will not let the deeds of any doer among you go to waste, male or female – you are both the same in that respect. Those who made hijrah and were driven from their homes and suffered harm in My Way and fought and were killed, I will erase their bad actions from them and admit them into Gardens with rivers flowing under them, as a reward from Allah. The best of all rewards is with Allah.’ 196 Do not be deceived by the fact that those who disbelieve move 223 freely about the earth. 197 A brief enjoyment; then their shelter will be Hell. What an evil resting-place! 198 But those who have taqwā of their Lord will have Gardens with rivers flowing under them, remaining in them timelessly, for ever: hospitality from Allah. What is with Allah is better for those who are truly good. 199 Among the people of the Book there are some who believe in Allah and in what has been sent down to you and what was sent down to them, and who are humble before Allah. They do not sell Allah's Signs for a paltry price. Such people will have their reward with their Lord. And Allah is swift at reckoning. 200 You who believe, be steadfast; be supreme in steadfastness; be firm on the battlefield; and have taqwa of Allah; so that hopefully you will be successful.

4. Sūrat an-Nisā' – Women 247

1 O mankind, have taqwā of your Lord who created you from a single self and created its mate from it and then disseminated many men and women from the two of them. Have taqwā of Allah in whose name you make demands on one another and also in respect of your families. Allah watches over you continually. 247

2 Give orphans their property, and do not substitute bad things for good. Do not assimilate their property into your own. Doing that is a serious crime. 254

3 If you are afraid of not behaving justly towards orphans, then marry other permissible women, two, three or four. But if you are afraid of not treating them equally, then only one, or those you own as slaves. That makes it more likely that you will not be unfair. 257

4 Give women their dowries as an outright gift. But if 270

- they are happy to give you some of it, consume it with pleasure and goodwill.
- 5 Do not hand over to the incompetent any property of theirs for which Allah has made you responsible, but provide for them and clothe them out of it, and speak to them correctly and courteously. 276
- 6 Keep a close check on orphans until they reach a marriageable age, then if you perceive that they have sound judgment hand over their property to them. Do not consume it extravagantly and precipitately before they come of age. Those who are wealthy should abstain from it altogether. Those who are poor should use it sensibly and correctly. When you hand over their property to them ensure that there are witnesses on their behalf. Allah suffices as a Reckoner. 284
- 7 Men receive a share of what their parents and relatives leave and women receive a share of what their parents and relatives leave, a fixed share, no matter whether it is a little or a lot. 300
- 8 If other relatives or orphans or poor people attend the sharing-out, provide for them out of it and speak to them correctly and courteously. 303
- 9 People should show concern in the same way that they would fear for small children if they were to die leaving them behind. They should have taqwā of Allah and say words that are appropriate. 306
- 10 People who consume the property of orphans wrongfully consume nothing in their bellies except fire. They will roast in a Searing Blaze. 309
- 11 Allah instructs you regarding your children: A male receives the same as the share of two females. If there are 312

more than two daughters they receive two-thirds of what you leave. If she is one on her own she receives a half. Each of your parents receives a sixth of what you leave if you have children. If you are childless and your heirs are your parents your mother receives a third. If you have brothers or sisters your mother receives a sixth, after any bequest you make or any debts. With regard to your fathers and your sons, you do not know which of them is going to benefit you more. These are obligatory shares from Allah. Allah is All-Knowing, All-Wise. 12 You receive half of what your wives leave if they are childless. If they have children you receive a quarter of what they leave after any bequest they make or any debts. They receive a quarter of what you leave if you are childless. If you have children they receive an eighth of what you leave after any bequest you make or any debts. If a man or woman has no direct heirs, but has a brother or sister, each of them receives a sixth. If there are more than that they share in a third after any bequest you make or any debts, making sure that no one's rights are prejudiced. This is an instruction from Allah. Allah is All-Knowing, All-Forbearing. 13 These are Allah's limits. As for those who obey Allah and His Messenger, We will admit them into Gardens with rivers flowing under them, remaining in them timelessly, for ever. That is the Great Victory. 14 As for those who disobey Allah and His Messenger and overstep His limits, We will admit them into a Fire, remaining in it timelessly, for ever. They will have a humiliating punishment.

15 If any of your women commit fornication, four of you must be witnesses against them. If they bear witness, detain them in their homes until death releases them or Allah ordains another procedure for their case.

16 If two men commit a like abomination, punish them. 349
If they repent and reform, leave them alone. Allah is Ever-Returning, Most Merciful.

17 Allah only accepts the repentance of those who do evil in ignorance and then quickly repent after doing it. Allah turns towards such people. Allah is All-Knowing, All- 355 Wise. 18 There is no repentance for people who persist in doing evil until death comes to them and who then say,
'Now I repent,' nor for people who die unbelievers. We have prepared for them a painful punishment.

19 You who believe! it is not lawful for you to inherit women by force. Nor may you treat them harshly so that you can make off with part of what you have given them, unless they commit an act of flagrant indecency. Live 359 together with them correctly and courteously. If you dislike them, it may well be that you dislike something in which Allah has placed a lot of good.

20 If you desire to exchange one wife for another and have given your original wife a large amount, do not take any of it. Would you take it by means of slander and outright 366 crime? 21 How could you take it when you have been intimate with one another and they have made a binding contract with you?

22 Do not marry any women whom your fathers married – except for what may have already taken place. That is an 371 indecent act, a loathsome thing and an evil path.
